ALL GLORY TO THE DIVINE MASTER

VOL. XXIX | JULY 1931, Chaitanya-Era 445 | NO. 1.

A Feeble Warbling

IT is the usual practice with Journals to offer greetings at the commencement of a fresh year. We commence our twentyninth year on the day of her appearance for the new year, and in the commencement we offer our salutations to the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna and His Eternal consort Varshabhanavee, the ever-cool shade of whose feet brings in eternal harmony that could save mankind. The Two moieties are fastened by the Tie of Love that has brought down before our view the Transcendental All-Beautiful Boon-giver of Prema to one and all who do not hanker after any secular interest, save the Transcendental Felicity of the Pair. As they are the Fountain-head of all representative conceptions of Godhead and identical with the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya, all other views entertained by agents of different stages are but manifestations emanating from the same. So we can easily conclude that the conciliatory parts and different aspects of the same are also saluted along with the above offering. The dislocated existences from the transcendental integer are also automatically offered our respective greetings when we pay our reverential homage to the very Fountain-head of all causes. To serve different masters by a service-holder is quite impossible, so we refrain from the idea of satisfying all who bear a quite different interest from the original mine in their metalic aspects. To please men of different temperaments is quite impossible when we stick to a definite harmonious principle.

Pure harmony can only be had if different aspects terminate in one view. The mental world and the physical atmosphere are made up in such a way as to show that their different positions do not act in harmony. So we are found to change our views every moment unless we submit to unite the contending energies in one thread, sometimes neutralising the disintegrated parts and sometimes giving prominence to conspicuous aspects without having a breach.

The transcendental Footmarks of the Loving Fountain-head of all beings will remind us to chalk out our future activities towards the true theistic principle which can secure the boon of eternal peace among us. The differences that are inherent in our mental speculations can only be settled by our devotion to the One without offering any hostile suggestions to check the evil propensities of those who do not subscribe to the true theistic principle. But the Foot-print of the Absolute will ever guide us to leave off volcanic ruptures of the mind.

In this world we are busy to satisfy our senses and to show our different predilections which are detrement to the One cause of Perfect Peace. Real and true submission to the Absolute Truth is essentially necessary and we will hold this as a cardinal point in our future march. We should be loving to the Absolute aim and His parapherna. Whenever there is any departure from this, we are likely to be situated in a different atmosphere. So we welcome our loving friends to join us in our prayer-service of the Absolute.

Thakur Bhaktivinode

THAKUR Bhaktivinode appeared in this world in 1838. He disappeared in 1914. He was successful as a student, as a teacher, as a responsible officer of the Government which he served till 1894 and as a house-holder who took every care of his family, relatives, friends, and neighbours. He records in his autobiography that he was put in embarrassing positions on more than one occasion in course of his official duties but was enabled by the grace of God to obtain sufficient support from his superiors and friends to tide over all difficulties, without having to deviate from the strict principles of even-handed justice to all parties.

As regards the events of his religious life he was not initiated till 1880. From 1868 he became seriously interested in Vaishnava principles. About this time he was transferred to Puri and was entrusted with the supervision of the worship of Sree Sree Jagannath Deva during five years. He began to write his devotional books from this time and wrote a great part of his Sree Krishna Sanhita in sanskrit at Puri. He obtained the title of Bhaktivinode from his Gurus in 1887. In 1887 he was apprised in a dream that it was his duty to serve Sree Nabadwipdham. In 1894 in a public meeting at Krishnagar the identification of the present site of Sreedham Mayapur with the Birth-place of Sree Chaitanya in old Nabadwip, was announced by him and Sree Sree Nabadwip Dham Pracharini Sabha was established for restoration and publicity work in connection with the newly discovered Sreedham Nabadwip. After retirement from Government service Thakur Bhaktivinode resided in Sree Surabhi Kunja at Godrumadwip in Sreedham Nabadwip. From 1891 he began to organise a preaching mission for giving publicity to the teachings of Sree Chaitanya. He might have obtained an extension of service under Government but did not avail of the opportunity being deterred by the purpose of devoting his whole time to the restoration work of Sreedham Mayapur.

The story of his career written in noble and simple language, can be read in his published autobiography. Every reader is bound to rise from the study of that charming little book with the conviction that the writer was a person of great social influence and possessed a kind and sincere nature. He was deeply religious by instinct but there was no trace of sectarian acerbity in his composition.

Thakur Bhaktivinode was in close touch with the leaders of the Brahmo movement. He also associated with Christian Missionaries from his infancy. He had read the Koran. He was singularly open to all these influences. He preferred Christianity to Brahmoism on account of the former's clearer admission regarding the transcendence of Godhead and of the spiritual function. This gives the real clue to his own theological position.

Should the service of Godhead be considered as a continuum of our ordinary worldly activity? Thakur Bhaktivinode holds that the spiritual function transcends the mundane and is not realisable by the mundane aptitude to which the conditioned soul is ordinarily found to be subject in this world. According to him it is not necessary, nor the duty of the soul, to function by mundane categories even during one's sojourn to this mundane plane. The soul of man can attain to the transcendental function by the Grace of Godhead joined to his own co-operating effort. But the transcendental plane is absolutely free from all reference that is sought to be carried into it from below. In proportion as one's function ceases to be influenced by worldly experience by reason of the growing realisation of the positive Nature of the Absolute Reality, it tends to be increasingly endowed with the quality of causeless devotion to the Feet of Godhead. There is a concrete realm of the Absolute which can be realised by the soul, if he conceives a sincere hankering for the same by the Grace of Godhead. This sincere hankering itself is generated by substantive discourses on the Absolute Who, although He is inconceivable to our present limited understanding, is symbolically presented to us by the revealed Scriptures enabling us to devote our rational consideration to the subject. But one who is wholly satisfied with his temporary activities on this worldly plane, is not likely to feel any genuine attraction for such quest.

Presidential Address

A narrative in the Upanishads runs as follows. Once upon a time Indra on behalf of the devatas and Virochana on that of the asuras, repaired to Brahma for the purpose of learning about the nature of the self. Virochana was led by observation of the reflected image to suppose that his external gross body was the soul. Indra without being in a hurry like Virochana, set patiently about the quest of the self in order to realise the true significance of the words of Brahma. His patience was rewarded by making him aquainted with the real nature of the eternal entity viz., the soul who transcends the physical body and mind. The madness of those who direct their intellectual expedition to the external cases, is what is called asura judgment. The war between the devatas and the asuras is going on at all time. By the mode of worshipping (upasana), of devotion (bhakti), the suris were enabled to realise Vishnu as the Best of all entities. When the evil propensity of transgressing against Vishnu made its appearance the non-daiva mode of judgment engulfed the faculty of pure consciousness of the soul (jiva). When man becomes excessively addicted to the needs of the non-self he sets himself against the worship of Vishnu. Then man falls even lower than the status of the devatas. The devatas also offer opposition to the worship of Vishnu. They are apt to think that the asuras are their rivals to frustrate their own attempt of becoming Vishnu. The denizens of the realms of Satya, Mahas, Jana and Tapas are higher in the scale of creation than the devatas who are addicted to the pleasures of the realm of Svar, for the reason that the residents of those higher realms belong to the community who have renounced the pleasures of the flesh.

According to the judgment of ordinary people Vishnu is only one of the devatas and the other devatas do not derive their powers from Vishnu. If Vishnu is regarded as only one among the devatas such a view gives rise to the cult of the plurality of gods, or polytheism. Polytheism, henotheism (panchopasana) and pseudo-latitudinarianism in effect propose nothing short of ultimate and complete merging in the One viz., the Brahman, of becoming indistinguishable from the Brahman, by breaking all devatas. Persons who are so disposed have a conviction, which they have had prior to the commencement of the process of worship, that the Object of their worship is devoid of all distinctive status of His Own. In other words they seek to prove that there is no need of worshipping Godhead at all. 'Let us,' these creeds say in effect, 'by way of sheer hypocrisy insincerely admit, for the time being, a process of temporary worship and the temporary name, quality and activity of the temporary objects of our worship'. They are led to judge in this manner by their previous bitter experience of this world, in order to escape the bad consequences of committing themselves for good to any position which is likely to undergo change in the future. Shreemad Bhagabatam has the following shloka which inculcates the method of being saved from such difficulty. 'Want of forgetfulness of the lotus Feet of Krishna diminishes all evil and fosters our good in the shape of purification of the ego, devotion to the Supreme Soul and Knowledge attended with distinctive realisation of the Truth and consequent aversion to the phenomenal and the transitory.'

To be subject to lust, anger, greed, infatuation, vanity and malice is to be in the evil condition. To be opposed to Krishna and His devotees is to lapse into evil. By attaining to the constant recollection of Krishna it is alone possible to be delivered from evil. If the spark of fire of the recollection of Krishna once flashes on the track of memory, or in other words, if the realisation that I am the eternal servant of Krishna, is once aroused, it sets on fire the whole refuge-heap of evils and burns them to cinders.

If one says only once, 'Krishna, I am Thine', Krishna delivers him from the bondage of the limiting Energy (maya). If a person chants the Kirtan of Hari in every way it is only then that he can cease to seek honour for himself, can render due honour to to every one and be humbler than the blade of grass. In the verse regarding 'humility greater than that of the blade of grass' the word 'constantly' (sada) means undiverted chanting of Hari without offering any opportunity to the operations of lust, anger, etc. A person who is subject to lust, anger, etc., does not possess the utmost humility which is greater than that of the blade of grass, has a taste for limited material enjoyment, is never humbler than a blade of grass. Utmost humility greater than that of the blade of grass is the characteristic only of him who is unceasingly given to the quest of Krishna i. e., addicted to the uninterruptible mellowing process of the agony of loving separation from Krishna.

'By constant listening to and reciting the Deeds of Krishna with faith and reverence Godhead enters the heart in no very long time.' The empiric truth available in this world has a certain characteristic of relativity. The truth that manifests itself in the relative function, is not the unalloyed Truth. The service of the Supreme Soul is not service of matter. Krishna alone is the Object of our constant and supreme service. Perform always the chant of Krishna ; perform the chant of the Name of Krishna, of His Quality, of the distinctive personality of His Survitors, of His Pastime. He who advises us to do so, viz., the lotus Feet of Sri Guru, is alone the constant object of our worship in every way. He is the eternal associated counterpart of Godhead. Vaishnavas who serve Sri Guru are objects of our worship.

There are many persons who profess the opinion, 'I am the Brahman by disjoined interpretation of the famous Scriptural text. They do not practise the forbearance of accepting the comprehensive interpretation of the mantram of the Sruti. We can easily cross over the impossible expanse of the Ocean of Maya if we take hold of the support of devotion, and can do so only by such submission. The only method that is open to us for gaining our destination is to follow in the footsteps of those great souls who have preceded us on the same path. They are our only Polar Star on the path of spiritual endeavour. Those great souls of former times are possessors of the true knowledge which is attended with spiritual love and detachment from the world. The heart that is brightly illumined by the pure spiritual essence, bears the name of Vasudeva. It is only in such heart that knowledge i. e. the Personality of the pure cognition Vasudeva, super-knowledge i.e.,spiritual love, detachment from the world i. e,, practice of devotion in the stage of endeavour, manifest themselves. We can get across this realm of un-reason by acting up to such decision, The word 'Tamas' means 'Mayabada',—the impulse of enjoyment approved by the professors of Utilitarianism. The Sannyasins of the triple staff (Tridandi) ensure their progress in the direction of Truth by accepting the above mode of judgment. Mankind will be assured of progress on the path of spiritual endeavour by acceptance of the triple staff of renunciation and being thereby enabled to join in the chant of the Tridandi Bhikshu of the town of Avanti of the Bhagabatam,—'Adopting this unceasing attachment to the Supreme Soul, worshipped by the former great souls, I shall get across this abyss or gloom, which is extremely difficult to cross, by serving the Feet of the Bestower of Salvation.'

Krishna is the sole real Object of worship. He is the only Object of worship of all entities that can or will ever be. Krishna is the sole Object of worship of this dry bamboostick and of this table made of wood. He attracts His devotee for the purpose of serving His servant. If the function of my mind takes the direction of the service of any other entity than that of the best of the servants of Krishna it should be impossible to find such another fool as myself. He who serves all those who wish to serve Him, is verily that Entity Who has no limit, Who is the Ultimate of the ultimate of ultimates and the Cause of the cause of all causes.

The Ultimate Reality Krishna has been called Swayangrupa, 'Beauty's Ownself,' by obtaining portions of Whose Beauty His servants have become most exquisitely beautiful. The community of the servants of Krishna regard the beauty of form as an offering for His service, by means of which the Divinity is to be served. No beauty is comparable to millionth part of the Beauty of Krishna. When we endeavour to approach Krishna by way of service we have to be possessors of beauty and are actuated by the desire of beautifying ourselves. Then arises the process which is called Abhisara (i.e. proceeding to the secret place of assignation). There are two kinds of Abhisara viz., (1) The Sukla or white Abhisara and (2) Krishna or dark Abhisara. The Gopis (milk-maids) run to Krishna by one method when the moon is risen, by the other method when the moon does not shine. There is the same secret expedition for the quest of Beauty, of the Good Quality, of distinctive individual servitude, of Pastime. I do not wish to speak of these things at this gathering in this language. Although my weak tongue has babbled I shall stop here.

Krishna is Beauty Himself and Sree Baladeva Prabhu is Krishna's Own Manifest-self.

'The Soul is not realised by one who is without the Support of Divine Power, neither by austerities, nor again by the avoidance of all ceremonials. The enlightened person who endeavours to attain to Him by these methods, enters the realm of the Brahman.'

'The lotus Feet of Nitai are most refreshingly cool like crores of moons. The shade of His Feet relieves from the scorching heat of the world. Leaving out Nitai, Who is so merciful, one must not have Radha-Krishna. May we ever hold firmly to the Feet of Nitai ?'

Nitai is real Manifestation, but not real Beauty. He is not Omnipotent or Strong by the help of any other entity. It is not possible to seperate Omnipotence from Him. He is not devoid of power. The power of Baladeva is the distinctive power of Himself, the Manifestation of Krishna's Ownself. Although in Baladeva the Proprietorship of power is predominant He still belongs properly to the category of Divine Power. Baladeva is just next to Krishna in the category of object of worship. In the Maha-Vaikuntha He is manifest as Vasudeva, Sankarsona, Pradyumna and Aniruddha. The topics of the fourth dimension lie beyond the threefold specification of the linear, superficial and cubical magnitudes of this world. The topics of the fifth dimension are still higher. They are words spoken by the Flute of Krishna. 'Chere amie, He is the same beloved Krishna with whom I am united here in Kurukshetra. And Myself also am, indeed, the same Radha. This is the very same bliss of our meeting with one another. Yet My mind is longing for the woodlands on the sloping banks of the Kalindi with the fifth-scale music of the sweet Flute playing in the heart of the groves'. The Entity Narayana Who is the Conglomerate of the four-fold expansion of Sri Baladeva as Vasudeva, Sankarsana, Pradyumna and Aniruddha, abides in the Maha-Vaikuntha, being the Primary manifestation of Baladeva. There is associated with Him a certain process which bears the Scriptural designation of 'byuha'. The Object of worship has a five-fold nature of His own. Those who are well-versed in the subject of the fivefold 'need' know all these matters. We cannot obtain real enlightenment from any one who is ignorant of the fivefold 'need'. One cannot perform the function of the Guru if he does not possess the knowledge of the five-fold 'need'.

Archavatara :—This is of eight kinds. The Archavatara (Descent in the form of the Archa or Visible Object of worship) makes His appearance in the world for the purpose of bestowing His mercy on unfortunate souls like ourselves i. e., on those who possess a stupid judgment. Krishna manifested His Divine Pastimes in this world in the Dwapara Age. But that Age is long, long past. Unfortunate souls as we are we were not privileged to come into the world at that period. We could not obtain the sight of Krishna for this reason. We do not know anything about Krishna. But what an amount of good the Archa of Krishna has been doing to us. This Archa is of all time. We are having the sight of Krishna even by being born after such an immense interval of time. Appearing in the form of the Archa Krishna has been arousing the serving impulse of our souls.

Antaryyami :—Godhead is present in every single entity formed of His marginal and deluding Potencies, in the form of internal Guide (Antaryyami) and is regulating us from within. 'Iswara (Ruler, Regulator) abides in the heart, O Arjuna, causing the movement of all entities, set on these bodily appliances contrived for the purpose, by His deluding potency.'

Baibhaba:—This term points to the casual Appearances of the Divinity for specific purposes. 'Whenever the proper function of souls is tainted, O Son of Bharata, and un-spiritual conduct comes to prevail, I cause the Appearance of Myself on every such occasion'. This and other Shlokas of similar import point to the Descents in the different Ages.

Byuha:—The four Byuhas viz., Vasudeva, Sankarsana, Pradyumna and Aniruddha are one and the same Entity. By the sight of one quarter the whole Integer is seen. The estimation of this world is that based on the view of one quarter of the whole. This is partly intelligible by the Science of Trignometrical Mathematics of sphere. We can also understand the degree of fulness of service of the servitor and the subjective psychology of the Object of worship.

Paratattva :—Vasudeva is the transcendental Entity. Baladeva is the super-transcendental Entity. The ultimate super-transcendental Entity is Krishna. Vishnu is the Principle of the Prime Source of the phenomenal world. He is comparable to the milk and Rudra to the curd. Curd is milk turned sour from its natural wholesome state, by the action of an acid substance. Vishnu is essentialy incapable of transformation or perversion. The nature of Rudra corresponds to the perversion that appertains to my deluded idea of Vishnu. If we ascribe transformability to Vishnu, the particulars wherein such ascription affects my idea of the original non-transformable Entity, my view of the mutilated or distorted form of my defective conception of Vishnu brought about by this process, is the principle that is represented by Rudra.

Brahma :—Brahma is a reflected form of the Divinity analogous to the reflected image of the sun in different crystal receptacles. 'Just as the sun makes his own energy be manifest to an extent in all the shining stones, in the same way, in the case of Brahma, in the matter of his power in regard to the globe of this mundane world, it is Govinda Whom I serve. Govinda is the Primal Person Whose reflected form is Brahma.'

Suryya :—The sun travels along his orbit through the twelve signs of the zodiac. He is the form of a Sura or Deva. Time is his extraneous manifestation. 'I bow to the Brahman of inconceivable manifested form, devoid of all quality, being quality's own-self, the form which is the support of all this world'.

Ganesha :—He is the destroyer of all dangers and difficulties. The reader of the Lalitavistara is aware how powerful was the rule of this leader of the masses at one time in this land of Bharata. Ganesha is the giver of success of the utilitarian activities of the world, the object of worship of the Vaishya community who concern themselves with economic pursuits. In the sphere of the Vaishyas the function of the demos, the views of the masses or common run of the people, possesses the prevailing force.

Vishnu :—Vishnu is untr. nsformable. He is all pervasive. He is Lord of the limiting energy. He is not served by the enjoying aptitude of the individual soul. The other devotees, who wield power over this world, are worshipped by the ideas that are conducive to material enjoyment. But the judgment of those who covet the worship of Vishnu, is expressed otherwise. 'I have carried out the evil commands of lust and the other impulses of the senses in every way and at all time. But those masters have proved inexorable and have not been mollified by pity, or satiation, towards my sufferings. Lord of the Yadus, I have only just now found my better judgment and having renounced their service altogether, have come to Thee, the Refuge Who frees from all fear. May Thou employ me in Thy service'.

In regard to the one-hundred and twenty-five questions that have been circulated by the Theistic Conference it will not be possible to discuss them one by one within the short period of of nine days that are at the disposal of the Conference. We shall, therefore, content ourselves with the preliminary discussion of nine fundamental subjects and shall try to answer the one hundred and twenty-five questions in course of as many separate articles in the columns of our periodical publications. The answers that have been supplied by other people have been in many cases imperfect and, in many instances, unsound. They have failed to grasp properly the nature of the subject itself about which we have proposed to discuss. Our dissertation of these nine days has thus turned out to be an affair analogous to the attempt, in the legend, of accommodating the elephant within the bag. That the people will agree to spare two hours of their valuable time everyday during even these nine days, is a good fortune that exceeds our most sanguine calculations based on actual experience. In these discourses it is the bare preliminary, or rather a catalogue of topics, that is being offered. They are sure to leave out many things that should have been said, and many contentions of mankind unanswered. On the other hand, on many occasions when an exhaustive discourse has been attempted, there have been found many persons to express the view that the discussion is not kept limited to the subject. Most persons are not in the position to give this subject a patient and dispassionate hearing. Not-with-standing all these inevitable drawbacks it should be a source of great good to all of us if we are enabled to publish to the world the principles of the revealed Scriptures to the extent that is practicable. As the limit of time of the programme is being exceeded it is necessary to stop here. I, therefore, make my bow to all who are present.

The ancestry of Shree Krishna

THE following account is found in the Bhagabatam. Shortly before the Appearance of Shree Krishna King Shurasena ruled and resided in Mathura. Under him Mathura became the capital of the Yadus Vasudeva, father of Krishna, belonged to the family of king Shurasena. Vasudeva married Debaki, daughter of Debaka, of the clan of the Yadus. Kansa was then on the throne of the Yadus. Kansa was the son of Ugrasena. The father of Debaki was the uterine brother of Ugrasena. At the time of Debaki's marriage Ugrasena was still living but was incarcerated by order of Kansa. Kansa was the son of Padmavati, Queen of Ugrasena, by the King of the Saubhas. Kansa was not the legitimate heir to the throne. The real heir to the throne of the Yadus was the son of Debaki. The King of the Gopas, Nanda, was cousin of Vasudeva born of marriage of a step-brother of the father of Vasudeva with a Vaishya girl. Rohini, who was one of the consorts of Vasudeva, was then living in the home of Nanda for fear of Kansa. As Kansa was in the act of accompanying the bridegroom and bride acting as their charioteer in the marriage procession of Debaki and Vasudeva on the way to the home of the bridegroom, he heard a voice, that did not proceed from any visible person which made the announcement that Kansa was to meet his death at the hands of the eighth issue, a son, born of the womb of Debaki. Kansa was dissuaded from killing Debaki on the spot by the tactful appeal of Vasudeva who promised to make over to him every child born of Debaki to be dealt with at his discretion. But being apprized of the birth of Shree Krishna by the celestial sage Narada and of the fact that all the Gopas obeying Nanda and living under him in Braja, male and female, all the Brishnis led by Vasudeva, ladies of the Yadus such as Rohini, and others,—all these were devas born on the earth in anticipation of the coming of his Enemy Who is no other than Vishnu Himself, prepared to co operate with many of His Own adherents in bringing about his destruction and on being fully convinced of the truth of this, Kansa threw Vasudeva and Devaki into prison and began to kill every issue of Devaki as soon as it was born. It is this which led Rohini to seek an asylum with chief Nanda in Braja. Kansa killed one after another six sons that were successively born to Debaki, one every year. The seventh issue was transferred to the womb of Rohini by the baffling power of Krishna and was born as the son of the latter, the elder brother of Shree Krishna. Kansa was given to understand that the seventh issue of Debaki had miscarried in the womb. The eighth Issue of Debaki, Shree Krishna, was taken to the home of Nanda and was exchanged there for a girl who had just then been born to Yasoda, lady of Nanda, and bringing away the girl to his prison exhibited her as Debaki's eighth-born issue. As Kansa attempted to slay her, this new-born babe eluded his grip and appearing in the sky in her real form of Mahamaya told Kansa that his Enemy had certainly been born at some place and that it was perfectly useless for him to go on killing innocent babies. Shree Krishna resided in Braja for the space of eleven years. His Activities during this period constitute the subject-matter of Shree Brindabana Leela.

There is an interminable controversy regarding the historical truth of the incidents related above. We have no intention of being a party to any such controversy. It may help the empiric historian in the wild-goose chase of the empiric truth (?) and is also bound to give rise to conflicting decisions (?). This never-to-end-pastime-method may be pursued by its votaries for their particular purpose. But as we really intend to adopt only that method which will lead us to the Truth now and here we refrain purposely from any antiquarian discussion of the ordinary type on this subject. We think, on the contrary that it will be more profitable if we could devote the little time that is actually at our own and the readers' disposal to the pursuit of a more effective but not less rational course in trying to find the relationship, if any, that may subsist between us and the subject.

Shree Krishna is Godhead Himself. This must be admitted by all who want to approach Him at all as required by the condition of the spiritual quest in which we are engaged. Those who will be inclined to make any reservation will miss the sight of Shree Krishna's Divinity not partially but absolutely. The enquirer need bother himself only about the Absolute when he chooses to lend his ear to this narrative regarding the Absolute.

Shree Krishna is full of Activity. He is simultaneously present everywhere both inside and outside of everything and preserves at the same time His Individual distinctive Personality. But He is never less than Himself. He is never divested of the least particle of His Power and Paraphernalia. As he is never less than Full He is never exposed to the view of our present limited senses. How then, it may be asked, is it possible for Shree Krishna to have either birth or ancestry ? How also can it be possible for One Who has reserved the right of not being exposed to the view of mortals, to become visible to the people of this world ? These were the questions that were actually asked by Parikshit Maharaj to whom this narrative of the Bhagabatam was originally recited by Shree Shukadeva.

The reply of Shree Shukadeva was to the effect that the 'Sound' will explain Himself to the person who has no partiality for untruth. The 'Sound' is identical with the substantive Entity. The 'Sound' can take the initiative in this case. It is the 'Sound' Who also guides the organ of speech of the narrator. The narrator is as much a learner as the hearer of the Divine Sound. The narrator is a more loyal hearer than the hearer who cannot narrate. Given sufficient time and undivided attention to the narrator of the Absolute the narrative itself will, in due course remove all the difficulties of both narrator and hearer. But both narrator and hearer must seek only to realise the Absolute.

Any question like the above viz., that Shree Krishna cannot do this thing or that thing without necessarily losing His Absolute quality, is a begging of the question. He can be everything without losing anything. The Birth of Shree Krishna and His Appearance onthe plane of this world, are not incompitable with the fact that He fully reserves the right of not being exposed to the view of the limited senses of mortals. The Descent of the Transcendental does not mean His conversion to the limited. Shree Krishna appears in this world as He is, but I cannot know Him if I suppose that I see Him with my limited senses. The difficulty is always with myself and never with Him. I shall be a fool if I choose to over-estimate the capacity of my senses by relying on their erring assurance. I can see and not really see Shree Krishna at one and the same time. But when I really see Him I see Him as He is, with all His Power and Paraphernalia.

I am then privileged to see that He is a Person with ancestry and every other particular, of which the unwholesome and deluding correspondences only are reflected in this phenomenal world. I then see the Reality and cease to quarrel with Him on the allegation that He is not the deluding shadow of Himself. Of course I do not see Shree Krishna as soon as I hear about Him from the lips of a sadhu. But that I fail to see Him is due to my fault and not to His non-appearance. In my impatience, due to the absence of any real desire to find His service, I do not care to listen with the view to be really enlightened regarding the same.

I am no advocate of the metaphorical method. The Scriptures are in favour of allowing the Truth to speak for Himself. That is the only way of having access to the Truth. This method combines the essence of all the partial methods minus their preventing features. It, therefore, also provides the true historical quality but without excluding the other aspects, as the empiric historical method is bound to do. As for example the empiric method of historical investigation always apprehends the possibility of erroneous observation of an occurence even on the part of an actual and careful observer. This apprehension should be logically and really inapplicable to this case. But its corresponding feature of real value need not be supposed to be absent. All exquisitiveness is present in the full, because real measure in the Absolute without the co-presence of any limiting contrary principle.

The whole position hinges on the question of the categorical difference between the mundane and the spiritual. This difference is also necessarily such that it cannot really be grasped by one who has no access to the higher plane. The description of the ancestry of Shree Krishna is comparable to the exposition of the movements and positions of the moon in the heavens by supposing her to be moving behind the branches of a tree. There is in both cases a difference of planes which always keeps even the vocabulary employed in the description by the actual observer at an infinite distance from the phenomena described.

In the case of Shree Krishna His Appearance in the world can be described only by means of vocabulary of this world but He is an Entity Who is located wholly above the mundane plane. He has, as a matter of fact no brith, no parents, no ancestors, no relationships, in the world. But He is still capable of appearing in this world in the manner that is some what analogous to the appearance of the sun behind the tree, or in the East of the observer from this world. In the way that the sun is sometimes described as being born of the quarter of the East, Shree Krishna's Appearance in this world may be described in terms of mundane parentage and relationships. Shree Krishna is really nobody's Son in the wordly sense. But He is also the Son of Vasudeva and Debaki. The enlightened commentators take every occasion to caution the reader against supposing Shree Krishna as being the seminal descendant of the line of the Yadus. He only chooses to make His Appearance under the figure of mundane birth. He did not recognise His affinity with the Yadus of History and took the precaution of putting this beyond the possibility of suspicion by bringing about the extermination of the historical Yadus when He chose to disappear from the view of the people of this world.

But neither must it be supposed that Shree Krishna is not served by parental affection on the plane of the Absolute by His eternal parents. This parenthood of the servants of Shree Krishna is identical with the entity that is called in the Scriptures by the term Vasudeva, which means the perfectly pure spiritual essence. In the pure cognition of the soul where there is no deformed relativity that is in the state of perfect transcendental purity Shree Krishna manifests His eternal appearance. This parenthood is communicable to a receiving soul by the servant who has realised it. There is no question of seminal birth although there is always, in the case of His Appearance to the view of the people of this world, the apparent process of mundane birth to delude those who are anxious to be so deluded. But the branches of the tree must not be supposed by any person, on the apparent testimony of his erring senses, as being any nearer to the moon than they really are. Those who persist in thinking of the moon as existing in close proximity to the branches have to thank only themselves for their failure to arrive at a true knowledge of the nature of the real moon.

The empiric historian is, therefore, not required to testify to the truth regarding the ancestry of Shree Krishna, because such a witness can only describe the branches while what is needed is a description of the moon which he persists in declaring to be a ball of light of a few inches diameter. The admission of the evidence of such a person will only make the confusion hopeless.

WE are now in a position to understand the true Scriptural status and function of the Brahmana. He is head of the secular society by virtue of his disposition towards spiritual service which in its unalloyed form is inaccessible to him. He can qualify for the pure spiritual service by acting as the loyal agent of his Guru viz., the paramahansa in carrying out the latter's wishes regarding his own conduct in a loyal and unreserved manner. He must not be his own master. He must own no property and obey no one else of the secular society. His only function towards secular society is to teach it about spiritual life in an impartial and passionless way. His teaching function will be only the natural expansion of his conduct under the direction of the spiritual guide. His is essentially the life of the pupil teaching others by his own conduct and precept to be pupils of his Guru.

The Brahmana has no concern with the secular affairs of society. One who has a taste for secular affairs should be freely allowed to follow the bent of such natural inclination. But he must not be recognised as a Brahmana at the same time. He will be classed as Kshatriya or Vaishya or Shudra or as outside the the pale of civilized society, according to his disposition. But if he wants to be a member of the daiva varnasrama society he must accept the Brahmana as the spiritual teacher of himself. If he is found wanting in the aptitude of spiritual pupilage he must not be allowed to meddle with any affairs of the daiva varnasrama society. All secular association with atheists must be strictly avoided if the daiva varnasrama arrangement is to be preserved intact.

It is not denied that a person who is not theistically inclined may be possessed of more than average skill in certain forms of secular activity. He may be a great general, a great scholar, a great sportsman, etc., etc. But he must not be allowed to have any intimate connection with other members of society having the spiritual objective. He is to be socially boycotted. Social intercourse is defined as consisting of the functions of giving and taking anything, hearing and telling secrets, dining with another and inviting him to dinner. All these relationships must be strictly avoided with such a person.

There must also be a code of social precedence among the classes of the daiva varnasrama society. The ruling class must be obeyed by the other sections. The industrialists and agriculturists come next in order of precedence. These constitute the moneyed class. Next come the order of the manual workers who are under the secular influence of the other sections. In secular affairs those who cannot stand on their own legs must serve a member of the other and higher groups. This is an arrangement according to natural disposition and merit of the individual. It is based on the principle of all careers being fully open to everybody on the test of election by the community by any method that the society may deem proper for determining the true disposition and capacity of an individual.

There is no question of hereditary function or status, although the fact of parentage is supposed to be favourable for the transmission of secular characteristics.

It is not our purpose to enter further into the consideration of the secular aspect of the arrangements at this place. It will suffice for our present purpose to indicate that the direction of secular affairs is left to a society which follows the lead of the Brahmanas in regard to its spiritual objective, which is paramount. Such a society is for good reasons supposed to be incapable of grossly abusing its secular freedom. But nevertheless in order to prevent anarchy, obedience to a political authority on the part of all other sections is also strictly enjoined. The higher status accorded to the moneyed classes is also a further provision against anarchical forces.

This secular arrangement is not recommended by the Scriptures as constituting the ideal of social organisation. On the contrary it is declared to be a necessary evil to have a system of this kind in the degenerate state into which society had fallen. This is a very important point and one which, if its significance is at all grasped, should be able to save us from much of the parochial enthusiasm that has been quite wrongly wasted upon the varnasrama arrangement by its mechanical admirers. It is explicitly declared by the Scriptures that, if the theistic disposition is general, there can be but one class in such society. The system of one class had actually prevailed formerly when the people had been generally theistic by disposition. With the appearance of open atheism arose the necessity of establishing the secular gradations of society. It is a defective provision against the outbreak of barbarism, a tendency which is due to the weakening of the theistic instinct.

This defective secular arrangement is not binding upon the Brahmanas, still less upon the paramahansas. The society of the Brahmanas does not require the artificial regulation of its individual members by the community. Why then, it may be asked, is there a whole literature for regulating the minutest details of conduct of the four varnas and ashramas? The Smritis contain the rules and regulations of the secular society which is under the spiritual guidance of the Brahmanas. They were meant to be administered by the Brahmanas. The letter of these regulations continuing to be administered by those latter-day Brahmanas who had no access to their real meaning, has been responsible for their mechanical imposition on the hereditary society of to-day.

The submission of the secular society to the guidance of Brahmanas in matters spiritual is a matter of option as regards the acceptance of such guidance on the part of the society. This is the recognised principle in Hinduism even to the present day. The Hindu society never interferes as between the disciple and his spiritual guide, holding the view that the disciple is in duty bound to render unconditional obedience to the Guru. The dictum of the Guru must be accepted as final in all cases of doubt on the part of the disciple. The Guru is the real authority as representing the Scriptures the true meaning of which, so far as his disciple is concerned, he alone is privileged to settle for him.

There is also no provision against the abuse of one's choice of an undeserving person as Guru. But it is laid down that the consequences of deliberately choosing a wrong guide is bound to be fatal. One can and should renounce a bad Guru as soon as he has cause to suspect his badness. It is the hereditary organisation that necessitated the subsequent curtailment of the free spiritual life of the un-degenerate days and the multiplication of rules and regulations to perpetuate the usurpation of spiritual authority by the pseudo-

Brahmanas who claimed their status by right of heredity.

Shree Haribhaktivilas has not been generally accepted as binding upon society in this country, because it embodies the tradition of the properly regulated spiritual freedom. For this very reason it did not suit the purpose of the hereditary Brahmanas to recognise its authority. The absurd code of Raghunandan Bhattacharyya, compiled in opposition to the spiritual code, was readily accepted in its stead to the utter ruin of all real spiritual life in Bengal. It was of course done by the hereditary Brahmanas who had wrongly usurped the function of spiritual guides of society. This will bring out the importance of the enquiry that forms the subject matter of this short paper. Unless the position of the Brahmana is settled on the principles that are actually laid down for the purpose in the Scriptures as interpreted by the theistic school there will not be any proper authority to whom society can safely entrust its spiritual guidance.

Contribution towards a History of Theism

THE initial difficulty, one that is bound to affect the judgment of non-sectarian readers at the very outset, is in defining theism. But it is nevertheless necessary to make a real attempt to clearly define what we mean by the term in order to proceed with this discussion in a scientific manner.

Let us walk warily by the negative method. This world is not left wholly to itself. Nay it is under the most minute and careful regulation of an intelligent Personality. The ways of this Person cannot be really understood fully by our present reason. It is possible for us to obtain the necessary power of understanding the same by our own effort backed by His Grace. It is our paramount duty to make this effort in all sincerity. If we can not find out our relationship with the Supreme Person we are thereby reduced to the necessity of groping in the dark which is abhorent to our rational instinct.

If the above definition of theism is tentatively accepted as a preliminary by the indulgent reader we venture to follow it up by the statement that man is naturally disposed to be theistic by his innate temperament. We do not mean that there are not thoughtless persons who may never think about the subject at all. But even in the savage state the sense of right and wrong, of moral governance, is found to be prevalent in some shape or other. There is an innate preference for right conduct in man which manifests itself the moment that an appeal is made to it in the proper spirit. In this case there is always a co-operative response or at any rate a real and universal tendency to such response.

But if it be asked why this ethical instinct should be supposed to be identical with the theistic we may say in reply that in theism the Supreme Person is also always supposed to be supremely good. If badness is not unnatural and, therefore, preventible there would be no ground for desiring to be ethical at all. The two things are really but unconsciously interconnected. The theistic attitude alone can be consistently and spontaneously ethical.

The universal and natural prevalence of the theistic temperament in some form or other in mankind may, therefore, be advanced as a psychological as well as historical fact which is not the product of artificially manufactured creeds for the propagation of an unnatural, harmful and adventitious disposition.

The next position that we want to take up in this matter is that atheism in all its forms represents the attempts that have been made from time to time to turn this natural disposition into artificial and consequently miserable, opposition to theism.

These two aspects are complementary and neither can be properly understood without constant reference to the other. This is so on account of the nature of man by its very constitution being susceptible to the insidious appeals of disloyalty against the truth. Atheism also claims to represent the natural disposition of man in almost identical terms that have been used on the side of theism. It is, therefore, necessary to expose the comparative unwholesomeness of Atheism at every step in order to supply an answer to the perpetual objector within. The comparative method is, therefore, the only one that can keep the subject perfectly open to the view of the sincere enquirer and enable him to arrive at a decision after full consideration of the representations of both sides.

The History of theism is thus inextricably mixed up with that of atheism. The survey would, therefore, include all creeds. Such study should give offence to no quarter except, of course, to the small but active sections of illiterate and learned pedants and fanatics who are neither theists nor even atheists, but are only insincere and irrational persons. The opposition from these sections need not become formidable in itself. But they are often liable to be employed as tools by really mischievous persons for the attainment of selfish secular purposes of their own. A clear and popular exposition of the whole position should also prove the best preventive as well as cure of this irritating malady to which all communities are more or less liable at all periods.

The point that we now wish to bring up is offered by way of a positive step forward. Is the Absolute to be discussed in a general way only in order to avoid wounding previously formed and deeply cherished susceptibilities ? From the propagandist point of view this method would seem to possess every advantage. But it is nevertheless only a counsel of postponement of any positive consideration of the subject-matter itself. It is also one of the most favourite dodges of the insincere and mischievous sections to which they habitually resort to postpone any substantive discussion of the subject on the plausible enough ground that the method of discussion had proved unfortunate in the past. But if on this ground the discussion itself is to be postponed there should be no possibility of its being resumed, as the objection would apply perpetually and will be strengthened by precedents in its favour by every such postponement.

What is necessary is a rational but substantive discusssion from a definite and well-established point of view. No objection, for example, is ordinarily apprehended from using the term theism to signify the subject of discussion. But as soon as such terms as Hindu or Muhammadan, or Christian, or Vaishnava, etc., are used for the purpose of definite discussion any critical consideration of any of these positions is almost sure to offend some members of the particular sect.

The point of view that we ourselves occupy is that of the revealed Scriptures as expounded and lived by Lord Shree Chaitanya. We occupy this particular position because we know that it offers the only complete and scientific view of the whole problem of Religion. It is, therefore, practicable for us to attempt in a really bonafide spirit a comparative examination of the whole position. The comparative method that has been employed by many writers on the subject of universal religion has been mostly descriptive of facts as they are. The causal chain has been sought to be brought out by those with a training in the methods of the physical Sciences. Theologians have on the other hand, taken their stand ultimately on dogmas which have to be accepted on trust even when they appear to be flatly opposed to the rational principle itself. Both methods as applied to an admittedly transcendental subject are not likely to bring about any progress towards the discovery of the Truth.

Our method is not the method that has been found to be so extraordinarily successful in application in finding out the causes (?) of the occurrences of physical and mental phenomena. We know that the mental and physical occurrences are on a plane that is transcended by that on which the spiritual events are located. The apparatus of physical and mental investigation that is being carried out by scientific men, have no access to the spiritual plane. We are in the position of workmen without tools and materials in respect of the investigation of the problems of religion if we want to approach the same by such method.

Regarding dogmatic theologians in the rigid sense we may only observe that even if their method really enables them to arrive at the Truth, as undoubtedly they claim that it does, we can have no means of forming any correct estimate of it till it is possible to discuss it in an open and rational way. If it be contended that no one can understand Hinduism till after his conversion into it such contention is nothing short of a summary ruling out of the very principle of the comparative method of examination.

The revealed Truth is capable of rational presentation by symbols but within the limits of the rational principle. He is not fully presentable by the method of verbal representation to the empiric consciousness. But it is not necessary to withhold Him from the attempt of rational treatment within clearly defined limits. This can, however, be properly done only by one who has full access to the transcendental plane.

But supposing it were possible for the speaker to communicate, how could it be possible for the hearer to understand the Truth? This leads to the rationale of the necessity of being enlightened by Divine Grace. There is also a rationally intelligible method of receiving the Divine Grace which is not bestowed mechanically or irrationally on its recipient. All this forms what may be called the epistemological portion of the Scriptures.

Words play a decisive part in revealed communication, as in our ordinary social intercourse. Unless words possess the spiritual potency, as they do manifest the power of expressing the limited, it would be impossible for the saint to communicate his experience to us. But although words possess the spiritual potency still we can have no substantive access to it till we fulfil the conditions of enrolment as spiritual pupils.

Such principles as 'standard', 'authority', have their corresponding counterparts in the realm of the souls. They are no less essential aspects of the Absolute Reality than they are of this relative existence. The difference between those conditions and their correlatives in this world consists in this that the spiritual conditions enrich while mundane conditions impoverish the prospects of the free exercise of the rational function itself.

We have been trying, ever since the establishment of this journal in 1879, to place before our readers, by means of the comparative method, the Truth learnt at the feet of the bonafide spiritual guide, revealed by the Scriptures. We have been discharging this function by the public in the English language through the last five years. We have been increasingly feeling the necessity of restating the History of Religion in as much as it has suffered grievous misrepresentation at the hands of empiric historians, in consequence of which we find ourselves liable to be grossly misunderstood by the average reader. The misrepresentation of History is the gravest disservice that can well be offered to any cause and one that most effectively blocks the path of all progress of rational enquiry.

The Chaitanya Movement (by Mr. M. T. Kennedy, 1925.)

THE book has the merit of being written with the same clear purpose as another popular work 'Indian Theism' from the pen of Dr. Macnicol, the object of both writers being a comparative treatment of the subject of 'Theism' from the point of view of their respective conceptions of the teachings of Christ. It is the settled conviction of both writers that Christian Theism, as understood by each of them, is the logical goal of all genuine Theistic thought to be found in every part of the world.

This is, no doubt, theoretically speaking, the right attitude to adopt towards the problem of religion, provided one is really convinced of the Absolute Truth of one's own position. The term Christianity itself does not mean, at least historically, that all sections of the professed followers of Christ agree about the fundamentals of the creed they profess in common. If the standard itself is a variable one, which the writers do not apparently suspect to be the case, it is necessarily difficult for the reviewer to hold the writer to his position.

The most fundamental position taken up by the writer of the 'Chaitanya Movement' is that the ethical teaching of Christ is safely 'grounded in His Divinity'. If Godhead is to be recognised at all He has been supposed to be provable of being the consistent upholder of the moral order. By this test it is held that the title of Christ to be called Divinity is absolutely and conclusively established.

It is necessary to put the matter in another way to enable the reader to avoid any possible misunderstanding. The Pastimes of Shree Krishna at Brindaban appears to the writer to be fundamentally defective on account of the undue stress that is laid upon the erotic element which is sought to be established as the only form of activity that is both wholesome as well as self-sufficient. The writer is unable to understand how such an ideal of the Divine function can be a basis for the ordinary moral life that should be led by the people of this world. The form of the amorous Pastimes of Brindaban is also free from all those

The form of the amorous Pastimes of Brindaban is also free from all those as man' (p. 231). 'The ethical teaching of Jesus is grounded in his conception of God...as unchanging in His love, goodness and moral purpose···The Christian ethic is of one piece throughout with the Christian doctrine of God' (p. 219).

The Christian ethic is not the empiric ethic. The empiric ethic itself is radically unethical. The righteousness of Godhead cannot be of the empiric brand. How can there be any necessity or even justification of the cardinal doctrine of Divine Grace itself in an ethical system which is based upon the principle of vindictive malice in the name of ethical Justice? Will also the ethical conception suit the Theistic doctrine of the Omipotence of the Divinity or even the All-Holiness of Godhead? How is this spurious system to account for the origin of the principle of evil? With all these unanswerable defects how can it avoid the charge of aiming at propagating atheism under the garb of the evangelical language? Is it superfluous or illogical to remember the caution about the wolf in sheep's clothing?

The point will be clearer if we consider the fact that the dupes of a pseudo-ethical system are never prepared to admit frankly the categorical difference between the mundane and the spiritual. They are always trying to deliberately avoid such confession. But no one can also profess Christianity without admitting revelation itself. Can the consistent empiricist, however, admit the doctrine of revelation?

In the light of the above how does the claim that the 'ethical' teaching of Jesus is grounded in his conception of God (as understood by the empiric admirer?) be made by these writers who are in arms by the very principle of empiricism against the Divinity of Godhead?

Let us devote a little more of our attention to the claims of empiric ethics which is the forte of these writers. What is the objective of the so-called science of empiric ethics? It professes to try to understand the meaning of the ethical sanction by the analysis of experience. Does it succeed in discovering any sanction, the purpose for which it sets out with so much noise? One should be surprised to be told that it tries to fulfil its purpose by the method of travelling, with the confidence of a forgone conclusion in an elaborately vicious circle. On the termination of this quest, designed to be successful, it is not ashamed to claim to have established certain negative principles which it proposes with equal effrontary to impose by the force of its desire to escape from all moral restraints, on those people who may continue to be troubled by the instinctive moral scruples. This is the service which this atheistical science is out to perform for mankind and to claim it to be a scientific vindication of the principle of morality which as a matter of fact, has been so obstinately trying to discredit by its irrelevent designing performance.

The so-called ethical conclusions sought to be established in this utterly inconclusive manner are found on examination to be after all a very simple thing, indeed. They leave us exactly where our unethical instinct wants us to be. They justify the life of refined eating and drinking, which is found in the above extracts to be identical with the teaching of Christ by the writer in question. The science of ethics takes for granted that it is only necessary to make the best of the bad circumstances of this wretched world. What a perfect recognition of the 'ethical' nature of the all-powerful Divinity ! This physical body is the starting point of the enquiry. Everything is gradually discovered to be dependent on the pampering of the flesh. This establishes the desirable connection between the religion and the efforts of the materialistic sciences directed to the identical purpose. This unceremonious method of politely showing the way to all problems of the soul, is claimed to be performed in accordance with the spirit of the teaching of Jesus and it is this which is confidently calculated to be promotive of the brotherhood of man.

The method is distinguished by another characteristic, viz., an extreme profession of consideration for the views and opinions of all persons apparently in conformity with the requirement of the above idea of universal brotherhood. It is not, indeed, possible for the exponent of the Truth to be universally obliging in a world so full of evil. But from the samples already quoted it must have appeared to the reader who is concerned about his soul that this class of writers try to make up for any defect of logic by their malicious choice of vocabulary which they do not hesitate to use against doctrines and views they are determined not to try to understand in the rational way. They never care to consult the source-books themselves but find a morbid pleasure of fastening upon the fables of other and equally untruthful writers for their information. The only adequate way in which the vindictive sophistries of these writers require to be met, is by helping them to understand and follow the bible in the spirit of Jesus which appears to us to be altogether different from that of empiric ethics. That will arouse in them a real curiosity for the problems of soul which alone can qualify them to be students of the revealed religions of the world. It is only on the spiritual plane that the view of the Truth as distinguished from ingenious casuistry of all kinds manufactured by the brain of man for the gratification of the senses is to be obtained by those who really want to serve the Absolute Truth.

MIDDLE PART

121 'It is no madness ; it is devotion to Krishna, I tell you.
No one else can never understand it.

122 Never say anything about it to an adverse person,
If, indeed, it be your purpose to witness many secrets of Krishna !

123 Saying so Srinibas went away home.
The suspicion of madness left the heart of Sachi.

124 Yet Shachi remained in the state of distress at her heart ;
In her mind she was afraid lest her Son were to go away from home.

125 Great Lord Biswambhar lived on in this manner :
Who can know Him if He does not Himself inform ?

126 One day the Lord, taking Gadadhar with Himself,
Set out in a merry mood on a visit to Adwaita.

127 The two Lords on their arrival found Adwaita seated,
In the act of worship by the offerings of water and tulasi ;

128 Saying 'Hari, Hari', and brandishing his two arms
He laughed and presently wept, forgetful of himself ;

129 It were as if the Lion, maddened beyond endurance, roared in thunder :
His wrath was like the appearance of the great Rudra himself.

130 As Lord Biswambhar caught sight of Adwaita
He fell down on the earth in a swoon.

131 By dint of the force of devotion mighty Adwaita
Knew everything, that He, indeed, was the Lord of his life.

132 'Whither wilt Thou go, my Thief, to-day ?' he thought within himself,
'All these days Thou hast been moving about even at this very place as a thief !'

133 'To Adwaita Your thievish policy will be of no avail!
I will, on this very spot, commit the act of theft over the head of the Thief Himself.

134 Being aware that the time for the commission of his intended theft had arrived Adwaita came down from his seat with all the offerings for worship.

135 On the spot, by offer of water washing His Feet, Hands and Mouth,
The Divine Acharyya worshipped the Feet of Chaitanya.

136 Placing flower, perfume, incense and the lighted lamp on the Feet of the Lord
Adwaita made repeated obeisances reciting this shloka :

137 'I humbly bow unto the Lord of The Brahmanas for the benefit of the cows and the Brahmanas ;
I bow repeatedly to Krishna, I bow to Gobinda, for the good of the world."

138 Continuing to recite this shloka Adwaita fell repeatedly at His Feet !
And wept aloud on recognising his own Lord.

139 He washed His twin Feet with the tears of his eyes,
He remained standing at his Feet with his palms joined in supplication.

140 Gadadhar said laughingly, pressing his tongue with the teeth,
'My lord, it is not meet to behave in in this manner to a boy'.

141 Adwaita only laughed at the words of Gadadhar,
'Gadadhar, you will recognize this Boy some day'.

142 Gadadhar experienced a great surprise in his mind ;
'May be, the Lord Himself has Appeared',

143 Ere long Biswambhar, on manifesting His external consciousness, Saw Adwaita Acharyya full of the spiritual mood.

144 Lord Biswambhar now hid Himself ;
He began to praise Adwaita joining His two Hands in supplication.

145 Bowing to Adwaita the Lord took the dust of his feet ;
The Lord made the offering of His Own Body to him,—

146 'Great one, may you vouchsafe your mercy to me ;
May you recognize for a certainty that I am, indeed, yours.

147 'I am blessed by obtaining the sight of you ;
It is only by your mercy that the Name of Krishna manifests His utterance ;

148 'Yourself can indeed, destroy the bondage of the world ;
In your heart Krishna is always manifest'.

149 The Lord knows how to exalt His devotee above Himself :
He behaves to His devotee just as the latter does to Himself.

150 Adwaita said in his mind, 'What credit hast Thou by this ?
But I have already stolen a march on the Thief'.

151 Adwaita smiled as he made reply,
'Biswambhar, Thou art to me more than all.

152 'Here will I abide in the pleasaunce of Krishna-talk ;
So may I be privileged to see Thee unceasingly.

153 'It is the wish of all Vaishnavas—to see Thee,—
To chant the kirtan of Krishna in Thy company'.

154 On hearing these words of Adwaita, with the greatest joy
Accepting his proposal the Lord returned home.

155 Adwaita knew—the Lord had become manifest.
To test this he at once set out for his home at Santipur.

156 'If indeed, it be true that He is the Lord and I His servant,
Then will He certainly fetch me bound to His side.'

157 Who has power to understand the heart of Adwaita
Whose power is the cause of the Appearance of Chaitanya ?

158 Of one who has no faith in these words,
The instant ruin is assured.

159 The Supreme Lord Biswambhar on each successive day
Performed the Sankirtan in the company of all the Vaishnavas.

160 All were filled with gladness as they cast their eyes on Biswambhar ;
No one could recognise his own Lord.

161 The state of His supreme spiritual absorption marked Him out from all.
A great suspicion took possession of the minds of all persons at sight of this.

162 When the Lord was under the influence of the blissful mood,
Who can describe it with the exception of Lord Shesha ?

163 A hundred persons failed to hold His shivering Form ;—
And hundreds of rivers coursed through His Eyes.

164 His whole Frame, blistering with gladness, had the likeness of a golden panasa
He laughed a haughty laughter at short intervals.

165 At times the Lord continued unconscious for a quarter of the day.
On the return of His external consciousness He said nothing but 'Krishna'

166 The ear was pierced by His thundering sound ;
It is by His grace that His devotees are saved.

167 His entire Frame momentarily assumed the fixed look of a column,
And the same Form became the next moment full of the softness of fresh butter.

168 All the Bhagabatas witnessed this unique sight ;
No one any longer thought Him to be human.

169 Some said, 'This person is Partial Appearance of the Lord Himself.'
Some said, 'In His Form it is Krishna Himself Who sports.'

170 Some maintained, 'Or He may be Suka, Prahlada or Narada.'
Some declared, 'It seems to me that all our dangers are ended.'

171 The mistresses of the households of all the Bhagabatas
Said, 'Krishna Himself has manifested His Birth.'

172 Some said, 'It may be the Appearance of the Lord Himself.'
They all judged in their minds in their respective ways.

173 With the return of His external consciousness the Lord clasped them all by the neck
And cried in such fashion that it is not possible for me to narrate.

174 'By the absence of Thy sight, Hari, the intervals of these days devoid of all glory,— Friend of those who has no other protector, Ocean of unmixed pity,—how indeed, am I to pass ?'

Annual mahotsab at Srl Purusottam Math, Puri

The Annual mahotsab celebrations at the Purusottam Math, Puri, are being conducted by His Holiness Srimat Bhakti Srirup Puri Maharaj. There has not yet been the usual influx of pilgrims on account of the date of Ratha Yatra having fallen this year in the middle of July. It is, however, expected that the pilgrims will turn up in much greater number than the average for the sight of Sree Nabakalebara (New Form) of Sree Sree Jagannath Deva. The renewal of the Holy Form is an occasion of special sanctity and takes place after long intervals of time. This ceremony has fallen due this time after an interval of nineteen years. The devotees of Sree Purusottam Math will duly perform as in previous years the ceremonies of retirement to Sree Alalnath during Anabasara, the cleansing of the Gundicha and the dance before the Car, in pursuance of the devotional Activities of Lord Sree Chaitanya.

Spiritual Exhibition

THE regular reader of this journal is already acquainted with the object as well as method of the spiritual exhibition as conceived and organised by the Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha. The first exhibition was held at Sridham Mayapur in connection with celebration of the anniversary of the Supreme Lord year before last. This was followed by the exhibition that was organised at the Gaudiya Math in Calcutta a few months back on the occasion of the installation of the Sree Bigrahas in the New Buildings of the Math at Baghbazar. The interest which was called forth by the exhibition in Calcutta may be gauzed by the number of visitors which exceeded all calculations passed beyond all arrangements for the proper regulation of traffic within the limited space at the disposal of the organisers. It is intended to hold the exhibition this year on a more spacious plot of land which has been kindly placed at the the disposal of the Sabha by the Corporation.

The possibility of the spiritual exhibition is ensured by the real and substantive existence of the realm of the Absolute of which the mundane world is the perverted reflection. It is for this reason possible to represent the spiritual by mundane contrivances. It is not only a merely practicable but the most effective method of propaganda and one which is also free from the ordinary current misconceptions on the subject of religion. This method has a boundless possibility of expansion in the future and if it really sets forth the Truth it will quickly revolutionise the current views on religion. It is both a fully scientific as well as an effectively popularising method of propaganda.

Those who are opposed to the principle of representation of the spiritual by the mundane categories overlook the moiety of the whole and indivisible Truth. The realm of the Absolute is no doubt categorically different from the mundane. It is also perfectly inaccessible to reasoning that chooses to start from and take its stand on mundane experience. The objectors of the representation of the spiritual by the mundane rightly maintain that the mundane representation is mischievous in as much as it is bound to produce and perpetuate the impression that the spiritual is in some conceivable way similar to the mundane. This objection holds good so far and we have every sympathy for those who are so anxious to emphasise the difference that eternally separates the mundane from the spiritual.

But this is only one side of the shield and the dark side. There is another and the brighter side, one that renders worship of the Transcendental possible to the conditioned soul. If it is to be possible for man to progress towards the transcendental service of the Absolute Who by every definition is wholly inaccessible to the limited vision of man both by reason of its want of range and of its aptitude to present the misleading view of the objects seen by its means, there should be a way of using our present equipments in the proper manner for the purpose.

Accordingly the Scriptures declare that the phenomenal world is not wholly out of touch with the Absolute. There is a relationship between the two which may be described by a mundane analogy. The Scriptures say that the mundane is the perverted reflection of the Absolute. This is a most momentous announcement. It no doubt makes worship possible without throwing it open as it is to the view of unredeemed humanity. Worship is rendered to the Absolute by the scriptural method under the constant and unconditional guidance of the redeemed souls.

Let us go a little more fully into the details of the function of worship itself. Who renders worship, to Whom does he render worship, by what method does he offer worship and why does he worship ? It is necessary to try to understand these matters in terms of the mundane vocabulary in conformity of the plain meaning of scriptural revelation as interpreted by the bonafide spiritual guide to the entire satisfaction of our receptive rational judgment fully prepared to admit the real existence of the Absolute.

The function of worship belongs to the soul in his natural state and it is not a function of the limited mind. This implies admission of the existence of an entity who is not accessible to the mental outlook. But the mind is apt to think that it is the owner of the particular form of an imperfect consciousness which appears to it to be a part and parcel of its own nature. This is a mistake on the part of the mind according to the Scripture. In the conditioned state the soul is enabled by a power of the Divinity to delegate his function to the limited mind and to remain inactive himself. In the mental consciousness there is no trace of evidence regarding the supermental existence of the soul in the unconditioned state. All mental speculation on the nature of the soul is therefore bound to lead away from the direction of the real quest.

The object of worship is the Absolute Truth Himself. The mind as long as it is limited in its function by the mundane categories can have no access to the object of worship. That this must be so is not, however, incomprehensible to the mind itself. The mind feels itself effectively obstructed on all sides by the resistance of its own constitution in the quest of the Truth. Not to recognize this is nothing but sheer hypocrisy on the part of the mind. Therefore, the quest of the Truth is incumbent upon the mind also by its constitution. This is seemingly the insoluble riddle which confronts the empiric enquirer. Unless the empiricists can find a way out of this difficulty he can not claim even to himself to be on the path that leads to the Truth. He can receive no help in this matter from his own mind or from the whole race of those who depend on their minds like himself. In other words he cannot work up to the Truth with the help of those appliances and resources that are at his disposal. Under the circumstances he may like to despair of being ever able to find the real Truth. But by the constitution of his mind he can never stop in the midst of his quest. He must either go forward or backward. If he exercises his habitual method he cannot go forward and, therefore, must be continually moving away from the Truth Whom he professes also to seek.

In this predicament the Scriptures come to his help. What they want to say is in effect not anything to which he is invited to assent against his own better judgment. But the proposition that is put before him by the Scriptures is at the same time also incomprehensible to his limited understanding if he is disposed to believe nothing to be truth which his limited mind does not fully comprehend by the inductive method. He is of course free to stick to his own futile method and be in a state of perpetual and increasing ignorance. It is not our business to consider at this place this aspect of the case.

The Scriptures propose that the enquirer will have to submit to receive the consciousness of the real nature of the Truth from the Truth Himself. The Truth is not an inanimate entity formed of a number of ideas existing no where except in the brain of the supposed knower. This would make Truth a constituent part of the knower. He would thereby cease to be either an object of quest or of worship. A person is under no necessity of seeking a part of himself. Neither is he under any rational obligation of rendering homage to a portion of himself. The inanimate can be by its nature a comprehensible part of the mind. But the mind cannot include in this way the indivisible entity which is apprehensible to it as the principle of pure consciousness. The Scriptures, therefore, direct us to offer our homage to the principle of pure consciousness which transcends the mental existence.

The process of worship is the function of individual detached entities of pure consciousness towards the plenary indivisible pure Consciousness. The Object of worship is plenary Consciousness. The worshipper is the detachable portion of the plenary Consciousness. The detachable portions are maintained in their position of detachment by their eternal specific nature. They are thereby enabled to serve the plenary Consciousness from their detached position. The necessity of such service is also a part of their nature and the fulfilment and justification of it. But they are not complementaries of one another. The detached portions are under the necessity of rendering service for their own benefit. The plenary Consciousness is under no obligation of receiving any service but is in the habit of allowing the detached portions to serve Him out of His causeless mercy.

The worshipper receives perpetual enlightenment from the plenary Consciousness. The process of receiving enlightenment by his own consent is the nature and basis of all spiritual service on the part of the worshipper. In other words the worshipper is informed of what he is to do. But this guidance is of such nature that helps the guided to realise the possibility of serving the plenary Consciousness without losing his own individuality in any way. The service of the Absolute is realised as the only really free function of his individual nature in perfect harmony with the equally fully free functioning of every other individual serving entity.

Once possessed of this real enlightenment the worshipper finds himself in a position to use his present appliances and materials in a way that will take him forward towards the Truth. It is the case of Truth drawing His worshipper towards Himself. This need not be impossible for the Truth although it must be perfectly incomprehensible to the limited mind. The service of the Truth in this world is not a symbolical affair only. It is by no means a make-believe. The appliances and the materials used by the worshipper of the Absolute share the spiritual nature of the process and applier of the process.

The service of the Truth on the plane of the Absolute bears a very real resemblance to the activities of the physical body and the materialised mind of the conditioned soul functioning on the mundane plane. We may ask our readers to return to our observation on the subject in the opening paragraphs of this short article to the effect that the mundane world is the perverted reflection of the realm of the Absolute. In other words the activities of the enlightened souls are only apparently concerned with the mundane categories. As a matter of fact, however, they really transcend those categories not symbolically but substantively.

The point that is to be particularly noted in this connection is that the worship, including process, material and worshipper, can be really spiritual if it belongs to the transcendental plane. The worshipper of the Absolute has to be actually lifted to the higher plane for the purpose of performing his worship with other appliances and materials than those that are used for the mundane activity. The worshipper, process and material, however, do not cease to appear as mundane to the mundane spectators even while they are substantialised by the Grace of the Object of worship in the act of rendering Him worship. The physical body and mind of the person who submits to the servant of the Absolute for being initiated in His service become, by such process, by the Will of Krishna, similar to but not identical with the spiritual essence, thereby rendering the worship of Godhead practicable.

The spiritual exhibition, therefore, is not a symbolical display of the mundane. It is a substantive display of the spiritual. The symbol of the mundane is also and wholly mundane. This spiritual realism of bonafide worship is not likely to be grasped by those who are not prepared to cut themselves off entirely from their empiric moorings in approaching the Absolute. It is only crude empiricism that can have any objection to the reality of worship. The spiritual exhibition, including organiser, process and material, is a spiritual affair, not in any sense which may be read into it by the empiric pedants but in the absolute sense of the only reality. One can have no access to its real nature unless he is prepared to cease to try to understand it by his own resources and submit to receive enlightenment from the exhibition itself which can take the initiative in informing him about its own nature. The spiritual exhibition is really, as its name explains, the Absolute realm itself appearing in the form of the mundane to the perverted vision of the haters of the Truth, but disclosing its spiritual nature to all sincere servants of Krishna.

Shree Krishna Chaitanya at Puri

From the twenty-fifth year of His Appearance the Supreme Lord exhibited the Lila of leading the life of a sannyasin. As Teacher of the world the Lord manifested His anxiety for securing for Himself the regard of the people in the way that was not opposed to the principle of un-alloyed service of the Divinity. If the spiritual teacher is not fully respected by the method of unconditional obedience the real meaning of his words refuse to manifest itself to the unserving disposition of the hearer. The sannyasin is enjoined to be respected by the society which follows the varnashrama regulations. Sri Chaitanya turned a sannyasin in order that His teaching might be heard, by the offer of due regard to Himself, by all classes of the people.

The Supreme Lord spent the first six years of His sannyasa Lila as a travelling preacher of the Scriptures. During this period He met in controversy all opponents of Theism in every part of the country and after fully exposing their sophistries proclaimed the exclusive claim of Truth to the unconditional allegiance of all persons. The restoration of the pure worship of Shree Brindaban was also arranged for.

The next six years were spent at Puri in confidential discourses with His devotees and with those who approached Him for instruction in the proper mood.

The remaining part of His Career consisting of twelve years was passed in the most intimate service of the Lord in the company of Swarup and Ramananda.

This concluding part of the Career of the Lord has necessarily been the most difficult to understand. It has been imitated by worldly men and down-right rascals, for gaining the reputation of sainthood. Its esoteric significance is sure to be missed by those who are unwilling to place themselves fully under the guidance of the bonafide spiritual teacher. It is also extremely rare to find a really enlightened teacher of the Absolute. There is no wonder, therefore, that an immense boly of spurious literature has grown up round this subject, which has been doing incalculable harm to all classes of the people.

The core of the difficulty may be indicated by referring to the literature that formed the medium of communion of the Supreme Lord with Godhead. The principal works in which Mahaprabhu evinced His interest are the songs of Vidyapati and Chandidas, the drama of Ramananda, Karnamrita and Shree Geeta-Govinda. These books treat of the subject of Divine Amour.

It is not impossible to discourse about the exoteric aspect of devotional Activity and enlist a certain degree of sympathy of the hearer on its behalf by means of rational discussion. This is so because the exoteric aspect is such by reason of its retention of a certain degree of reference to the ordinary concerns of the mundane life as it appears to the view of the mundane spectator. It does not wholly cease to appeal to the economic principle of utility now and here. It seems occasionally to represent the devotional function partially as an improvement of the worldly function.

But if Godhead were to condescend to actually live with us in our homes our present rational instinct would find itself at the end of its resources in devising any reasonable plan of intimate personal relationship with the sole Object of our loving devotion. The mundane wants and necessaries are a perfect god-send to us during our brief sojourn in this vale of tears which are so copiously shed for ephemeral wants that are not to be satisfied. Had there been no earthly wants there would have been absolutely no function for our poor brain. And every one knows that the idle brain is the only workshop of the enemy of Godhead for devising even worse mischief than ordinary. This Divine pessimism of the soul may, indeed, be drowned in a flood of gin and beer but it may not be universally regarded as the normal function of the rational faculty.

Godhead, say the Scriptures, can be served only by love as it is to be found in the purest of souls. No Scriptures have declared that the love of flesh of the impure heart is an acceptable offering for the Lord. Wherein then does this clinging impurity of our heart consist ? But the connotation of the word 'love' itself requires to be settled as a preliminary before we can try to understand the requirements of its purity.

What is then 'love' ? It has a distinctive meaning when it is applied to the attachment between the sexes which bears the specific designation of 'amour'. Has 'love' in its general sense any connection with this specific phenomenon ? This specific variety viz., amour is found to be the principle that supplies the leavening quality to the animate cosmos. If this principle were banished from the earth there would remain no compelling incentive for any interesting activity. This view is felt to be true in practice by all persons to a more or less convincing degree. It has been sung as the poetry of all poetry, without which the life of man would degenerate to the dull level of that of the animal creation. If the useful order of all the innocent quadrupeds could be ideally housed, fed, clothed, couched, mated, groomed, etc., etc., and if they could also be endowed with the mechanical intellect which is capable of providing all those necessaries in the most profuse and delicious forms, would their condition be regarded as perfect, if their hearts had continued to be devoid of the instinct of amour as experienced by man ?

Or let us take the opposite case viz., that of the denizens of a realm where the sexual activity might be the only possible function of all persons and is also capable of being conscientiously proclaimed as such without any reservation whatsoever. Would such a society be more inviting to our rational instinct than the society of animals ? Too much of sexuality is found to be one of the most intolerable forms of the evil that so abounds in this world. As a matter of fact we know very well that there cannot be a more loathsome character than the person who is given to gross sensuality. But the principle of amour has nevertheless continued to be cherished by all.

The monogamous arrangement has been devised as being on the whole the best practicable way out of a universal difficulty. But the institution of marriage regulates only the sexual relationship which may or may not accompany the amorous principle. The regulation of the principle of amour is sought to be afforded by the aesthetic art and literature of the world. I have gone into some detail in order to bring out the importance and connotation of the term 'amour' on the mundane plane, from the point of view of a human being.

Exclusive devotion to a single person of the opposite sex may be allowed to constitute the sine qua non of the normal amorous principle on this earth. This attachment is liable to be condemned as it tends to confine its victim to an extremely narrow outlook. It is no doubt contended on behalf of the principle that it also tends to stimulate the nobler instincts of man and thereby to ultimately widen his outlook and range of activities. But if the person so exclusively loved happens to be himself or herself an unworthy subject the effect of the passion directed to such a person becomes a source of great nuisance in every way. As every earthly person is proverbially full of every kind of defect the effect of amorous love is found in practice to be the most fruitful source of the most detestable crimes as well as of the most heroic virtue. In all cases, however, it is found to change a person's general outlook on life.

The fact of difference of sex cannot be detached from the principle of amorous love. Amorous love between persons of the same sex is only the abnormal form of it and need not be considered as different in principle from the other. The sexual factor goes hand in hand with the sensuous appetite and this latter is fully present in the abnormal form. The sexual appetite is directed to the gross physical body which, the passion identifies under the urge of the instinct with the object of its concern. This fact is expressed by the care which a person in love is apt to lavish on the physical body. This objectionable and loathsome side of the amorous affairs of this world is also unavoidable by the nature of the case. The relation between physical bodies is instinctively repulsive to the soul and also, to an extent, to the mind.

The soul is not the physical body nor is he identical with the mind with its affinity to the physical body. The phenomenon of mundane amour represents the strongest form of blind affinity for the gross body and to its supporting portion of the mental principle. There is thus the clear line of demarcation of sphere of interest between the soul on the one hand and the mind in alliance with the gross body on the other, which should effectively prevent the soul in his pure condition from evincing any mundane amorous predilection.

It is, however, the declaration of the Scriptures that the earthly amour is only the perverted reflection of a spiritual principle which is eternal and unchangeable. The amorous relationship of this world is liable to decay and die by the natural process of physical and mental change. It is repulsive, even while it seems to last, for the same reason. These conditions of unwholesomeness are absent in spiritual amour.

The amour on the highest plane does not aim at one's own pleasure. Krishna is identical with and yet distinct from His Only Mistress. The Jiva-soul in मधुर रति can interest herself in the service of the amour of Krishna's predominated Moiety for Himself. She is not disposed to be the direct mistress of Krishna. There is in मधुर रस only one Male Who is directly and fully served only by One Female in Goloka. All the other females are the maids of the Female Counter-whole of Sri Krishna. These servants do not desire to gratify their individual senses. They are exclusively occupied in serving the pleasures of Sree Radhika, the Divine Counter-whole of Sri Krishna. This arrangement does not reduce the occupation of any person to the pursuit of his or her own sexual gratification in any sense. On the contrary it makes every jiva a servant in the Household of Godhead by the institution of the Divine Household.

In that Household it is not the duty of every servant to know or interest himself or herself in the intimacies of the only Master and His Prime Mistress. It is nevertheless inevitable for some to be favoured with the highest and most intimate confidences of the Master by favour of the Mistress. But no one can expect to be really trusted by the Master against the Best Beloved. Those, therefore, who submit to be guided by Sri Radhika are likely to be in a position to be able to act more in accordance with the wish of the Master than even those who may really be in the most intimate direct confidence of the Master Himself.

The love of Sree Radhika for Sree Krishna is known only to those who possess the proper disposition to be of help in the matter. It is entirely at the discretion of the Mistress to confide Her own secrets to another. It is these secrets which are the subject-matter of the compositions to which Sree Gaursundar devoted Himself exclusively in the company of Swarupa and Ramananda during the concluding twelve years of His residence at Puri as Sannyasin.

(II)

The positive aspect of the Divine ancestry of Shree Krishna does not run in the upward direction above Vasudeva. It is necessary to seek the mercy of Vasudeva if one is desirious of realising the nature of the Son-hood of Godhead. The Son-hood of Godhead must not be confused with the Fatherhood of Godhead which is much less full. The object of the present discourse is to try to understand the implications of the Son-hood of Godhead which in it's full aspect belongs to the plane of the intimate service of the Divinity.

Those who are enamoured of the Fatherhood of Godhead offer their filial love and obedience to the Majesty of Godhead. The sons of God share in the rule of their Father as His most beloved servants. The sons look up to the Father with a certain type of loving respect mingled with a strong sense of gratitude for favours received and expected. The son cannot also be, by his position as son, the sharer of all the secrets of his Father. There are certain restrictions which the son as son must not pass. This is also true of the relationship of the son to the mother. It is this restriction which prevents the fullest intimacy of relationship of service between the Father and son.

It will not do to refuse to go into these details of relationship on the ground that they are unintelligible to the understanding of man. If we try to push the analogy with earthly conditions to details we may expose ourselves to the charge of being anthropomorphists. But we may fall into the opposite error of being nihilistic impersonalists if we avoid to define our position in a concrete manner. The terms "Father" and "son" are not used by the Scriptures in the merely figurative sense. One who cannot explain their rationale should be rightly charged with the grave defects of wilful obscurantism and radical ignorance.

Shree Krishna is the Son of Vasudeva and Devaki. He is the foster-Son of Nanda and Yasoda. The spiritual exponents of the Bhagabatam tell us that the service of Nanda and Yasoda is much more intimate than that of Vasudeva and Devaki. Shree Krishna was born of Vasudeva and Devaki. But He never received as child the service of His legitimate parents. Shree Krishna can only be nursed by His foster-parents. Vasudeva and Devaki have too much respect for their Child to be able to nurse Him with pure parental affection. Shree Krishna manifests His Birth in the pure positive cognition who by implication is aware of His Divine Nature and is by that very fact rendered incapable of regarding Him also as his Son. Pure cognition and pure heart in co-operation bring about the Birth of the Un-born. But no understanding and no heart can be enough pure to be able to love Shree Krishna by the method of rational deserving. The moment that Shree Krishna showed His Divine Form to His legitimate parents they had their full reward. Shree Krishna Himself told them that no one is able to recognise His Human Form. Those, therefore, who nurse Him are those who do not recognise His Divinity. But their relation with Him is much more intimate than of those who recognise His Divinity. This is the necessary nemesis of conscious understanding and conscious righteousness in their attempt to be the legitimate parents of the Absolute.

The case of the legitimate sons and consorts of Shree Krishna is somewhat analogous to the above. They belong to a much lower plane than the unclaiming servants who do not covet the position of legitimate relationship for squeezing the Absolute within the pseudo-ethical hole.

We thus get the following position. Shree Krishna is not a mere historical character with a determinable genealogy running backwards and forwards in order to satisfy the truth-seeking propensity of the historian of mundane affairs. There are, however, also in His case, legitimate parents, sons and consorts. But these also are not mundane, although they are apt to appear to the empiric judgment under the figures of mundane persons. This legitimate ancestry and descendence of Shree Krishna also do not run beyond one generation either way. In other words they are and have to be contemporaneous with the Supreme Lord Himself as ministrants to His Activities on the mundane plane. Their significance is derived from and terminate in His Personal relationship. They are, as a matter of fact, part and parcel of the Lord Himself and form the Divine Paraphernalia Who are inseparable counter-wholes of the Lord.

It is, of course, possible and necessary to have relationships with the Paraphernalia of the Divinity in order to be enabled to participate in their service of the Lord. But the Divine Paraphernalia are in the habit of picking and choosing from among the candidates for service. They choose only such candidates who are fully and exclusively prepared to promote their particular mode of service. Those who attach themselves by the tie of this under-service to the Paraphernalia of the Divinity, form the paraphernalia or families of the servants of the Lord. These families are also no families in the mundane sense. Neither have they any seminal ancestry and descendence for gratifying the pastime of investigation by the chronicler of mundane affairs.

The reader should now be in a position to understand the nature of the plight to which the empiric historian is reduced by his seemingly well-meaning attempt to trace the ancestry of Shree Krishna. All his pedantic performances only shoot over the head of his mark and delude himself and the victims of his sophistries. It is not possible to understand the nature of the Divine Birth, as it really is, by the method of rationalistic discussion; not for the reason that it is in any way opposed to the principle of rationality itself, but for the reason that it exceeds the small compass of our reasoning faculty. One can have access to the substantive Truth only by the method of submission to His Paraphernalia. The empiric reason is perfectly free to follow a different method, as it is undoubtedly free to be unreasonable.

THE 'Six Goswamins' of the Gaudiya community viz., Sree Rupa, Sanatan, Raghunath Bhatta, Jiva, Gopala Bhatta and Raghunath Das who are the traditionally recognised authorised exponents of the teachings of Sriman Mahaprabhu, are not authors and geniuses in the ordinary sense. They are spiritual teachers of the world and saints. As spiritual teachers or Acharyyas, their function consists in expounding the Scriptures by leading the spiritual life embodied therein. The combination of Scriptural learning with spiritual life is found in all these teachers of the religion who were authorised by Sri Chaitanya to spread the knowledge of the Scriptures by their writings. They are not merely well-versed in the Shastras but could, by their writings, speeches and conduct transmit to others the spiritual life itself. Of these authorised exponents of the teachings of the Supreme Lord, Sree Gopala Bhatta is one of the foremost.

Sri Gopala Bhatta requested his disciple Srila Kaviraj Goswami, author of Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita, to omit all references to his career in his book treating of the Deeds of the Supreme Lord. Hence the author of Charitamrita has not recorded more than the name of Gopala Bhatta Goswami in that work. In the absence of any detailed information from his contemporaries only such particulars of his career as can be gleaned from his own writings and from the writings and references of authors of a subsequent date, have been collected in this short paper.

It appears that Sri Gopala Bhatta obtained his initiation from Probodhananda Saraswati, a sannyasin of the triple staff who was his uncle before he renounced the world. Gopala Bhatta went to Brindaban when his parents departed from this world. He obtained the company of Sri Rupa and Sânatan on his arrival at Brindaban. Mahaprabhu Sri Chaitanya was at Nilachal at this time. Sri Rupa and Sanatan informed Sri Chaitanya at Puri about the arrival of Gopala Bhatta at Brindaban. Sriman Mahaprabhu wrote back to them expressing His satisfaction and asked them to treat the new-comer as their brother.

Sri Gopala Bhatta Goswami is the compiler of 'Sri Hari Bhaktibilas' and author of 'Satkriasaradwipika.' He is the commentator of 'Krishna Karnamrita'. He also established the worship of Sri Sri Radha-Ramana through the instrumentality of Sri Rupa Goswami and made over the eternal service to his disciple Gopinath. It appears from a reference by Sri Jiva Goswami in the beginning of his 'Tattwa Sandarva' that Sri Gopala Bhatta also wrote a book embodying a comparative treatment of the systems of the older Vaishnava Acharyyas. 'Sri Gaurganoddesha-dwipika' identifies Srila Gopala Bhatta Prabhu with Sri Ananga Manjari or in the alternative, with Sri Gunamanjari, of the Dwapara Lila of Sri Krishna-Chandra. Srinibas Acharyya and Gopinath Pujari were the disciples of Sri Gopala Bhatta Goswami. Haribansa, another disciple appears to have fathered a different sect.

Keeping in our mind the above meagre outline of his career let us revert to the home of Venkata Bhatta at the point when Sriman Mahaprabhu accepted his hospitality.

Gopala was then a mere boy. He was handsome and energetic. But even at that tender age Gopala was marked out by his unique devotional temperament. When this pure-hearted servant of the Lord found Sri Gaursundar, his eternal Lord, in his father's house, he busied himself with extraordinary ardour to serve Him with all his heart. Venkata Bhatta had also welcomed the Supreme Lord to his house with the greatest enthusiasm. He washed the Feet of the Lord with his own hands and drank the water sanctified by the touch of the Lord's Feet with his whole family.

Venkata Bhatta had most hospitably offered to the Lord the alms of the most sumptuous dishes that he could provide. After the Lord had accepted his alms of food Venkata Bhatta did not miss the opportunity of his life and proposed that as the Chaturmasya-brata was near at hand, the Lord might be graciously pleased to stay for the four rainy months under his humble roof and thereby deliver him from the bondage of the world by Krishna-talk from His own lips.

Godhead is ever subject to the wishes of His devotees. The Supreme Lord, Sri Gaursundar, could not do otherwise than comply with the sincere prayer of Venkata. He agreed to pass the rainy season at Venkata Bhatta's house. The Lord bathed daily in the Kaveri. He passed the days in chanting the Name, discoursing about Krishna and dancing in the exclusive mood. He also visited Sri Ranganathji in His temple. Constant drinking of the nectar of pure Krishna-discourses with his ears had its inevitable effect upon Venkata-Bhatta, who soon fell attracted to the worship of Shri Krishna by the method of intimate loving devotion losing his former preference for the worship of Lakshmi Narayana by the method of distant reverence. His heart was at last completely captured by the mode of worship of Braja (Brindaban).

In Brindaban Sri Krishna is the only Male Lover. Though the quality of Divine Majesty is necessarily and fully present in the amorous mode of worship the former does not predominate over the loveliness of the latter. Sri Narayana, Lord of Vaikuntha, is the Manifestation of Sri Baladeva, the Alter-Ego of Sri Krishna, representing the Supreme Majesty of the Divinity in all its direct Fullness. The display of the Majesty of Godhead in Vaikuntha keeps the Object of worship at a great distance from His worshippers. There is, therefore, little scope in Vaikuntha for the play of the unreserved confidence of loving devotion. The latter is possible only in a realm where the barrier of 'dignity' is out of the way. It is only in the atmosphere of Sree Brindaban that one can realise the significance of Sree Krishna's saying that even when the sweet-heart chastises Him, He prefers her admonitions to the invocations of the Vedas.

Sree Krishna as the Object of loving devotion is brought much closer to the heart of His devotee than Narayana Who is an Object of veneration. Shree Krishna is not too high to His consorts or parents and elders or to His chums and playmates. In Braja we are rid of the comparatively joyless at nosphere of the regime of a perfect King of Kings, lording it over his loving and obedient subjects from the height of His distant throne.

Neither do we find in Braja any of the unwholesomenesses of this world, which are the perverted reflections of the relationships of the former. Worldly love is a purely selfish instinct in all its forms. Unalloyed selfless love for Krishna is called 'Prema' to distinguish it from worldly love which is 'Kama' or carnality. Even those persons who after being freed from all the frailties of this world by being washed clean in the stream of the 'Biraja' and from all taint of worldly knowledge by the light of Brahmaloka have attained the plane of Vaikuntha, the realm of the Absolute ruled over by Sree Narayana Himself, are not in a position to taste the loveliness of the love of Sree Krishna, what to talk of the sinful people of this mundane plane.

The discourses about loving devotion to Krishna in Braja from the Lips of Sree Gaursundar, Who is identical with the Son of the Chief of Braja, evoked in the heart of Venkata Bhatta the inherent dormant love of his pure soul towards Krishnachandra.

THE ANNUAL CELEBRATIONS OF THE GAUDIYA MATH

The Annual celebrations of the Calcutta Gaudiya Math will be held from the 23rd August to the 26th September 1931. During the celebrations a unique moral and religious exhibition will be held from the 6th September to the 23rd September 1931, on the Corporation land, near the Gaudiya Math Temple. This exhibition will contain a big Museum of various religious literatures, antiquities, pictures and other valuable collections and will be a demonstrative exposition and pictorial representation of the intrinsic principles of religion. All are cordially invited.

Ritual

THE practice of Religion in the form of ritual is liable to be most unsympathetically regarded by the empiricists. The rituals that are in vogue in all the principal religious systems are supposed by empiricists to be more or less a survival of the irrational practices of former backward times.

All rituals may be divided into the distinct categories of (1) that relating to worshipper, (2) that relating to worship and (3) that relating to the Object of worship.

Let us take the first of these groups and with its help try to understand in a definite manner some of its implications. Who is really the worshipper in the act of worship prescribed by the different creeds? The empiric view assumes that the real worshipper is the mind of the person who offers worship to a concept represented by the visible emblem that may serve as the object of his worship. The empiricist holds that there can be no other worshipper.

If the above opinion is adopted the origin of all rituals is at once found to be a concoction of the human mind. Empirically speaking the conservatism that is ordinarily displayed in sticking to the letter of the ritual by the religionists is, therefore, an obstacle in the way of the progressive 'evolution' of the ritual.

The empiricists also have an explanation to offer regarding the necessity of the mind to invent the ritual at all. The ritual is in line with every other device by which the mind tries to ameliorate its own condition. If for example food is offered to the god of rain, when the primitive imagination honestly believes in the existence of a deity who is liable to be pacified by such offering, it would not be irrational to expect to be favoured by his blessing in the shape of adequate rain at the proper time, by way of return. As the mental outlook itself undergoes development in course of the progress of civilization it will naturally think differently about the nature of the object of worship and the proper method of his worship.

It is feasible to write a history of the evolution of ritual from the above point of view. It is also possible by this kind of historical method to compel rational assent to the legitimacy of attempts to reform religious practice so as to make it accord with the present requirements of one's mind. It is also possible on the same ground to suppose that every rational effort for the amelioration of the physical or mental condition of oneself, in fact all the ordinary activities of the average civilized man, is properly describable as the ritual of the most up-to-date religion. This attempt of secularising religion itself is being made in right earnest by the materialistic school who have gained such a strong hold on the imagination of mankind at the present moment.

But the empiric history as well as empiric philosophy of Religion meet their Sedan in the persistent refusal of the instinct of man to accept their postulation of the deluding nature of existence for the principle of cognition in their utterly despairing scheme of reform. There never was the historical period when man set about to manufacture Religion in public or held the view that it had been so manufactured for them at any remote period. Until quite recently man never deliberately set about to reform any religion. The old method of reform was the further elucidation of the received creed by fuller interpretation of the texts of the Scriptures. This is undoubtedly the historical fact and the empiric historian and the empiric philosopher go against the historical method itself when they set up the plea for the necessity of religious reform on the evidence of history. No one is conscientiously justified in so grossly misrepresenting the history of mankind in this most important matter.

It would be worth one's while to try to clear up in some detail the self-contradictory nature of the presumptions of the empiric historians and philosophers, from the purely historical point of view.

There is no Religion which does not speak of the soul and of his spiritual function as constituting the real nature of religious worship and the real worshipper. The mind is not supposed by any of the revealed religions to have access to the plane of the religious function. This is the fact. The empiricists are at liberty to say that it is superstitious but they should not insinuate that it was manufactured by man as a historical fact. There is no doubt that there had been empiricists also in ancient times who may have held the same view on the subject as their modern descendants. But the mass has never followed those teachers, at any rate consciously, in the matter of religion.

We are not opposed to investigation into the early history of ritual. But we want that the investigator must not allow himself to be misled by the atheists also. He must not suppose quite gratuitously and unhistorically that it was the business of people in ancient times to manufacture Religion and pass it off on the credulous masses in the name of revelation. The proper attitude for such an investigator would be to suppose nothing to be historically a manufacture which is not proved by actual evidence to be such. Whether revelation is possible or not is not the issue before the historian, nor even before the empiric philosopher. In the one case it is irrelevant, in the other it is beyond his power to decide.

If worship means the function of the soul towards a spiritual entity it need not be regarded as superstitious for the simple reason that it happens to be beyond the power of the mind to comprehend. In such a case the word superstition as applied to the ritual would be a misnomer and should be more logically applicable to the person applying it for the purpose.

It would be more to the purpose to ask how can a process which is actually seen to be mental or physical, be at all admitted to be above the comprehension of the mind ? If for example a person while offering flowers with his hands to the idol of stone before him contends that he is doing something which it is beyond the power of the actual observer to understand, should such contention be regarded with mute veneration and submitted to without contradiction ? Would not this also be putting a premium upon mummeries ?

But the Scriptures do not require us to take anything on trust blindly nor do they forbid the proper use of our mental and physical equipments. They assure us that it is possible for us to find our soul and to understand the spiritual significance of our mental and physical activities. They want us to use our body and mind to serve the spiritual end. This plain attitude need neither be grossly misunderstood, nor perversely and blindly opposed, in the name of a rational duty that is incumbent on all honest persons.

The observations in regard to the worshipper apply in to the cases also of the offerings, as well as, to the object of worship. It is equally possible to have a visible object of worship if such object is to be offered any material substance at all by means of the physical hand. But there is nothing impossible in these activities having a spiritual end in view.

Before we close this brief discussion of a large subject to which we shall have often occasion to return, we should try to make our position clear by a concrete example. Let us take the case of the Holy Form of Shree Shree Radha-Gobinda Who is actually worshipped by the Vaishnavas. The Vaishnavas do not claim to worship any historical or mythical hero or any other mundane entity under the Form of Radha-Gobinda. They say that according to the Scriptures and true eternal service-holder the actual Divine Form Who is identical with Godhead Himself appears in the visible Form of the Archa to accept the worship of His devotee, as otherwise it would not be possible for man in his present state of complete spiritual ignorance to worship Him at all. He (the Archa) can only regulate his misconception. They say that if man is unable to worship Godhead he can never be delivered by any other method from his present state of spiritual ignorance. The Appearance of the Divine Form is brought about by the eternal devotee of Godhead who also can be the only witness of His Appearance, for the purpose of enabling ignorant persons to offer their worship.

The reader will find that the responsibility is rationally enough shifted to the worshipper himself in the long run. The intending worshipper cannot himself find Godhead. He can find His worshipper if he tries to do so. As soon as he finds the worshipper he is enabled by his means to obtain access to the spiritual plane. If he does not seek he will never find, and he will miss everything if he does not worship Godhead, the eternal Absolute knowledge and Bliss.

Marriage of Vaishnavas

THE present Hindu society is disposed to look askance at the movement of pure spiritual service, not from any conviction of its deviation from the ideal of the Scriptures but, through fear of its unsettling effect on longstanding social institution. Marriage is probably regarded by Hindus as the most important of all their social institutions and the code of dining-regulations is considered as of equal importance. These regulations are based on the division of the Hindu society into innumerable hereditary groups known as jatis (castes). Intermarriage and interdining among different castes are in many cases forbidden in practice and the provision is religiously observed. A modern Hindu may be scientifically defined as a person who scrupulously observes the marriage and dining-regulations prevalent in the caste group to which he belongs by his birth. It is, therefore, natural for a Hindu to feel that his religion is in danger whenever there is a proposal for changing or modifying these social practices.

As a matter of fact no Hindu objects to the worship of Vishnu Whose Name is found at the head of the deities of the Hindu pantheon. Nay it is the practice of all Hindus to worship Vishnu on the occasion of worship of the other gods also. The worship of Vishnu is also recognised as the only worship that is obligatory on all Hindus who want to worship at all in the really orthodox style. So far every Hindu is fully prepared to concede the pre-eminence of Vishnu among all the gods. What they insist on is that the mode of the worship of Vishnu must be such as to be in conformity with that laid down in the Scriptures and must not at the same time in any way go against the social privileges of the Brahmanas, nor be supposed to entitle a person to transgress against the rules of intermarriage and interdining prevalent in the Hindu society at the present moment. The utmost that is conceded by way of rational explanations of the insistence on these social reservations is that the rules of marriage and dining are themselves enjoined by the Scriptures and hallowed by immemorial and universal practice.

The social conservatism of the Hindus, however, is universally admitted by themselves to rest ultimately on the sanction of the Scriptures. The Hindu is, therefore, always prepared to promote discussions for explaining the Scriptural basis of every social practice. It is not easy to say whether he is also equally prepared to assent to any modification of any existing social practice if it be found, as the result of such discussion, to be opposed to the plain meaning of the Scriptures. The chance is that he will prefer to stick to the existing practice till at least its modification meets with the general approval of all members of the particular caste-group to which he himself belongs by birth. If he gives up a practice which is followed by the other members of the caste-group on the ground of individual personal conviction his conduct is not likely to be tolerated by the group which may even force him, in case of flagrant breach of any important practice, to give up his particular method by the threat of organised social boycott which is often practicable to carry out in a measure that is sufficient to bring the delinquent to his senses.

The attitude towards these social questions taken up by Shree Chaitanya and the Acharyas who have followed His teachings is that neither marriage nor dining is a spiritual affair and, therefore, the regulation of marriage and dining need be no concern of the devotee. Shree Chaitanya says that the Scriptures tell us of the service of transcendental Godhead by the pure soul on the plane of the Absolute and also of the method by which it is practicable for all souls to attain to the spiritual service of the Supreme Lord by being completely freed from the aptitudes of the mundane plane. The activities of a person who has realised the proper function of his soul, are necessarily altogether different from those of conditioned souls in the fetters of ignorance though they are also bound to appear to the mundane observer as practicably identical with those of any other person.

The question is not really one of social discipline against lawlessness as the Smartas who insist upon the letter of the social code would have us wrongly understand. What is the purpose of the social code itself ? Is it intended to keep men in the leading strings for all time ? Is there to be no one who should be regarded as capable of walking on his own legs ? Or should there be a clear formulation of the purpose and method of the code ? The normal social condition should be one of individual freedom for the sensible members and an arrangement for enabling all persons to learn to stand on their own legs in the quickest possible way and on principle. Does the Smarta point of view satisfy these elementary conditions of rational life ?

All that the society may strive to usefully provide for the discipline of its members is a compulsory education in the practice and theory of rational living of a really effective and decisive kind for all children up to a certain age. For adults all training can only be on the fully voluntary basis. In the case of spiritual training there must be similar seminaries of both types. The seminary for the spiritual education of adults must follow closely the regulations of the seminary for the ordinary rational education of infants and children with the difference that the students in the former case, must at the time of their admission, promise to go by those rules by their own convinced decision and for only so long as they freely want to do so. There should also be the corresponding right on the part of the authorities to notify an adult student to leave the institution the moment they think him an undesirable person for the purpose they have in view.

The marriage and dining-regulations should come under the control of the authorities of such an institution, as every other subject. The spiritual seminary is intended for the regulation of the whole of life and not merely of any specific part of it. It is, of course, optional for a person to submit to the regulations or withdraw from the institution, according to his unfettered choice and at any moment, without the least liability on his part, the same freedom of asking him to leave at any moment being reserved for the authorities of the seminary.

This is the arrangement that is also found to be favoured, nay enjoined, by the Scriptures which the Hindu society professes to follow literally under the guidance of the Smarta pandits. If these pandits now come forward with any interpretation that is really opposed to the Scriptures themselves by their own admission, should not the society empower them to change both current practice and theory to make them agree with the injunctions of the Scriptures as they really are ?

The Scriptures tell us not to accept any interpretation of the Scriptures offered by even the so-called guru himself till it fully satisfies the requirements of one's own rational conviction, the implication being that no irrational conduct is capable of being recommended by the Scriptures. Should this most wholesome principle be given up on the demand even of a person calling himself the guru ? No one should be recognized as guru who cannot really satisfy both the rational demand of our individual selves as well as the recommendations of the Scriptures. The power of final decision is always reserved to the individual by the Scriptures themselves.

If the society itself wants to compel any individual to follow any course against his individual choice such a procedure would be opposed to the recommendations of the Scriptures which allow perfect freedom to the individual in this matter. This observation does not apply to the secular arrangements. In secular matters it is necessary to have regulations that should be binding on a person even against his conviction.

Marriage is regarded by the Vaishnavas on the authority of the Scriptures as a secular arrangement which may be spiritually regulated but which need not be recommended as necessary for spiritual living. Dining is not also considered a spiritual function any more than marriage. Dining is also capable of being spiritually regulated but always at the option of the individual who seeks to be so regulated.

The hereditary caste is also not considered by the Scriptures as being identical with the religio-secular institution of varna which is under spiritual regulation. Unless this important point is properly realised the real recommendations of the Scriptures in regard to social institutions cannot be rightly understood. The un-Scriptural marriage and dining-regulations go pat with the wrong interpretations of the Scriptures offered by the upholders of the current degenerate practices. This wrong system has taken deep root and has been sedulously built up through the Ages by the patient labours of those who set a store by worldly living which is alike incompatible with the recommendations of the Scriptures and the real requirements of our own souls conceivable by the rational instinct.

Shree Chaitanya should not be regarded as a mere revivalist of any historical institution. He is the staunch upholder of the Scriptures against the misinterpretations of all schools who seek worldly amelioration in any form by scriptural authority. Shree Chaitanya does not want to revive any old abuse for serving any such narrow purpose. That function belongs to the sphere of activity of the empiric scientists. The pragmatist is fond of making experiments for securing passing results by passing methods. Shree Chaitanya tells us that the Scriptures reveal to us the method of reaching the plane of the Absolute and that by following the method of the Scriptures no want can remain unsatisfied; while by following the empiric method no want can be removed in the real sense. Those who choose to remain satisfied with the temporary and apparent relief afforded by the empiric method cannot and, therefore, need not, be compelled to follow the Scriptural method. But neither should the empiricists i. e. the Smartas and the rest prevent any person from seeking permanent and real relief promised by the Scriptures, which is neither opposed to, nor in accordance with, the method of the empiricists. There is thus no real ground for quarrel between the secular society and those who propose the establishment of the daiva-varnasrama arrangement.

By the way
(II)

The objections that have been put forward by Mr. M. T. Kennedy and other empiric writers against the worship of Sri Sri Radha-Krishna are inspired by a double misconception in regard to the subject-matter.

The writers in question take it for granted that the empiric moral standard is absolute and that therefore, it is applicable to the transcendental Activities of Sri Krishna-Chaitanya and Sri Krishna, the Fountain Source of the function of all spiritual service. Such an assumption is, however, wholly unwarranted. The plight of the empiricist is not denied. We understand that he can have no real access to the spiritual plane and that he is limited to the mundane standard even when he has to write on a transcendental subject. We also know the trick by which he tries to justify his conduct at the expense of logic and honesty to his fellow empiricists. That trick in this case has taken the form of a profession of extreme regard for a quest for the 'historical norm and standard, an ideal of life and character realised in human terms, by which the whole development of religion is to be tested and guided.' Any standard that is not historical 'puts religious devotion at the mercy of imagination', the only other alternative that is conceivable to the empiricist.

In other words it is the self-imposed duty of the empiric critic to try to bring the activities of his supposed 'incarnation' within the limited jurisdiction of the so-called ethical standard which is the outcome of the actual experience of his sense-ridden existence, in order to avoid falling a victim to his imagination which can afford a still less satisfactory basis for the examination of the problem of reality. He thinks that the transcendentalist similarly depends, without admitting, on the resources of an imagination born of his sense-experience. He does not believe in the reality of transcendence. Neither does he believe in the Absolute as the only Reality. Yet he feels himself to be under obligation to examine the subject of religion. In these circumstances the function of the empiric critic reduces itself necessarily to the task of declaring all quest of the Absolute as a pretence of the hallucinative imagination of persons conditioned like himself and of opposing tooth and nail all bonafide quest of the Truth under the guise of a disinterested concern for the same.

It would have been a much more honest course for such a person to declare his own utter inability to deal with the subject of the Absolute Whom it is the declared exclusive business of all true religions to seek.

It is not our purpose to decry the empiric ethical standard for what it is worth. We only want to point out that it does not and cannot apply to the Absolute, that it is part of the business of religion to find the remedy for the well-known defects of the empiric ethical standard itself and that, therefore, it is absurd on the part of the empiricist to go out of his way to contend that the conduct of an 'incarnation' should be made to conform to any mundane standard of empiric thinkers. Is the conduct of Jesus to be amenable to the empiric standard ? Or would it be logical to condemn the Activities of Jesus on the ground that they do not at all conform to any standard of this earth ? The Absolute cannot be squeezed within the four corners of an 'ideal' of the life of fallen humanity which does not and cannot mean much more than the ordinary material functions of the physical body by the direction of a mind which is wholly under the thraldom of the flesh. Is there any system of conduct conceivable by the conditioned soul that does not exclusively serve the lusts of the flesh, which were so abhorrent to the pure spiritual nature of Jesus ?

The deification of earthly standard which is based upon and is intended to uphold the ordinary materialistic activities of average men, cannot save it from the defects that are innate to the conditions of its origin. It is the clear perception of the irremediable defects of the systems of conduct made by man that has ever led the soul, as distinct from the mind, to seek the aid of religion in order to escape from the inevitable consequences of physico-mental living. This has been the beginning of the spiritual enquiry proper in the case of all individuals, which is from the very start an enquiry after the transcendental plane of existence. It is wholly opposed to the historical religious experience of the race to assert that the whole development of religion is capable of being tested and guided by any 'ideal' of life and character realisable in terms of the ordinary human experience. Such a view implies utter ignorance of the very nature of the problem of religion.

As a matter of fact the Activities of Sri Krishna Chaitanya, if they are rightly approached, would prove that the Brindaban Pastimes of Sri Krishna afford the only true and universal support for the fully and really moral existence that is available to the soul when he is free from all the shackles of his present mental and physical equipments. Sri Krishna Chaitanya alone can lead us to that transcendental plane by the guiding help of His own Activities, where it should be possible for our souls redeemed by His Grace to realise the perfect spiritual existence which is fit to serve the Brindaban Pastimes of Sri Krishna in order to be enabled thereby to continue in the perfect state.

The ethical instinct of erring humanity is as darkness in comparison with the purity of the soul functioning on the transcendental plane. The so called 'good' and the so-called 'evil' of this mundane existence are alike utterly unacceptable to and unnecessary for the soul in his natural state of unlimited existence.

The empiric thinker owes all his difficulties to one basic error viz., his gratuitous assumption that the soul is identical with the mind engrossed within the physical body and functioning for the sole benefit of the physical body. He owes this plight to his habitual reliance on the hypotheses of the empiric Sciences. How can he expect any information regarding the Absolute from empiricists whose business it is to deny all possibility of any real communion with the Absolute for the intelligible enough reason that the present mind of man has no access to the plane of the Reality? It is sheer folly to seek for any information regarding the Absolute from persons who profess to know nothing about Him and who also profess to try to know nothing about Him. The empiric Psychologist, indeed, takes the trouble of informing him, on the authority of his patent ignorance of the subject, that there does not exist any such entity as the soul who is capable of knowing the Absolute Truth as distinct from the hypotheses concocted by the ignorant mind. The only argument of the teacher of perpetual ignorance as being the obligatory condition of the human race is that the mind does not possess any faculty by which it can know anything about the Reality; and as the mind is assumed to be the self it is considered useless to engage on an impossible quest.

But if the mind cannot find the Truth why does it pretend to seek Him at all? Why also does it proclaim the hypotheses concocted by it with an endless labour, as some kind of truth? Why also does the mind so vehemently deny the existence of the soul possessing the power to really know? Why does the empiricist believe so implicitly in the testimony of the mind on this particular point although he knows very well that it has proved a false prophet in every case in which it has undertaken up till now to assure us that it knows? What particular advantage does the empiricist expect from his uncalled-for faith in the assurance of the mind that there does not exist any such entity as the soul different from itself? The transcendental messages of the revealed Scriptures are intended not for the mind but for the soul who can be reached by them despite all opposition on the part of the mind who now personates as the soul and who has usurped the power of dissuading him from lending his unprejudiced attention to the word of God. It is no wonder, therefore, that the mind is disposed to prevent the soul from lending his ear to the Scriptural account of the Brindaban Pastimes of Sree Sree Radha-Krishna as expounded by those pure souls who have access to the transcedental plane. The mind is, however, always willing to lead the soul to those sinners who are in the habit of misrepresenting the teachings of the Bhagabat in order to rightly punish the soul for putting his trust in it after repeated proofs of its constitutional hostility to the Truth. The soul has, however, the power of asserting himself against the usurpation of the mind and seeking the Truth on his own account and refusing to be put down by the usual sophistries of the mind. When the soul is in this mood he is sure to be guided by God to His loyal servant viz., the bonafide sadhu from whom alone the soul can receive true knowledge regarding the Absolute, provided he is prepared to renounce absolutely his vicious aptitude for depending on the mind. To such a person the sadhu is induced to communicate the Scriptural account of the Brindaban Pastimes of Sri Sri Radha-Krishna, as such a disciple is least likely to misunderstand the same, by deliberately persisting to confound the transcendental with the mundane.

Sree Sree Chaitanya Bhagabat

175 'Oh, whither shall I go to find Him with the Flute to His Lips ?'
He sighed as He said so and continued to weep.

176 Being calm, unto His intimate friends
The Lord said, 'I shall submit to you My sorrows'.

177 The Lord said, 'My sorrows know no end ;
Even after gaining Him I have lost Kanai,
My Life.'

178 All were glad to learn the secret
And seated themselves round Him with great regard.

179 'There is a village of the name of Kanai's Pavilion of Dance.
On My way back from Gaya I saw that place.

180 "A beautiful Boy, yellowish green like the Tamala,
With charming tresses in which was stuck the fresh gunja twig.

181 'And over the same shone the many-coloured tail of the peacock,
The gems sparkled so bright that I could not mark Him well.

182 "In His Hands was the charming Flute, most beautiful to behold ;
The Feet were decked with the most captivating anklets,

183 "There were ornaments made of jewels on His Hands which scorned the beauty of blue columns.
His Bosom was adorned with sribatsa, the koustuva and gemmed necklaces,

184 "What shall I say of the manner in which His yellow robe was worn ?
Makara ear rings set out the beauty of His Lotus Eyes.

185 "He came to My side smiling
And, after embracing Me, He fled I know not whither."

186 In what manner and what topics did Shree Gaursundar speak about
Who can understand without His mercy ?

187 In the act of speaking Bishwambhar swooned away
And fell down on the earth calling
'Oh Krishna !'

188 All of them caught Him up with tender care, repeating the Name of Krishna, And, having calmed Him, brushed off the dust from His Holy Form.

189 The Lord was calmed but yet He could not be quiet ;
He cried on saying, 'Where is Krishna ?—
Oh, where is Krishna ?'

190 After a time Shree Gaursundar became calm And His Form bespoke a natural and extreme humility.

191 The minds of all persons were filled with the utmost gladness
On hearing the confession of the story of the Lord's devotion.

192 All said, 'We are all of us sanctified ;
All of us have been made most fortunate
by the company of Thyself.

193 'What is Vaikuntha to the person with whom Thou dost associate ?
One single moment with Thee bears the fruit of devotion.

194 'All of us are fit to be guided by Thyself,
May Thou chant the kirtan, being Leader of us all.

195 'All our limbs burn with the words of the pashandis,
May Thou heal them by the cool water of Thy Love'.

196 Having graciously assured all of them
The Lord strode home like an infuriated lion.

197 Even after His return home the Lord did not betake to any domestic enjoyments ;
There was constant manifestation of the trance of transcendental joy.

198 What copious streams of the currents of bliss flowed in those beautiful Eyes !
Did the Ganges, that flowed at His Feet, repair to the Face ?

199 'Where is Krishna,—where is Krishna ?' were the only words He spoke ;
One could get no other words from Him, even by questioning.

200 Whichever revered Vaishnava the Lord found in His Presence
Him He asked, 'Where is Krishna ?'

201 As the Lord put this question He cried very much.
Different persons consoled Him in the way that occurred to each.

202 One day Gadadhar carrying a quantity of betel
Merrily presented himself before the Lord.

203 On seeing Gadadhar the Lord asked,
'Where is Krishna of the yellow robe ?'

204 It smote one's heart to behold the Lord's anxiety.
Gadadhar could not articulate any words, not knowing what to say.

205 High-souled Gadadhar spoke with respect,
'Krishna abides in Thy Heart at all time'

206 On hearing the words that Krishna is in His Heart
The Lord tore His own Heart with His nails.

207 With tender promptitude Gadadhar grasping both His Hands
Made Him quiet, consoling Him in various ways.

208 'Krishna will come just now, have a quiet mind',
Said Gadadhar. The mother noticed all this.

209 The mother was very much pleased with Gadadhar,
'I have not seen such sense in a child.

210 'I myself dare not appear before Him for fear,
Being no bigger than a child he could console Him so well'.

211 The mother said, 'Darling, you must stay here at all time ;
You must not go anywhere leaving Him without your company'.

212 On beholding the wonderful communion of love of the Lord
The mother did not retain any idea that He was her Son.

213 The mother thought in her mind, 'This person is not human.
Can so copious stream issue from the eyes of a man ?

214 'I cannot know, but it is some great soul who has appeared'.
The mother did not appear before the Lord for fear.

215 On the approach of evening all the devotees Assembled one by one at the House of the Lord.

216 Those verses that express the communion of devotion
Great Mukunda now began to read.

217 Mukunda of great good deeds had such a divine voice
That the Jewel of the twice-born was entranced as soon as He heard it.

218 The Lord began to thunder forth, 'Say Hari, ;
He fell on the ground on all sides and no one could hold Him.

219 Fear, laughter, shivering, sweat, horripilation, thundering ejaculation,
All the moods simultaneously manifested themselves.

220 On beholding this unique manifestation the devotees sang in great joy.
The loving trance of Godhead was not witheld.

221 The whole night passed like a single moment ;
In the morning the Lord seemed to regain degree of His external consciousness.

222 In this manner in His own House the Son of Shree Shachi Constantly performed the kirtan night and day.

223 The Supreme Lord began to manifest the kirtan ;
The sorrows of all the devotees were about to end.

224 The Son of Sree Shachi called upon the people 'To say Hari';
This made the atheists awake from their sleep at short intervals.

225 Those who were averse to God became angry by interruption of the pleasure of sleep ;
And everyone blasphemed as he listed, to his utter destruction.

226 Said some, 'What madness has seized upon these fellows ?
Some declared, 'We cannot get any sleep at night

227 Some said, 'The Lord will be angered by the loud noise
And that will cause the destruction of these wretches'.

228 Some said, 'Giving up the mode of sound judgment of the communion of knowledge
These behave like persons puffed up with supreme arrogance'.

229 A few said, 'Whose is the kirtan and who cares to understand?
It is the foolish Brahman Sribas who is getting up all this.

230 'In order to feed themselves by begging, the four brothers with one counsel Shout aloud the Name of Krishna, as if they were, indeed, stark mad.

231 'Does it bring no merit if one call on Hari mentally ?
Is merit produced if one call with a loud voice ?'

232 Some said, 'Listen brother, a great calamity is imminent;
The country is going to be ruined by reason of Sribas

233 'I have heard about it all this very day in the Dewan :
Two boats are on their way to this part by order of the king.

Seventeenth Anniversary of the dsiappearance of ThakurBhaktivinode

The Festival of the seventeenth anniversary of the disappearance of Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode was celebrated at Sri Chaitanya Math and all the branch centres on the 16th of June. The service of Godhead through the medium of His devotee is assured the acceptance of the divinity. The devotees of Godhead are accordingly as much the objects of our worship as Godhead Himself. The devotees themselves do not serve Godhead only; they also serve all those who serve the Divinity. The form of worship of Godhead that leaves out the worship of His devotee is an imperfect form of worship. But Godhead and His devotee must not be confounded with any entities of this mundane plane nor ignored by the methods of limited negative thought. The devotee of Godhead comes down to this mundane plane as agent of Godhead for delivering conditioned souls. The Vaishnava is the exclusive wholetime servant of Sri Krishna who comes here to tell us of nothing else except the pure service of Sri Krishna. He alone has the power to lift us from the slough of mundane existence. To honour the lila of the disappearance of the Vaishnava is one of the methods of serving him, enjoined by the Scriptures.

The seva of Srila Mahesh Pandit

Sri Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha assumed formal charge of the seva of the holy seat of Srila Mahesh Pandit in the village of Kanthalpali, Chakdah, on the 23th of June. The occasion was solemnly observed by a Festival by the local public and a large gathering of devotees from different parts of the country. Mahesh Pandit who was one of the associates of Sri Krishna Chaitanya, used to dance in the sankirtanam to the sound of the big drum. Unless all earthly sounds are prevented from getting access to the ear one is not in a position to utter nor to catch the sound of the Holy Name of Godhead. Mahesh Pandit has been identified with one of the cow-boys of Braja who are the chums of Boy-Krishna These cow-boys (gopalas) serve Krishna by the method of intimate friendship devoid of all sense of awe. This is a very high stage of the Divine service, very much higher than any methods of reverential worship. The service of Krishna by the method of parental affection is higher still and the mode of worship of the milkmaids of Braja, taught by Sri Krishna Chaitanya, is the highest of all worship. We should regard ourselves as most fortunate if we could attain to a participation in the pure loving service of Sri Krishna practised by the cow-boys of Braja by the grace of Sri Nityananda prabhu and his bonafide servants.

Installation of the Sri Bigraha of Sri Sri Mahaprabhu at Sri Brahma Gaudiya Math, Alalnath

The Editor accompanied by a number of devotees left Sri Gaudiya Math, Calcutta, on the 8th. of July on a tour of propaganda in Orissa. On the 11th July He followed Sri Bigraha of Mahaprabhu from Sri Purusottam Math Puri, to Sri Brahma Gaudiya Math, Alalnath, with a huge sankirtana procession formed by a large number of people from Alalnath and devotees from all parts of the country who conveyed Mahaprabhu to Alalnath in commemoration of the annual sojourn of Sri Chaitanya Deva during the period of Anabasar. The Sri Bigraha of Mahaprabhu Sri Chaitanya was formally installed by the Editor in Sri Brahma Gaudiya Math on the 12th July. The auspicious occasion was celebrated by the vast gathering of the devotees by the performance of the congregational chant and honouring of Sri Mahaprasadam at the Math.

Propaganda in the Madras Presidency

On July 6th the Swamijis of Madras Gaudiya Math led a procession of Sri Nama Sankirtanam through Linga Chetty Street, Thambu Chetty Street and a portion of Royapuram from 8 A.M. to 11 A.M. More than three hundred people joined the Swamijis. The speciality of the Bengal Mridanga (drum specially meant for sankirtanam) and the Bengal way of singing the Name of Sri Krishna as taught by Lord Sri Krishna Chaitanya and introduced by the Swamijis of the Gaudiya Math for the first time in this city, was a unique and soul-attracting experience for those who witnessed the procession.

AND
THE SUPREME LORD SREE KRISHNA CHAITANYA

THE HARMONIST OR
SHREE SAJJANATOSHANI

VOL. XXIX | SEPTEMBER 1931, Chaitanya-Era 445 | NO. 3.

The Birth of Shree Krishna

BY the testimony of the Holy Scriptures Sree Krishna manifested the Divine Lila of His most auspicious Birth in this phenomenal world about five thousand years ago. Godhead was born in the Holy City of Mathura.

The worship of Shree Krishna has been confounded with the worship of a historical human hero on the above testimony of the Scriptures. It has been gratuitously assumed even by writers who call themselves believers in the Divinity of Jesus Christ, that Shree Krishna is conclusively proved to be human by the admitted fact of His having been born of human parents. The abnormal term 'incarnation', i. e., incarceration in the flesh, of the Divinity Himself, has been invented by so-called theologians to denote the 'miracle' of the Nativity of Christ. Christ has been supposed to have actually put on the mortal coil in order to experience, and by experiencing deliver the race from the sufferings which the flesh is heir to. It is out of deference to the Divine Nature of Christ that this condescension on his part is regarded as a miracle by these theologians. If Christ is admitted to have been born as a mortal he no doubt becomes an ordinary historical personage by such unwarranted admission on the part of his obliging historians to the great relief of all persons who aspire to understand the Nature of the Divinity by means of their muddy understandings. These writers are also no longer under any obligation to acknowledge the absurdity of a doctrine of a historical incarnation, who is not amenable to the laws of human society.

It is necessary to get rid of the idea of 'historical incarnation' in the above sense in order to be enabled to understand the nature of the Birth of Shree Krishna. Shree Krishna's Own Divine Form became visible to mortal eyes under the figure of a human baby born in the usual way. But the event itself was a true Manifestation of the eternal transcendental Birth of the Divinity. Its transcendental nature was not perceived and is never perceivable, by any conditioned soul to whose cramped vision the event nevertheless chose to disclose itself under the figure of the birth of a human child, which has a real correspondence to the Divine Event. The nature of this correspondence itself is, however, wholly inconceivable to the limited understanding of conditioned souls. By these reservations the Birth of Shree Krishna is prevented by the narrators of the Scriptures from imbibing any of the unwholesomenesses of mortal birth even in becoming, in the better and inconceivable sense, a true historical event which is in the conditional sense, open to the vision of even the people of this world who are possessed of a limited understanding.

The Son-hood of Godhead is unreservedly admitted in the eternal transcendental sense by the doctrine of Divine Descent (Avatara) which is quite wrongly rendered as 'incarnation' in as much as in the process of Descent there is no reference to any assumption of the mortal coil by the Divinity for rendering any 'service' to humanity by undergoing any mortal suffering Himself. The doctrine of Divine Descent implies on the contrary that Godhead can never be subject to any limitation in the mundane sense which belongs to the category of the condemned and irreconciliable potency of the Divinity which has and can have no power over the Spiritual Nature of the Divinity i.e., as He truly is, but which has a punitive function towards the conditioned souls. Or, in other words, the doctrine declares that there is eternal and irreconciliable distinction as between the mundane and the purely spiritual which latter is the proper nature of the substantive Reality, the realm of the Activities of the Divinity as they are. The mundane realm eternally dogs the Absolute as the shadow or rather the reflected image (in this case a distorted and unwholesome reflection) is seen to attach itself to substantive source. The Divine realm is full of spiritual Activity Which is dimly and inconceivably reflected in the events of this world as viewed through the limited mind of the conditioned soul.

Boy-Krishna is worshipped by the followers of Shree Madhwacharya who flourished in the twelfth century A.D. Shree Madhabendrapuri, in the line of disciplic succession from Shree Madhwa and one generation earlier than Shree Chaitanya, is regarded by the followings of the Supreme Lord as the first religious preacher who realised the nature of loving service of Shree Krishna as treated in the tenth Skandha of the Bhagabatam which was subsequently fully promulgated by Shree Krishna Chaitanya, by His Practice and Teaching, as the highest and perfect form of worship of the Divinity. The method of worship practised by the milkmaids of Braja is declared by Shree Chaitanya to be higher than all other forms of Divine worship. The worship of Shree Radhika, the premier milkmaid of Braja, is proclaimed by the same Authority as being the highest of all, incorporating and surpassing the rest. Shree Krishna dwelt in Braja up till the eleventh year of His Age. The worship of Adolescent Krishna by Shree Radhika by the method of amorous love is, therefore, regarded by the followers of Shree Chaitanya as the complete form of service of Shree Krishna. This worship of Shree Krishna is of such supreme excellence that Shree Krishna eternally prefers to clothe Himself in the mood of His Counterwhole Shree Radhika in order to be privileged to taste the sweetness of Her service of Himself as Shree Krishna. Shree Krishna clad in the mood and beauty of Shree Radhika is Shree Krishna Chaitanya Who is the Ultimate Source of the complete service of Himself.

But neither the Son-hood nor the Adolescent Consort-hood of Shree Krishna are events of the mundane plane. Those who are seriously disposed to know their real transcendental nature are enabled to do so by the causeless mercy of Shree Krishna Chaitanya Who is the only Teacher of the world by the Scriptural test, being alone absolutely fit to practise what He professes to teach. The Scriptures accordingly declare that the sincere willingness to serve Shree Krishna to the exclusion of all other function whatsoever, is the only method of attaining His service by the grace of the spiritual guide who wields the power of Shree Krishna Chaitanya.

Unless the whole scheme, both the method and the purpose, of the redemption of the conditioned soul outlined above is clearly borne in mind the service of Godhead is apt to be confounded with mundane affairs for the attainment of limited illusory results. From the mundane point of view there can indeed, be no meaning in the worship of Godhead at all. If, rationally speaking, there is to be any acceptable service of Godhead it should be absolutely free from all mundane unwholesomenesses without missing, but on the contrary completely fulfilling in a never-ending order of progression, all aspirations of all aptitudes of the conditioned soul.

The most valued of all the possessions of the conditioned soul is his own individual nature i.e., his personality. He wants to be assured of the substantive continuance of his persent personality by the method of fulfilment of his particular outlook and particular function in accordance with his individual outlook. In other words the true nature of the soul is found on analysis to be primarily i.e., substantively cognitional. This cognitive nature wants to be assured of its complete fulfilment. It wants this consummation for the reason that it is not satisfied with its present position. It is capable of being satisfied, say the scriptures, only if it is really sincere and impartial, as it can be at its option, of the absolute truth of the most fundamental dictum of Spiritual religion that anything offered by its present necessarily limited outlook can never give it what it really wants. So it will be imperative for it to agree to a radical change of outlook and environment if it is to be really satisfied. To that plane it has at present no access and can have none with its present equipments. Its present equipments cannot also be regarded as part and parcel of itself if it is to be admitted that it is at all feasible for it to attain the state of complete satisfaction. So it can not amount to self-destruction if it agrees to regard its present equipments as adventitious and as an obstacle in the way of its being able to realise what its real self imparatively requires.

The problem for the conditioned soul is, therefore, to carry its personality unimpaired and fully expanded to a sphere where it can properly exercise all its faculties in the perfectly satisfactory way. It is as a matter of fact always trying to attain this elevated plane by the exercise of its present equipments. It is somewhat persuaded that the solution of this problem is attainable on the mundane plane by the discoveries of the Physical Sciences. But the Physical Sciences themselves in the pride of their earthly triumphs have learnt to look askance at the very problem which the soul has always been putting to itself. At any rate they have no mind to waste their time over what they suppose is no better than a form of hallucinative idleness of minds which have no sufficient mundane occupation. Critics trained in this materialistic school of modern thought feel themselves in the position of square men in round holes when they find it necessary, for some mundane end, to undertake the investigation of this problem of religion. Those among them who persist, from their point of view, in this hopeless quest which does not reward its votary with the discovery of any earthly good, find it necessary to seek the aid of the conclusions of the Physical Sciences for the purpose of finding the Absolute. But you can never get blood out of stone.

Shree Krishna is the Absolute to whom the conclusions of the Physical Sciences do not apply as they lie altogether off His proper plane. It is necessary to realise one's spiritual self in order that one may have access to the plane of the Absolute at all. The adventitious equipments of the Physical and mental coils which the conditioned soul mistakes for the self, have no access to the spiritual plane. It is open to the Physical Scientists to refuse to believe in the existence of the Absolute plane by disowning the consistent promptings of their own rational natures. This is what the atheist actually does. He simply refuses to be rational in the only consistent sense in order to disbelieve the Absolute. But all the ephemeral discoveries of the Physical Sciences will never succeed in stifling the eternal need of the ignored soul.

The Absolute possesses a specific Personality of His Own and is simultaneously the material as well as the efficient Final Transcendental Source of all existence. The Absolute Person possesses a specific Name and a specific Body. In these respects there is an inconceivable but realisable resemblance between the state of man and Shree Krishna. Shree Krishna is simultaneously unborn in the earthly sense and is possessed of the quality of being eternally born on the transcendental plane. The eternal Birth of Shree Krishna is realisable only by those who has attained a very advanced state of spiritual realisation. Shree Krishna manifests His eternal Birth in the perfectly pure spiritual essence who is called Vasudeva in the language of the Scriptures. The perfectly pure spiritual essence does not belong to the tiny soul of man but he may make himself known i.e., realisable, to the pure soul of man. By the grace of Vasudeva the tiny soul of man is enabled to attain the realisation of the Divine Event of the Birth of Shree Krishna which is otherwise inaccessible to him.

Present Position of the Principal Religious Sects in India

INDIA at the present moment includes all the principal religions of the world thanks to the increased facilities of international intercourse that have been made available to all by the discoveries and inventions of the empiric sciences and by the vicissitudes of her past history, There is a widely prevalent desire for tolerating all forms and opinions that profess to be religious to the point till they actually and openly transgress against the fundamental principles of morality, or jeopardize the very existence of social and political safety. But this very inclination for toleration in its turn may degenerate into indiscriminate support of hypocritical opinions and practices. It is necessary to propagate the correct view regarding all form of worship in order to pave the way for the growth of the truly enlightened toleration, without necessarily encouraging any practice or opinion of the pseudo-religionists.

The toleration that is demanded for pseudo-religion is traceable to the current misconception that it is not possible by state contrivance to get at the real Truth. It is contended, on this ground, that the state should confine itself exclusively to the political issue and have a purely political attitude towards the question of religion. But is this really practicable ? Is the political issue worth looking after if it is wholly indifferent to the religious issue ? It is a counsel of hankering for stagnation which presents itself to the materialised outlook as the long-sought-after summum bonum. It is in the first place necessary to awake from this state of stupid torpor if we want to mend the affairs of this world in the only real sense.

It should be the duty of the state, as of every individual, to promote the freest rational discussion of the religious issue. The only condition to which all disputants should unconditionally agree and this is no more than the universally admitted political convention, is that no one should use any language that incites to acts of actual physical violence or lends countenance to such acts. It is necessary not to stop the mouth of any religious preacher who is not opposed on principle to this single necessary limitation. There should be state seminaries on an adequate scale to provide facilities for the scientific preaching of the true religion, to which all person should be allowed free access at their option. But all persons should also be actively encouraged to join. There was a mediæval State-Church with one doctrine and one practice. There should be the above modern State-Church with its really universal unity of doctrine and practice.

The comparative study of current religions is practicable without giving offence to any rational person. It is not only practicable but an indispensable duty towards humanity in order to prevent mankind from stagnating into the condition of stocks and stones. The phrase "Religious toleration" should be changed into "toleration of irreligion" to indicate the real nature of the policy of the proposed Universal-Church. It is not necessary, even for political reasons, to confound religion with irreligion in the choice of our vocabulary or policy. If the State tries to avoid this supreme duty it is not worth its salt.

It is with these thoughts that the Harmonist has been essaying to be of some practical help in bringing about an atmosphere of scientific curiosity on the subject of the universal religion. The Harmonist in this as in every other respect stands fully for the teaching of the revealed Scriptures as taught and practised by Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya and all His bonafide followers. Being identical with the real teaching of the Scriptures the method should be found to be in full conformity with the practice and doctrine of all the revealed religions of the world.

The necessity of revelation is grossly misunderstood and mis-represented by a section of empiric thinkers. Revelation is represented by its opponents as a device for suppressing all open discussion of the religious issue. It is of course true that the Absolute Truth revealed by the Scriptures by His very Nature requires to be approached by the method of unconditional submission or of spiritual service. This is by no means at all obstructive of the freest discussion of the subject. Unconditional submission to the Absolute Truth implies the previous actual ascertainment of the Nature of the Absolute and the unswerving and exclusive service of the Absolute Truth when He is found. Is this the suppressing process?

As a matter of fact the empiric process itself is really liable to the charge of gagging freedom of opinion which it dishonestly prefers against the Scriptural method of serving submission of the Truth. The empiric method insists on the service of the transitory and untrue. It is thus opposed to the search of the Truth Who is neither transitory nor untrue. He is bent on suppressing the seeker of the Truth who can, with any show of consistency, neither serve nor approve the service of anything short of the Absolute. One cannot serve both God and Mammon.

The process of the quest of the Truth enjoined by the revealed Scriptures looks indeed to the superficial observer like intolerence. But it is the perfectly salutory intolerance of heterogeneous views. Truth does not require to be tolerated. It is, on the contrary obligatory on all persons to serve the Truth and nothing but the Truth. It may be necessary to seem to tolerate untruth during our sojourn into this mundane plane. But any real toleration of untruth is cruelty to the slaves of ignorance. The servant of the Absolute is reluctant to serve the Truth by the method of cruelty that has such an unnatural attraction for the advocate of pseudo-toleration.

If the expediency of toleration of irreligion is unduly insisted upon the acceptance of such a view by the society and state will only prove an obstacle to the scientific quest of the truth. The society and state are not prepared to show the same indulgence to exploded doctrines and practices in the sphere of secular affairs. This only shows that they are really indifferent to the spiritual issue, partly under the wrong impression that it is not practicable to have any active and rational policy in regard to religion. Let society and state only agree to extend to religion the same attention which they have been accustomed to offer to secular matters at all periods in such large measure and the universal Church is sure to make Her appearance in due course.

It is possible to ascertain the comparative value of different religious practices and doctrines that are now current in the world. It will be necessary for such a purpose to accept those interpretations of them that are offered by their actual followers. It is not the business of the scientific student to create the material which he is to consider. His only proper function is to describe faithfully the data available to him and classify the same according to an accepted standard. The accepted standard in this case has ever been the Absolute Truth. It is only necessary for us to seek to know the Absolute and with the help of His Light to settle our conduct towards every entity.

The Harmonist has been consistently following the policy outlined above. She has been trying to put before her readers her realisation of the nature of the Absolute by the grace of the Sat-Guru. This is the positive method. But the positive method by itself is not the most effective mode of propaganda in a controversial Age like the present. The negative method which seeks to differentiate the Truth from non-Truth in all its forms, is even better calculated to convey the directly inconceivable significance of the Absolute. It is a necessity which cannot be conscientiously avoided by the dedicated preacher of the Truth if he wants to be a loyal servant of Godhead. The method is sure to create an atmosphere of controversy in which it is quite easy to lose one's balance of judgment. But the ways of the deluding energy are so intricate that unless their mischievous nature is fully exposed it is not possible for the soul in the conditioned state to avoid the snares spread by the enchantress for encompassing the ruin of her only too willing victims. It is a duty which shall be sacred to all who have been enabled to obtain even a distant glimpse of the Absolute.

Before we proceed to the actual valuation of the current creeds we may tell our readers that we have no earthly interest of our own in undertaking this God-given task. We are neither friends nor foes of any mundane cause. Our only business will be to distinguish the mundane from the spiritual. That which appears to us to be mundane may be held to be spiritual by diverse persons whose definition of a spiritual entity is different from ours. But such difference of opinion need disturb nobody who is really anxious to find out the Truth.

The creeds may be divided into two distinct groups according as they profess or deny the transcendental nature of the Object of worship. Trascendence is something quite different from the negation or abstraction of the mundane. The most abstract thought, for example, is not a trascendental entity but only a subtle form of the mundane entity. There are not a few creeds which do not keep this important distinction in their constant view. They accordingly are disposed to show their preference for the worship of the subtle form of matter in the shape of an idea to that of grosser forms of matter in the shape of images of gods made of wood, stone clay or metal. But one who is really conscious of the difference between spiritual and mundane, sees at once that both of these are equally outside the process of the spiritual worship and from the transcendental point of view there is nothing to choose between the two.

The worshippers of their own favourite ideas are sometimes found to regard, as idolaters the worshippers of images made by the hand of man. But the transcendentalist knows that both of them are worshippers of the phenomena of physical Nature which they wrongly suppose to be identical with the transcendental Object of worship revealed by the Scripture.

Godhead is defined by anti-transcendentalists as the noblest idea made by the brain of men. Empiricists give this definition their ready support and suggest a science to trace the growth of the idea through the Ages. All this, from the transcendental point of view, is rank atheism. This conclusion is not irrational intolerance of free thinking. It is rational opposition to all radically irrational speculation regarding the Absolute.

Protestant Christians and Muhammedans sometimes profess to be breakers of idols. But if all the images of gods in all the temples of the world were broken to fragments would the process take us one step forward in the direction of transcendence? If the mind could be rendered perfectly void by the process of yoga would the process admit us necessarily to the Cresence of the Absolute ?

But these notions are nevertheless cherished by almost all sections of the thinkers. These notions also necessarily colour their practices. There are persons who, while admitting theoretically the superior claim of the Scriptures to their exclusive obedience persist in following a different course in actual practice. They may do this unconsciously from thoughtlessness or habit or deliberately under the lead of the empiric notions. The breaking of an idol by an iconoclast is performed, so far as the external act goes, from deference to the Scriptures, but may really be inspired by baser or, at any rate, mixed motives. It is necessary to find out and proclaim all such aberrations, for serving the cause of the spiritual education of the people in general.

Buddhism is considered to be opposed to the authority of the Scriptures on the alleged ground that the practices enjoined by the Vedas offend against the principles of ordinary morality. Buddhism has accordingly been regarded as a system of organized Atheism. But the enquiry started by Buddhism is not of a trivial nature. Are we or are we not to follow the Scriptures unconditionally ? Are we to try to understand the real meaning of the Scriptures before we agree to follow any of their injunctions ? Are we to suppose that the ordinary rules of morality are opposed to the teaching of the Scriptures ? If there appears to be a real conflict between the two, are we under the obligation to follow the Scriptures and perform unethical acts ? It is this large question which has been opened for the consideration of mankind by Buddhism. Can any consistent rationalist disregard this momentous question raised by a system that has been supposed to be professed Atheism ?

Buddhism is the worship of our empiric reason. The teaching of the Scriptures deny the competence of the empiric reason to understand the nature of transcendental existence. The Scriptures do not deny all function to the empiric reason. They only do not accept the conclusions of empiricism in regard to the Absolute. Buddha also does not propose to his followers to try to attain to the Absolute by the method of empiricism. He only shows that the empiric logic logically leads to the denial of the Absolute Reality. That need not be regarded as a piece of disservice to humanity. Buddha is said to be silent about the Absolute. This silence need not be regarded as a proof of actual opposition to the authority of the Scriptures. It is the pseudo-form of religious practice and doctrine against which Buddha enters his clear and emphatic protest on behalf of the unenlightened reason of man. No Theist need object to agree with Buddha if the above interpretation of his real position is correct. It is not necessary to defend Buddha by discarding the principles of pure Theism. Those followers of Buddha who similarly affect to oppose the genuine Theism, cannot also be said to be aware of the full import of the teaching of the Master.

The comparative study of religions in the form in which it is being attempted in this journal seeks to avoid falling foul of any practice or doctrine that is really in keeping with the religion of unmixed service of the Absolute professed by all the revealed creeds of the world. The empiric reason has also a function to perform towards the Scriptures. That function consists in trying to understand the real nature of the message of Divine Revelation. Unless the empiric reason is prepared to perform this duty towards the Scriptures it is doomed to remain in the state of utter ignorance of the Absolute in which it finds itself inspite of its so-called boasted achievements of centuries. It is no doubt a negative function but one which is eminently fitted to clear the ground of all awkward constructions that stand in the path of the Light. We, therefore, propose to undertake in a series of articles the examination of the relationship of professed doctrines and practices of all religions to the quest of the Absolute which they declare to be their common goal, in the light of unbiased empiric reason helped by a comprehensive study of the Scriptures. We claim that this function is also enjoined by all the revealed Scriptures of the world and cannot be avoided by those who sincerely desire to follow the actual teachings of the revealed Scriptures.

Rituals of Fruitive Work

The current ceremonials of Hinduism may be comprehensively described as the rituals of fruitive work. In order to have a rational principle on which one may proceed to a scientific examination of the details of Hindu ceremonials it will be necessary to possess a working knowledge of the Philosophy of 'the path of fruitive work' which bears the Scriptural designation of karma-kanda.

The Vedic karma-kanda bears a close analogy to Utilitarianism of the materialistic philosophy of Western countries. Utilitarianism seeks to provide an abundance of worldly facilities by the resources of the human brain working on the data supplied by the careful observation of the phenomena of this world by our sense-organs under the lead of the limited (i.e. material) mind. The Vedic path of fruitive work aims at the amelioration of the worldly lot of humanity by processes revealed by the Scriptures. There are, therefore, a real difference and a real similarity between the details and nature of the fruitive activity and the practice of Utilitarianism. The Vedic activity is based upon faith in the Scriptures. This has been called superstition or magic by the empirical Utilitarians.

The rationalistic explanation of the Vedic ritual of karma-kanda would be somewhat on the following lines. The gross material plane on which we have to move in this world is under the immediate control of beings with subtle bodies, who are not perceptible to the gross senses. It is possible to attain to the vision of the subtler plane to which they belong. The Vedic Rishis had attained to that peculiar vision and could hold communion with the denizens of that elevated sphere. They were thereby relieved of the necessity of following the uncertain lead of the conclusions drawn by the erring brain from the experience of the defective senses by being in responsive personal touch with those beings who are the God-appointed rulers of the phenomenal world. They could obtain whatever they wanted by means of direct communication with those who had it in their power to give what they wanted. These superior beings are the devatas of the Vedas.

If the above realisation were really practicable it would at once give the empiric Utilitarian all that he can ever desire. The method has been forgot but is possibly not irrecoverable by following the Scriptural teaching. One who happens to be in possession of it would gain the reputation of being a superman by grace of the devatas. The Puranas give us quite a number of instances of persons who had succeeded in gaining the favour of the devatas. This need not scandalize the striking success that has undoubtedly been gained by a different method by the scientific men of this or any age. That which is common to either is that both have been busy in gathering an abundance of the good things of this world which cannot be retained permanently because it would be a dire misfortune if the unwholesome possessions of this world would have stuck to their victims for good. Therefore, has it been ordained by the All-merciful that no one should be in a position to gather beyond the limit of endurance the worst of curses in the shape of the so-called good things of this world. The ideal of the scientific men has retained its charm only by the fact of its being fully unattainable and permanently unretainable.

It is said that those whom the devatas really want to benefit are not given any worldly boons for which their votaries are apt to pray to them. In the Iron Age the devatas are said to be particularly merciful to man in as much as they never bestow their deceptive boons on humanity. This makes it possible for man to turn to the Supreme Lord, Who is also Lord of the devatas, for the real blessing. Material prosperity is an insurmountable obstacle in the way of the quest of the real good. The karmakandins as well as scientific men promise unlimited material prosperity. But would such so-called prosperity be realy good for the soul of man ?

Those who oppose the over-valuation of the so-called worldly good by the scientific men and the karmakandins are in their turn denounced by the latter as being the deluded victims of their self-evident hallucinative phantasies. Indifference to material prosperity is regarded by worldly men as nothing short of an abnormality and the consequence of a pessimistic temperament soured by failure to get what it denounces. The followers of the karmakanda rituals of the Scriptures of the Hindus are also regarded by modern scientific men as unethical for trying to get, what the scientific men have to earn as the fruit of their hard labour and sacrifice, by a process which is no better than magic. This is according to them a form of sheer gambling which need not be justified even by its impossible success. But neither the karmakandins nor the scientists have the least suspicion that the fruits of their labour and magic are not only not worth having at the cost of so much trouble but is sure to prove to be a source of unalloyed evil on actual attainment.

The karmakandins try to compass their purpose by the method of worship which bears some resemblance to bonafide service of the Divinity but is, as a matter of fact only a hypocritical method of securing a chance of worldly enjoyment for oneself under the guise of worship. This leads to another issue which may also be conveniently discussed at this place viz., 'Can the Scriptures deceive ?'

The contention of the karmakandins is that the Scriptures cannot deceive and, therefore, the Scriptural method of securing material enjoyment is bound to be beneficial and should not be confounded with the harmful material prosperity that results from the unscriptural efforts of the scientific men. The karmakandins pay back the scientific men in their own coin. They also protest in no uncertain terms against the condemnation of their position on Scriptural authority that is hurled against them by the Liberationists and the Devotees. We are not here concerned with the point of view of the Liberationists. The point of view of the Devotees may be indicated as follows.

The Devotees hold that the Scriptures are liable to be grossly misunderstood by those who are averse to the service of Krishna. Those who seek as their foregone conclusion either material enjoyment or liberation from the troubles of functioning on the material plane, are bound to consult the Scriptures for realising their respective selfish purposes. But these results concern only themselves and have nothing to do with Krishna. There are sections of the Scriptures which deal with the methods for the attainment of material enjoyment and material liberation. These are not, therefore, to be regarded as being either practicable or beneficial. The Scriptures themselves contain the reasons why they should not be pursued by one who desires to attain the real good. The karmakandins as well as the jnanins, therefore, pursue their respective objects, which are as a matter of fact originally conceived by themselves without reference to the Scriptures by those condemnable methods that are described by the Scriptures in order to provide against any possible misconception regarding their objectionable nature.

It is, therefore, no argument against the Devotees to urge that the Scriptures really offer a choice of methods for the attainment of the summum bonum. The condemned ways are perversely regarded as legitimate by the karmakandins and the jnanins. This prevents them from understanding that there is only one path viz., that of exclusive devotion to Krishna according to the teaching of all the Scriptures and that this view alone is also fully supported by our unbiased reason. The Devotee is not dazzled by the showy acheivements of the Elevationists and the Salvationists. He has no attraction for the greatest temptations that it is in their power to offer in order to lead astray the soul who is not really anxious to exclusively serve Krishna by all his faculties.

The Topography of Shreedham Mayapur

WE have dealt with the question of the identification of the geographical site of the birth of Shree Chaitanya from the antiquarian's point of view, in a previous number of this journal. In another article we tried to explain why the circumambulation of the Holy Site possesses an abiding spiritual value for all persons.

The identification of many of the old sites has been rendered comparatively easy by the survival of the old place names. This is as was to be expected in the case of a place which is only four centuries old. In the Bhaktiratnakar we find the corroboration, from on old source, of the truth of the relative positions of these locally recognisable sites.

As we pointed out in the previous article the actual Site of Birth of the Lord is definitely remembered by the inhabitants to the present day. The memory of the Holy Site has been further preserved by the growth of many an interesting legend round the Site. This also was noticed in the article referred to.

As soon as we are thus enabled to identify the Site of the 'House of God' to quote the language of Bhaktiratnakar, we can follow and identify the details of the route of circumambulation given in that work, of Shreedham Nabadwip by Shreenibas Acharya in the company of Ishan Thakur who was in charge of the household of the Lord shortly after His disappearance. The places visited were Atopur adjoining Mayapur which, said Thakur Ishan, formerly bore the name of Antardwip. The place bearing locally the designation of Atopur did not disappear in the bed of the Bhagirathy till quite recently. It adjoined the identified Site of Mayapur.

On leaving the 'House of God' Ishan Thakur pointed out to his companion the ancient site of Suvarnabihar which could be seen in the distance from the neighbourhood of the 'House of God.' This agrees perfectly with the position of the site as identified. It may be noted in this connection that the ancient mound of Suvarnabihar is a prominent object as seen from a place adjoining the 'House of God' and even the most casual observer was not likely to miss the sight. The almost dramatic suddenness with which the historic mound burst on the view of the observer as he left the 'House of God' could not fail to excite curiosity in those days when the magnificent old ruins were still intact.

The Kholohangar danga i.e. the mound where the khol of the first chanters of kirtan was broken is easily identifiable from the narrative of the Chaitanya Bhagabat with the yard of Shreenibas. The traditional site of Kholbhangar danga is identifiable quite close to the site of Birth. This relative position is corroborated by numerous references, in various connections, in Shree Chaitanya Bhagabat.

From Kholbhangar danga the distance of the home of Shridhar could not have been very far. When Sridhar was sent for from the house of Shribas Pandit the devotees who went to bring him heard his loud voice reciting the Name of Hari when they had proceeded only half the way. Shridhar was accustomed to chant the Name of Hari with a very loud voice. The voice of Shridhar was heard long before the boundary of the village (Mayapur) was reached. We are told elsewhere, in the description of the route of the first processional kirtan along the streets of the town, that the house of Shridhar was visited on the route between the house of the Kazi and Gadigachha. The position of Gadigachha is given in the Settlement maps as adjoining Mayapur. The village has since shifted its position on account of the change in the river-bed and one part of it now bears the name of Mahesganj. The house of the Kazi is still in Bamanpukur.

The Kayastha-koustuva quotes from the Urddhamnaya-tantra a passage regarding the Appearance of Mahaprabhu Son of Shachi at Mayapur (p.98). The book was published eighty-six years ago by Raja Rajendra Nath Mitra of Andul. The same work also quotes from Anantasamhita that the Supreme Lord will be born from the womb of Sachi at Nabadwip (p. 124, 130). On page 123 the writer takes the trouble to explain that Mayapur was another name of Nabadwip where Lakshman Sen had built his capital. The tradition recorded by Hunter in his Statistical Account (1880) is that "It (Nadia) was on the East of the Bhagirathy and on the West of the Jalangi" (p.142). The changes in the course of the Bhagirathy may be studied in the History of Nadia Rivers, the Map of Suba Bangla, Rennel's Map and Blochman's Map. They throw some light on the obscure point how the name Nabadwip was gradually shifted by the pressure of the changing river to the present town of Nabadwip on the West side of the Bhagirathy. (To be continued)

(Organised by the Gaudiya Math of Calcutta from the 6th to the 23rd September, 1931.)

A large number of stalls, aggregating no less than eighty-five have been set up for visualising, in a concrete and easily intelligible form, many of the most fundamental principles of the revealed Religion. The following account has been compiled to afford the visitor to the Exhibition some ideas of the subject matters demonstrated by the arrange ments of the separate stalls in their serial order.

1. The Ten Avataras of Vishnu (Successive Descents into this World of Ten Specific Personal Divinities)

The cyclical Appearances of Vishnu, the Personal Absolute, in this world in Infinite Forms correspond to the stages of gradual progress of the Theistic disposition among His eternally associated servants in different Vaikunthas. These Appearances and their respective specific Forms are capable of being described in terms of the stages and their corresponding physical forms of evolution, on the mundane plane, of the physical organism. The process of growth of the physical organism is the perverted reflection of the graduated progress of the serving spiritual disposition. The spiritual forms and processes of the Absolute Realm are pervertedly reflected in those of the mundane world. But the two must not be supposed to be similar in any sense that is at all substantially conceivable to our limited understanding. The analogical argument, which may help us in cautiously accepting this interpretation of different texts of the Scriptures bearing on this topic, is that there can be no form of existence, either physical or mental i. e. gross or subtle, in this world which is not to be found in their wholesome spiritual inconceivable forms in the original Substantive Realm of the Absolute of which the mundane world is the distorted perverted reflection. All the spiritual principles are analogously, but inconceivably to our empiric judgment, represented by the forms and figures of this mundane world. It is, therefore, possible for those who have access to the Transcendental Realm to describe the distinctive forms and figures of that world in terms of their corresponding unwholesome shadowy images that are familiar to us. The empiricists suppose they understand the meaning of the Scriptures by ignoring the all-important reservation that the limited understanding cannot penetrate through the analogy, offered by the terms of mundane language, to the Substantive Reality to which they point. In trying to understand the Scriptures by means of the limited understanding the empiricists and psylanthropists arrive at opposite, but equally absurd, conclusions. The empiricists hold that the Absolute Realm described in the Scriptures is a very bad and absurd speculation about the Reality, derived from erroneous observations of the phenomena of this world. They ascribe the supposed defects of the Scriptural account to the undeveloped nature of empiric thought in the early stages of material civilization to which period the Scriptural account is supposed by them to belong historically. The psylanthropists insist on the absolute truth of the Scriptural account in its literal mundane sense. It is necessary to avoid both these wrong assumptions in order to attain the perfectly rational point of view indicated above which is supplied by the Scriptural record itself.

The Avataras of Vishnu are Infinite by the analogy of mundane numerical computation. The ten Avataras are representative of the series as a whole. Each Avatara has His Own Eternal Absolute Realm in which He is eternally served by the infinity of His devotees who have spiritual forms that correspond to the stage of their devotional progress. The mundane phraseology, let the caution be again repeated, must not be assumed to mean anything that is conceivable, even analogically, by the limited understanding. The real meaning of the Scriptures becomes accessible to the conditioned soul only by a course of training under the transcendental teacher, the agent of Vishnu for saving us from the bondage of limited existence.

The ten Avataras are, in the chronological order of Their Appearance,—(1) the Divine Fish (Shree Matsya), (2) the Divine Tortoise (Shree Kurma), (3) the Divine Boar (Shree Varaha), (4) the Divine Man-Lion (Shree Nrisingha), (5) the Divine Dwarf (Shree Vamana (6) Rama with the Axe (Shree Parashu Rama), (7) Rama Son of Dasaratha (Shree Dasarathi Rama), (8) Rama Son of Rohini (Shree Bala-Rama), (9) Shree Buddha, (10) Shree Kalki.

The ten Avataras represent the Appearances of the Personal Absolute Godhead Vishnu with Forms and Functions corresponding to the following graduated stages of evolution of the devotional disposition viz., (1) recognition of the Transcendental Sound, as Divinity, (2) first attempt to understand the meaning of the Transcendental Sound by means of the Sound giving rise to the first religious schism frustrated by the Appearance of the Absolute, (3) the first formation of a definite Theistic community in this world ; opposition to the process being violently frustrated by the Appearance of the Absolute, (4) cruel oppression of Theists, who are constant in their loyal devotion to the Absolute, by tyrannical atheism, put down by the Appearance of the Absolute in His Terrible Form, (5) devotion in the form of perfect self-surrender to Vishnu against the advice of pseudo-gurus rewarded by a glimpse of the real but imperfect human personality of the Absolute, (6) armed opposition to the supremacy of Theists (Brahmans) by political power is defeated by repeated extermination of the military brutal forces of atheists by the Absolute in the Form of savage man, (7) recognition of the Personal Absolute in the Form of civilized man served by His Counter-whole as only Consort, (8) complete recognition of the Omnipotent Personal Absolute in the Form of civilized man as the culminating point of the growth of the serving spiritual disposition, (9) recognition of the ultimate claim of the unmixed benign personality of the Absolute in the Form of non-violent civilized man, misconceived as anti-Theism, (10) establishment of the complete prevalence of Theism by the violent wholesale destruction of all opponents of Theism. The Transcendental Activities of all the ten Avataras are described in the Bhagabatam.

§ 2. Epistemology of Absolute Knowledge. Empiric processes of Deduction and Induction from concepts and percepts versus the process of Submissive Service of the Absolute for receiving Enlightenment through the Transcendental Sound

The Epistemology, or the Science of knowledge, of the Absolute is necessarily different from that of the non-Absolute. It is different from the method in which the piece-meal, essentially hypothetical and tentative knowledge of the limited temporary entities of this phenomenal world is sought to be picked up, assorted and applied. The process of the attainment, retention and application of the knowledge of the Absolute is also itself transcendental and belongs to the realm of the Absolute Persons who study and teach the Scriptures by the empiric process do not attain to, nor impart the knowledge of the Absolute This must also be fully known to all empiric students and teachers of the Scriptures. But the surprising fact is that they should still have the assurance to represent their method as a means of attaining the knowledge of the Absolute. Those teachers and students may sometimes cherish the deluded conviction that they can really understand and teach the subject. The Deluding Energy of Vishnu prevents them from understanding their patent error. The Scriptural epistemology of the Absolute forbids us to start from sense-experience either deductively from the concept or inductively from the percept. By following the empiric deductive and inductive processes one will be deprived of the knowledge of the Absolute. The positive process for attainment of the knowledge of the Absolute consists in lending one's submissive ear to the bona-fide teacher of the Absolute. In this case also it is the spoken sound that enlightens But the medium through which the transcendental Sound makes His Appearance is different from the empiric teacher. The teacher of the Absolute is also transcendental. He is the whole-time servant of the Absolute on the transcendental plane. The Absolute Sound appearing on the lips of the transcendental Guru reveals His transcendental Nature to the transcendental ear of the listener who attends to the Sound with the object of rendering Him exclusive, unconditional service.

The empiric process seeks to work up from the known (i. e. experienced perceptually by the senses) to the unknown, to assimilate a new percept to those previously experienced and retained by the process of conceptual integration. The empiric method is as futile in regard to the Absolute as the vain attempt to see the Sun at night by means of the most powerful electric lamps. Attainment of spiritual enlightenment by the Scriptural method of submissive listening to the Absolute Sound is comparable to the Sun-rise by which the room kept wide open towards the Sun is fully illuminated by the light of the Sun itself.

3. Stairs built by Ravana, the type of the Aggressive Empiricist, for Reaching the Absolute

The efforts of the empiricists have given birth to numerous futile systems of speculative philosophy that have the common characteristic of breaking down utterly in the midst of their imaginary progress towards the Reality. These resemble the masonry stairs that were built by Ravana to scale the realms of the Absolute but collapsed in mid-air for sheer want of any kind of support.

4. The Dwarf Absolute Shree Vamana Deva, Lord of the Three Energies, in the Role of Beggar, begs his all from Bali King of the Demons

King Bali was the grandson of Prahlad. He qeeame very powerful and conquered Swarga and reigned over heaven and earth. The mother of Indra, the dispossessed King of heaven and of the Devas, prayed to Vasudeva for the restoration of her son to the rule of heaven. In response to her prayers the Absolute Godhead was born as the Dwarf Shree Vamanadeva. Then Shree Vamanadeva repaired to the place where King Bali had inaugurated the Aswamedha Sacrifice and, on being received with great respect by King Bali and, at his prayer, begged from him as gift as much space as would be covered by three of His Foot-steps.

Shukracharya, the Pseudo-Guru, attempts to prevant King Bali from surrendering his all to the Dwarf Absolute Shree Vamanadeva Shukracharya, the pseudo-preceptor, who was Guru of King Bali and by whose advice the king had engaged in the series of the Aswamedha sacrifices, intervened at this stage. He told

King Bali not to give anything to the Dwarf Who was Narayana Himself and Who had asked for his gift in order to restore Indra by depriving him of his possessions.

King Bali ignores his Pseudo-Guru's Wrong and Malicious Advice and Surrenders his all to the Dwarf Absolute, Lord of the three Energies

King Bali paid no heed to the warning of his atheistical preceptor. In the company of his Queen Bindhyabali the King washed the Feet of Shree Vamanadeva and received His Feet-wash with the greatest reverence on their heads. Shree Vamanadeva then manifested His Cosmic (Virata) Form and with two strides encompassed the whole Earth and Heaven and demanded the portion of the promised gift that was still due. King Bali prayed to Shree Vamanadeva to mercifully place His Foot on his head as he had sincerely promised to give Him what He had asked for. King Bali was deprived of his rule of heaven which was restored to Indra. But Bali was made ruler of the under-world (Patala) and Godhead Himself armed with the club accepted the office of guarding the gate of his royal mansion.

5. Four classes of persons are utterly averse and apathetic to the transcendental message of the Personal Absolute Godhead viz. (a) sensual persons who are appreciated by dogs (b) ambitious persons appreciated by swine, (c) stupid persons appreciated by camels and (d) ignorant pedants appreciated by donkeys.

The above is the substance of a famous text of the Bhagabatam. Worldly ambition is deprecated as showing an abnormal attachment for essentially unwholesome objects that require to be carefully discarded, instead of being coveted. The camel loves to chew thorny substances although they prick into its tongue and lips and yield it no nourishment.

6. Three kinds of the Process of Initiation (Diksha)

The word 'initiation' does not fully convey the sense of 'Diksha' which means 'the process which frees the conditioned soul from sinfulness and at the same time confers on him the knowledge of the transcendental'. The service of Krishna is a spiritual function. Empiricists have no access to it. The eligibility for the worship of Krishna has, therefore, to be conferred on the conditioned soul who is sincerely desirous of serving Krishna on the transcendental plane by complete renunciation of all empiric activity. Such a wish, if it be really genuine, implies the causal working of Krishna's mercy in its latent form. The mercy of Krishna directs the steps of the sincere seeker of the service of the Absolute Truth in the above sense to His own pure devotee for receiving at his hands transcendental enlightenment by the Scriptural process. After he has been so enlightened he becomes eligible for the performance of the spiritual worship of Krishna revealed in the Scriptures. The study of the Veda under the bonafide Acharya is not to be confounded with the method by which knowledge of a mundane subject is imparted to a student by his teacher in the academies of the empiricists. The knowledge of the transcendental is indivisible and is not impartable piecemeal. The study of the Veda, before the attainment of enlightenment, has, therefore, only a prospective and more or less negative value. The study of the Scriptures after enlightenment rests on a different footing and is part and parcel of actual spiritual service of Krishna. So in neither stage the study of the Scriptures under the Acharya enjoined by the Scriptures on the twice-born, has anything in common with the empiric process of receiving knowledge. The process of imparting spiritual enlightenment laid down by the Scriptures is of three kinds viz,. the Vedic, the Pauranic and the Pancharatric.

Vedic Process of Initiation (Diksha)

The purity of seminal birth from twice-born lineage is insisted upon as the pre-condition of eligibility for admission to the study of the Scriptures. But even in the Vedic period, as we learn from the account of Satya-Kama in the Chhandogya Upanished, sincerity of disposition was considered as the real test of eligibility of the candidate for admission to the study of the Vedas.

A candidate descended from undoubted twice-born lineage is invested with the sacred thread (Upanayana Sanskara) by the Acharya and is thereby made eligible for the study of the Vedas under the absolute direction of the Acharya.

The pupil who is found by the Acharya to possess the genuine disposition for the transcendental service of Vishnu receives from him spiritual enlightenment by the process of Vedic initiation (Diksha). The initiated becomes eligible for the actual performance of Vedic rites and ceremonials.

Pauranic Process of Initiation (Diksha)

This process is similar to the Vedic. The Acharya invests with the sacred thread, i.e. admits to the study of the Vedas, candidates belonging to the three higher varnas forming the group of the twice-born. After a course of training under the absolute direction of the Acharya, candidates who are judged by the Acharyya as eligible, are imparted spiritual enlightenment by the Acharya and become fit for the actual performance of Vedic rituals and ceremonies.

Dhruba belonging to the Kshatriya group of the twice-born was initiated by Shree Narada by the above process.

Pancharatric Process of Initiation (Diksha)

This method is recommended by the Scriptures and ought to be accepted in the Kali Juga when there are reasonable doubts regarding unbroken unadulterated purity of legitimate lineal descent from twice-born parentage, as well as, in regard to actual possession of genuine Theistic propensities by most persons. Any candidate irrespective of high birth can be given spiritual enlightenment (Diksha) by this method. The candidate is first given initiation (Diksha) and is there-after invested by the Acharya with the sacred thread (Upanayana Sanskara) which makes him eligible for the study of the Vedas. Shreela Rasikananda Murari, the accredited preceptor of the whole of southern Bengal, was initiated by this method by the Acharya, Shreela Shyamananda Prabhu.

7. Predilections and Temperamnets of the People on the eve of The Advent of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya Diverse forms of non-Theistic activities were in high favour with the people who were ignorant of the method of Bhakti (unalloyed devotion) to Shree Krishna, before the Advent of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya Who for the first time made known to the world the true nature of the highest service of Shree Krishna practised by the spiritual denizens of Braja, of which the essential feature is full confidential reliance on the Absolute Personal Divinity.

The ordinary forms of non-Theism prevalent at the time of Shree Chaitanya are described in Shree Chaitanya Bhagabat. They were as follows :—

Selfish Attachment to and Absorbing Occupation of Worldlings in Domestic Pursuits

The marriage of sons and daughters was the greatest event of the domestic life. Immense sums were spent on it and even the poorest person grudged no expense for this purpose. Rich men spent fabulous sums on the marriage of their pet animals. The sums spent on the worship of a large number of gods and goddesses, on the worship of the Basuli and Manasa (Serpent-goddesses), and on pious observances with the view of securing the boons of sons, daughters and wealth also mounted to a huge total. People kept up whole nights in Bacchanalian revels which were an indispensable part of the popular worships. Wine was copiously drunk at these ceremonies. Goats and other animals were sacrificed and their meat was eaten with high relish as sacrament. Women were also in request for secret purposes in some of the ceremonials. The dramatic performances and dances that were associated with all these worships were traditionally specially obscene in character. Rank, fame, wealth, learning, beauty of body, sons and daughters, were the engrossing topics of all persons everywhere. In a word advancement of one's family and pride of lineage were the sources of all activities of the people.

This is by no means a rare event even to day. The centre of all activities of not a few persons is the epicurian home. This has more or less the support of many persons who pass as preachers of religion. The engrossing care of one's family, however, tends most effectively to stifle one's spiritual disposition. The family is a temporary environment which fastens itself upon the soul by the physical union of man and woman. It is a purely mundane encumbrance which may be made to serve the spiritual purpose, but is not itself spiritual.

8. Controversial Disputes among Irreligious Pandits arising from Misinterpretations of Scriptures

The Shastras, secular literatures as well as Spiritual Scriptures, were studied with great assiduity at numerous centres of learning of which Nabadwip was the most famous at that period. The Pandits delighted in controversial disputes with one another. The greatest ambition of the erudite Pandit was to defeat in open controversy all other Pandits of his day. The subject that was studied with the greatest care at Nabadwip was New Logic whose subtleties furnished a capital weapon for these barren contentions. These hair-splitting disputations were of a most disorderly and violent character and were indulged by every person who had crossed the threshold of a Grammar School. They were never intended to produce any tangible results. These circumstances put a premium upon clever misinterpretations of the Scriptures for serving sordid ends. Excessive cultivation of the art of abstract polemics produced an atmosphere of cock-sure assurance and shameless arrogance as the only passports for obtaining popular recognition as a great scholar. The only original books which were produced were intricate and long-drawn rejoinders and counter-rejoinders for the display of the logical acumen of avowed partisans. Not a single scholar cared seriously for the Absolute Truth.

The Shastras establish the supreme excellence of the transcendental service of Shree Krishna. This is inconceivable to those who try to understand it by dint of their empiric scholarship. The real meaning of the Shastras can be obtained only by the method of absolute submission to the feet of the pure devotee of Krishna, by the process of spiritual enlightenment by grace of Krishna. Those who submit to the feet of the true devotee obtain enlightenment without and independently of the necessity of empiric study. Spiritual enlightenment is altogether different from empiric erudition. On the contrary the one is actually incompatible with the other.

9. Dissembling Tendency of Abstract Meditationists

The Chaitanya Bhagabat has drawn the picture of a dissembling religious peeping through his closed eyes at females bathing in the river. Nabadwip being the holiest tirtha (sacred place) of Bengal even at that period, was thronged by a vast army of yogins who were engaged in abstract meditation. These idle persons haunted the premises of the Temple and the cool shades of trees planted on the river-side at the bathing ghats. Even the author of the Chaitanya Bhagabat did not fail to mention that these meditationists were not unmindful of paying their close attention to the charms of females who frequented the Temples and the bathing Ghats. They were found to evince no outward interest in any worldly affairs, but were internally the slaves of their senses.

Those Yogins who aim at merging in the Supreme Soul by the method of meditation are bound to turn into dissemblers. It is never possible to get rid of the desire of the flesh by the method of empiric meditation. Such endeavour only whets the carnal appetite of its victims. This is corroborated by the historical fact that the most unchecked sensuality has been found to prevail among those religionists who affect to be wholly occupied in abstract meditation.

10. Rigid Austerities of Pseudo-Ascetics

The pseudo-ascetics were also to be found in Nabadwip in very large numbers. These people were engaged in the practice of austerities in diverse forms. The familiar practices were those of exposing themselves to the fierce heat of the sun and of blazing fire during the day in summer and to the intense cold of the wintry night. They would also remain in the same almost impossible postures standing for days on their heads, on one leg, on the support of one hand etc., etc. They had recourse to such and many other methods which were sometimes of a most brutal character for mortifying their flesh.

This method is equally futile and cannot check the carnal appetites. The stoics are in their hearts more sensuous than people who indulge their appetites in a moderate and regulated measure.

11. Vishnu is Absolute Personal Godhead

Vishnu is unalloyed Existence, Cognition and Bliss. He is Absolute Perfection. The Brahmau of the Upanishads as interpreted by exclusive monists is the indistinctive conception of the transcendental greatness of Vishnu. The Paramatman or Supreme Soul is a partial realisation of His function in reference to the phenomenal world only. The Parabyom Vaikuntha or the Absolute Realm,—the eternal Abode of Vishnu,—transcends this phenomenal world of three dimensions. The Divine Functions of Vishnu belong to Parabyom and also become periodically visible in this mundane sphere. Their real nature cannot be perceived by the limited senses. All wrong conceptions of Vishnu are due to the defect of our angle of vision.

Personality of Vishnu implies His eternally identical Name, His eternally identical Form, His eternally identical Qualities and His eternally identical Activities. To acknowledge and to submit to the Personality of the Absolute is the sine qua non of Theism or bhakti.

Since the NAME of Vishnu is eternally identical with Himself those who acknowledge and submit to the NAME are Theists or bhaktas. Those who do not do so are atheists or abhaktas.

Prakashananda Challenges and Assails the Personality of Vishnu

Prakashananda was a contemporary of Shree Krishna Chaitanya. He was the greatest leader of the ascetics (Sannyasis) of the Sankara School in Benares. He was different from Prabodhananda, Preceptor of Shree Gopal Bhatta and brother of Venkat Bhatta, a resident of Sri Rangam in the Tamil country. It was in 1505 A. D. that the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya, while He was still residing at Nabadwip, condemned the interpretation of the Vedanta by Prakashananda which was in conformity with the theory of Indistinctive Exclusive Monism propounded by Shree Sankaracharya. Shree Chaitanya met the family of Venkat Bhatta in 1511 during His pilgrimage to the South. Shree Chaitanya defeated and converted Prakāshananda at Benares in 1517. There is no ground for supposing that Prabodhananda was the name of Prakashananda after his conversion.

Prakashananda was the preacher of Pantheism which is supported by the Indistinctive Exclusive Monism of Sankara. The Pantheists hold that Vishnu and other gods worshipped by them are only a fiction devised to help their worshippers to realise (?) the impersonal Absolute, by merging in the One. Sankara is the leading exponent of this extreme form of Monism as contradistinct from Mono-theism, Vaishnavism or Bhakti. He maintains that the Absolute is devoid of any distinctive name, form, quality and function.

11 a. The Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya, in the Role of World-Teacher Expressed His Anger before Murari Gupta His Devotee, at the Blasphemous Activities of Prakashananda at Benares

The true interpretation of the Veda, contained in the Vedanta, is re-established by Godhead by His Descent in the Form of the Holy Boar(Shree Varahadeva) whenever the Deluge of atheism threatens to obliterate all knowledge (Veda) of the Divinity. Shree Krishna Chaitanya appeared in the Form of the Divine Boar to Murari Gupta at Nabadwip (in 1505) and told him that Prakashananda was blaspheming Him by his teaching of the false interpretation of the Vedanta and that he had accordingly been punished with deformity by leprosy which was dissolving his physical body limb by limb for the offence of denying the distinctive Form of Godhead, but even this terrible punishment did not bring him proper sense and compunction.

11 b. Pantheistic mood of the Exclusive Monistic School

Pantheistic or Henotheistic worship of the five chief gods was also most prevalent at that period. These gods were worshipped by elaborate ceremonials which were described in manuals that had been prepared by writers belonging to the cult who borrowed much of their materials from the spiritual Scriptures. These manuals had in course of time come to be regarded by the followers of the different cults as part and parcel of the revealed Scriptures themselves. The Pantheistic worship consists in offering food, necessaries and luxuries to images of particular gods worshipped on particular occasions for limited periods. After the image has been made, usually of clay, the particular god represented by it is invoked by means of suitable mantras to be present in the image. When the inanimate image has been made alive by this process it is worshipped for a period which is usually not more than a day. The image is then thrown away and is no more worshipped. A new image is made when the next occasion for the worship of the god arrives in due course. The image is regarded as a fictitious symbol devised for the convenience of the worshipper the real object of whose worship is the Impersonal Absolute. So no indignity is offered to the real object of worship according to Pantheists by consigning the image to the water after the ceremony of worship is over. The purpose of worshipping the fictitious image is to be enabled by means of the symbol to concentrate on the inconceivable Absolute and ultimately to merge in the One. This mode of worship was practised by the Brahmans and the cultured classes of society under the lead of the Pandits at the time of the Appearance of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya.

The study of the Vedanta by Sannyasins of the Exclusive Monistic school, who aim at merging in the Indistinctive Brahman by the process, only pampers their impotent vanity by strengthening their convication that they are identical with the Brahman. This Godless attitude effectively prevents them from seeking in a spirit of humility enlightenment from the Absolute. The exclusive Monist is the willing victim of his ignorant empiric arrogance. His show of worship of different devatas is also an exhibition of innate arrogance and is altogether hypocritical.

12. Shree Chaitanya Deva and Sreedhar

Shree Chaitanya Deva while He was displaying in Navawip the Lila of leading the Life of a Householder as Professor of His Academy, used to take away forcibly the plantain, plantain bark, radishes etc., from the poor Brahman Shreedhar who eked out a scanty living by selling those products of his own labour. Shreedhar agreed to supply the pick of his garden products free of cost to Nimai Pandit on the conviction that it was special mercy on the part of the revered Brahman to take those things from him by force as otherwise he would never think of giving them to him of his own accord. Shreedhar did not suppose that he was any worse by giving them to the Brahman but a great gainer in as much as they were accepted by the Brahman who was part and parcel of Vishnu Himself. The gist of the philosophy of this poor Brahman of Nadia is that no degree of poverty is any plea for withholding the offering of one's best possessions for the service of Vishnu. The Supreme Lord delighted in dining on the garden-products of Shreedhar and had His meals served on the plantain barks of Shreedhar's garden.

13. Kala Krishnadas, Shree Chaitanya's Attendant during His Tour of the South, was Rescued by the Lord from the Clutches of Sirenical Females of the Bhattatharis

Kala Krishnadas was a simple Brahman who was accepted by the Supreme Lord as His only attendant during His Pilgrimage to the Southern countries. The Bhattatharis are the priests of the orthodox Nambudri Brahmans of Malabar They have been traditionally regarded as capable of capturing the minds of people by their magical (Tantrik) arts. Kala Krishnadas was led astray by the Bhattatharis who effected his ruin by means of beguiling women. The Supreme Lord, however, rescued him from the den of the Bhattatharis. On His return to Puri from the South the Lord sent Kala Krishnadas away for his immoral association with females.

14. Expiation for Sin (1) Wrong and Fruitless Process (2) Right Process.

The case of Subuddhi Rai, contemporary of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya, an official of the King of Gauda, presents us with the right solution of the problem. Sultan Hussain Shah King of Gauda was formerly the servant of Subuddhi Rai. After Hussain Shah became king he was induced by his queen to force Subuddhi Rai to drink desecrated water in retaliation of former ill-treatment towards himself. Subuddhi Rai went to Benares and besought the Pandits to prescribe the proper expiation for the sin of having swallowed forbidden drink. The Pandits recommended suicide by drinking boiling ghee as the fitting expiation. But as the Pandits were not unanimous among themselves Subuddhi Rai sought the advice of Shree Chaitanya Deva Who was then at Benares. The Supreme Lord advised Subuddhi Rai to proceed to Brindaban and there engage in the constant service of the Name of Krishna remarking that the appearance of the dim reflection of the Name will drive away all his sin, no other form of expiation possessing any real and lasting efficacy. It is only by the apprehension of our relationship with the Absolute as the Sole Object of our worship that the sinful disposition can be got rid of. Sinfulness is nothing but aversion to the service of the Absolute. Unless the cause of the disease is removed the effect cannot cease.

15. The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya, in the Role of the Gardener, Distributing the Highest Love of Krishna to One and All

Shree Krishna Chaitanya, in the role of the World-Teacher by His own example and teaching, is like the gardener who practises tending the tree of love of the Personal Absolute Shree Krishna by protecting it from all damaging influences and, when the fruit of love ripens, makes a free gift of the fruit to all persons without any distinction for making them acquainted with its sweet taste in order to induce them to plant and grow the tree of love of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna on their own account after learning the art from Him.

The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya, Who is Krishna, is Divine Magnanimity Himself. He is the Bestower of the love of Krishna and is also the Teacher of the process by His own example by which we can ourselves learn to grow in our hearts the tree of love and also give away the ripe fruits thereof to others. He holds back nothing from us but bestows His Full Gift indiscriminately on all. The receipients of the mercy of Shree Krishna Chaitanya are the only and the best friends of all. They are authorised by Him to give away the love of Krishna to even the most undeserving.

16. Bestowal of the Love for Krishna in Jharikhanda on Birds, Beasts, and Shrubs by the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya on His way to Brindaban

The Transcendental Sound has power to move everything both animate and inanimate to spiritual love for the Absolute. Everything in the natural state is a particle of the Perfectly Conscious Potency. The pure conscious state is liable to be more or less completely eclipsed by the force of the Deluding Potency due to the abuse of freedom of choice by the individual soul by cultivating aversion to the service of the Absolute.

17. The Tulasi Grove

Krishna abides eternally in the transcendental Tulasi grove. The Tulasi, the Ganges, the Name and the Archa (visible Form) are the four-fold manifestation of the Spiritual Potency in a visible form on the mundane plane. Krishna is always present with His devotee. But the Tulasi grove is His particularly favourite haunt.

18. Different Platforms of Service. Different Grades of Service-holders. Different Faces of the Receipient of Service

The progressive development of the instinct of pure devotion is described in the Bhagabatam in terms of the nature of the worshipper, his environment and of the Receipient of his worship.

The environment or the platform is divided into the mundane world limited by space and time (Brahmanda) and the Absolute Realm free from all disruptive limitation (Vaikuntha). The mundane world is separated from the Absolute realm by the stream of the Biraja which is devoid of all distinctive features both mundane and spiritual.

The mundane sphere is graded into fourteen worlds disposed in a serial order, bounded by the stream of the Biraja, above and below the world in which we live, which occupies the central position in the scheme, there being seven higher and seven lower worlds extending respectively above and below our world.

On the further side of the Biraja lies the radiant outer belt of the Absolute Realm called Brahmaloka. Above this belt of pure light there is an infinite gradation of spiritual realms rising one above another. The Realm of the Absolute is divided into (1) the Spiritual Hemisphere which is called Vaikuntha and (2) the complete Sphere called Goloka.

Goloka is the highest platform of the pure loving service of Shree Shree Radha-Krishna.

The denizens of Brahmanda (the mundane sphere) are averse to the service of Krishna. But they are capable of attaining to the platform of Divine service by help from the Absolute. Man who is found only in our world of the mundane sphere, is endowed with special aptitude for the attainment of the pure service of Krishna.

In the higher as well as in the lower worlds of the mundane sphere there are beings who are endowed with very much greater physical and mental powers than man. But they are also less fitted for the service of Krishna. The human life is thus the highest form of all mundane existence.

The average man aspires after greater powers for a good or for a bad purpose. By his aspirations for greater powers of goodness he is elevated to the higher worlds of the mundane sphere. By his unethical aspirations for greater powers he is sunk into the lower worlds. Goodness and badness denote correlated mundane prospects which are attainable within the mundane scope. By either kind of aspirations man falls, upward or downward, from his highest mundane estate. It is, however, possible for man to follow a third alternative viz, to aspire to the service of Krishna on the plane of the Absolute which is free from all mundane reference. This aspiration is implanted in the hearts of fortunate persons by the mercy of the agent of Krishna viz. the Guru, who comes down into the mundane sphere for imparting to conditioned souls the inclination for the pure service of Krishna. This inclination is strengthened by following the guidance of the Guru and fructifies into the service of Krishna on the highest platform of Goloka by uninterrupted progressive development under the fostering care of the same transcendental agency.

Shree Chaitanya Charitamrita contains a famous description of the gradual growth of the creeper of pure devotion from a seedling towards the Feet of Krishna across the Brahmanda, the stream of the Biraja, the Brahmaloka and the Infinity of the Hemispheres of Vaikuntha.

In the Brahmanda the object of covetousness (miscalled worship) is a desirable state of the worshipper conceived in terms of mundane felicity In the stream of Biraja the conditioned soul is purged of all mundane hankering, both ethical and unethical ; but there is no spiritual hankering. In Brahmaloka the soul finds no specific object of worship but receives the first clear indications of the possible existence of a super-mundane distinctive existence.

Passing through Brahmaloka the soul actually finds the distinctive spiritual realm where Shree Lakshmi-Narayana are the Object of universal worship by the methods of reverence, by absolutely pure souls. Passing beyond the realm of Sree Narayana the soul is enabled to obtain the sight of Goloka, identical with Shree Brindaban where he is privileged to serve Shree Shree Radha-Krishna by the methods of perfectly cofidential intimate service.

19. Punishment of a Sensual Pseudo-Ascetic (Vairagi)

The bona-fide ascetic engages in the whole-time service of Vishnu and for this purpose openly renounces the world i. e., enjoyment of the pleasures of the senses. If such a person is found to engage in sensual activities his conduct is thereby rendered wholly unpardonable. One who is not really desirous of the whole-time service of Shree Krishna should not rashly renounce the world. In renouncing the world one should be fully guided by the advice of the Sat-Guru who is no other than the whole-time servant of Shree Krishna.

Impostor Chhtto Haridas being an Ascetic (Vairagi) talks illicitly with a woman with mala fide motive

Chhoto Haridas who belonged to the order of ascetics (Vairagi) and professed to be a follower of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya, once obtained by begging a quantity of fine rice from Madhabi Devi, the aged saintly sister of Shikhi Maiti, a close associate of the Lord, during His residence at Puri. Chhoto Haridas had been asked by Shree Bhagaban Acharya Prabhu to procure rice from Madhabi Devi for the meal of Sriman Mahaprabhu Who had agreed to take His food at his place. The Lord was pleased with the fine quality of the rice and enquired from where and by whom the same had been procured. The Lord was informed that the rice had been begged by Chhoto Haridas from Madhabi Devi.

20. The Supreme Lord, in the Role of the World-Teacher, passes the Severest Indictment on Chhoto Haridas for his Grossest Mis-conduct and Forsakes him.

On His return to His lodging the Lord commanded Govinda not to allow Haridas to cross His threshold from that day. On an enquiry being made by the devotees, the Lord informed them that He never casts His eye upon an ascetic who meddles illicitly with women. The Lord was requested by Shree Paramananda Puri himself to forgive Chhoto Haridas on his promising not to commit such offence again. The Lord, thereupon, rose from His seat, called Govinda and left the house with the intention of going to Alalnath, to avoid disobliging Paramananda Puri who was the co-disciple of His Guru Shree Iswarapuri and, therefore, to be obeyed like the Guru. This extraordinarily severe attitude of the Lord made all the devotees desist from making any further representations on the subject.

21. Chhoto Haridas goes to Tribeni (Confluence of the Ganges and the Yamuna) at Prayag (Allahabad) and drowns himself Chhoto Haridas waited at Puri for one full year in the hope of being pardoned by the Supreme Lord. But as the Lord did not soften in the least Haridas stole out of Puri during night on the day when the year was completed and going to Prayag drowned himself in the water of the Tribeni praying with his last breath to be pardoned by the Lord. The Lord expressed His satisfaction at the conduct of Haridas when He was informed of his fate, remarking that it was the only fitting expiation of such offence.

22. The bewildered Husband pulled and led by his co-wives falling Simultaneously upon him

A person who relies on his senses is guided by the six impulses and appetites, viz., (1) vain prattling and meaningless silence, (2) ire, (3) avarice, (4) gluttony, (5) adultery and (6) mind.

23. The Goswamin who has subdued the six sensuous impulses.

The six sensuous impulses that are automatically overcome by the pure devotee of the Absolute, viz., the Goswamin who alone is also fit to be the teacher of the revealed words (Sruti), are the impulse of worldly talk, the speculative impulse of the mind, the impulse of anger, the impulse of good eating, the impulse of gluttony and the impulse of sexuality. All these impulses are completely under the control of the bona-fide Goswamin and are employed by him to serve the exclusive pleasure of the transcendental Absolute Godhead Vishnu.

24. Vishnu maya (the deluding energy of Vishnu) fascinates and bewilders even Shiva the God of destruction

This refers to the Appearance of Vishnu in the Form of the most fascinating female, Mohini, at the time of the quarrel between the Devas and the Asuras over the sharing of ambrosia that was obtained by the churning of the ocean by their joint laboures. Both the Devatas and the Asuras were so much enamoured of Mohini that She could easily persuade them to entrust Her with the distribution of ambrosia. She gave it all to the Devas who were Her devotees. Shiva prayed to Vishnu to show him His Female Form. Vishnu appeared to Shiva in the Form of Mohini. Shiva was so completely fascinated by Her charms that he ran wildly after her, wooing Her to be his consort, utterly forgetfull of his own proper consort Parbatee who failed to dissuade him from such astounding behaviour.

Shiva receives the mercy of the absolute

In this crisis Vishnu was pleased to withdraw His Female Form from the view of Shiva and restore to him his natural immunity from all carnal passions. Vishnu now appeared before Shiva in His Male Form and told him that Shiva should never again pray for the sight of the Female Form of the Absolute as it was sure to bring him to trouble by making him seek to dominate over and enjoy the Absolute. Such unnatural hankering would be an offence against the Absolute.

25. Thakur Haridas, the transcendental messenger of the Absolute Truth, Reciter of the Name of Krishna, and the courtesan's flirt Thakur Haridas lived in a solitary cell in the forest of Benapole and recited the Name of Krishna three lakhs of times during every night and day in the manner that is free from offence. Thakur Haridas recited the Name with a loud voice. This became intolerable to Ramchandra Khan, the powerful land-owner of Benapole. He engaged a beautiful courtesan for bringing about the ruin of the youthful sadhu. The courtesan presented herself before the cell of Thakur Haridas on the approach of evening and used all her arts for diverting the attention of Thakur Haridas and proposed to be favoured by his intimate society. Thakur Haridas bade her wait at the entrance of his cell and promised to fulfil her wishes after he had completed telling one crore times the Name of Krishna in course of the month which was drawing to its close.

26. The courtesan listening to the repeated recital of the Name of Krishna by Thakur Haridas

The courtesan being assured of the fulfilment of her immoral wishes continued to sit at the entrance of the cell of Thakur Haridas, listening to the recital of the Name of Krishna from the lips of Thakur Haridas. The whole of that night was passed in this fashion. She returned the next evening and took her seat at the entrance of the cell and listened to the recital of the Holy Name through the night. The harlot came thither on the third evening bent upon carrying out the design of Ramchandra Khan, and persevered in listening to the chant of the Name of Krishna.

27. The All-purifying fire of the Name of Krishna consumes completely the sins of the listening courtesan who bows low to the feet of Thakur Haridas. The courtesan is turned into a saint

As the third night of her vigil drew to its close the mind of the courtesan cleared of its sinful propensity and she experienced the complete change of her life. The Name of Krishna on the lips of the pure devotee is no earthly sound. Krishna's Name is identical with Krishna. Krishna entered the attending ear of the courtesan and His Presence burnt up completely all the sins of the courtesan, bringing into play the perfectly pure aptitude of the heart of the soul. This change flowed from her heart to the external organs and caused the courtesan to fall prostrate at the feet of her saviour to express the gratitude of her soul for the causeless mercy of the pure devotee. Thakur Haridas bade her give up her life of shame and in response to her prayer for being saved, imparted to her the Transcendental Name of Krishna. Thakur Haridas then made over his cell to his disciple and left Benaple. The courtesan was turned into a saint. She abandoned sinning, renounced the world and devoted herself whole heartedly to the recital of the Name of Krishna being free from all offence by the grace of Thakur Haridas. She was numbered among the greatest of saints and was revered by all the people.

28. The sinner abandons sinning and is saved by the mercy of the Absolute's own Empiric morality is the result of human effort by the assertive direction of the human judgment for the attainment of an enjoyable worldly existence. It has, therefore, no connection with the soul. Empiric immorality is also the result of the same process directed by a more or less identical motive. Both empiric morality and empiric immorality belong to the category of offence against the Absolute. From this double plight the repentant sinner is delivered only by the causeless mercy of the agent of the Absolute viz, the Sadhu. A person who is sunk in the slough of physico-mental existence can never be delivered from sin by empiric efforts for the reason that such efforts aim at the opposite result viz., the attainment of a desired worldly existence.

29-30. Balabhadra Bhatta the silly attendant of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya is misguided by popular rumour (vox populi) into mistaking the black fisherman on the Kaliya Lake for Shree Krishna (Blasphemous error of Apotheosis).

The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya was accompanied by Balabhadra Bhatta on His Pilgrimage to Shree Brindaban. While the Supreme Lord was still at Brindaban the rumour went rife that Shree Krishna had re-appeared in Brindaban and was exhibiting during night His Leela of quelling the Kaliya Serpent on the Kaliya Lake. Balabhadra Bhatta was carried off his legs by this baseless rumour and proposed to the Supreme Lord that he might be allowed to witness the Leela of Shree Krishna. It was afterwards discovered that the rumour was due to a mistake of the spectators who had imagined the black forms of fishermen fishing in the Lake on their boats at night, for Shree Krishna.

The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya solves the doubt of His foolish attendant by Scriptural Evidence (Vox Dei)

The Supreme Lord expressed His indignant surprise at the easy acceptance of such blasphemous error by His attendant reminding him that the evidence of the Scriptures is definite on the point that Krishna does not manifest His Appearance in the Kali-Yuga. It is a most important point, and its significance should be noted by all persons who sincerely believe in the testimony of the Scriptures as final, that the Scriptures mention no Avatara (Descent) of Godhead during the Kali Age although this has not prevented many persons from accepting, on the evidence of vox populi men and women who announce themselves as the Avataras of Godhead. There have been many such pseudo-Avataras of Godhead in Bengal within the memory of living persons. No created or mortal or relative being should be worshipped as identical with the Creator Immortal Absolute Personal Godhead.

31. Empiricists have in all Ages been Violent and Tyranical to Theists i. e., Devotees of Vishnu, the Absolute Truth ; But the Non-violent Theists are found to Win Ultimately

The opposition of non-theists to the followers of the Absolute Truth is the subject-matter of the history of religion in this world. This opposition is spontaneous and eternal, but has been laboriously mis-represented by the empiric literatures of the world.

32. The Soul on attainment of freedom from worldly hankering, praying for the mercy of vaishnava

Any show of submission to the Guru, the pure devotee, by the conditioned soul with affinity for the enjoyable things of this world, is a caricature of the constant natural attitude of unconditioned serving submission to the Absolute manifested by the soul in his natural state of perfect freedom from all worldly hankering. This spiritual aptitude makes its automatic appearance as the natural function of the soul on being delivered from the bondage of the world by the inseparable graces of the Supreme Lord and of His pure devotee viz. the bonafide spiritual guide (Shree Gurudeva).

33. In The Satya age Prahlad, the Absolute's own, suffers incalculable tortures by orders of his father, Hiranya-Kasipu (Arch-Fiend King of hostile empiricists); and every time non-violent Prahlad comes out unhurt, rescued by his Trust in the Absolute.

This is not a myth as empiricists want us to believe. These events are eternally enacted on the plane of pure cognition. They also manifest their visible appearance on this mundane plane by the Will of Krishna, at the appointed periods. But these spiritual events must not be confounded with any transitory occurrences of this world. The Scriptures, which have handed down the account, forbid us to regard them as earthly events. Scepticism may be covertly supported by empiricists in defiance of the principles of pure reason but it cannot cease to be the stupid Godless attitude that it really is inspite of a certain measure of general support which it has undoubtedly always received from worldly people. The sceptic affects to believe in the testimony of his erring and limited senses. But when this testimony is forthcoming in favour of the Absolute he hypocritically rejects the same on the ground that he cannot believe what is opposed to general experience. But how can the Transcendental be an object of general experience on the mundane plane? Scepticism is affected stupidity for denying with the appearance of thoughtless levity the possibility of the knowledge of the Absolute.

Prahlad is thrown into the fire

By orders of his father Hiranya-Kasipu for refusing to give up his uncompromising Trust in Vishnu. He is protected by Vishnu Who renders him immune from the effects of any earthly fire.

As a matter of fact Prahlad is the eternal servant of Vishnu and as such is never subject to the laws of physical Nature. But the Deluding Energy of Vishnu makes him appear as if possessing a physica body to the view of worldly people when He chooses to descend to this mundane plane and become visible to mortal eyes by the will of Godhead for the disillusionment of conditioned souls.

34. Prahlad is hurled down from the peak of a hill

By orders of Hiranya-Kasipu but lands unhurt into the Arms of Shree Hari.

35. Prahlad is thrown into the sea

But is not drowned and comes safely to the shore.

36. Prahlad is incarcerated in a solitary prison-cell

But is visited there by Shree Krishna.

The Theistic Position and how to approach

[Discourse at an interview with Dr. Stella Kramrisch, Ph. D., Professor of Fine Arts, Calcutta University at the Calcutta Gaudiya Math on 12-9-31.]

THE Name of the Personality of Godhead is Vishnu. The impersonal face is designated Brahman in Sanskrit to denote 'magnanimous,' 'large' 'big', etc., representing the macroscopic view. Personality apart from His creation is Vishnu. Vishnu has three Energies. One of them is meant for manifestation of His eternal Abode, etc. Another Potency is for creating all human souls who are emanations from His Tatastha Shakti found between the temporal and eternal worlds. By this Potency He creates human souls. The human soul has two different predilections. If he desires to serve Godhead he is allowed in the Eternal Region. If he desires to lord it over this world he comes down for enjoying in different capacities the products of the Deluding Potency.

In this world everything is changing transforming, is subject to birth, posting and death. In the present form of existence we cannot expect to be otherwise than being subject to birth, posting and death. The position is always transforming. When we do not want to be suject to these we feel the necessity of seeking a way to get back to the original position. This position, which is like the Geometrical line, is designated Tatastha Shakti, the fountain-head of all human souls. The Tatastha Shakti is located between the two other Potencies of Vishnu one of which maintains this transforming world and the other is the source of the manifestation of the eternal world that does not change like this world or rather where change does not involve any defective features. These potencies belong to the Personality of Godhead, Vishnu.

Rudra God of destruction and Brahma God of generation are two wings of the Personality of Vishnu. Some people think that the destructive aspect of the Divine Personality should be final, that the goal should be cessation of all activity. They prefer the worship of the destructive face i. e. Rudra or Siva. But the destructive function is only a specific department of the Divine Activities. Existence is different from destruction. The Eternal Form of cherishing, fostering all sorts of manifestations, is strictly confind to Vishnu Who is the Centre of all Theism.

In the Geeta the Personality of Godhead is maintained everywhere. The Geeta closes with the proposition that we should embrace the Feet of Vishnu leaving aside all abortive speculations. If a man does not serve Vishnu he engages in some other activities e. g., keeping dogs., horses etc., in order to serve them. All sorts of service are to be rendered to the Absolute. Any proposition to lord it over others means that we require to be raised to the position of Godhead Who alone is to be served by them. All of us are to render service to Him only. When there is any division of argument on this point, when we cease serving Him, we want to make things subservient or serviceable to us. If we want to enjoy,—if we want that Godhead should not enjoy,—we don't want that any service is required for Him. This leads to rupture.

If I require that some one should serve me and that some one requires that I should serve him the service due to the Head is disturbed by such selfish deflection. This produces rupture. It becomes detrimental to Harmony. Unless all activities are harmonised every one will be troubled.

We should not be meddling with earthly things that are always shifting and changing. Whenever we get a thing for supplying a want it should be to serve Godhead. Otherwise we require service from others and thereby want to enjoy this world. This would debar us from the Absolute.

If we pick up shifting things we shall be dragged to some puzzling region. We would arrive at no decision. We require all our activities to be directed to the Absolute Knowledge identical with Godhead.

If we agree to serve we would find what the Position of the Absolute should be. In the Old Testament the Pronoun 'It' stands for the Absolute, or the Neuter face. Animation is deprived of the Fountain-Head by the proposition that all prerogative, everything predominating, should cease in the Absolute.

When we disagree from the above we think He should have some initiative. 'It' should be 'He'. The Geeta refers to a 'He-God'. The Moiety of the Thing is thus established. The Predominating Aspect is recognised. The Predominated Aspect is ignored. The Masculine should have the reciprocal Feminine Aspect. Otherwise one Moiety is ignored. The Two Moieties form the Complete Whole. Matter which has no initiative is eliminated.

The Two Halves of the Whole, viz., the Predominating and Predominated Aspects, should be represented. The Distinctive Monism of Shree Ramanuja admits three fundamental entities viz., spirit, matter and their Lord,—Chit, a-chit and Iswara.

All animated things are vested with the spiritual form. The inanimate cannot exercise any activity, cannot take the initiative. The Masculine and Feminine both show initiative faculties. Inanimate form should not be traced as the Fountain-Head.

The choice up to this has lain between 'It-God' and 'He-God'. There is also a third alternative viz., a 'She-God'. We have decided that 'He-God' is the subject to be ascertained, and not 'It-God'. 'It-God' is equivalent to Agnosticism, Scepticism, Atheism, etc. If any metho lic or cosmic principle is to be admitted we should require that 'It-God' cannot produce 'He-God'. Because 'He-God' can take initiative, 'It-God' cannot. The pair, viz., 'He' and 'She' in Union, is the Second Form. Before this animation is wholly or partially eliminated from God.

In the Geeta the Male Form is represented as the God. The Feminine Form of Godhead should supply the full Integral Value by satisfying the requirements of the reciprocal situation in animation. Seeta-Rama standard of Theism, in which the Ethical side is fully manifested, may be taken as the favourite instance of the third or 'Pair-God' form.

But what appears at first sight to be the special merit of the worship of Seeta-Rama, viz., its ethical value safeguarded by one Consort and one Husband, also restricts the Predominating Aspect of the Absolute to that value, on the ground that in this world it would create great dissension if the husband should have many wives. The Feminine share is ignored by this mundane reference.

The fourth stage to Theism is supplied by the worship of Krishna as King of Dwaraka. Krishna is One Master served by hundreds and thousands of souls who follow Him. Hundred and thousands of wives serve Krishna by the relation of consort-hood. We have every right to join the service of Godhead in that capacity.

Human souls are many, but the Over-Soul is One. Ramanuja says that plurality of wives should bo allowed to serve Godhead, while others hold that Divine service should be restricted to the worship of Seeta-Rama. But we, Rishis living in the Dandaka forest, require that we should have Rama as our consort. Seeta would refuse us this favour. Theism is restricted by reference to this world. The equilibrium that is sought, is not maintained. We males have got to pass through one sort of ideas and females through another. But our experience is a perverted reflection.

We are many. We must not think that our Lord should be Many. Polytheistic thought must be avoided. The Christian Theology offers a Male-God Who is Father and Creator of everything. But Male-God without the Feminine Moiety cannot produce any boy here. That sort of idea of Male-God would not give us fullness of devotion.

Lakshmi-Narayana is better than Male-God. Rama-Seeta is also better. In Dwarakesha (King of Dwaraka) we find that He is Lord of many subservients. Many servants are allowed access to Him as their Husband.

In this world there are found five different reciprocal relationships. If the reverential view of worship is allowed we are deprived of confidential service. If we serve Rama only we can do so in two capacities, either as His menial servant or as His subservient friend. We cannot suppose that we are better friends of Rama than Himself. We can also be neutral towards Him. In Son-hood of God we understand the Birth and Childhood of Godhead. We are care-takers of our son. We as parents can serve Him as a Boy. This is the form of Bala-Gopala (Cow-Boy) worship. In the fourth stage of Theism parental love may not be directed to the mundane boy ; but the Transcendental Boy is placed in that position.

The external or internal body is not the soul. The ownership of both is attributed to the soul. These bodies are the outward apparel. We require a loftier folliage, a truer expansion than is possible for them in order to approach Godhead. In other words we need not be restricted to the atheistic face. The qualitative (Saguna) and non-qualitative (Nirguna) alike restrict us to a particular form. This should not be.

There are four different restricted groups viz., the ideas of thought-less Atheists and those corresponding respectively to the qualitative, the non-qualitative and neuter faces of the Absolute by mundane reference. These are the non-Theistic groups. In the Theistic group there are (1) Male-God, (2) Vague Pair-God (Lakshmi-Narayana), (3) Definite Pair-God viz., Rama-Seeta. These also are restricted by reference to the ethical principle, which has proved efficacious here. We should not carry this mundane reference thither to make the realm of the Absolute also miserable. That is the permanent region. If we think it should not be permanent we would be pessimists and cynics always afraid of troubles from outside.

We should have a Theistic turn of mind. Godhead need not be deviated from the principles of Real Existence, Knowledge and Bliss (Sat, Chit, Ananda). We are never God. Pan-theists think that after liberation we are God and identical with that Thing, that God should have no reference to observer, observation and observed as this is bitter experience here. As these troublous positions are found to be against our peace, etc, here, we are deluded to accept the position of atheists to merge the distinctions in a union where there is no specification.

In the actual liberated condition we need not think that we should merge in the Absolute and that there should be no differentiation between Godhead and our humble selves. Such thinking, which belongs to the conditioned state, is purely hallucinative.

Godhead should have a Position which should not be confused with that of hundreds and thousands of souls here. He should be possessed of Qualities that are not to be comparable to ours and we should find a permanent position of relationship to Him.

That our present position is for a time and it is to end in merging with the Absolute, is Upanishadic speculation. In it mind is confused as soul. Our soul is now lying in a dormant condition. The soul delegates power to mind to meddle with the affairs of this world. Mind and soul have different location and different attributes. Matter and soul are supposed to be one by Pantheism.

Theism proper is found in the Geeta. The Ramayana gives us the worship of Rama and Seeta. The Pancharatra offers the worship of the Eternal Pair-God. In Rama and Seeta our ethical merits are met. Predominating aspect in man need to be restricted, but not the Predominating Aspect of Godhead.

The empiricists often show dread of changing things. They shift their positions when they meet with contrary arguments. They also learn from their professors, in the same way. This will not lead to the Absolute.

We should target the Position of Godhead in the Absolute and non-Absolute. In the twelfth chapter of the Geeta Arjuna is shown a figure of Godhead. The Sun and Moon are His eyes. All smaller Gods, the whole universe and all other attributions which are not shown to Arjuna by his chariot-Driver, are displayed to the view of Arjuna. These are delegated to Baladeva the Second Facsimile of Godhead in whom all sorts of powers are to be found.

The first Face is free from all mundane reference. Such reference would minimize. Those who are truly subservient will approach the True Face of Godhead. Dazzled persons approach the second Divine Personality as Baladeva. They cannot touch Krishna and His consort Barshabhanabi in the region where there are innumerable pairs.

All-Potency is delegated with the Second Facsimile, the Creator of the different aspects of Theism traced by us. But He is not the Supreme Authority. Krishna is Supreme. But He has delegated all powers.

The position of Godhead is All-round. We have only two eyes. We see only half the horizon. Looking up to the sky we see the zodiac but not the other half viz., that containing the meridinal star down. We see the half. We donot see the other half, unless there is rotation. When a globular sphere is referred to we can see only a quarter of the thing, as in this mundane world. By reference to the sphere one fourth is shown to us. We can calculate from the sight of the quarter. There are the first, second, third and fourth quadrants.

In the Pancharatra Godhead is visible here by mundane activity in the first quadrant only ; Vasudeva, Sankarsan, Pradyumna and Aniruddha forming the All-Round Circle. Sankaracharyya repudiated the four Gods. The Hindu Astronomy has twenty-four divisions of the arc. There are twenty-four Vaikunthas in each quadrant. The Jainas have thought that the Jinas are twenty-four. The Vaishnavas do not subscribe to that view, as they are uncompromising Theists.

Q. How to get ?

Ans. Knowledge of first dimensions is acquired first. All mental speculation should cease. All forms of service for Godhead mean that our mind should first of all be controlled. The mind is busy picking up ideas and thoughts from this world. If these are carried there it would be anthropomorphic. There should be no such attribution to Godhead.

We have to engage in hundred per cent service. We should find that the apotheotic ideas cannot be tolerated.

That would be psylanthropy. Apotheosis should be rubbed out. But we should be always hearing the Absolute through the Transcendental Sound. The sound of this atmosphere describes Nature's products. It informs us about America which is at the other end of our Globe. This aptitude should be dismissed in the case of Transcendental Sound which is not from this region of three dimensions.

Sound from the Absolute Realm (Vaikuntha) has a peculiar reference. It requires no corroboration by the other senses. In the case of mundane sound nasal activity is required to test its correctness, the tongue and other senses must also help in the process. There are always the four corroborative senses that are engaged in testing the validity of the mundane sound. But they are quite unserviceable in the case of the Transcendental Sound.

The Transcendental Sound has got a peculiar distinctive reference of its own. It refers to Non divisible Absolute Knowledge (Advaya jnana). No challenge is to be offered to that Sound. If these examinations fail to follow that Sound 'He' would still act on our system and we should still listen to 'Him' and ask questions to satisfy us as to whether anything can be traced of that Sound.

The Transcendental Sound comes here to designate Godhead. The Transcendental Sound is the Name of Godhead. The mundane sound designates something else than itself. The Transcendental Sound should be heard and no challenging question should be placed to contradict. The Absolute should be only approached and should not be opposed by any empiric acquisition. It will be killing time if we do otherwise.

उपदेक्ष्यन्ति ते ज्ञानं ज्ञानिनस्तत्वदर्शिनः ॥'

We should be always attending, and trying to know by interrogatories. We do not pay sufficient attention so long as we think that He should be challenged from other positions. But the Absolute does not propose to be challenged by any sensuous experience. The Transcendental Sound comes through one who does not desire to meddle with anythiug of this world as the Chemists, Physicists, and others do, who donot remember older ideas in course of enjoying the troublous process of approaching the mundane sound.

The Transcendental Sound would destroy all acquisitions. To take the help of those acquisitions would be like taking help of the lantern for the purpose of looking for the Sun. We should not take such help. This sort of education has no propriety, no efficacy there. The Transcendental Sound should come through the uncontaminated pipe of the true devotee. One who thinks that he should have anything to do with this world cannot be the bearer of the message of the Absolute.

All things here are found to evaporate even before they are acquired. This is the case when there is a paralytic seizure. There are two quite different things. The external body and the subtle body are impeding our progress. If we are relieved of this, if we ignore this if we do not lead our lives like ordinary people of this world, we would get rid of the obstruction of our incorporated bodies.

The soul is quite different from the physical body and the internal mind. The working of the brain or sense-percepts would lead to Atheism. This is the plight of men who are busy with the acquisitions of the senses. The soul is wrapped up by the subtle body and confined to the mundane representations. These exoteric impressions of the soul are not true Theism.

The soul is free from the subtle body. As we cast off our old apparel we are free. These bodies are brought from outside. Ego is different, is their proprietor and need not be wrapped up nor incorporated by these tempting thoughts of this world, by material examinations. We should be always dismissing mental speculation when receiving the Transcendental Sound. This sort of knowing, willing, feeling need not be incorporated. We should sever our connection; otherwise it would lead us to subscribe to metempsychosis and we would think that as we have more lives in store 'we could then make up for our present sins and so in this life let us be sinning'. By one-life theory people would be more careful.

A man should be thoroughly ethical. He must not be encroaching upon the rights of others. But the mental demeanour is made up of these things as would lead to those troubles. The mentalist is, therefore, not at all moral. This poor idea of morality is crossed by many of us here, even when we may presume that we have sufficient existence.

As a house-holder vaishnava, Venkata Bhatta was not like one of the Hiranya-kasipus of these days who are inimical to their sons' service of Sree Hari ; rather he highly rejoiced to find his son Gopala surrendering himself to the Feet of Sree Gaursundar. Father of the stamp of Venkata Bhatta is very scarce in these days. There are people who may make an ostensible display of joy at the prospect of their sons serving Godhead, but a slight encroachment on their selfish interests is often enough to disclose the hypocrisies of their hearts. But Venkata Bhatta was not a father of this type because he was fully aware of the lessons imparted by Rishavadeva to his sons viz., that such preceptor, relative, father mother, devata, husband, is never the real Guru who can not save one from the fear of impending death born of one's aversion to Godhead.

Noticing the wonderful serving propensity of Gopala, the supreme Lord bestowed His favour upon him in ample measure. But Gopala still suffered in his heart the agony of the coming separation from his Lord. Oftentimes he thought that Sree Gaursundar might leave them at any moment. "Alas why was I born in this distant land ?" Gopala would mourn, "Shall I not see the 'Lila' of the Lord in Sree Kshetra (Puri) ?" Thus thinking one day, Gopala swooned away in the fit of intense anxiety and saw with his soul's eye the beautiful Sree Krishna, the lover of Sree Radha and in the next moment the Sree Vigraha with the bright golden hue and lastly the lotus-eyed young Sannyasin with hands reaching down to the knee, standing in front of him and illuminating all round by the radiance of His world-enchanting Form. Gopala prostrated Himself at the Feet of the Lord Who said, 'Gopala, you will soon resort to the realm of Braja where you will have the company of Sree Rupa and Sanatan, my undifferentiated counterparts who will manifest to this world the religion of the pure spiritual love of Braja as taught by Myself ; and where living in their constant companionship you will have the opportunity of hearing discourses about Me and enjoying the blessings of My service.'

A great devotee has sung that the only object of pilgrimage is to obtain the association of Sadhus (Saints) and as the result thereof to receive the blessing of the service of Sri Krishna ; that the presence of a Sadhu turns a place into a holy tirtha. Therefore what is the good of going where there is no Sadhu and undergoing the troubles of travelling long distances on the pretext of pilgrimage ? The presence of Vaishnavas turns a place into Brindabana and is the source of boundless joys to the residents thereof. At the threshold of the place where there is devotion to Krishna salvation is found to attend uncared and as a matter of course the spiritual ecstasy spontaneously manifests itself.

The Realm of Goloka had, indeed, descended into the house of Venkata Bhatta in Sri Ranga Kshettra. How could it be otherwise ? Goloka is eternally co-existent with the presence of Sri Gaursundar and His Paraphernalia Who are also there eternally engaged in His service. During His four months' stay in the home of Venkata Bhatta the Lord of Goloka flooded the land of Sri Ranga Kshettra with the discourses about the loving service of Sri Hari that is free from the restraints of distant reverence. This effected a relaxation of the sentiments of reverence and awe towards the Supreme Lord cherished previously by Gopala Bhatta. The Name of Sri Gaursundar spread far and wide and attracted all people who flocked to the place to have a sight of His lotus Feet. At the sight of the Lord the Name of Krishna spontaneously danced on their souls' tongue and they forthwith turned into devotees of Krishna.

When the real Vaishnavas come to a household they do so for the purpose of showering upon the householder the real and the best blessings whereby he may be delivered from the bondage of this world. Shree Gaursundar found Venkata Bhatta a sincere Vaishnava open to receive the highest service of Shree Krishna although he himself was not aware of the same. Venkata Bhatta was a true worshipper of Shree Shree Lakshmi-Narayana. One day Shree Gaursundar by way of joke said to him 'Bhatta, do you know why Lakshmi Thakurani, the crown-jewel of all chaste ladies, although she abides eternally in the Bosom of Shree Narayana, is so anxious for the society of the Cow-herd Who is the Lord of My Soul in as much as Shree Lakshmidevi in her anxiety, foregoing all her enjoyments of Vaikuntha, turned an ascetic by the testimony of the Bhagabatam ?' Bhatta said 'My Lord, there is distinction without difference between Shree Krishna and Shree Narayana. While Shree Narayana has got four hands with 'Sankha' (conch), 'Chakra' (disc), 'Gada' (club) and 'Padma' (lotus) in them, Shree Krishna has got two Hands holding the Flute. Although the Loveliness of Shree Krishna is undoubtedly in Shree Narayana, the Latter does not exhibit the humorous 'Lila' of Shree Krishna.

When, therefore, Shree Lakshmidevi found that her association with Shree Krishna has no chance of deviating her from her chaste course and on the other hand, makes her a gainer by association in Krishna's Rasa Pastimes which are not to be found in the company of Shree Narayana, she naturally coveted for the same. What harm is there in this ?"

Shree Gaursundar said, 'Bhatta, there is indeed, no harm at all in that. But the Scriptures declare that Lakshmi Thakurani could get no admission into the Rasa pastimes of Krishna. So His dearest consort, abiding in the Bosom of Shree Narayana in Vaikuntha, could not obtain the favour that fell to the lot of the milkmaids of Braja'. To this Bhatta said, 'My Lord, how can this most insignificant creature dive into the unfathomable Leela of Shree Krishna ? Thou, Who art Shree Krishna, art alone aware of Thy Own Leela. May Thou mercifully enlighten me of the same ?'

Shree Gaursundar said "Bhatta, Shree Krishna has this unique Aptitude that by his own Loveliness He attracts not only the hearts of all others but even the Heart of Himself. The denizens of Braja do not look upon Shree Krishna as Godhead. His Divine Majesty is invisible to them by the superior power of His Loveliness. Although the Divinity is there in all His Fulness, still the Majestic display can never predominate over the Charm of His Loveliness. Shree Krishna is the Fountain-head of all ecstacies. Everything of Him is supremely lovely. Parabrahma in the realm of Braja is the heart's only Lord, the only dear Son, the only dear Friend, appearing as equal, inferior or superior to the denizens of Braja in the most happy familiar relationships. He who seeks to attain this highest plane of confidential service of the Absolute is enabled to obtain it by the grace of the denizens of Braja, the eternal loving associates of the Son of the Chief of Braja. Shree Krishna is Godhead and Absolute Autocrat. He can by His own inconceivable power, with perfect consistency, by His diverse Personalities, simultaneously and eternally perform the Infinity of Divine Pastimes ranging from the Protective Function of this mundane world to the intimacies of the realm of Braja.

The loving activities of the milkmaids of Braja are not the babblings of the prattler nor the licensed concoction of the poet nor the riddles of a humourist. Persons who are subject to their six senses, who nourish worldly propensities, who have lost all knowledge of the nature of their real self by preferring to wallow in the slough of worldly enjoyments and who are absorbed in the vain pursuits of the world which are quite different from the service of Godhead, must desist from attempting to swallow the deadly poison by indulging their passions in foolish imitation of Rudra, who is alone immune from their deadly consequences, if they really desire to be able to understand the true import of the sanctifying Pastimes of Shree Krishna in Braja. By following the contrary course they are sure to be brought to utter ruin.

We have hitherto missed to mention one important point in its proper place and we think we shall be failing in our duty to our readers if we do not mention it in the concluding portion of our short discourse.

Sri Gopal Bhatta Goswami was entrusted by the Supreme Lord with the function of drawing up a code of rules for the guidance of neophytes in order to save them from mistaking the nature of the pure erotic emotions of Braja for the immoral passions of sensualists.

It is necessary for all conditioned souls to undergo in a loyal spirit and under the direction of pure devotees the full course of preliminary training provided by the agency of Shree Gopal Bhatta Goswamin his immortal work Shree Hari-Bhakti-Vilash before one is in a position to realise the transcendental nature of the erotic performances of the milk-maids of Braja.

37. Prahlad is thrown to be trampled by a wild elephant

It is beyond the power of the brute to do any harm to the protected of Krishna.

These are not allegories nor miracles. They establish the truth of the declarations of the Scriptures that the devotee of Krishna is a transcendental person and is not divested of his transcendental nature when he appears in this world by the Will of Krishna. But empiricists always try to explain away this momentous significance of the activities of the devotees of Krishna on the ground that they manifest themselves on the mundane plane in seeming contradiction to the so-called laws and conventions of our fallible judgment. They are, however, the only reality and can alone save us from the delusions of this limited existence if they are attended to in the true spirit of humility expressive of our utter ignorance and incapacity of realising the Absolute by our present equipments.

38. The Absolute Shree Nrisingha Deva discloses Himself to the Arch-fiend Hiranya-Kasipu.

Hiranya-Kasipu used every method of cruelty to take the life of Prahlad who had refused to give up his faith in Krishna even while being subjected to unheard-of oppression at the hands of his Arch-Fiend father. Hiranya-Kasipu was the worshipper of Brahma, creator of the phenomenal world and had obtained from him the boon that he would not be killed by any agency conceivable to himself or under any conceivable circumstances. This support had encouraged him to successfully defy everything and to regard himself as perfectly safe and invincible. Even after Hiranya-Kasipu had failed repeatedly to take the life of Prahlad who was protected by Vishnu his arrogance did not abate in the least. He burnt with indignation against Vishnu all the more and demanded to know from Prahlad where he could find Him in order that he might prove to Prahlad his superiority to Vishnu by defeating Him in open fight. On being assured by Prahlad that Hari is present in every-thing Hiranya-Kasipu in his fury pointed to one of the lofty columns of alabaster of his great Hall and asked whether Vishnu was to be also found inside that solid column. Prahlad answered in the affirmative. Thereupon Hiranya-Kasipu went up to the noble column and smashed it by a single blow of his mighty fist. Instantly as the blinding flash of the lightning the Terrible Form of Shree Nrishinghadeva manifested Himself to the monster to vindicate the truth of the words of His devotee that Vishnu dwells in every-thing.

39. The Absolute Truth kills anti-Theism or Empiricism

To Hiranya-Kasipu the Appearance of Shree Nrishinghadeva was that of the inconceivably Terrible Form of the Divinity, putting an end to all hopes of his safety that had been assured to him by the creator of the phenomenal world.

The form of Man-Lion was unlike that any entity that could be conceived by the highest empiric wisdom. Hiranya-Kasipu made a last desperate attempt for the destruction of his enemy. But he was overpowered after a show of fight on the part of Shree Nrishinghadeva Who took him upon His Lap and with His Lion's Nails tore open his entrails in the view of Prahlad. Hiranya-Kasipu was killed in the hour of twilight by the Divine Form of Man-Lion on His Own Lap, conditions that completely transcended the scope covered by the boon of Brahma. The innate insufficiency and utter delusiveness of empiric wisdom is not brought home to the empiricist till he actually realises the Superior contra-existence of the Absolute. The destructive and terrible face of the tanscendental Reality is necessarily the first positively disillusioning experience of the Absolute to any challenging empiricist to whom the Absolute is pleased to disclose Himself as an Act of His causeless Favour. The retributive aspect of the process need not blind the sincere enquirer of the Absolute to the overwhelming mercy of this method of appearance of the Absolute that alone could be acceptable from the point of view of the challenger although the latter has to pay for such experience by undergoing the suffering of total destruction of his delusive personality which is misrepresented as his soul by his own empiric judgment. The disembowelling process indicates the rottenness of the physical body and the necessity of its destruction for enabling the conditioned soul to realise the nature of perfect unconditional spiritual existence of the soul as the normal state. Shree Nrishinghadeva, even in the light of these considerations, must however appear to empiric judgment as presenting the front of the retributive personality of brute force, which is the only proof of real existence to the empiricist, but in singular and somewhat grotesque combination with the principle of rationality detectable only in the human personality.

40. The Absolute Truth, though the terror of terrors in empiricists' eye stands with smiling face before His Own Prahlad, the Theist.

The terrible frowning aspect ef Shree Nrishinghadeva is seen only by the empiricist : to the theist Shree Nrishinghadeva manifests His absolutely benign aspect. The identical Entity presents simultaneously these apparently opposite appearances to His challengers and devotees respectively.

Shree Nrishinghadeva performs the double function of always protecting the theists and destroying those non-theists whom He wants to favour in response to the prayers of His devotees on behalf of their deluded persecutors. But non-theists have no power to cause any real suffering to theists and are seldom favoured by the actual Sight of Shree Nrishinghadeva by reason of their attempted offence against His devotees.

41. Difference between the Respective Methods adopted for the attainment of their goals by the devotee (Bhakta) and the abstract meditationist (Yogin)

The Yogin's attempt to obtain control of his mind and senses by means of breath-control is liable to be interrupted by his falling a victim to those passions which he seeks to control, before he has finished his training. His plight is like that of a person who enters the deep forest to provide himself with a stick by cutting a branch of a tree inorder to be able to defend himself by its means against the attack of tigers and other wild animals which abound in the forest, but is surprised by the tiger in the midst of his vain attempt to find the proper tree for making his stick and is killed in his helpless condition by the ferocious animal. The case of the devotee is like that of the expert tamer of wild animals who is provided beforehand with the magic-wand of living refuge in Shree Krishna and by its means all the tigers are made as meek and serviceable as pet dogs. Lots of redoubtable yogins like Viswamitra have in the above manner been seduced by the Menakas (courtesans in the court of Indra) in the midst of their Yoga. Whereas not a single bhakta has ever been known to succumb to the Deluding Energy. It is not possible to have a complete control of the mind and passions by means of any artificial process devised by the ingenuity of man, except by self-surrender to and mercy of Vishnu, the Personal Absolute.

42. The Barren and Vain Activities of the Pantheist

The activities of pantheists, patronised by the school of Indistinctive Monism, are like the barren drudgery of husking in a mortar bran and chaff separated from the grain, an operation that can yield no useful result. By flouting and denying the distinctive Personality of the Absolute, pantheism concentrates on the chaff as distinct from the grain of Theism or Bhakti, which is mistaken for food but forms only its outer casing. Bhakti is food for the soul but pantheism is of no use for the soul and is positively harmful.

43. Crossing easily the rough ocean of the world under the guidance of the efficient Acharya

The pedantic empiricist does not believe that it is possible for any person to cross the troubled waters of the rough ocean of the world which has baffled all his efforts. He thinks so because he does not know that there can be any other method for the attainment of the Truth except by the ascending process, working up from the particular sense-experience to the general mental concept. But these generalisations are bound to be always hypothetical and delusive. They cannot give us any real knowledge of this world by means of which we could avoid punishment for going against the so-called laws of physical Nature through our ignorance of the same. It is the efficient guidance of Sat-Guru (the transcendental messenger of the Absolute Truth) which can alone and automaticaliy save us from the insecurity of the perpetually bewildering and hypothetical propositions of misguided empiricists.

44. Absolute Personal Godhead transcends the empiric activities of the Karmin and Jnanin

The failures of the active and ambitious Karmin (epicure utilitarian and elevationist) with his fully out-stretched hands to reach the earthly goal of his ambition, as well as those of the inactive pessimistic Jnanin who aims at merging in the Absolute by trying to abstain from all worldly activities, are like the performances of two smokers of opium under the influence of the drug who, seated on the water's edge of the river, try to light the bits of charcoal for smoking their opium at a blazing fire burning on the opposite bank. The broad gulf of the Biraja (spiritual stream of water demarcating phenomenal from transcendental sphere) effectively cuts off all classes of empiricists from any access to the Absolute Truth.

45. The garden of the Pleasure-sports of Krishna

Krishna takes His delight in the transcendental pleasure-gardens of Shree Brindaban. The gardens of this world that minister to the pleasures of the senses of conditioned souls afford no pleasure to Krishna. The garden that is wholly dedicated by pure souls to the transcendental service of Krishna becomes thereby a fit offering for the Supreme Lord and must not be confounded, either as regards its nature or purpose, with the pleasure-gardens of sinful men. As offering for the pure worship of Krishna the garden has the power of communicating to the conditioned soul the inclination for spiritual service if it be served in the spirit of sincere reverence.

46. Life of the Tridandi Bhikshu of Ujjain

The significance of the institution of Synnyas of the triple staff is embodied in the life of the Tridandi Bhikshu of Ujjain described in the Book of the Bhagabatam. The Sannyasa (renunciation) by assumption of the triple staff (Tridanda) is the mode of renunciation recommended by the Vedas for the theists. One who is favoured by Krishna can alone attain to this condition. The dim reflection of the Name of Krishna produces a mutual repugnance for the things of this world which is formally expressed by the assumption of the Tridanda Sannyas. One whose mind is turned towards Krishna by the causeless mercy of Krishna cannot at the same time have any inclination towards non-Krishna hankering for any worldly possession is wholly incompatible with the least desire for the service of Krishna.

In his houshold life he had been of extremely parsimonious and worldly habits

In his household life the Sannyasin of the triple staff had belonged to the town of Ujjain and his habits were extremely parsimonious due to his excessive attachment to the world. He was the possessor of great wealth and was flattered and respected by a great host of worldlings who hoped thereby to obtain a share of his riches. But the close-fisted miser was too shrewd for them to gain any advantage over him.

47. All the Brahman's properties robbed off

The prosperity of the miser had a sudden and catastrophic end. All his properties were robbed by brigands in times of anarchy and he was thrown into the state of utter poverty. But his misfortunes only served to call into play the hitherto latent hostility of all the people who had conceived a grudge against him for having been disappointed in their expectation of sharing in his riches in his prosperous days. He was subjected to all kinds of indignities and persecutions at the hands of everybody.

48-49. His control of thought, word and action and forbearance under needless acts of violence from everybody

But he was a gainer by his worldly misfortune. He was enabled to realise for the first time in his life the utter worthlessness and transitoriness of all earthly possessions. This made him welcome every form of persecution as blessings showered upon him by the causeless mercy of Krishna. The attitude supplied him with perfect control over his thoughts, words and actions and he bore with undiminished cheerfulness and without any impulse of resentment all the fury of unprovoked violence of his assailants.

50. His food was polluted, but he preserved his non-violent and forgiving attitude

He now made up his mind to renounce the world by formal acceptance of the triple staff in order to serve his Liberator Shree Krishna by the Scriptural method followed by all former pure souls in their quest of the Absolute. He lost no time in carrying out his resolve and assuming the garb of the Tridandi Bhikshu, renounced his impoverished home and wandered forth into the streets. But his change of attire brought him no relief but only redoubled the vituperations and persecutions of his assailants. The climax was reached when at the end of a day's merciless tortures by a hooting crowd of persons of all ages and conditions the Tridandi Bhikshu spent with fatigue and hunger sat to his scanty meal but which was at once polluted by some of the most hardened rascals from the crowd. This only made the sannyasin approve, with his whole heart, their conduct towards himself on the ground that he fully deserved all the contumely that was being heaped upon him recognising it as the just punishment for his past misdeeds in order to enable him to realise, in an excellent manner, the causeless mercy of Shree Krishna in and through His beneficent arrangement.

51. His selfless whole-hearted devotion to Hari, the Absolute personal Godhead

After all this chastening experience the sannyasin of the triple staff went forth into the world, renouncing his quondum home and all his former connections, for being fully free to devote all his time to the exclusive service of the Absolute. The triple staff of the Tridandi Bhikshu stands for the complete control of mind, body and speech. The control of mind body and speech is necessary for the attainment of the pure service of the Absolute. But such control is also obtainable only by the actual service of Hari enjoined by the Scriptures by pursuance of the shining examples of the former devotees. Hence the assumption of the triple staff of renunciation is obligatory on and natural for all those fortunate souls who are specially favoured by Krishna. The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya performed, in the Role of the ideal Devotee of Krishna, the Leela of renouncing the world and assuming the triple staff as the only method enjoined by the Scriptures for attaining the pure service of Krishna. Those Associates of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya who manifested the leela of leading the life of house-holders, did not act contrary to the above principle. They were acting the role of Paramahansas who had already, in their previous births, passed through the training of the state of the sannyasin of the triple staff. They were by no means undergoing the training provided by the Vedas for pre-liberated house-holders in the institution of spiritual classification of the people according to their disposition and occupation (Varnasrama System). The householder's life is compatible with the pure service of Krishna in the case of Paramahansas.

52. Satee the dear Consort of Shiva, on hearing the calumnies of her father Daksha against Shiva, her Guru, utterly helpless sacrifices her life

Satee went uninvited and against the command of Shiva to the non-Theistic Sacrifices of her father Daksha who vented in her presence his anger against Shiva for not having shown him (Daksha) the customary honour due to one's father-in-law. Daksha was a worldling. Shiva had abstained from making obeisance to him. Shiva had given his reason to Satee which was to the effect that as he is in the habit of bowing to Vasudeva in the pure essence of his soul he thereby honoured every entity including Daksha, and that it was not, therefore, necessary for him to honour his father-in-law separately. The calumnies of Daksha were refuted by Satee, who, however, feeling the helplessness of her position in the society of non-Theists, preferred to put an end to her life as the only proper expiation of her offence for having had to listen to the blasphemous talks of Daksha and his associates. The Scriptures forbid Theists to listen to any talks against Vishnu and the Vaishnavas. They enjoin it as the duty of every Theist, when he chances to hear any talk against Vishnu and Vaishnavas, to cut off the tongue of the blasphemer (i. e. to silence him effectively), or, failing to do so, to leave the spot, or, if he is in a position to do neither, to put an end to his own life. The conduct of Satee is non-violent but different from that of Prahlad.

53. Hanuman possessed of the requisite strength in the performance of his imperative duty burn the capital of Ravana, the violent enemy of his eternal Absolute Master Shree Ramchandra.

The violent conduct of Hanuman is fully in accord with the spirit of the non-violent conduct of Prahlad and Satee. If Hanuman had abstained from burning the capital of Ravana he would have been an aider and abetter of the violence of Ravana. He had not the excuse either of Prahlad or of Satee for being passively non-violent through helplessness. The loyal servant of the Absolute Truth is required to be the active opponent of all violent enemies of the Truth. It is his imperative duty to protest against the violence of non-Theists in uncompromising terms and take all consequences of such protest. He is to give up his own life if he be not in a position to oppose the enemy of Vishnu in an effective manner and cannot also avoid their society. And if he possesses the power it is his imperative duty to use it against violence. One who does not perform these imperative duties commits a grave offence against the Truth. The conduct of Hanuman is, therefore, in its loyalty to the Truth on a level with those of Prahlad and Satee.

The violence that was used by Hanuman against Ravana was of a preventive character, its complete justification consisting in its being actually employed on behalf of the Absolute by His proper agent. It would have been disloyal for the agent to have abstained from the full exercise of his strength against the declared enemy of His Master when such opportunity presented itself to him. The theist is by no means enjoined by the Scriptures to be a non-violent passive spectator of the violent acts of aggressive non-theists against Vishnu and His devotees. This is not the meaning of the teaching of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya by which the devotee is required to be 'humbler than a blade of grass and more forbearing than the tree.' These qualities are to be exercised in upholding, and not for deserting, the cause of the Truth.

54-55. The Gaudiya Math is the spiritual hospital for the treatment of non-Gaudiya patients suffering from non-theism

The opposition of the non-Gaudiyas to the Gaudiya Math is like the conduct of the silly boy suffering from gangrene accusing the surgeon of being his mortal enemy while undergoing surgical operation. But after full recovery from his gangrenous sore the boy realises his stupidity and hails the surgeon as his saviour. Those who oppose Theism accuse the Theists of sectarian animosity towards their wrong cherished views. They are very anxious to nurse their rotten sore, which is not felt to be painful but will really and surely prove fatal. The watchful practised eye of the Gaudiya preacher in the role of the surgeon is quick to diagnose their malady and to save their lives never hesitates to apply the lancet for cutting off the rotten part in an effective manner, although the process is not liked by the patient and appears at first sight to be an extremely cruel act towards him. The knife used by the Gaudiya surgeon is the kirttan of Krishna that mercilessly exposes the exact nature of the gangrenous fallacy of all non-theistic opinions. This is no sectarian animosity but the only cure of cherished unsuspected narrownesses born of empiric ignorance.

56. Only by loving and honouring Shree Vishnu, the Absolute Whole, all included parts are really loved and honoured

It is not necessary to worship any thing else than and independently of Vishnu. Those who try to serve the plurality of gods and the universe separately, can give no eternal good to any. The worship of Vishnu is like watering at the root of a tree by which method alone all its branches and leaves are properly fed. It is sheer waste of energy to pour water separately on the branches and leaves. It is folly and stupidity to neglect to apply water to the root of the tree. Polytheism or the separate worship of the gods implies denial of the Absolute Nature of Vishnu and is thus a most heinous offence against Godhead. Brahmanas are accordingly strictly forbidden by the shastras to worship any other god except Vishnu.

57. Theism versus pantheism and henotheism. Worhip of Vishnu, the all-powerful Absolute Personal Godhead, versus panchopashana or the worship of five phenomenal aspects of the mental concoction of negative abstraction as the Indefinite Absolute

The worship of the five gods i. e. the Sun, Ganesha, Rudra, Sakti and Vishnu, as separate and independent objects of worship bear the name of panchopasana which may be translated as Pantheism or Henotheism. This form of worship should not be confounded with Theism proper. In panchopasana the process of worship consists in making various offerings to the object of worship who is represented by an idol. The period of worship is usually limited to a particular day. The presence of the god to be worshipped is invoked in the idol at the commencement of worship and his departure therefrom is effected by suitable mantras at the conclusion of the ceremony. The idol, after the worship is over, is thrown away and a fresh idol is made for the next occasion of worship. The purpose of worship is either to solicit some form of worldly advantage for oneself or to be enabled to merge in the object of worship, conceived as the Indefinite Absolute, in the long run. This form of worship does not recognize the eternal distinctive spiritual nature of the worshipper, the eternal spiritual nature of worship, for the purpose of the attainment of the eternal spiritual state, by the eternal worshipper, or the eternal distinctive spiritual nature of one Supreme Godhead Who is the object of worship. In Theism proper all the above conditions, which are categorically disavowed by the Heno-theistic worshipper, require to be recognized as essential.

Worship of Rudra, the aspect of the Indefinite Absolute, perceived as perverted and contaminated by the temporary destructive faculty

The conception of Rudra as worshipped by the panchopasakas is the temporary destructive aspect of the Indefinite Absolute. But as a matter of fact Rudra of the Scriptures is a perverted secondary manifestation of Vishnu functioning as destroyer of mundane entities by means of the limiting Energy. Rudra is thus really a functionary of Vishnu exercising distinctive and direct control over the limiting Energy by direction of Vishnu. But the panchopasaka is under the wrong and unwarranted impression that the mundane destructive function has a direct connection with the Absolute. The conception of the Indefinite Absolute to which the Henotheist works up from this data, although it is logical to that extent, leads wholly away from the personal Absolute Whose spiritual Form and Function are not comprehensible nor perceptible by the senses and mind of the speculative empiric philosopher.

Worship of the feminine aspect of the Indefinite Absolute as conceived by the predominating masculine mood, of the worshipper, assumed to lord it over Her Shakti as worshipped by the panchopasakas is the mundane Energy conceived as a female for ministering to the sensuous enjoyment of her worshippers who regard themselves as her male enjoyers. In other words the worshipper woos the feminine aspect (in the worldly sense) of the imaginary Indefinite Absolute for subjecting herself completely to him. It is thus a form of worship of oneself and is, therefore, opposed to Theism proper. The empiric theory of the Indefinite Absolute comes readily enough to the aid of such worshipper with the recommendation that the pursuit of temporary sensuous enjoyment will lead to the ultimate cessation of all activity by merging the worshipper in the Indefinite Absolute when there will no longer be enjoyer, enjoyment or any object of enjoyment. This is the inevitable ultimate face of all forms of ego-worship based on sense-perception.

Worship of Vishnu wrongly conceived as an aspect of the Indefinite Absolute contaminated by the temporary sustaining faculty

The worship of Vishnu by the panchopasakas is also a form of ego-worship or atheism. Vishnu is conceived by henotheistic worshippers as that aspect of the Indefinite Absolute which is perceived as wielding the temporary sustaining function of the phenomenal world. The sustaining function of this world no doubt belongs to Vishnu according to the Scriptures. But Vishnu performs this function without being in contact with His Deluding Limiting Energy. Vishnu transcends this mundane world although it owes its maintenance to Him and Him alone. But the nature of the sustaining function as perceived by conditioned souls can give no clue to the transcendental Nature of Vishnu. The conclusion based upon such observations is bound to lead nowhere or, what is the same thing, to the Indefinite Absolute, the utterly nihilistic form of atheism.

58. The Rasa-dance of Shree Krishna

In the transcendental Shree Brindaban Shree Krishna is served by His milk-maids by the principle of free Spiritual amour. This is the highest platform of the pure service of the Absolute. The subject is incapable of being presented in mundane language without being liable to be grossly misunderstood. This world is the perverted reflected shadow of the Absolute Realm. Here the principles of the Spiritual realm appear in their inverse order in a form that is shadowy and condemnable. By this analogy what is best in the Absolute appears to the superficial mundane observer as the worst corresponding principle on the worldly plane. Shree Krishna is the only Male in the circle of the Rasa-dance, all the rest being females. Shree Krishna dances with every couple of milk-maids as their joint Co-Partner being simultaneously present between each dancing couple.

59. Anthropomorphism, Zoomorphism etc.

This may be explained by an imperfect mundane analogy. The stirring and moving of the reflected image of the original shining Moon in the sky by a stir of water in which the image of the Moon is reflected, should not cause the observer of the moving reflected image to suppose that the original Moon itself moves and stirs. The Absolute Personal Supreme Lord Shree Kirshna reigns unadulterated and uncontaminated independently of all earthly transformations and irregularities. On this mundane plane everything, animate as well as inanimate, is mundane and purely relative and full of relative reference. Relative human discrepancies and mortal ideas should not be ascribed to the Absolute. Such ascription is called Anthropomorphism, Zoomorphism, etc., and is one of the different aspects of Illusionism (Mayavada). The Supreme Lord, indeed, manifests the Leela of His Transcendental Appearance in and Disappearance from this world according to His Own sweet Will. He sports here with His milk-maids. He shews Himself here as if born of the womb of His mother etc., etc. There is, however, no justification for extending all the wrong deficient contaminated empiric ideas of man to the Absolute Who is ever All-perfect and All-unalloyed and perfectly free from the conditions of mundane birth, death, morality or immorality even when He manifests His appearance to the limited view of the people of this world under the figures of relative mundane appearances.

60. Shree Krishnas' Swinging festival

The milk-maids serve the pleasure of Krishna in every way. They have no hankering to secure any enjoyment for themselves. Those who imagine that any form of enjoyment is appropriate or innocent for the jeeva are as much atheist as others who suppose that Krishna requires to be deprived of any form of enjoyment. The swinging festival of Shree Krishna should not be confounded with sensuous gratification coveted by jeevas of this world and requires to be contemplated in the altitude of loyal spiritual service which is free from all mundane references. A libertine of this world is altogether unfit to understand the amorous sports of Brindaban. Shree Gaursundar accordingly forbids persons who are not wholly free from sensuality to listen to the narrative of the Pastimes of Brindaban. They should place themselves under the disciplinary direction of the bonafide Guru who is himself wholly free from all vice, in order to be enabled to attend to perfect purity of heart by the method of wholesale abstinence from every form of worldly enjoyment.

62. Causeless Appearance and Disappearance of Vishnu, the Supreme Absolute versus Empiricism

The Absolute Truth Vishnu appears to the pure cognitive essence of the soul and manifests His disappearance therefrom at His own sweet Will. Empiricism regards the events of the world as bound to appear and disappear in accordance with unintelligible principle of mechanical uniformity that seems to them to be their only and sufficient explanation although it is no rational explanation at all. Empiricism is the denial of the possibility of the operation of the cognitive principle in disregard of limits fixed by the stronger force of the material principle. The only function that is attributed to the cognitive principle by empiricism is to mechanically note and register the unintelligible transformations of material energy. The theist on the contrary seeks to find the Absolute, the Living Truth, in and through all occurrences and thereby establish perfectly intelligible relationship between his own individual cognition and the events of the world. But the Absolute necessarily obeys no rule in manifesting His Appearance to those who seek Him. For seeking the Absolute it thus becomes necessary on the part of the individual soul to agree to wait unconditionally on His causeless favour. This is the attitude of unalloyed devotion and is altogether different, as method of search of the Truth, from that of empiricism. The empiric method of search is rendered futile by the opposition of matter which forces the soul to move on the physical and mental planes. The alternative method of submissive enquiry, backed by the causeless grace of the Absolute, can lone lift the soul confined within the limits of physical body and mind to the cognitive plane that transcends all limitation.

63. Infant Krishna quells the venomous serpent Kaliya (ferocity and cruelty)

Ferocity and cruelty of disposition are incompatible with spiritual progress. They are eliminated at an early stage of spiritual progress.

Kaliya was a venomous serpent that lived in the Kaliya Lake formed by the Yamuna and polluted its water by its virulent poison. This was a source of great danger to all things that lived in the neighbourhood of the poisoned Lake. Shree Krishna was pleased to desire to sport in the deep water of the Lake infested by the terrible serpent. As He entered the water of the Lake for this purpose His companions viz., the cow-boys and calves got extremely frightened for His safety. Presently Kaliya finding himself disturbed in his own abode came out from under the water and bit Krishna and completely enveloped His form with his coil. Shree Krishna remained perfectly motionless for a short time in the grip of Kaliya. But presently, in order to relieve the anxieties of the denizens of Braja He made His Form to expand and the deadly pain of the process compelled Kaliya to uncoil and retire. Shree Krishna then moved quickly making a show of attacking Kaliya from every side. The mighty serpent was exhausted by the severe exertions of his attempts to defend himself. When Kaliya had been thoroughly exhausted in this way Shree Krishna forced his hundred great hoods to be lowered and mounting on their flattened tops began to dance. When any of the hoods of Kaliya was raised ever so little Shree Krishna at once made it belowered by the pitiless pressure of His Feet till all the insolence of Kaliya was quelled and he was actually on the point of death. Then the wives of Kaliya prayed to Shree Krishna to spare the life of their husband as he had been thoroughly humbled and had sought His protection. Krishna now forgave Kaliya but commanded him to withdraw from the Kaliya Lake. The sweet water of the Yamuna was freed from all taint of poison.

64. Infant Krishna kills the demoness Pootana (diplomatic duplicity, sister of hypocrisy)

Pootana was a demoness sent by King Kansa to kill all the new born babes as he had been apprised by the Deluding Energy of Vishnu that his would-be slayer had recently been born among the cow-herds. Pootana presented herself to the home of Yasoda in the form of a beautiful matron and made her way to the chamber where the Baby Krishna lay in His couch. She took up the Baby into her arms and offered Him the poisoned nipple of her breast. Shree Krishna grasped at the breast of the demoness with the terrible grip of His Hands and began to suck away the life of the demoness. Pootana was convulsed with mortal pain. Unable to disengage herself from the Baby and struggling in the agony of death she disclosed to the astounded gaze of the milk-maids who had collected on the spot her frightful monstrous form. Her life soon left her and she fell down dead covering with her hideous carcass a great length of the ground. Yasoda and the milk-maids snatched Baby Krishna Who was still clinging to her breast. They were filled with amazement and could not understand how the Baby could slay the terrible demoness.

Diplomatic duplicity, as of the pseudo-teacher of the Scriptures assails the truth almost as soon as He manifests His Appearance. But the New-Born Baby Krishna is able to kill the demoness of duplicity and deliver her victim. No Diplomatic duplicity should be found even in the earliest stage of spiritual endeavour. Persons exhibiting the trait are Pootanas and should be regarded as the mortal enemies of all neophytes.

65. Infant Krishna kills Baka Asura (hypocrisy)

Drunken licentiousness is the obstacle that is removed first of all by the mercy of Krishna from the path of the sincere neophyte. The next vice, which has also to be got rid of at the very outset, is hypocrisy. Unless the neophyte is enabled by the grace of Krishna to detect and avoid this formidable vice he can make no progress on the spiritual path. But the vice cannot be cast off or even properly detected by its possessor, except by Divine grace.

The demon Baka who had the appearance of an enormous crane swallowed up the Infant Krishna. But the Infant stuck at the throat of the demon-bird and scorched his palate.

This made the monster eject him from his mouth. Baka then tried to harm the infant by pecking at him with his sharp cruel bills. But Krishna holding down one of his bills with His Feet split open the body of the monster by pulling upward the other with His Hands. Hypocrisy can not assimilate the Truth as the Whole, neither can it successfully oppose the Truth in any detail. Its hollowness is bound to be quickly exposed by the enlightening power of Truth. The neophyte should be fully prepared to go through this complete exposure of his hypocritical nature if he desires to make any progress on the path of spiritual endeavour.

66. The deluding energy of the Absolute bewilders Brahma the father of all the created Brahma was empowered by Vishnu to produce from his own body all the entities that fill the void of the Universe. He did not create, but was the first progenitor of, all created entities. He, however, chose to think that he was not the agent but the creator of all entities.

Brahma steals the cow-calves of the Absolute Cow-herd Krishna

While Krishna in the Form of Cow-Boy was engaged in tending the flock of cow-calves in the company of other cow-boys of Brindaban Brahma conceived the design of matching his own power against that of Krishna and accordingly stole Krishna's cow-calves and their attendant cow-boys while Krishna was separated from them, having gone in search of the flock as He was eating a handful of rice which he held in one of His Hands. Krishna, however, at once re created the calves and cow-boys and went on with his Pastimes. In the meantime Brahma kept the stolen calves and cow-boys hidden for the space of one of his days and returned to Brindaban to find out what Krishna was doing. He was surprised to see that the identical calves and cow-boys were with Krishna as before. Thereupon Brahma sped back to the place where he had hid the stolen calves and cow-boys and found them in the same condition in which he had left them. He then brought out the stolen calves and cow-boys to the place where Krishna and His cow-boys were tending their flock. On the restoration of the stolen calves and their cow-boys the other calves and cow-boys disappeared. Brahma could not understand how this was possible.

Brahma's pride is humbled and he receives the mercy of the Absolute Cow-herd Krishna Brahma in his perplexity and humiliation prayed to Krishna for being pardoned for his offensive conduct towards Him. Krishna was thereupon pleased to enlighten Brahma regarding His Own Absolute Personality. This dispelled the ignorance of Brahma who had supposed Krishna to be an ordinary cow-boy subject to his power.

67. Youthful Krishna kills the washerman of king Kansa, the tyranical atheist, for resisting his Absolute proprietory right to everything (irreligious ethics).

King Kansa sent Akrura to Braja to carry his command to Nanda and all his subjects there to attend the Bow-Sacrifice that he intended to celebrate at his capital Mathura. Nanda was commanded to bring with him his Sons Rama and Krishna. Kansa intended to slay Rama and Krishna when They came to Mathura. As Krishna entered the streets of Mathura He chanced to notice a washerman carrying newly washed clothing. Krishna asked the washer-man to give Him those clothes. The washerman flew into a rage and with great insolence told Krishna that He should know that he was the king's washerman and that it was sheer impertinence on His part, being a mere Cow-herd, to desire to wear the King's clothes. The Chief of the Yadus in His wrath at these insulting words of the washerman killed him on the spot. Rama and Krishna then took the best of the clothes and put them on.

The absolute right of the king to everything is up-held by the moral code of this world. But this right is subordinate to the supreme right of the Absolute Personal Godhead to all things phenomenal and transcendental. This is not recognised in practice by the rules of irreligious morality. But this can not save the victims of such disloyalty to Godhead from summary punishment when it actully leads them to actually resist the Right of the Absolute.

68. Baby Krishna smashes the laden cart by the kicke of his Feet (Elaborate learned iguorance of empiric pendants).

It is at a very early stage of progress on the path of true spiritual endeavonr that Krishna relieves His devotee by smashing completely his stock of laboriously piled empiric knowledge of the Scriptures.

When Baby Krishna learnt to turn on His sides in the manger the occasion was celebrated by Nanda by a great festival in accordance with the injunction of the Scriptures The Baby was laid to sleep in His manger under a laden cart. While the mother of the Baby was busily occupied elsewhere in attending to her guests, the Baby awoke from sleep and cried for His mother as He felt hungry. But the cries of the Baby did not reach the ears of the busy mother. The Baby began to cry and kick at the cart with His little Feet. This had the effect of up-turning and smashing the heavy-laden cart. As the cart broke with a loud sound mother Yasoda and other matrons hastened to the spot and found the crying Baby safe and gave Him suck for which He had been crying. Certain cow-boys who were on the spot informed them that the cart had been upturned by the kicks of the Baby. They could not believe, it was possible.

69. Infant Krishna pulls down to the ground the twine "Yamalarjuna trees (Early stage in the progress of theism shatters the vice of insolence due to intoxication and licentiousness)

The two sons of Kubera in a state of utter intoxication were sporting lasciviously with females in the water of a lake when Shree Narada happened to pass that way. In their insolence they did not show any respect even to the great Vaishnava. Thereupon Sree Narada pronounced his blessings in the form of a curse condemning those insolent and licentious drunkards to lose their faculty of constiousness which they were abusing and be born on the earth as trees. This brought the offenders to their senses and they prayed to Narada for his forgiveness and for telling them when and how they would be delivered from the effect of the terrible curse. Shree Narada then told them that they would grow as twin 'Yamalarjuna' trees in Brindaban and would be delivered by the Touch of Shree Krishna. In fulfilment of this condition for their expiation from the curse pronounced against them by Shree Narada Infant Krishna exhibited the Pastime of bringing down to the ground those twin 'Yamalarjuna' trees by pulling at the threshing mortar caught between the trees. The sons of Kuvera, Koobara and Manigriva, now regained their own proper condition and on expressing their gratitude to the Absolute Godhead Krishna, were permitted by Him to return to the realm of their father.

Insolence born of drunken licentiousness is completely dissipated by the service of Krishna at its early stage of progress. If a person is found to retain these forms of vice he cannot be regarded as having made any progress on the path of spiritual endeavour. The question of the degree of a vicious propensity does not arise as these vices are liable to be wholly eliminated at the threshold of spiritual life. The most inveterate drunkards and libertines are radically cured of their vicious propensities almost as soon as they begin sincerely to serve Krishna.

70. Child Krishna saves the denizens of Braja from the tyranny of Indra by holding aloft on His little finger the Gobardhana hill for affording them shelter from deluging rain (boast of high pedigree and authority ; aggrandising and imperialistic mood and habit)

Nanda had collected choice offerings for the worship of Indra. On being asked by Krishna the reason for worshipping Indra Nanda told Him that Indra sent down rain necessary for the growth of crops and grasses that sustain the life of man and beast. Krishna replied that forest people like themselves did not stand in need of the help of Indra as it was the Gobardhana Hill which provided sustenance for their flocks and so it was the right course for them to worship the Gobardhana Hill instead of Indra. Nanda was convinced of the necessity of worshipping Gobardhana Hill and did so by means of the offerings collected for the worship of Indra. This angered Indra who sent down copious showers of rain with thunder and lightning for destroying Braja. But Krishna with His little Finger held aloft the Gobardhana Hill which afforded the denizens of Braja, both man and beast, necessary shelter. Indra was humbled by his discomfiture and presenting himself before Krishna prayed for and obtained His gracious pardon.

The Gobardhana Hill is identical with Krishna. The worship of gods other than Krishna, including the worship of the Ego (of oneself) is realised to be useless by the grace of Krishna at an early stage of His service.

71. Child Krishna rescues his father Nanda from the clutches of Varuna, the sea-God (Intoxicating Habits)

Nanda Maharaj went to the Yamuna for his bath early in the morning while it was yet dark on the twelfth day of the lunar fortnight at the conclusion of his fast on the previous ekadashi day. For this irregularity the agent of Varuna, god of the sea, seized Nanda and took him to the presence of his master. On hearing of this occurrence the Child Sree Krishna made His way to the abode of Varuna and presented Himself before the god. Varuna after offering the homage of his worship to Shree Krishna released Nanda Maharaj with great honour, severely condemning the conduct of his agent for causing him trouble. The sight of the extraordinary power and magnificence of Varuna and humble worship of Sree Krishna filled Nanda Maharaj with the greatest astonishment and convinced him of the Divinity of Sree Krishna.

72. Infant Krishna kills Agha Asura (all kinds of sin and vice)

Agha Asura was the younger brother of Pootana (diplomatic duplicity) and Baka Asura (hypocrisy). All kinds of sin and vice are due to aversion to the service of Krishna. Hypocrisy and duplicity being only the show of service necessarily fail to effect the eradication of sin and vice. Once the neophyte gets rid of the aptitude for hypocrisy and duplicity in his allotted service of Krishna all his sins and vices are completely eliminated.

The Demon Agha was smitten with chagrin on finding the happy cow-boys of Braja indulging in sports of all kinds in the company of Krishna. He cherished a special grudge against Krishna as being the Slayer of his brother and sister and planned to destroy all the bliss of the denizens of Braja by killing Krishna Who was the Centre of all their happiness. Thus resolved Agha assumed the form of a huge boa-constrictor several miles long and lay on the path of the cow-boys with his jaws wide open. The unsuspecting children on coming up to the monster supposed him to be one of the peculiar natural features of the delightful sylvan scenery. They accordingly trooped merrily into the jaws of Agha followed by their calves. Krishna Who was coming behind all was aware that His companions were entering the mouth of the demon Agha and had a mind to warn them of their danger. Agha allowed all the cow-boys and calves to march through his open mouth into his belly without closing his jaws as he was anxious above everything for the destruction of Krishna. Krishna was perplexed and saddened by witnessing the entry of the boys and calves into the mouth of Agha and devised a method of killing Agha in a manner that would prevent him from doing any harm to the boys. With this object in view Krishna Himself entered the open jaws of Agha. He then caused both Himself and the cow-boys to expand in size thereby choking completely the passage of the throat of Agha. Agha was smothered to death and Krishna brought away the half dead cow-boys and calves safe from out of the belly of the monster. A trail of light issuing from the dead body of Agha hailed Krishna by a hymn of praise for delivering him from the condition of a hideous monster. The greatest of sinners is made perfectly pure by the chastisement that is inflicted by Krishna, the Absolute Personal Godhead.

73. Worship of the Sun conceived as an aspect of the indefinite Absolute by seekers of fruitive piety

The Sun is worshipped as an imaginery aspect of the Indefinite Absolute which is the source of the sustenance of all animate objects of this world. The object of the performance of pious works is conceived by his worshippers as a means for the attainment of their own happiness in this world and hereafter. As the Sun is found to be the sustaining power of healthy growth of life and the nourisher of the riches of the people which are the most coveted rewards of a pious life the quality of piety is prayed for from the object of worship. Henotheistic philosophy allows the worship on condition that the Sun is recognized as a temporary medium by his worshipper by whose worship the worshipper may ultimately merge himself in the Indefinite Absolute. This form of worship does not recognize the eternal distinctive nature of the object of worship and should be regarded for this reason as a form of atheism or ego-worship.

74. The essential substantive own potency inseparable from the Absolute Personal Godhead Vishnu (Swarup Shakti) and the perverted condemned reflected Potency (Maya Sakti)

Vishnu is served by an Infinity of powers. He is the Possessor, Proprietor and Source of all Power. It is as integral parts of the Plenary Spiritual Power of Vishnu that the infinitesimal fractions of His power can know Him. The Plenary Spiritual Power of Vishnu and Her integrated parts can know Vishnu directly ; or in other words, the Plenary Spiritual power with Her constituents is inseparably associated with Vishnu and forms the Eternally Associated Counter-whole of Vishnu. This essential Substantive own potency inseparable from the Absolute Personal Godhead Vishnu bears the Scriptural designation of Swarup Sakti.

The Swarup Shakti displays a three-fold Face to us viz., (1) Plenary spiritual Potency (Swarup Shakti proper), (2) the Marginal Potency (Tatastha Shakti) and (3) the Deluding Potency (Maya Shakti)

The plenary Spiritual potency directly manifests the Absolute as He is. The Deluding Potency presents the distorted, perverted, misleading reflected shadow of the Absolute. We, individual souls as fractional parts of the Marginal Potency are capable of presenting or misreflecting the Absolute according as we are assimilated to one or the other of the above two Potencies.

Conditioned souls by their proper nature are infinitesimal fractional particles of the Marginal Potency subject to the pulls of the Spiritual and Deluding Potencies at opposite ends. They have the free choice of desiring to be assimilated with either Potency. They cannot stay where they are. Therefore, the act of choosing to be assimilated with one or the other, is not optional for us. When we choose to be assimilated with the Deluding Potency we find ourselves in abnormal relationship with the misleading reflection of the Absolute. This is the state of worldly bondage of the conditioned soul. It is, therefore, against our really natural instinct to seek to be assimilated with the Deluding Potency. Our normal position is realised by cultivating the closest affinity with the Spiritual Potency of the Absolute.

75. Vishnu and Rudra.

Shree Rudradeva has a nature which is midway between those of the Absolute Godhead Vishnu and the dissociable particles of the Marginal Potency of Vishnu viz, the 'jeevas' (individual fallible souls). Rudra is the lord of the mundane nature of conditioned jeevas. He is also the servant of Vishnu. The nature of Shree Rudradeva is an amalgam of the tamas quality of the Deluding Potency and the attenuated spirituality of the Marginal Potency with the Plenary Quality of the Cognitive Faculty (Sambit), slightly coloured by Plenary Bliss (Hladini), of the Principle of Plenary Consciousness (chit). Rudra has a personality presenting in a degree some of the Divine Features of Absolute Godhead Vishnu but perverted by amalgamation with the destructive faculty (Tamas) of the Deluding Energy. Whereas Vishnu displays the fullness of Divinity uncontaminated by any mundane quality. The phallic of Rudra represents the masculine mundane creative faculty. Rudra in conjuction with the Deluding Energy, his consort Durga who represents the mundane feminine faculty, creates all mundane entities. Rudra is the source of the pro-creative power of Brahma, the first and greatest of jeevas.

The Barhma Samhita (5/45) compares, Vishnu to milk and Rudra to curd. Rudra's original in the Absolute Realm is Sadashiva, a Plenary Constituent of Vishnu. Rudra is the source of the 'tantras' i. e. words containing elaborations of the revealed Words. He is also the teacher of speculative Illusionism (Mayavada) as compiler of the 'tantra's for deluding those jeevas who desire to be deluded.

76. Sreedham Nabadwip is the Holy seat of Ninefold Devotion

The Nine principal modes of the pure spiritual service of the Absolute practised by perfectly pure souls have their specific locations in Shree Nabadwipdham, the Transcendental Abode of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya. Shree Nabadwipdham is made up of Nine Islands and each of those Islands is the seat of one of the Nine modes of pure devotion.

The above phraseology implies that the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya performs His Eternal Divine pastimes in His Own Eternal Transcendental Abode which bears the name of Shree Nabadwipdham. The Abode of Godhead accommodates all His eternal servants, engaged in serving Him in their own respective ways.

The transcendental Shree Nabadwipdham does not, however, manifest itself to the limited senses of conditioned souls who are averse to the unalloyed service of the Absolute Personal Godhead. Those who suppose that they can see Shreedham Nabadwip with their fleshy eyes commit the most heinous form of offence possible against the Divinity. 'Those who suppose that the Limbs of Vishnu are material, are the greatest maligners of the Divinity.'

Nine specific forms of unalloyed devotion to the Absolute Supreme Lord Shree Krishna are represented by the careers of nine great devotees.

(1) The form of submissive listening to the Transcendental Sound from the lips of a pure devotee is represented by King Parikshit.

(2) Recital of the Transcendental Sound represented by Shree Shuka Deva.

(3) Recollection of the Supreme Lord, by Shree Prahlad.

(4) Tending His Feet,—by Shree Lakshmi Devi.

(5) Worshipping Him by rituals, -by Maharaj Prithu.

(6) Making obeisance to Him,—by Shree Akrura.

(7) Doing His menial service,—by the Monkey Hanuman.

(8) Being His friend,—by Shree Arjuna.

(9) Surrendering his all to Him,—by King Bali.

77. Worship of elephant-headed Ganesh conceived as an aspect of Indefinite Absolute by seekers of riches and worldly success

Ganesha is worshipped as remover of all difficulties from the way of worldly prosperity. But as a matter of fact neither worldly prosperity nor the difficulties in its way are of a permanent character. They are considered by Henotheistic philosophy as fictitious. The worshippers of Ganesha are accordingly required by the principles of that philosophy to aim at the merging of themselves in the Indefinite Absolute as the ultimate goal. The remover of worldly difficulties is declared by the Scriptures as the creator of difficulties by his apparent favours that actually tend to prevent the sight of the personal Absolute Godhead Shree Nrisingha Deva. The sight of the Absolute can alone relieve the conditioned soul from the besetting difficulty of his hankering for worldly success, by the complete fulfilment of the spiritual hankering for pure worship of the Personal Absolute inherent in the soul.

78. Worship of Brahma the aspect of the absolute perceived as reflected and perverted by the temporary creative faculty

From the observation of the phenomena of temporary creation it is not possible to reach any definite i.e. real knowledge of the Absolute. The worshippers of Brahma mistake the temporary creative function as capable of supplying the clue to real Existence or the Absolute. But they are bound to find themselves compelled by the pressure of logical argument to accept Indefiniteness as the ultimate form of the Absolute and the merging of the speculative mind in 'nothing particular' as the grand, irrational goal of all temporary activity. Such worship is devised to lead to nihilism by the elimination of the necessity for all temporary activities which are dogmatically supposed to be the only forms of activity at all possible for us.

80. Picture Gallery (No. 1.)

The Paintings represent the transcendental forms of the Acharyas and the Forms of the Supreme Object of their worship.

81. Picture Gallery (No 2.)

This stall contains a collection of rare and old pictures illustrative of the Divine Activities of Shree Shree Radha-Govinda and of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya.

82. Utensils and articles used in the ritualistic worship of Vishnu ; Mahaprasadam and the sacred refuse of articles after they have been enjoyed by the Divinit ', various sacred emblems.

83. The acceptance by the fourth order of ascetics, of the tridant (tridanda) of renounciation at the highest class of seekers of devotion to the Absolute is supported and approved by the six Goswamins.

The mode of renunciation (Sannyas) by acceptance of the triple-staff or tridant is the original Vedic Institution. Entry into the order of holders of the tridant is specially enjoined on the Brahmans i.e. theists. The principle of the institution is pertinently described in the Bhagabatam (Bhag. 11-29-10). 'This is the soundest mode for all the Ages, approved by Myself (Shree Krishna), viz., the recognition of My Substantive Reference in all entities by all faculties of mind, speech and body.' The tridant is explained by Manu (12-10) as symbolising control of speech, mind and body respectively, the imperative necesssity of which is inuate to the judgment of the Tridandi Sannyasin.

The six Goswamins were associates and contemporaries of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya. They were authorised by Him to record His Teachings. Renunciation of the world is laid down in the writing of the six Goswamins as the indispensable pre-condition for the attainment of spiritual attachment to the Feet of the Absolute Personal Godhead Sree Krishna. The Goswamins themselves were Paramahansas but observed, all through their long careers, in their external conduct, the strictest severity of discipline enjoined on the Tridandi Sannyasin by the Scriptures.

The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya exhibited the Lila of renouncing the world at the age of twenty-five with the explicit object of following the path of Tridandi mendicant of the city of Avanti described in the eleventh skandha of the Bhagabatam 84. Tridandi Sannyasins of bygone time.

The best authenticated examples, among a host of others are those of—the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya ; Srila Gadadhar Pandit, associate of Shree Chaitanya ; Srila Madhabacharya, author of 'Mangalbhasya' commentary on the Purusha-sukta hymn, and Srila Ballabhacharyya,—both in the line of disciplic succession from Srila Gadadhar Pandit, Srila Prabodhananda Saraswati, Guru of Srila Gopal Bhatta Goswami Prabhu ; Srila Vishnu Swami, Founder-Acharyya of one of the four Vaishnava Sampradayas ; Srila Bilwamangal ; Srila Sreedhar Swami, the well-known commentator of the Bhagabatam ; etc. etc.

85. The Gaudiya Publications.

These include authentic and most carefully edited works of the former Vaishnava Acharyas and the encyclopedic writings of Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode, the pioneer of the present movement of the religion of spiritual love to the Feet of Sree Sree Radha-Krishna in its pure form as originally taught and practised by the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya and His most prominent associates and followers, together with various publications from the pen of the present Acharya or authorised by him. The collection also contains a number of rare old manuscripts.

By way of conclusion.

The Exhibition is the third of its kind organised under the supervision of the Acharya of the Gaudiya Vaishnavas, by Sree Viswa-Vaishnav-Raj-Sabha, the spiritual association of pure devotees originally founded by the six Goswamins and since revived about fifty years ago by Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode. The object of the organisers is to impart Theistic education to the masses in a popular, but thoroughly scientific, way in conformity with the Scriptural method of exposition of transcendental subjects. The method of exposition followed and enjoined by the Scriptures is the path of "Sruti" i. e. 'listening' from the lips of the Guru or pure devotee to the Divine Sound Who is identical with the Absolute personal Godhead. 'Kirtan' or 'Exposition' of the Absolute in the form of the Sound is the only function of the pure devotee of Godhead. The Exhibition is that mode of worship which is termed 'Archan' i.e. concrete or ritualistic exposition, by the Scriptures. The 'Archa' or representation of transcendental and Divine events and personalities in a visible form by means of dolls and pictures requires to be approached by the method of 'Archan' or reverential worship by all theistically disposed conditioned souls who sincerely seek for spiritual enlightenment by following the right method in approaching the Absolute.

MIDDLE PART

234 'It has reached the king's ear that there has been an excess of kirtan in Nadia.
It is the order of the king to catch and take them to him.

235 'Sribas Pandit will slip off in some direction or other ;
Utter ruin has at last overtaken us all.

236 'I had told even then, with rude bluntness Let us cast the household of Sribas into the Ganges.'

237 'You did not do it then, treating it as a joke'
You will presently witness the occurrence of our utter ruin

238 Some said, 'Why, indeed, should it affect us at all
We will have Sribas bound and hand him over to anybody who demands'.

239 Thus ran the rumour from town to town,—
'The king's boats are comming to catch the Vaishnava

240 All Vaishnava community heard these words.
They subdued their fears by the recollection of Govinda.

241. ,Whatsoever Krishnachandra ordains must needs be true;
As the selfsame Lord ever exists how can there be fear from any wicked person?'

242 Sribas Pandit was most open-minded;
He had a firm faith in whatever he happened to hear.

243 In view of the fact that it was the realm of the Yavanas he grew afraid in his mind.
Gaurachandra was apprised of the heart or His devotee.

244 The Lord Himself had come, this the devotees did not know.
The Son of Sri Shachi now began-to inform them of it.

245 The Supreme Lord Biswambhar moved about without fear;

The God of Love surpassed the beauty of everything in the three world.
246 He had His entire Body anointed with the sweet-scented sandal Paste;
His lotus Eyes shone beautiful and so did the crimson nether Lip;
247 The beautiful Tresses adorned His face charming as the fullmoon ;
The sacrificial thread enhanced the beauty of His Shoulders and of His exquisite Form; 248 He was clad in excellent apparel ; His nether Lip was tinged with the betel.
The Lord made His way to the bank of the Bhagirathy in a merry mood.
249 All performers of previous good deeds were gladened by the Sight :
All wicked persons felt a dejection of spirit on seeing Him.
250 "He feels no fear, but He must have heard the terrible rumour;
He moves about in the town as a Prince":
251 Said another," Brother, I have understood;
pause a little and you will see.
All this that you notice is only a device for the flight."
252 Biswambhar looked about Him without any indication of fear;
There lay before Him the beautiful current of the Ganges and charming sloping bank.
253 He saw a herd of cows grazing on the meadows on the margin of the stream ;
They came on bellowing for drinking the water.
254 Some of them ran on all sides with their tails erect;
Some engaged in fight: ; some rested on the ground; some drank the water.
255 On seeing this the Lord said repeatedly with a thundering voice
Amid deafening ejaculations,"Myself am
He; I, indeed, am the Lord'.
256 In this fashion He sped to the house of Sribas.
"What dost fellow, Sribas ?" He demanded
with a thundering voice.
257 Srinibas was worshipping Nrisingha in his room,
The Lord repeatedly kicked at the door.
258 "Whom dost thou worship, Whom dots thou meditate ?
Behold even Him Whom thou worshipst here before thee".
259 Sribas Pandit now had the vision of a burning fire ;
His exclusive mood was interrupted and he looked about him.
260 He saw that Biswambhar was seated in the posture of the warrior.
Four-handed, with the conch, disc, club and lotus in His four arms.
261 He was in the act of roaring like the soul of the maddened Lion ;
He was giving forth thunlering ejaculations and making a sound with His left armpit.
262 As he beheld this Sight the limbs of Sribas quaked ;
Srinibas was struck dumb and could articulate nothing.
263 The Lord called with a great voice.
"Fellow, Srinibas
Dost thou not know so long about My Appearance ?
264 "By thy loud samkirtan and the thundering calls of Nara
I have come with all My servitors, quitting Vaikunta.
265 "Thou livest unconcerned without recognising Me ;
Nara has gone to Santipur abandoning Me.

Circumambulation of Sri Brajamandal

HIS Divine Grace Paramahansa Sree Sreemad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj, the spiritual Head of the Madhva-Gaudiya Vaishnava Community following Sri Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, has been pleased to invite co-operation of all persons of every nationality, irrespective of caste, creed, colour, age or sex in the devotional function of circumambulation of the Holy Sphere of Braja (Sri Brajamandal) in the Footsteps of the Supreme Lord Sri Krishna Chaitanya Who exhibited the Lila of performing the circumambulation of Sri Brajamandal during the winter of 1514 A.D.

The narrative of the circumambulation performed by Sri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu is found in the Charitamrita. After His return to Puri from the South in 1514 A.D. the Supreme Lord wished to visit Sree Brindaban. He started from Puri in the Autumn of the same year in the beginning of Aswin (Sept-Oct) with a single attendant Balabhadra Bhattacharyya to accompany Him during the journey on foot through the forest of Jharikhanda (Orissa Garhjats and Choto Nagpur). Sree Chaitanya reached Mathura towards the end of the month of Kartik (early November) via Benares and Prayag (Allahabad). He set out on the circumambulation of Sree Brajamandal early in Agrahayana (middle of November). He completed the tour of the Sphere of Braja before Magh (Jany) was far advanced when He began the return journey to Puri via Prayag (Allahabad). It is in commemoration of the Leela of the Supreme Lord that His Divine Grace has been pleased to undertake to guide the devotees round the Sphere of Braja about the middle of ensuing November (beginning of Agrahayana).

About seven years back in 1925 His Divine Grace was pleased to perform the circumambulation of the Sphere of Gauda (Gauda-mandal), identical with Sree Brajamandal, in the company of the devotees of Sree Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. He has instituted the Annual Circumambulation of Sreedham Nabadwip, where Lord Chaitanya made His Appearance in 1486 A. D., by all the devotees of the Supreme Lord by the method of the Sankirtan procession since 1918 A. D. These preliminary activities have naturally led up to the Circumambulation of the Sphere of Braja that is going to be undertaken by His Divine Grace in the company of all the devotees during ensuing November and December.

It is not possible for a conditioned soul to obtain any access to the transcendental realm of the Eternal Pastimes of Sree Krishna except by the causeless mercy of the pure devotee of the Supreme Lord and under his guidance. In other words only one who is himself a whole-time bonafide servant of the Personal Absolute Sree Krishna has the power, by the Will of the Supreme Master, of enabling the fortunate person of this world to traverse, by faithfully following in his foot-steps, the highest spheres of the absolute realm.

The Transcendental Sphere of Gauda is identical with that of Braja. All who seek to benefit by the function must be prepared to always bear in mind this basic principle of the whole process. Sree Krishna Chaitanya is identical with Sree Krishna. Sree Krishna Chaitanya is Sree Krishna Himself in the Eternal Role of the Supreme Teacher of His Own Service by His Own Example as the Ideal Servant of Himself. Unless one submits to be taught by Sree Krishna Chaitanya as to how Sree Krishna is to be served one has no access to the spiritual plane of His eternal service. Those who are disinclined to serve the Supreme Teacher by the practice of complete internal detachment from all worldly activities, as enjoined by all the revealed Scriptures, are never eligible for the service of the Absolute Divine Person. To those who are attached to the things of this world in any way the real Nature of the Consort hood of Godhead refuses to reveal itself. Submission to the absolute guidance of the bonafide sadhu is, therefore, the indispensable condition for the realisation of the true nature of the spiritual realm of Braja and of the Transcendental Pastimes of Sree Krishna.

Sree Krishna appeared in this world in this Kali Yuga wearing the Beauty and Mood of His Own Eternally Associated Counter-Moiety, Sree Radhika, in order to make available the highest service of Braja to the graceless atheists of this Iron Age who are exclusively addicted to barren materialistic speculations. The only way in which the whole race of the empiricists and their willing dupes may hope to get out of the terrible slough of their elaborate ignorance, is by following the only method of earnestly calling upon the Transcendental Name of Krishna, identical with Himself, spontaneously manifesting His Appearance on the lips of His bonafide devotee. This is the sum and substance of the teaching of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya. This is the Divine Dispensation of the Kali Yuga, the hidden secret of the Scriptures.

The eternal religion was first taught by Sree Krishna to Brahma, the first of all created beings. Brahma communicated the same to Sree Narada who in his turn made it known to Sree Vyasadeva. Sree Vyasadeva elaborated the teaching in the Bhagabatam. Sree Shuka learnt the meaning of the Bhagabatam from his father Sree Vyasadeva and recited the same for the edification of Maharaja Parikshit during the week preceding his foretold end by the bite of Takshaka. The Bhagabatam was subsequently recited by Sree Suta who was present at the recital of Sree Shuka, to sixty thousand Rishis who met in a great assembly for the purpose at Naimisharanya.

But in course of time the Bhagabata religion in its pure form was forgot by the people of North India where Sree Krishna had manifested His Transcendental Activities towards the close of the Dwapara Age and where the theme of the Bhagabatam was revealed to Sree Vyasadeva. We have to travel down the ages to find the revival of the eternal religion in the far South of India when, in the twelfth century of the Christian Era, Sree Madhvacharyya taught the worship of Boy-Krishna. This form of the worship of Sree Krishna developed into the first offshoot of the realisation of the full loving service of the milk-maids of Braja in Sree Madhabendra Puri, a successor of Sree Madhva in the line of disciplic descent. Sree Krishna Chaitanya recognised the superiority of the system of Sree Madhva by exhibiting the Pastime of receiving initiation in to the order of Sree Madhvacharyya from Sree Ishwar Puri, the disciple and spiritual successor of Sree Madhabendra Puri.

But the Theme of the Amorous Pastimes of Sree Krishna in Braja had been revealed to a few eminent devotees before, and in anticipation of,the Advent of Sree Chaitanya. The Poets Sree Jayadeva, Sree Vidyapati, Sree Billwamangal Thakur and Sree Chandidas had sung the Amours of Sree Sree Radha-Krishna with much fuller details than is to be found in an explicit form in the Bhagabatam. All this had, however, been only a preparation for the real Sun-Rise. The Advent of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya was necessary in order to make available to all persons of this world real access to the fullest meaning of the Pastimes of Braja. The Career of Sree Krishna Chaitanya offers the only exposition of the teaching of the Bhagabatam in the form that is practically intelligible to the people of the Iron Age. The Transcendental Career of Sree Chaitanya is again unintelligible except in terms of the activities of His constituents.

His Divine Grace Paramhansa Paribrajakacharyya Sree Sreemad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj is the tenth Acharyya in the line of succession, of the spiritual teachers of the only eternal religion, from Sree Krishna Chaitanya. He is the ninth in the line of spiritual descent from Sree Rupa Goswami who is the original exponent in a clear and systematic form of the function of pure loving spiritual service in all its gradations, having been taught the same for the purpose by Sree Chaitanya Himself.

Meanwhile from a period long anterior to the time of the Advent of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the North of India had been the scene of various non-theistic movements. The Elevationism and Idealism of the different philosophical schools professing allegiance to the Vedas and the atheistical cults of Jainism and Buddhism, specially the former, had brought about the almost total suppression of the Theistic tradition embodied in the worship of Vishnu the supremacy of which had been an admitted fact at least from as early as the age of composition of the oldest hymns of the Rig Veda. Mathura became, as the result of these later movements, the chief centre of the non-theistic propaganda.

The revival of the Vishnuvite religion came from the South and was carried on by the schools founded by Sree Vishnuswami, Sree Nimbarka, Sree Ramanuja and Sree Madhva respectively. The Alvars, who had also preached pure Theism, appeared in the South from a period as early as the Christian Era. Sree Vishnuswami belonged to the third century before Christ.

The Vishnuvite revival was opposed by an attempt to justify polytheistic or henotheistic worship by the formulation of an impersonal interpretation of the Brahma Sutra which gathers up in a systematic form the Theism of the Upanishads. This school of non-distinctive cognitive Monism, which had a very early origin, attained its climax, also in the South, at the hands of Sri Shankaracharyya. This school gradually obtained the position of popularity by its alliance with the worship of the plurality of gods that prevailed among the masses. The alliance that was thus established between the Upanishads and popular worship of the various races inhabiting the vast country was needed at the time for preserving the existence of the Vedic tradition against the open and bitter hostility of the Jains and Buddhists. It was, therefore, something more than merely patriotic service that was rendered to the country by Sri Shankaracharyya.

But the evil effects of the work of Sri Shankara and the Monists who followed him did not take long to manifest itself. The henotheistic religion sanctioned by the monistic interpretation of the Scriptures proved the most formidable obstacle in the way of the establishment of the pure Theism of the Upanishads rendered otherwise practicable by the defeat of Buddhism and Jainism by the politico-religious policy of Shankara. The henotheists after the time of Shankara were not at all prepared to admit the supremacy of the transcendental worship of Vishnu. They, on the other hand, showed a preference for the worship of Rudra as director of the mundane destructive Energy. This preference had, indeed, been forced upon Shri Shankaracharyya by the necessity of adopting a show of conciliatory attitude towards the similar but deeper Nihilism of the Buddhist cult and the Ego-worship of the Jaina creed.

Sri Krishna Chaitanya accordingly designates Shankara as a veiled Buddhist. Sri Ramanuja and Sri Madhva condemned the teachings of Sri Sankara in the most uncompromising terms. After the age of peril was over the system improvised by Shankara to meet the crisis was interpreted by his followers in a way which was not in accordance with the real purpose of Shankara although it was in seeming accord with the superficial sense of his writings. But it should be possible to read between the lines and separate the temporary but, under the circumstances, useful portion from the permanent sections of his writings. It is possible to allot his proper place to Shankara among the exponents of the Scriptures in the light of the teachings of Sri Chitanya Mahaprbhu.

The fact is that there cannot be a really perfect synthesis till the highest form of service is unreservedly admitted as the only goal of all spiritual endeavour. The undeveloped theism of the pre-Bhagabata Schools naturally failed to solve all doubts and difficulties. The fully developed Theism of Sri Chaitanya provides the golden bridge by which it should be possible for all to safely cross all the acrimonious religious controversies that have prevailed in different ages and countries. The fullest exposition of the Pastimes of Sri Brindaban offered by the transcendental career and teachings of Sri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu provide the only complete solution of all religious differences and difficulties that have proved to this day the source of all the miseries of this world.

His Divine Grace has accordingly invited the co-operation of all persons, irrespective of caste, creed, colour, age or sex, with an unprejudiced mind, in the devotional function of the circumambulation of the Holy Sphere of Braja for being enabled thereby to realise the true nature of the perfect and universal form of the most intimate service of the Personal Absolute Sri Krishna.

Teachings of Shree Rupa Goswami

(Discourse at an interview with Dr. Magnus Hirschfield of Berlin on 18. 9. 31)

HIS Divine Grace on being approached with the question, "What are the main features of your teachings", was pleased to speak out in reply for about an hour. The words of His Divine Grace's reply as far as secured are given below.

"We are agents who require help from outside to sustain our existence. The help that is coming to us at present is inadequate. Inadequacy is the normal condition of the present atmosphere. By examination by our rationalistic principle we require more help than our friends offer. We have five senses to pick up the knowledge of the present world. As seekers of the Truth we require that we should be endowed with more knowledge. Our thirst is not quenched by the ordinary knowledge deducible from sense-perception available from the empiric professors.

This impulse leads us to enquire as to how we can have more knowledge than can be had here.

We are also found to believe that there is agency who is not furnishing the requisite knowledge because we are proving ineligible for admission to the plane of adequate knowledge. This is the source of the theistic conception regarding necessity for the existence of the Absolute Knowledge as distinct from the knowledge of apparent truths. Hence also the conception of the necessity of the coming of the special agent of the Absolute Knowledge as our thirst is never to be quenched by the supply of the agents of empiric knowledge who alone are ordinarily available here.

We should seek for the fountain-head of all knowledge. If we do not do so we find ourselves poorly supplied. Our capacity for retention of knowledge also leaves us when we choose to be conversant with local, temporary, apparent truths. The symbolical deceptive knowledge is presented when we neglect to seek the connecting thread of all knowledge. Time comes when our physical equipment parts from all its seeming possessions.

The Theistic conception refers to a Fountain-Head where Knowledge is Full, Ever-existing, can impart incessant Bliss. We are pleasure-seekers through the senses. The empiric view does not offer the facility to supply us with incessant Bliss.

There must be a Theistic view. We have to scrutinize the Position of Absolute Knowledge, Existence and Bliss required by us. We must seek for the place where the Absolute Knowledge, Existence and Bliss is to be had.

In Mathematics we get glimpse of the fourth dimension. We are practically restricted to the third dimension by our senses except for a very hazy idea of direction only. Unless the Fountain-Head could be traced we cannot cease from seeking or from being debarred and led astray from Knowledge that supplies an enduring basis for true existence. We are thus compelled by the very direction of all our activities to seek after things which should be called Absolute. Or, to sum up, as we pass our days in the non-Absolute region we should have the impulse to have access to the transcendental region where these dimensions are an inclusion and nothing an exclusion.

If we are not to have Full Knowledge, Un-ending Life, Un-interrupted Bliss, this life would be pessimistic existence. We shall then submit to be born, grow and pass away without tackling the inadequacies of the phenomena.

We should trace the Fountain-Head, the Real Cause from Whom all these have emanated, not being content with the Agnosticism that prevails more or less at present.

We should seek for more knowledge than we get from our senses. We hope that some clue of the transcendental world should be received by us through a particular process unknown to men with sensuous habits who are busy with phenomena only, concocting many ideas about the future life. Some subscribe to metempsychosis, some to this only life, for completing all preparations for peace at the long end. These varying opinions do not satisfy for the reason that they are secular. The tentative solutions offered by Speculative Philosophy are tainted by this radical defect. They give particular views that do not satisfy, being based upon mundane condition investigated through the senses.

The Absolute Knowledge possessed of all Knowledge, Existence, Bliss, can give all that we are in need of. We are not in a position to advance one step beyond these three dimensions. We are restricted to the partial view. We cannot get the whole impression of a globular sphere at a glance. Some turning or transformation of the angle of vision is required for the purpose of getting the full view. We get the view of only a quarter of the all-round. We see 180° at a time. If we require to see at our backs we have to turn our head to that direction. Then half the sphere is exposed.

At a glance we see only a quarter of the sphere of existence. So we are lacking in simultaneous grasp of the whole idea. We should not, therefore, turn Agnostics etc. When we fail to have the full view fully at one time we should know that our determination of self is but an infinitesimal part of the Fountain-Head from Whom many things have emanated. We should on the contrary, trace Him from where deviation is not possible. Challenging part is to have no lien to deviate from the Fountain-Head.

Any deviation is only part and parcel of phenomena, not the whole thing. The immanent and transcendent are ignored. We engage in one thing with the whole attention, but the exposition of the thing gives a partial idea. If the attributions are eliminated the original thing is to be sought in which many things are incorporated. Incorporation itself gives very little of the whole Integer. The Absolute Truth is thus defined. 'The Absolute Truth reserves the right of not being exposed to our senses.' Our senses fail to get at the whole thing at a time.

Our brain cannot accommodate Fullness, Ever-existence beginning or ending of time. So the Position of the Absolute should be traced in the Person of the Absolute. The Absolute was in the beginning, is posting every present phenomenon that will disturb the process of transformation and will destroy the phenomenal position. All knowledge will be distinctive and will destroy and put a stop to these things.

But that thing should be traced out. We should acquire the conception of the thing through the senses at present. Sound gives impressions of objects at a distance, like abstracted ideas from the concrete. Abstract ideas like charity etc., in a subtle form tend to captivate the brain in favour of perception and conception of things through the senses. Sound conveying impressions of phenomena requires corroboration from the four other senses and the mind as well.

We reject sounds whose validity is required to be testified to by the other senses. The transcendental sound has got a distinctive character. The sound from the fourth dimension received by the ear has got a special potency to clear out all restricted ideas and to include everything of phenomena. Present sound is meant to be restricted to the third dimension, to be transcended by the fourth and higher dimensions. The transcendental sound clears out all impediments that block the path of the sound.

The idea of immanence cannot be secured unless we break down the molecules. Unless we break them we cannot go to the other side, transcend time and space. That sound will give a clear signal, a free path, by which we can make some progress towards the Absolute. That sound should be received through instruction. It should not be confounded. We should undo what we have received hitherto. There will be no loss. The distinctive feature of that sound is that it should incorporate all reciprocal objects along with the sound. That sound should not be neglected for the distinctive reference of coming from there as it will include all and should be coming with all sorts of potencies to clear out all sorts of un-aesthetic and wrong impressions received from our aptitude to enjoy the world which should not hamper our progress towards the Full and Eternal.

We are only showing our natural aptitude and should not be denied. We should be lending our ear to receive the transcendental sound. We should stop all our senses for the time being and receive the things and not merely their attributions. The transcendental sounds are given us by the Fount-in-Head Who can take the initiative. He is not 'It.' He is to be targetted as Male-Moiety of the things, of the subservient phenomena. The transcendental sound should not lack any part of the Integer.

The transcendental sound is equipped with All-potency. As the potency of sound is restricted we find diverse existences in different things and are not in a position to receive things in full. Partial conceptions also make us forget. We should shake off all other ideas and thoughts for the time being. When we receive the transcendental sound from the transcendental region the messenger will not bother to impart any worldly ideas as the living sound is full, including all words and ideas of this world. We expect the Absolute Language flowing into the ear which will include all languages. If we behave otherwise that sound cannot communicate itself to us.

The transcendental sound has got innumerable potencies. It has power of delegating power to us to receive all of it. When it comes from an unknown region it should first inject such power to our feeble receiving instrument as would enable us to welcome it. We must not show a challenging or rejecting attitude as we are liable to do towards advice gratis.

We should know that the transcendental sound has the necessary potencies that require to be vested in us, all sorts of puddings and consumptions, to enable us to neglect the other senses. Our eyes, nose, etc., will be regulated by that sound. This is not hypnotism or mesmerism which give anthropomorphic ideas. These are altogether beyond the human scope. They should charm and transform the human. They should not depend for any help from the senses or empiricists restricted to their poor rationalistic expedition only. Such help cannot be effecting, can only hamper, when transcendental sounds will be flowing into our ears from an agent who will inspect whether we require mundane supplies.

The transcendental sound will carry all the requisites necessary for receiving the sound. We should simply patiently wait through the whole of our life. The transcendental may come through a human and all other agents, if we are ardent, if we require his help, if we unconditionally surrender everything acquired by the empiric method, if we dismantle the constructions accrued during the empiric period. If we do not dismantle them there will be no elegibility for receiving the transcendental sound.

The transcendental sound will be coming out of the Initiative Faculty of the Unknown. He is precluding us from the sound. Whatever submits to our senses are Nature's product. When we engage our senses we fail to make progress because we have not dismantled all culture, even all aesthetic culture of this world. If we are desirous of catching the transcendental sound we shall be prepared for the time being to suspend all sensuous activities and wait for the transcendental sound to include all.

If we ignore the Cause of Causes we miss the opportunity to receive the transcendental sound. As present people are engaging in materialistic activities we wish some sort of elementary culture to be introduced to make them progress in the line of the full existence. Spiritualists in every part of the world are busy in threshing the subject by deferring wrongly to the mundane reference. True spiritualists speak out all to persons who are incredulous. This incredulity will be slowly removed by the transcendental sound. If the speaker utters anything mundane it will not lead to the transcendental position.

If we are fortunate to receive the sound that is beyond the human scope we should listen to it. God-head sends down His messengers in symbolised figures to give us if we are at all really sanguine, ideas of the Absolute. It is only then that we would be enabled to make any progress. This fortune is now denied to all who have love for transformable things.

Persons desirous of having the view of the whole at a glance should have their access through the transcendental sound only and not through the senses. The distinctive feature of that sound is that it carries all sorts of information and potencies that would give us facilities to welcome the sound. Those who neglect to attend to that sound would be unmindful of the Fountain-Head. They would be engaging in the plight of intellectual activities in this material space that cannot accommodate spirit. They would be apt to carry gross things there to enrich that region. But the lanterns are not necessary for seeing the Sun.

The lanterns are useful for seeing things in the dark. It will only encumber and obstruct if we carry the knowledge and acquisition of this world for progress in that region. We may be very simple in our habits, may be very poor in our linguistic equipment, but when the transcendental sound reaches our ear that will clear up all dirts of our ear accumulated by previous receiving of the mundane sound. This will be secured in the company of persons who are sanguine to restrict their whole activity to the transcendental process. If we pay some fee to the scoffing atheists, to the professors of empiric wisdom, to the builders of the temporal structures, etc., these partial donations in exchange will not give us the whole thing. We should not think of bartering at all. The transcendental sound does not require any earthly postages for its communication.

We must not neglect the transcendental sound freely transmitted by the agents of the Absolute. We find ourselves interested in many things that are not known to us. The doctors do not know the remedies of many diseases. We require no monetary value in exchange for transmitting our message. We live a simple life and require little help from others in the way of scientific facilities. As we have got our ear we can receive the transcendental sound and vocalise the same to any intelligent person who may hear us.

This will not be accessible to persons who have very little culture, who are engrossed in sensuous engagements. But we expect the intelligent section to make some preparatory progress towards a region of which we are essentially in need. In these days of materialism we are simply puzzled by these high-thinking views. We are trying to do much to enrich the human intellect. But we are startled when we are told to look beyond. This is silly.

We want to rouse up the true mentality of the civilized world for requiring help. The secular help cannot appease our hunger. The transcendental help can. We intelligent people should receive the transcendental sound. We are now vitally concerned in this as every one is engaged in exploring ways and means for getting rid of our present unbearable inadequacies. We should spare a portion of our time to receive those sounds.

I am too poor in language to convey to you what I have to say. I do not know whether I could give any little idea of what I want to.

Some Impressions of the Exhibition of Theistic Education

(By an Eyewitness).

THE Exhibition of Theistic Education organised, under Guidance of the present Acharyya of the Gaudiya Vaishnavas who follow the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya in His interpretation of the theory and practice of the service of the Absolute enjoined by all revealed Scriptures of the world, by the Gaudiya Math of Calcutta, remained open to the public every day from 7 A.M. to 10 P.M. from the 6th to the 23rd of September, 1931.

No gate-fee was charged and no persons were disallowed on the pleas of caste, or colour. It is a reasonable estimate that in course of eighteen days no less than a million of persons obtained a view of the exhibits. Pamphlets in Bengali and English were circulated at a triffling price describing the principles demonstrated by the arrangement of every separate stall aggregating eighty-five, devoted to the exposition of purely spiritual subjects selected from the whole body of the Scriptures. Notwithstanding the phenomenal rush of spectators of all classes and conditions there was no untoward incident during the whole period of display. These details may serve to convey to the reader some ideas of the phenomenal external success of this wonderful attempt to provide truly Theistic education on a popular scale by an intelligible scientific method. The English pamphlet has been published in this journal. It will give the reader an idea of the inner meaning of the demonstrations.

It may be asked if this inner meaning was also accessible to the casual observer who was hardly in a position to devote much of his time to the close examination of such a large number of stalls. To the average visitor in most cases the demonstrations presented an opportunity of going over ground more or less familiar. The visitors had to be content with a cursory glance at the brief labels, announcing the subject matter of the stalls. Those who had perused the pamphlets or were led round the stalls by the guides who explained the subjects, could of course compare the system of faith set forth by the Exhibition with their own previous convictions and arrive at diverse opinions regarding the Exhibitions in accordance with their different individual temperaments. But none of these results meet even the minimum expectations of the organisers.

The Acharyya teaches the Absolute Truth. He does not want the spectators to regard the Exhibition through their erring senses under the guidance of their erring minds. Neither does he want the visitors to speculate on what they see in any way that they like. He wants them to be prepared to experience what is absolutely inaccessible to their present senses and mental outlook. Any person who visits the Exhibition in accordance with the intention of the Acharyya, is likely to find himself on definite track of the Absolute.

This is the sum and substance of what the pamphlets have to say. Neither the pamphlet, nor the exhibits are claimed to be able to reveal their real incoming to the irreverent or sceptical critic who is not troubled by any diffidence of his capacity to approach the Absolute. To such fully eclipsed particles of the Marginal Spiritual potency of the Absolute the gates of the realm of the Truth ever remain completely shut.

The transcendental nature of the Exhibition organised by the bonafide Acharyya may win universal recognition only when the fury of the empiric campaign against Truth will have abated a little allowing the average unsophisticated person an opportunity of listening, without decided bias, to the words of the transcendental messenger. All persons,—children, youngmen and old men,—will then be in a position to understand that it is nobody's interest to offer the sceptical attitude to the messenger of the Truth. The proper function of scepticism should be exercised only towards the pseudo-teachers of the ephemeral and hypothetical. The day when this will be generally recognised may not be so far distant as avowed opponents of the Truth are pleased to imagine.

If the proper attitude of reverential submissive attention is offered to the words of the pure devotee of Godhead the child will be as much benefitted as grown-up men. This is because the appeal of the devotee is made to the soul who is not hampered by any conditions of physical or mental existence. The awakening of the soul is brought about as soon as the mind and body stand out of the way of the soul.

This real significance of the spiritual Exhibition manifested to the view of erring humanity by the causeless grace of the Acharyya is dawning slowly upon the awakened conscience of the people. A universal remorse is being slowly experienced for the previous neglect of the rare opportunity, provided, after ages of travail brought on by deliberate sin, for the complete redemption of all souls by the unsolicited grace of the Best-beloved of Krishna.

It was, indeed, an unwelcome surprise to the race of iconoclasts who pretend to be worshippers of the impersonal, to be told by the Acharrya in such an effective way that there can be no such thing as conditioned existence except as a condemned derivative of the Absolute who is the one real existence, the unwilling source of all mundane aberrations, supremely concrete in His Activities and willing to manifest Himself to the view of mundane spectators, who are anxious to approach Him in the spirit of service, in the figures of corresponding concrete mundane entities, for the redemption of those who submit to be saved by Grace, but retaining in all His purity His own Spiritual potency. This Spiritual Event of the Descent of the Transcendental on the mundane plane is brought about by the agency of His bonafide devotee in furtherance of the Divine Will.

The Theistic Exhibition differs from the mere lifeless, symbolical representation of the realm of the Absolute. If an empiric scholar of Srimad Bhagabatam and Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita conceives the idea of conveying the meaning of the Scriptures by means of scenic representations the result will be lifeless and ineffectual and will never impart any actual spiritual experience. To go round such a show may be effective in the empiric sense which is only calculated to delude. Regarded from the point of view of the empiric scholar the Theistic Exhibition organised under the guidance of the Acharyya may appear to be on a level with his own futile performance. It is possible even for such a deluded person, if only he is inclined to pay his unbiased attention to the words of the Acharyya explaining the truths revealed by the Exhibition, to be convinced as far as his limited powers of understanding allow, of the categorical difference between the spiritual activity of the devotee of Godhead and the mundane performances of a conditioned soul who has no real access to the Divinity.

The bonafide Acharyya does nothing that has not been already accepted by Krishna. This must needs be so by reason of his perfect serving disposition, his possession of the requisite spiritual faculties and his constant responsive communion with the Absolute personal Godhead. These conditions make all activities of the Saviour Acharyya possess the full redemptive efficacy. No particle of the activities of the bonafide Acharyya is less than the manifestation of the living All-perfect, notwithstanding the appearance of mundane grossness that his activities choose to display to the view of those pedants who are utterly averse to the service of the Absolute.

This may be puzzling and appear as even self-contradictory to the judgment of atheistical ignorance. But to one who allows the full play of his own rational faculty the categorical nature of the difference between the Divine performances of the bonafide Acharyya and the mischievous antics of the graceless atheist must be as clear as the day. The malicious imitations of spiritul performances and criticisms of the doings of the Acharyya by the enemies of Godhead, are calculated to lead astray only those unfortunate persons who are themselves deliberately indisposed to exclusively serve the Absolute Truth by means of all their faculties.

Another equally unwelcome surprise was offered by the Exhibition to all those self-satisfied hypocritical sectarians who maliciously pretend to honestly despair of any final reconciliation of the diversity of religious opinions that have been disturbing the peace of the world for all time. The Exhibition offered a complete synthesis of the teachings of all revealed Scriptures of the world. Had this been otherwise the bonafide candidate for the service of the Absolute would have the most cogent reason for disbelieving the spiritual character of the performance. All the Acharyyas (practising teachers of the commanding Word of Godhead) belong to one and the category of unconditional servants of the Divinity. They are the perfect living mediums for the full manifestation of the Will of the One Supreme Lord to the clouded vision of conditioned souls. They do not stand in the way of one another. It is the pseudo-followers of the bonafide Acharyyas and hypocritical admirers of false prophets who alone are obstinately bent upon detecting differences where none can really exist. Mankind should be wiser after their long bitter experience of the tactics of these eternal dupes of the Deluding Energy of Godhead, and cultivate the wholesome disinclination if continuing to remain the willing victims of these enemies of God and man as they have undoubtedly been proved by their activities in the ages gone by. The progress of the race in the direction of true rationalism is on its trial and may it constantly pray for the unambiguous mercy of the Supreme Lord, manifested by all the bonafide Acharyyas, to be delivered from the eternal plight.

The familiar dodge of all confirmed sectarians is to represent their own narrownesses as the only non-sectarianisms. They should be able to convince nobody except persons who are deliberately pledged to sectarianism against the dictates of their free reason. The sectarianisms of the present age represent both eccsiastical and empiric varieties. It will be necessary from the seeker of the Truth to steer carefully between these modern Scyllas and Charibdyses Real non-sectarianism admits the distinctive Name, Form, Quality, Activity and serving personalities as the eternal paraphernalia of the Absolute. The impersonalists have been dogmatically preaching that non-sectarianism must be smothered to death by being deprived of all its distinctive features which are of the essence of the Absolute. This counsel for depriving the Absolute is prefered by those unfortunate delirious persons who are prepared to commit suicide to avoid being restored to their natural healthy state. It has never been possible for any person to subsist on the mere abstraction of nothing particular, the goal that is proposed by the empiric impersonalists of the different camps.

Transcendental Geography

THE praises of the Holy Land of Bharatvarsa are sung by the Scriptures but are liable to be grossly misunderstood by empiric commentators. It has often been supposed by such persons that the Holy Land means the Land which has got sacred associations for the reason that certain ritualistic practices of religion had been performed in the country by the former generations. This interpretation keeps the Land separate from the functions and regards the function itself as having been performed on the material soil of the country. If the Scriptures are studied with an open mind it will be found that they never intend to convey any such materialistic ideas. They plainly mean that the Land itself is as sacred as the function and that both possess the same transcendental spiritual nature.

It is our purpose to study the implications of these clear statements of the Scriptures. Gya, Benares, Prayag (Allahabad) and Mathura are most important landmarks in the religious Geography of the country. But before we proceed further it is necessary to make it clear to the reader that the transcendental has nothing to do with the material. The mundane tract of land bearing the name of India is not the spiritual realm in which Krishna's Pastimes are eternally displayed. So it is not a national predilection that should be suspected in the attempt to arrive at the scientific explanation of the Scriptural statements bearing on the Holy Land of India. The utmost concession that can be allowed to the Indian national sentiment is that the Land of India has been favoured by the manifestation of the Pastimes of Krishna and that the record of the Event has also come down to us intact. In this respect India may be considered as a specially privileged Land in the whole World. But because the Sun happens to be shining on India at this moment India need not, therefore, be regarded as possessing the monopoly of the light which it is privileged to receive from the only common Source of all illumination of this earth. The sages of India were, indeed, privileged to disseminate the light which they received from the transcendental Source and in this sense the Land, as having been blessed by the feet-dust of the servants of the Lord, may be rightly regarded as Holy Land.

But there is also really such a thing as the transcendental realm and this realm has also got its specific divisions constituting its various constituent spheres. These are part and parcel of the transcendental events and descend to the plane of this world when the Divine Events manifest their visible appearance.

The sacred streams of the Ganges and the Yamuna correspond to the two correlated paths of reverential regulated service and confidential spontaneous free service of the Divinity respectively. Prayag stands on the confluence of the two streams and marks the parting of the ways. Mathura, situated on the Yamuna, is the centre of the realm of the non-conventional intimate service of Krishna. Benares which is located on the Ganges farther down than Prayag, is the head-quarters of non-distinctive empiric idealism. The empiricists (jnanins) of Benares seek to control the activities of the peoples located on the lower course of the Ganges who are given to fruitive work (worldly activity). Gya is the centre of fruitive activity. The stream of Karmanasa (destroyer of fruitive activity) flows between Benares and Gya. After fruitive work is given up on the realisation of its worthlessness from the point of view of empiricism, or knowledge born of experience, a person still continues in an undecided mood to move for a time along the accustomed path of regulated service. But a decision is sought to be forced upon him at Prayag. He is there offered the definite choice of pursuing the regulated course or embracing the freedom of non-conventional spontaneous service. If one persists in his former course he will lose himself in the barren heights of the Himalayas to be absorbed in the Absolute. The regulated service can have a real meaning only when it is a preparation for the spontaneous service of Godhead. No rational scheme ever provides a perpetual condition of tutelage as the normal state. When empiricism fails to realise its own essentially probationary nature after it has been given a fair chance it quickly degenerates into a rooted aversion for the service of Godhead. Above Prayag it is not necessary, nay it is positively harmful, to pursue the very course that is enjoined by the Scriptures when a person is voyaging up the Ganges for reaching Prayag.

Persistence in the regulated course ends logically into a slackening followed by the final loss of all individual fruitive activity. The point of stagnation is reached at Benares. Thereafter the seeker is in urgent and immediate need of finding a new standing ground. This need is real and is capable of proper satisfaction. But he will not get any help in this direction from his empiric or canonical advisers. He should now seek the guidance of the pure devotee of Krishna. His passage of the Ganges to Benares should have enabled him to impress this need on his mind. If he has performed the voyage in a mechanical way he will be the confirmed slave of the disposition of inertia produced by his past thoughtless activities. Nevertheless Sree Rupa awaits at Prayaga to impress the imperative neccessity of accepting the change of course by being initiated in the free service of Krishna represented by the Yamuna. If one does not avail of the help of Sree Rupa he is finally left without any standing ground of his own. It may be the deliberate choice of infatuated empiricists who choose to follow the Scriptures by the dictates or their own limited understanding, but is nothing short of utter self-destruction.

The proper transcendental Geography begins when the soul, freed from the fetters of the Deluding Energy, has also passed through the undifferentiated stage of spiritual enlightenment. Arrived in the concrete spiritual atmosphere of Parabyom the pilgrim to the Feet of Shree Krishna begins to see things for himself. For sometime he is unable to shake off the sense of awe and of gratitude for his most amazing deliverence from the clutches of the Deluding Energy. But on closer acquaintance with the denizens of the Realm of the Absolute he gathers confidence, hope and joy till he is thoroughly acclimatised to the New World. It is at this stage that he is privileged to begin the service of Sree Krishna Who manifests His Eternal Birth for such a devotee in the prison-cell of Mathura, the then capital of Kansa, King of aggressive atheistical empiricism. Thence-forward the devotee serves Krishna till he attains the highest limit of intimacy by being admitted to the confidences of the milk-maids of Braja.

In Parabyom or Vaikuntha the devotee worships Sree Sree Lakshmi-Narayana by the method of distant reverence. Sree Sree Lakshmi-Narayan are eternally unborn Divine Pair reigning over Vaikuntha in all the Majesty of Power. Above the Sphere of Sree Sree Lakshmi-Narayana is located the Sphere of the Realm of Sree Sree Rama-Seeta where the Unborn manifests His Birth. Next above the realm of Sree Sree Rama-Seeta is that of Mathura. Sree Sree Rama-Seeta are also served by the method of reverential obedience less distant than that by which Sree Sree Lakshmi-Narayana are worshiped in Their sphere of the absolute realm. From Mathura onwards reverence is subordinated to confident affection. Nothing less than the service of Sree Krishna as in Mathura can satisfy the natural hankerings of the pure soul.

There is, indeed, the reverential service of Krishna in Dwaraka which resembles that rendered to Sree Sree Rama-Seeta with this important difference that the former is not hampered by the monogamous ethical limitation being imposed upon the Absolute in pursuance of the moral idea of this perverted existence to which the conditioned soul finds himself strictly confined. The atmosphere of Dwaraka is freer than that of Ajodhya ; but in Dwaraka Sree Krishna is also served as King. In Mathura Sree Krishna is accessible to all persons who want to serve Him at all. In other words, it is only in Mathura that one may have the full sight of the Absolute Person as He is.

The point how India comes to be so closely associated with the transcendental Geography is elucidated if we only bear in mind the fact that Godhead manifests His Appearance on the mundane plane with all His Paraphernalia which includes also His Eternal Realm. Of all the countries of this World India alone possesses the recorded tradition of the Appearances of the Divinity. Mathura, Dwaraka, Brindaban are not mundane localities in reference to the Pastimes of Sree Krishna. It is no doubt inconceivable to the limited understanding of the conditioned soul how those places can be supposed to possess any distinctive spiritual significance of their own. The very names of these places are declared by the Scriptures to possess the full spiritual value. But the conditioned soul cannot realise the spiritual nature of the localities. The empiricists are, therefore, insistent that the statements of the Scriptures are to be understood in an allegorical sense.

The conclusive reply to all such objections is based on the principle of transcendental epistemology. The Absolute cannot be approached by means of the mundane either as medium or instrument. If it should be possible to serve Krishna He should be also approachable by conditions of the mundane plane in some inconceivable way. The Scriptures declare that Sree Krishna was pleased to make His Appearance on this mundane plane in a visible Form. We are informed by the same authority that Sree Krishna subsequently manifested His Disappearance from this world. The Disappearance of Sree Krishna means the simultaneous disappearance of all His Paraphernalia, including the transcendental realm. So long as Sree Krishna was placed to remain visible in this world the lands of Mathura, Dwaraka and Brindaban or any other part of India, to the extent that they were the scene of His visible Activities, should be regarded as having been identical with the corresponding regions of the Absolute Realm. But after the Disappearance of Sree Krishna these lands also necessarily ceased to retain the spiritual nature which they had exhibited during His Appearance.

But the Descents of the Divinity, according to the Scriptures are eternal, implying their substantive continuance even after They have ceased to be visible to all persons. The invisible existence of the transcendental regions of Mathura, Dwaraka and Brindaban of Sree Krishna to this day and for eternity on this mundane plane would imply the distinctive spiritual quality of the correspondingly visible mundane localities. The two, of course, need not be identified. But neither need the close correspondence be wholly overlooked. Those who choose to regard the mundane as identical with the spiritual localities, commit thereby only one of the various forms of offences against Godhead by supposing Him and His to be identifiable with limited, unwholesome, corresponding mundane entities. But it is possible to steer clear of this difficulty without ignoring the substantive existence of the corresponding invisible spiritual localities whose view is available methods of endeavour rendered possible by the existence of the visible localities. The visible localities may be admitted to possess this symbolical and auxilliary value not in the allegorical or sentimental but substantive sense.

The other places connected with the Activities of Sree Krishna may also be allowed to possess corresponding spiritual efficacies in the above mentioned symbolical substantive sense. This need not disagreeably surprise any persons who may be disposed to believe in the equal or superior spiritual quality of his own particular native land. Such persons will find all the consolation they require when they are reminded that Sree Krishna with all His Divine Paraphernalia eternally indwells every atom of this mundane world. But this immanent aspect of the Absolute alone is to be experienced in the concrete and abstract entities of the world. The transcendental aspect also, however, makes its periodical appearance in a visible form on the mundane plane. The records of such appearances have been actually preserved in India. This tradition enables us to use the geography of the country for the purpose of the symbolical substantive worship of the Supreme Lord. It also helps to dissipate the contentions of those idealists who hold that Godhead is inaccessible by any visible form of activity, thereby attempting unwarrantably to assign to the mental activity an equality of level with the spiritual function.

Scraps and Scribblings

TWO sorts of temparaments lead the activities of animated beings. One thought advocates the stupefaction of the animation ; where as the other is fond of maintaining the progressive manifestation. When the tracing work of the Fountainhead is at issue, the latter is found to retain the manifestive Energy of the Fountainhead, and the former goes on targetting the origin in non manifested agent. The two different predilectio is work side by side combating each other's flow. But this does not affect at all the Absolute position of the Fountainhead. Those impersonalists who are busy with stopping the intellectual motion in the final stage, differ from the view of another section of the group, who maintain that the Fountainhead should be fully intellectual and that there should not be any chamber of reciprocal situation among the sentients. The elimination of all barricades between the observer and the Observed, it is expected by the impersonalists, would bring them to their desired end of the fulness of Absolute Knowledge. By the side of the above two different views there is a third viz., that of the progressionists which also need not be discouraged by the Impersonalists. The very anthropomorphic idea that actuates the brains of all formulative combatants, terminates in worldly non-personation ; whereas, the personalists do not vouchsafe the materialistic phase of the Fountainhead when they throw off the anthropomorphic invasions of the impersonalists.

The impersonalists in most cases are found to place themselves in the pedantic platform and are prone to discourage the views of the personalists by putting their imperfect conception of worldly empiricism. But this little bit of weak argument is quite inadequate to wipe off from the minds of the personalists the eternal existence of all knowledge and bliss. The Scriptures of both the parties involve conflicting views to each other with a result of condemning the opposite views. But the Fountainhead does not claim to submit to a particular view for its, his or her existence, The scorning epithets uttered through the lips of contending parties do not trouble at all the Absolute Fountainhead of the cherished conceptions. So the matter is left open for an individual to decide.

When we take into account the theme of the Personal Fountainhead we are found to shake off the Impersonalist as the material manifestation of this universe enshrouds the transcendental background of unalloyed spirit. Though the personal aspects appear as imperfect or transitory in our present platform, still, if we trace the cause of such animation, we can not dismiss the idea of the Fountainhead not having possessed the progressive function of eternal manifestations. With this view, we trace the eternal relationship of the ever existing spiritual world. The indications present in us have been beautifully penned by the literatures in five different relationships. But when we speak of transcendental literature where Nature is manifestive, we find the Observed of all observers in One. The fragmentary parts that form the whole may be counted with the help of numerals and we can trace the eternal relationship between the One Whole and His conciliatory parts consisting of sentient and insentient components. The analytical process will show to build up again the synthetic philosophy. This relationship is delineated by the pen of the rhetoricians in five order, among which the Consorthood of the Fountainhead is one, besides four others viz., Sonhood, Friendhood, Masterhood and Concordanthood of the Absolute. All the different relations are not included in all religious revelations. Some theistic savants would not possibly admit the first two and half relationships on the ground of their being apparently incompatible with their own reverential attitude ; but though at the first sight, they seem to be non-reverential and non-submissive, which are opposed to the servitorial functions, still the greater scrutinisers of theistic themes have discovered the revealed manifestations of all the five orders of relations referred to above. We are always tied by one of the five different relationships to every other entity in this world. When our loving tie is meant for the Fountainhead, we do not ascribe any plurality in the same, which would bring conflicting rupture by their different locations as experienced on this present human platform. When the Absolute Eternal All-knowledge desires through causeless grace to attract our eternal society, we regain our unalloyed existence which is void of all ignorance and wrong sensation. We sentient beings are apt to be misled by the duping influence of transitory limited things which cannot suitably cope with the activities of our pure souls. In the array of transcendental literature some interceptions are observed by the critic involved in his sensuous wranglings in the estimation of this mundane world's relativity.

Just now we are concerned about a book which passes by the name of "Radha Rasa Sudhanidhi". This book was written by the author of Chaitanya Chandramrita, Brindaban-Sataka, Naba dwipa-Sataka, Sangita-Madhaba and various other sanskrit poems which have a very large circulation. His name is Shree Probodhananda Saraswati Swami who used to reside in Kamyaban in Muttra District during the latter part of his life, claiming to be an eternal service holder of the Divine Preacher-Prophet of Nadia Who had disclosed Himself to him as the Transcendental Manifestor of and identical with, Shree Krishna. In his early life the writer was an Andhra Brahmin whose forefathers had migrated to Shree Rangam in Trichi and had been settled in the Tamil land for a few generations. He belonged to a "Shree Vaishnaba" family and was a Tridandi Sannyasi when he accidentally met Shree Krishna Chaitanya of Nadia at Shree Rangam where he picked up greater loving affinity towards Krishna, the Supreme Personal Manifestation of the Abstract Absolute.

This ascetic subsequently came over to Muttra side after embracing the eternal phase of unalloyed souls inculcated by the Supreme Lord Shree Chaitanya He wrote several poetical treatises in Sanskrit verse and his works were appreciated by the highest theistic personage of the day. Shree Gopala Bhatta, one of the six most renowned Goswamins who lived in Brindaban, embraced the benign umbrage of this savant. In his previous life the said disciple had been a nephew of this ascetic saint. This is admitted in Shree Gopala Bhatta Goswami's famous edition of the Vaishnava Smriti (code) Haribhakti Vilasa.

The book entitled "Radha Sudhanidhi" is found among the Radhaballabhis who ascribe the authorship of that work to their prime preceptor, one Haribanshaji. The body of "Radha-Sudhanidhi" contains the very same verses, with the elimination of two or three, that are found in "Radha-Rasa-Sudhanidhi from the pen of the vast erudite scholar and poet, the said Tridandi Swami Probodhananda Saraswatiji. Haribansha is alleged to be the first Guru of the Radhaballabhi sect of Mathura Vaishnavites. He has written only "Chourashipada" in the 'Braja' dialect which has been taken exception to by some ethical critics for their mundane quality. Haribansha's father was a Gauda-Brahmin of Devaban in the Saharanpur District. He was known by the name of Vyas. Vyas was in the service of the then Mahammadan Emperor. When his master was marching from Agra to Muttra Vyas's wife gave birth to a son at a village called 'Badh' near Mathura. His mother was known by the name of Tara and the son, being Hari's issue, was named Haribansha. This boy contemplated to take to the life of an ascetic after his father had had two sons and a daughter. This resolution was baffled when he married two daughters of a Brahmin of Charthaval near Hodal and got Radhaballabh as the dowry from his new father-in-law. The Deity was installed in a temple near Kaliyadamana Ghat.

Haribansha is alleged to be one of the three disciples of Shree Gopal Bhatta Goswami. The allegation that was put forward by the Gaudiya Vaishnavas was that he used chewing betel on the Ekadashi day which is forbidden by the Shastras. This led his preceptor to cut off connection with the disciple. He was alleged to have lost his life for this act. His admirers and sons formed the Radhaballabhi Sect after his departure from this world.

As regards the writership of the work Radha-Sudhanidhi attributed to Haribansa, it has become a controversial point. The arguments are forwarded by the Gaudiya Vaishnava School that Haribansha did not write any book in Sanskrit, whereas, Shree Probodhananda Saraswati wrote some admirable books in Sanskrit. Moreover, according to Gaudiya interpretation, Haribansha was once a disciple of their community. The mode of Bhajan narrated in "Radha Sudhanidhi" is the same as that of the Gaudiya except for a little deviation in practice in the case of the present Radhaballabhis. The Radhaballabhi sect does not claim any other book written by Haribanshaji. So it is easy for them, by omitting the submissive verses meant for Shree Krishna Chaitanya, to claim the same view with the Gaudiyas. The Vaishnava world knows perfectly well that the Gaudiyas have got the special feature of preferring the service of Shree Radhika to that of Shree Krishna Himself; specially, the Gaudiya Vaishnavas have a prior claim on this Bhajan to the later adoption by Haribansha. Since the days of Haribansha his followers the Radhaballabhis are not in a friendly mood with the Gaudiyas, though the descendants of Gopinath, a follower of Shree Gopala Bhattaji and a colleague of Haribansha, belong to the same society of Gaudiya Brahmins with the latter.

Mr. F. S. Growse called many a passage some 27 verses from "Radha-Sudhanidhi" and many a vernacular verse from "Chaurashipada" in his book "Mathura, a district memoir", written in 1882 when he was the collector of Balanda Sahar. We do not agree with his view when he went on to say—"In consequence of Haribansha's strong natural passions which he was unable to suppress and, therefore, invented a fiction to excuse, his devotion was all directed not to Krishna Himself, except in a secondary degree, but to his fabled mistress Radha whom he deified as the "Goddess of Lust." The unethical views observed by Mr. Growse in Haribanshaji are also a proof of the authorship of Radha-Sudhanidhi being in favour of Tridandi Swami Probodhanandaji as Vishnubhite Tridandins can not and do not claim any unethical principles. Mr. Growse went so far as to notice lustful attempts of Haribanshaji but he could not deny the eternal existence of the Consorthood of Krishna and of unconditioned souls, though he mistook the transcendental plane to be identical with the terrestrial. "Radha Sudhanidhi" is an admirable book and bespeaks the highest culture of transcendental love with personal Godhead. If this is not admitted, the eternal life of a theist would prove miserable and defective as in the case with the Rishis of Dandakaranyam. Theistic explorers should be able to find their way to proceed to the confidential plane of theism where the reverential aspect is more or less impeded through far wide rationalism. The Christian-conception of Fatherhood has restricted theism on reverential principle and this has simple mundane merits and reverence for sensuous lower manifestations.

Opinion on Theistic Exhibition

The Exhibition is unique in charcter and has been arranged in a view to impart instructions in Vaishnava Theology in a very simple way.

The Exhibition is unique of its kind and the arrangements of the exhibits and for the convenience of the visitors are excellent. Even an ordinary layman cannot fail to be impressed by the graphic way in which the inner meaning has been made intelligible to all by means of symbols and texts. No pain has been spared by the authorities to make the Exhibition success and they deserve the greatest credit for the immense good they are doing towards the uplift of the ordinary laymen who never think of such things unless these are placed before them in a manner which they can easily understand.

The Exhibition is so crowded that it was impossible for me to go round it ; this shows, however, that it has been attractive to the people, many of whom have been drawn even from distant villages, some even from other provinces. It must have been expensive but the expenses were certainly worth incurring as it has been done for the best cause, nothing less than spiritual and moral uplift of the mass.

It has been a great joy to me to visit this fascinating Exhibition and to listen to the learned discourse of the Swamiji who so very kindly showed me over. The Exhibition will, I am sure, be a source of great inspiration to the thousands who are visiting it. The genesis of Gaudiya Math in organising it so well deserves all praise and admiration.

This Exhibition has enabled one to realise more fully the influence of the Chaitanya-movement in Bengal and to appreciate the devotion of those connected with it. We are personally grateful for the courtesy and kindness of those who have shown us the Exhibition.

The Exhibition is very interesting and highly instructive. The exposition of Personal God is very appealing. The work embraces many activities which are beneficial to all societies and communities. The effort of the Math is very laudable.

I was greatly impressed by the Exhibition. No one can doubt that great skill, thought and trouble have been lavished to make it a success. It is calculated to drive home in a forceful way the truths which it is intended to impart.

266 "I will deliver the sadhus, I will destory all the wicked ones ;
Have thou no fear but recite My hymn".

267 On beholding the Lord Srinibas wept for joy ;
The fear of his heart left on receiving
His assurance.

268 All his limbs were pervaded with joy ;
He stood up and prayed to the Lord, joining the palms of his hands.

269 He was endowed with the spontaneous erudition of the great devotee ;
By command of the Lord he prayed as the Lord wished.

270 There occurs in the Bhagabatam the lifting of the stupefication of Brahma.
Sribas hymned the Lord by first reciting the same shloka ;

271 "I bow to thee, worthy of all praise, with a Body possessed of the hue of the fresh cloud with apparel yellow as the lightning with pendents made of the gunja-twig depending from the ears ; with the Face whose beauty is set off by the tuft of peacock's tail stuck on the Forehead ; With garland made of wild flowers round Thy neck ; rendered transcendentaly beautiful by the symbols of the ball of rice mixed with curd held in Thy hand And the cane, the horn and the pipe of bamboo ; with tender Feet ;—Son of the Chief of the cow-herds."

272 ' I bow to the Feet of Biswambhar,
With hue like that of the fresh cloud,
Whose apparel is of yellow colour.

273 "I bow to the Feet of the Son of Shachi Whose ornaments are the new twig of the gunja and the peacock's tail,

274 "My obeisance to the Feet of the Disciple of Gangadas
With the garland of wild flowers, Whose Hand holds the ball of rice mixed with curd.

275 "My obeisance to the Feet of the Son of Jagannath,
The Beauty of Whose Face surpasses that of crores of Moons.

276 "Thou art He Whose ornaments are the horn, the cane, the flute
And the pipe of bamboo ; to Thy Feet
I do obeisance.

277 "Whom the four Vedas proclaim as Son of Nanda,—
Thou art He ; I bow to Thy Feet".

278 By the hymn of Brahma he prayed at the Feet of the Lord.
He spoke all that came spontaneously to his lips.

279 "Thou art Vishnu, Thou art Krishna,
Thou art the Lord of the Sacrifice.
The water from Thy Feet is the Ganges, the best of all the tirthas.

280 "Thou art the Life of Janaki, Thou art
the Man-Lion ?
Aja, Bhaba and others are bees that woo
Thy lotus Feet.

281 "Thou art revealed by the Vedanta,
Thou art Narayana ;
It is Thou Who deluded Bali in the Form of the Dwarf.

282 "Thou art Hayagriba, Thou art the Life of the world ;
Thou art the Moon of Nilachal, the Cause of everything.

283 "By Thy deluding energy who does not go astray ?

Kamala herself does not know,—with whom Thou art ever joined.

284 "Even the Lord, Who serves Thee in every way as companion.
Friend, brother, is himself deluded, not to speak of any other 285 "Thou hast hurled me into delusion of this false domestic life!

Being ignorant of Thyself my life has been passed in vain.

286 "Thou hast deluded me by many a stratagem
Thou carried my basket of flowers, clothing and other articles.

287 "That does not fill me with fear, listen Oh! Lord of my life,
As thou, the Lord, hast appeared before my eyes.

288 "This day there is an end of all my sorrows
This day my day has dawned most truly.

289 This day my birth and works have borne all fruits;
This day all the blessings are manifest for me.

290 "This day the race of all my fathers is delivered;
This day, indeed, my home is truly blessed.

291 "This day the good fortune of my eyes knows no end:—
I see Him Whose Holy Feet are served by Rama".

292 In the act of recital Pandit Sribas was overpowered by emotion;
He cried convulsively with hands uplifted and breathed heavily.

293 Fortunate Srinibas rolled on the ground
On beholding the full manifestation of Gaurachandra, never seen before.

294 What wonderful joy pervaded the body of Sreebas!
The best of Bipras was immersed in the sea of bliss.

295 Smiling the Lord listened to the hymn of Sreebas.
Disposed to be gracious, He said to Sreebas.

296 "Bring out thy wife and children and all members of thy family;
Let them have a view of My Form.

297 "Jointly with thy wife thou mayst worship My Feet
May thou ask for any boon that may be in thy mind".

298 Shreebas Pandit, on receiving the command of the Lord, Returned quickly with all his following.

299 All the flowers that had been obtained for offering to Vishnu.
He placed them on the Feet of the Lord in the view of all persons.

300 He worshipped the Holy Feet by the offerings of perfume, flowers, incense and lighted lamp;
The Brahmana wept aloud in the company of his wife.

301 With his brothers, wife, servants and, maids and all members, Falling at the Feet of the Lord Sreebas gave vent to his sense of humility.

302 Lord Biswambhar, ever disposed to please Sreenibas, Placed His Feet on the heads of all of them.

303 Invisibly to all the Lord paced over their heads,
He said smiling, "May all of you have your minds turned towards Me.

304 Ejaculating and roaring with a voice of thunder
The Lord, addressing Sreenibas, made this response,

305 "Well Sreenibas, do'st thou feel any fear in thy mind?

Is there rumour that the king's boat is coming to catch thee ?

306 "All the jeevas that abide in the infinity of the worlds,
It is Myself Who guide them by My own leavening quality, as sole Plenary Cognition.

307 "If I make the body of that king speak
Only then will he speak the command to catch thee.

308 "If he be not so guided but orders thee to be caught
In exercise of his own free will, that also can be because I desire.

309 I Myself will be the first to get into the boat.
And in this Form I will make Myself visible to the king.

310 "On beholding Me will the king still maintain his seat on the throne ?
I will overwhelm and cause him to fall prostrate on the spot.

311 "If he does not do so but holds Me to answer
That also I tell thee, is according to My desire :

312 "Hear O King, listen find out the true and false ;
Assemble all thy Mollas and Kazis.

313 The "elephants, horses, other animals, birds,—all that thou possess'st, Let all of those, O King, be brought to thy presence.

314 "Now give the command to all the kazis
So they may make all those to cry by telling them their Scriptures.

315 "If they fail to do so
Then shall I manifest Myself in the King ;

316 "Thou forbid'st samkirtan by the advice of these fellows !
All the people have seen just now what power any of them really have.

317 "Now open wide your eyes and behold My Power'.
So saying I will bring up the mad elephant with My Own Hands, 318 "And gathering the elephants, horses, deer and birds into one company

I will make them to chant 'Krishna'.

319 "All the followers of the King in the company of the King himself.
I will make them cry by saying 'Krishna' with right good will.

320 "If perchance thou art disposed to disbelieve this in thy mind
I am doing it herein thy presence that thou may'st see it with thy own eyes."

321 The Lord saw in front of Him a little girl
Sreebas's brother's daughter who bore the name of Narayani,

322 The same who is famous to this day throughout the community of the Vaishnavas
As Narayani, the recipient of the refuse of Chaitanya.

323 Shree Gaurangachand, the Guide of the hearts of all entities, Commanded, "Narayani, do thou cry saying 'Krishna.'"

324 That four-year old girl forthwith behaved like one mad ;
She cried, saying "O Krishna," forgetful of herself :

325 The stream of tears flowed down all her limbs to the ground.
The place was filled by her copious tears.

326 Lord Biswambhar smiled on as He spoke,
"Are all thy fears ended now ?"

327 Sreenibas was a great speaker and knew all the Truth.
Brandishing his two arms he said to the Lord,

Divine Transcendental Sound

YOU should be seeking for the genuine messenger of Transcendental Knowledge. He will come when we are deserving. Seeking after the genuine source is our first need. We require to find out from where to get Transcendental Knowledge. Otherwise we shall be whiling away our time and be perturbed by different advices. It is when we seek the company of persons who have made real progress on the path of pure devotion that our prayer will be attended to and He will send somebody to act on His behalf to tell us about Him.

We are to surrender all knowledge which is not adequate. Unless we do so we will have no chance of meeting the genuine person. We have to undo all that we have, otherwise we cannot expect to meet the genuine messenger. We must have ardent desire to seek the messenger of the Absolute Knowledge. When we are given something we delete some other thing which is found meagre and faulty.

We are to seek Absolute Truth from Absolute Godhead, Fountain-Head of all Knowledge. Our present receiving instruments intercept and are for this defective aptitude not fit to enable us to grasp the full idea. The language of this world also obstructs the process. To offer the listening ear is alone necessary.

We should not be in a contradicting mood. If we contradict we won't get satisfaction. When we are to seek the Absolute Knowledge we have to pray to God, the Absolute Knowledge, in our present crisis to criple all wrong knowledge.

When our prayer is acceded to we shall have access to the congregation of Sadhus, His agents and be enabled. to pick up things of which we have no knowledge. We should pray for, not local truth but bonafide Truth. Offering of sincere prayer for this end is the first necessity.

The Absolute Truth has a Form. Material forms are now overpowering us. We should seek the Absolute Truth. He is not a molecular mass, not sulphuric acid, not a Nature's product. We should be careful not to misunderstand.

The Absolute Truth is to come, to be visible, to us. Then only we can secure the Absolute Knowledge Who is quite different from any knowledge of this world. That Eternal Knowledge cannot be had here. We cannot also receive Perfect Knowledge. Empiricism should impress this on us.

No knowledge from 'empiricists', i.e, no knowledge drawn from the senses, will help us to gain the Absolute Knowledge which is not at all shaky but is Knowledge Personified through utterance of the bonafide messenger of the Absolute. It is perfectly useless to approach the empiricists for the true knowledge. They will enrich their disciples with mundane thought. If we do not pray for the Absolute Knowledge we shall be liable to fall into their clutches.

We, the true seekers require that a true messenger should come to us who will have no hankering for any temporary thing. As the Absolute Knowledge is ever-existing it must not be supposed to be the category of other knowledge. Our hearty prayer to the Divine Absolute who is not inanimate should be to the above effect. He can grasp, and understand our position well. He will then send His bonafide messenger who will speak all about Him. If we pray for the genuine agent He will send him with language and every equipment which will admit us to the Transcendental Region.

Our present environment is cubical. We cannot cross the cubical expansion. We know nothing about the fourth and higher dimensions. We do not know how we can cross over these difficulties. Unless a man talks in our language about that region and gives us access there through the Transcendental Sound we cannot understand. That Sound has a different character from the mundane sound. That Sound does not require to be supported by the other senses. The Transcendental Word will serve every purpose. It will require no other test.

The distinctive face of the Transcendental Sound consists in this that we will have no necessity of exercising other sensuous activities, e.g., for ascertaining pleasantness of touch or temperature, etc. We would have no occasion to test when the sound is no part of the mundane vocabulary. In case of mundane vocabulary we find it necessary to test its correctness by four other senses and by previous experience. The Transcendental Sound will not require any such corroboration It clears all dirts, sweeps away everything detrimental to progress, through the lips of the messenger of Godhead. The agent of the Absolute is fully established in the Transcendental Region though he descends here as a messenger submitting the Transcendental Sound to our listening ears. When we are really in need Godhead will be merciful to send such a one according to our eligibility.

There are hundreds of processes by which Godhead can send His messengers and not in the shapes of human beings only. We must not be apathetic. All acquisitions of previous births and of this life will not give any real impression of the Truth but will give only wrong things. So we should be careful to seek only for the Absolute Knowledge. The Absolute Knowledge will be kind enough if we are bonafide seekers. Only then will He accede. He will then come to us through such symbols and signs as will enable us to shake off our connection with this world and come into contact with Him in the Form of the Transcendental Sound.

In the Transcendental Sound there is no dividing difference between sound, colour, etc. Unless He grants our prayer we cannot make any progress whatsoever by the help of our divided sense-experience. We should pray to meet the Guru, Who can transmit the Transcendental Sound. We will then be relieved of our temporal understandings. Eternal non-shaky understandings are required. If we have no such desire we shall be simply waiting for the next life. Outside things of this world will then tempt us. They presume we shall be attracted by their figures promising to supply with something positive. But they will part from us after showing only their deceptive inclination to be serviceable.

If we have the help of the Transcendental Sound we shall have strength to make progress through company of persons who have no other inclination but to heave us to that region. We should meet such persons who should not be predominated over by the earthly aspects. The outside appearance will only lead us to wrong things. Many yogins etc., have gone astray in this way. We should see whether the person on whom we depend has firm inclination for the Absolute, whether he would never be deceiving us in the matter of securing us access to, not the region of three dimensions but the Realm of the Absolute.

We should be sending our prayer to the Fountain-Head. We should show our aptitude for serving the Absolute. When we are true, when there is no hypocrisy, we shall then have the sight of the messengers of the Absolute, not in the shape of a human being only, who have no other aptitude but to heave us up. This can be had only through prayer to the Absolute. The prayer should be to this effect. 'I know not what you are, what sort of colour, etc., you have. I pray to know how I am to approach you'. He will then send things here which will show us His Perfect Form by rejecting all sorts of deluding features.

There will be arrangement by the Supreme Lord for enlightening the bonafide enquirer. We shall be relieved of all our impressions received by mundane exertions by something positive from the other region. It will produce in us apathy for picking up knowledge by such exertions. Exertions through the medium of the senses will lead to a wrong direction.

Let us leave off the challenging temper; offer our lending ear and hear what the messenger says. We will clear up doubts by interrogatories. The messenger need not be targetted as our flatterer. He will be speaking in the most insolent way. He will undeceive us by bitter words. If we have any hankering for the Truth we should submit to listen. The first duty of the messenger of the Absolute is to cut off our wrong impressions, to change our taste. It is an unpalatable duty. But we shall make progress by his regulation. You should be prepared for bitter words for the undoing of whatever you have learnt. 'You should only hear Me and I take all responsibility.' The Geeta gives us this assurance.

'You need not be anxious for looking after your interests. I will look after all your interests. When you have surrendered unconditionally leaving aside all acquired impressions I will look after your interests and you need not be any more anxious about them'.

It is this kind of temperament that alone would lead us to all that we desire. If we simply go on puzzling over the thoughts of all the speculative philosophers, etc, we shall only be misled. If we prove to be peaceful and avail of the chance of lending our ear to the Transcendental Sound, we would make progress towards the Absolute and be relieved of all impediments. Hearing of Transcendental Sounds and descriptions is the medium that should be taken recourse to. This alone is wanted.

Visualising enterprises are not required. That is our present habit. But we need not be puzzling with that. We should only pay sufficient attention to the Transcendental Sound. We shall only put questions to be met by the messenger who is well up with all information. He is a practical guide. One who has got the transcendental treasure can give us something to meet the expenses of our journey to that region. Otherwise we shall be cooped up and our days will pass for nothing.

The theistic side of our disposition should be cultivated with all patience. We should have the determination to hear patiently what graciously comes to us from that quarter. The true spirit or God-loving spirit is necessary when we want to single out the genuine messenger. We should then be charmed to find that every wish is fully satisfied and that we are no longer dissuaded by any preventing temptations. Firm affinity for serving the Absolute is the one essential criterion for being successful, the first thing to pray for.

The next thing is to abide by His Providence and wait for His messenger who has every inclination to serve Him, to devote everything he has for the Absolute and has no wrong aptitude to deceive. Every Elevationist is a deceiver. Every Salvationist is also a deceiver as the selfish motive of neither would trace the True Transcendental Object. If one has any selfish motive he will be summarily dismissed as he has no desire to hear but only to look after his present temporary interests. But the seeming present interests are really doing him harm. If he surrenders them to Him He will do everything to shake off his lure of all temporary interests.

Most people are attending to the senses. They are thereby misguided in selecting the messenger of the Absolute. Elevationists are troubled by men who deprive by enriching them by the words that he is to attend to the present comforts of his senses. All Paradise-seekers belong to the category of fruitive workers who propose to get pleasure through the senses which they hope to retain in next life in order to gain pleasure there. The soul should be intelligent enough not to have such wrong desire. Our longest lien in heaven will end when the destructive energy will act and we shall be thrown off. On this plane the destructive energy has greater potency than the building energy. Such temporary enjoying mood should cease in a truly intelligent being. We should not be indulging in such mood. The temporary situation in heaven comes to an end automatically when all resource of good qualities of the enjoyer is exhausted. Such a person after such repeated disillusionment begets the desire to follow the wrong process of seeking after salvation with the object of merging his individual soul with the Oversoul. By such process we lose ourselves.

Our need is that we should be ever exercising all our efforts for the attainment of bliss. This need we are also feeling at present. But the pseudo-salvationists advise that we should commit suicide to be relieved of every thing. But this sort of salvation has very little lien to disturb my thought. Such sort of advice of salvation should be non-co-operated. What kind of freedom will it be if their is no location for me? This is altogether wrong. I require eternal understanding, existence and bliss for my own individual self. This can only be had by coming in contact with the Transcendental Object Who is never subject to change in space and time.

Through devotion i.e., by serving the Absolute Person, we can have what we need. The Absolute is not to be identified with any Nature's product. He cannot be enjoyed. But on the contrary, He is the Sole Enjoyer. We feel pain and pleasure. We welcome all sorts of Bliss, we discard all pain. So we are agents for receiving uninterrupted bliss. We require help from other things e. g., such external helps as food to be consumed, air for breathing, etc. This experience has given us to understand that we always require help which is not to be supplied by us but by some other things. We require such help at every step.

If such help is coming from transitory things to one who cannot retain his position for eternal time, such help will be quite inappropriate and inadequate. It will be useless for our purpose. If we are only helped by the Absolute we may get our true remedy. If we understand this we would know that the path of devotion to the Absolute is the only path of our true salvation and true elevation.

The securing of pseudo-elevation and pseudo-salvation available by our own initiative can not be described as the royal road. That help can only come from Him. If we serve Him, co-operate with Him, if all our acts are restricted to Him, He will certainly have mercy and guide us. In the Geeta, the Divine Personal Godhead gives us (mankind) this assurance, "Surrender everything you consider you have and with a pure soul come to Me, leaving your mortal coils and your mentality. Because you are denied, you are misled and I will give you everything that will convince you that the path of seeking everything from the All-powerful is the only proper one and this will give you everything and all other paths will take you away from your object.

Q.—This is the only subject in which all of us are most vitally interested. But what about serving humanity?

A.—To help humanity in the best way is to enlighten them about the Absolute Truth. All this trouble has come owing to our diffidence in regard to the loving mood of approaching Him. When the Divine Call will come we will be regulated and get amply what we require.

Thakur Bhaktivinode

WE avail of the opportunity offered by the Anniversary Celebrations of the advent of Thakur Bhaktivinode to reflect on the right method of obtaining those benefits that have been made accessible to humanity by the grace of this great devotee of Krishna. Thakur Bhaktivinode has been specifically kind to those unfortunate persons who are engrossed in mental speculation of all kinds. This is the prevalent malady of the present Age. The other Acharyyas who appeared before Thakur Bhaktivinode did not address their discourses so directly to the empiric thinkers. They had been more merciful to those who are naturally disposed to listen to discourses on the Absolute without being dissuaded by the specious arguments of avowed opponents of Godhead.

Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode has taken the trouble of meeting the perverse arguments of mental speculationists by the superior transcendental logic of the Absolute Truth. It is thus possible for the average modern readers to profit by the perusal of his writings. That day is not far distant when the priceless volumes penned by Thakur Bhaktivinode will be reverently translated, by the recipients of his grace, into all the languages of the world.

The writings of Thakur Bhaktivinode provide the golden bridge by which the mental speculationist can safely cross the raging waters of fruitless empiric controversies that trouble the peace of those who choose to trust in their guidance for finding the Truth. As soon as the sympathetic reader is in a position to appreciate the sterling quality of Thakur Bhaktivinode's philosophy the entire vista of the revealed literatures of the world will automatically open out to his reclaimed vision.

There have, however, already arisen serious misunderstandings regarding the proper interpretation of the life and teachings of Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode. Those who suppose they understand the meaning of his message without securing the guiding grace of the Acharyya are disposed to unduly favour the method of empiric study of his writings. There are persons who have got by heart almost everything that he wrote without being able to catch the least particle of his meaning. Such study cannot benefit those who are not prepared to act up to the instructions lucidly conveyed by his words. There is no honest chance of missing the warnings of Thakur Bhaktivinode. Those, therefore, who are misled by the perusal of his writings are led astray by their own obstinate perversity in sticking to the empiric course which they prefer to cherish against his explicit warnings. Let these unfortunate persons look more carefully into their own hearts for the cause of their misfortunes.

The personal service of the pure devotee is essential for understanding the spiritual meaning of the words of Thakur Bhaktivinode. The Editor of this Journal, originally started by Thakur Bhaktivinode, has been trying to draw the attention of all followers of Thakur Bhaktivinode to this all-important point of his teachings. It is not necessary to try to place ourselves on a footing of equality with Thakur Bhaktivinode. We are not likely to benefit by any mechanical imitation of any practices of Thakur Bhaktivinode on the opportunist principle that they may be convenient for us to adopt. The Guru is not an erring mortal whose activities can be understood by the fallible reason of unreclaimed humanity. There is an eternally impassable line of demarcation between the Saviour and the Saved. Those who are really saved can alone know this. Thakur Bhaktivinode belongs to the category of the spiritual world-teachers who eternally occupy the superior position.

The present Editor has all along felt it His paramount duty to try to clear up the meaning of the life and teachings of Thakur Bhaktivinode by the method of submissive listening to the Transcendental Sound from the lips of the pure devotee. The Guru who realises the transcendental meaning of all sounds, is in a position to serve the Absolute by the direction of the Absolute conveyed through every sound. The Transcendental Sound is Godhead, the mundane sound is non-Godhead. All sound has got these opposite aptitudes. All sound reveals its Divine face to the devotee and only presents its deluding aspect to the empiric pedant. The devotee talks apparently the same language as the delude empiric pedant who had got by heart the vocabulary of the Scriptures. But notwithstanding apparent identity of performance the one has no access to the reality while the other is absolutely free from all delusion.

Those who repeat the teachings of Thakur Bhaktivinode from memory do not necessarily understand the meaning of the words they mechanically repeat. Those who can pass an empiric examination regarding the contents of his writings are not necessarily also self-realised souls. They may not at all know the real meaning of the words they have learnt by the method of empiric study. Take for example the Name "Krishna." Every reader of Thakur Bhaktivinode's works must be aware that the Name manifests Himself on the lips of His serving devotees although He is inaccessible to our mundane senses. It is one thing to pass the Examination by reproducing this true conclusion from the writings of Thakur Bhaktivinode and quite another matter to realise the Nature of the Holy Name of Krishna by the process conveyed by the words.

Thakur Bhaktivinode did not want us to go to the clever mechanical reciter of the mundane sound for obtaining access to the Transcendental Name of Krishna, Such a person may be fully equipped with all the written arguments in explanation of the nature of the Divine Name. But if we listen to all these arguments from the dead source the words will only increase our delusion. The very same words coming from the lips of the devotee will have the diametrically opposite effect. Our empiric judgment can never grasp the difference between the two performances.

The devotee is always right. The non-devotee in the shape of the empiric pedant is always and necessarily wrong. In the one case there is always present the Substantive Truth and nothing but the Substantive Truth. In the other case there is present the apparent or misleading hypothesis and nothing but un-truth. The wording may have the same eternal appearance in both cases. The identical verses of the Scriptures may be recited by the devotee and the non-devotee, may be apparently misquoted by the non-devotee but the corresponding values of the two processes remain always categorically different. The devotee is right even when he apparently misquotes, the non-devotee is wrong even when he quotes correctly the very words, chapter and verse of the Scriptures.

It is not empiric wisdom that is the object of quest of the devotee. Those who read the Scriptures for gathering empiric wisdom will be pursuing the wild-goose chase. There are not a few dupes of their empiric Scriptural erudition. These dupes have their admiring under-dupes. But the mutual admiration society of dupes does not escape, by the mere weight of their number, the misfortune due to the deliberate pursuit of the wrong course in accordance with the suggestions of our lower selves.

What are the Scriptures? They are nothing but the record by the pure devotees of the Divine Message appearing on the lips of the pure devotees. The Message conveyed by the devotees is the same in all ages. The words of the devotees are ever identical with the Scriptures. Any meaning of the Scriptures that belittles the function of the devotee who is the original communicant of the Divine Message contradicts its own claim to be heard. Those who think that the Sanskrit language in its lexicographical sense is the language of the Divinity are as deluded as those who hold that the Divine Message is communicable through any other spoken dialects. All languages simultaneously express and hide the Absolute. The mundane face of all languages hides the Truth. The Transcendental face of all sound expresses nothing but the Absolute. The pure devotee is the speaker of the Transcendental language. The Transcendental Sound makes His Appearance on the lips of His pure devotee. This is the direct, unambiguous appearance of the Divinity. On the lips of non-devotees the Absolute always appears in His deluding aspect. To the pure devotee the Absolute reveals Himself under all circumstances. To the conditioned soul, if he is disposed to listen in a truly submisive spirit, the language of the pure devotee can alone impart the knowledge of the Absolute. The conditioned soul mistakes the deluding for the real aspect when he chooses to lend his ear to the non-devotee. This is the reason why the conditioned soul is warned to avoid all association with non-devotees.

Thakur Bhaktivinode is acknowledged by all his sincere followers as possessing the above powers of the pure devotee of Godhead. His words have to be received from the lips of a pure devotee. If his words are listened to from the lips of a non-devotee they will certainly deceive. If his works are studied in the light of one's own worldly experience their meaning will refuse to disclose itself to such readers. His works belong to the class of the eternal revealed literature of the world and must be approached for their right understanding through their exposition by the pure devotee. If no help from the pure devotee is sought the works of Thakur Bhaktivinode will be grossly misunderstood by their readers. The attentive reader of those works will find that he is always directed to throw himself upon the mercy of the pure devotee if he is not to remain unwarrantably self-satisfied by the deluding results of his wrong method of study.

The writings of Thakur Bhaktivinode are valuable because they demolish all empiric objections against accepting the only method of approaching the Absolute in the right way. They cannot and were never intended to give access to the Absolute without help from the pure-devotee of Krishna. They direct the sincere enquirer of the Truth, as all the revealed Scriptures do, to the pure devotee of Krishna to learn about Him by submitting to listen with an open mind to the Transcendental Sound appearing on His lips. Before we open any of the books penned by Thakur Bhaktivinode we should do well to reflect a little on the attitude with which as the indispensable pre-requisite to approach the study. It is by neglecting to remember this fundamental principle that the empiric pedants find themselves so hopelessly puzzled in their vain endeavour to reconcile the statements of the different texts of the Scriptures. The same difficulty is already in process of overtaking many of the so-called followers of Thakur Bhaktivinode and for the same reason.

The person to whom the Acharyya is pleased to transmit his power is alone in a position to convey the Divine Message. This constitutes the underlying principle of the line of succession of the spiritual teachers. The Acharyya thus authorised has no other duty than that of delivering intact the Message received from all his predecessors. There is no difference between the pronouncements of one Acharyya and another. All of them are perfect mediums for the appearance of the Divinity in the Form of the Transcendental Name Who is identical with His Form, Quality, Activity and Paraphernalia.

The Divinity is Absolute Knowledge. Absolute Knowledge has the character of indivisible Unity. One particle of the Absolute Knowledge is capable of revealing all the potency of the Divinity. Those who want to understand the contents of the volumes penned by Thakur Bhaktivinode by the piece-meal acquisitive method applicable to deluding knowledge available to the mind on the mundane plane, are bound to be self-deceived. Those who are sincere seekers of the Truth are alone eligible to find Him in and through the proper method of His quest.

In order to be put on the track of the Absolute listening to the words of the pure devotee is absolutely necessary. The spoken word of the devotee is the Absolute. It is only the Absolute Who can give Himself away to the constituents of His power. The Absolute appears to the listening ear of the conditioned soul in the form of the Name on the lips of the Sadhu. This is the key to the whole position. The works of Thakur Bhaktivinode direct the empiric pedant to discard his wrong method and inclination on the threshold of the real quest of the Absolute. If the pedant still choose to carry his errors into the Realm of the Absolute Truth he only marches by a deceptive bye-path into the regions of darker ignorance by his arrogant study of the Scriptures. The method offered by Thakur Bhaktivinode is identical with the object of the quest. The method is not really grasped except by the grace of the pure devotee. The arguments, indeed, are these. But they can only corroborate, but can never be a substitute for, the word from the living source of the Truth who is no other than the pure devotee of Krishna, the concrete Personal Absolute.

Thakur Bhaktivinode's greatest gift to the world consists in this that he has brought about the appearance of those pure devotees who are, at present, carrying on the movement of unalloyed devotion to the Feet of Shree Krishna by their own wholetime spiritual service of the Divinity. The purity of the soul is only analogously describable by the resources of the mundane language. The highest ideal of empiric morality is no better than the grossest wickedness to the Transcendental perfect purity of the bonafide devotee of the Absolute. The word 'morality' itself is a mischievous misnomer when it is applied to any quality of the conditioned soul. The hypocritical contentment with a negative attitude is part and parcel of the principle of undiluted immorality.

Those who pretend to recognise the Divine Mission of Thakur Bhaktivinode without aspiring to the unconditional service of those pure souls who really follow the teachings of the Thakur by the method enjoined by the Scriptures and explained by Thakur Bhaktivinode in a way that is so eminently suited to the requirements of the Sophisticated mentality of the present Age, only deceive themselves and their willing victims by their hypocritical professions and performances. These persons must not be confounded with the bonafide members of the flock.

Thakur Bhaktivinode has predicted the consummation of religious unity of the world by the appearance of the only universal church which bears the eternal designation of the Brahma Sampradaya. He has given mankind the blessed assurance that all Theistic churches will shortly merge in the one eternal spiritual community by the Grace of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya. The spiritual community is not circumscribed by the conditions of time and space, race and nationality. Mankind has been looking forward to this far-off Divine Event through the long Ages. Thakur Bhaktivinode has made the conception available in its practicable spiritual form to the open-minded empiricist who is prepared to undergo the process of enlightenment. The key stone of the Arch has been laid which will afford the needed shelter to all awakened animation under its ample encircling arms. Those who would thoughtlessly allow their hollow pride of race, pseudoknowledge or pseudo-virtue to stand in the way of this long hoped-for consummation, would have to thank only themselves for not being incorporated in the spiritual society of all pure souls.

These plain words need not be misrepresented, by arrogant persons who are full of the vanity of empiric ignorance, as the pronouncements of aggressive sectarianism. The aggressive pronouncement of the concrete Truth is the crying necessity of the moment for silencing the aggressive propaganda of specific untruths that is being carried on all over the world by the preachers of empiric contrivances for the amelioration of the hard lot of conditioned souls. The empiric propaganda clothes itself in the language of negative abstraction for deluding those who are engrossed in the selfish pursuit of worldly enjoyment. But there is a positive and concrete function of the pure soul which should not be perversely confounded with any utilitarian form of worldly activity. Mankind stands in need of that positive spiritual function of which the hypocritical impersonalists are in absolute ignorance. The positive function of the soul harmonises the claims of extreme selfishness with those of extreme self-abnegation in the society of pure souls even in this mundane world. In its concrete realisable form the function is perfectly inaccessible to the empiric understanding. Its imperfect and misleading conception alone is available by the study of the Scriptures to the conditioned soul that is not helped by the causeless grace of the pure devotee of Godhead.

Shree Radhika

THE anniversary of the advent of Shree Radhika was duly celebrated on the 19th of September at all the Maths affiliated to Sri Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha.

Shree Radhika is not explicitly mentioned in the Srimad Bhagabatam. But in the description of the Circular Amorous Dance, viz., the Rasa Pastime, Shree Krishna is represented as leaving the circle of the dancing milk-maids in the company of a female who is more favoured than all the rest. The milk-maids who were thus abruptly abandoned in the very midst of the dance praised the genuine devotion of the unnamed female who could induce Shree Krishna to prefer her sole company to the combined attractions of all the others.

But although the Srimad Bhagabatam mentions the above incident the subject is not further developed in that work. This has been explained by the Goswamins as due to a deliberate resolve on the part of Sri Sukadeva who is the narrator of the Bhagabatam, to avoid disclosing to his miscellaneous audience the 'hidden matters' of the Scriptures. The 'hidden matters' can only be known by the special grace of Shree Krishna and not otherwise. They are not to be divulged to all persons indiscriminately.

This explanation offered by the Goswamins is not opposed to the open treatment of the same subject by Sri Jayadeva and other writers. Inspite of the Geeta Govinda and its companion works the subject of the relationship of Shree Radhika to Shree Krishna remains shrouded in impenetrable mystery. No language can convey to the lay reader any but a wholly misleading idea of the nature of the subject on which Sri Sukadeva maintained such discrete silence. This result is hailed with unmistakable joy by Srila Krishna Das Kaviraj Goswami, author of Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita. Kaviraj Goswami pertinently observes that no joy can excel that of the narrator of the hidden subject when he realises that those very persons are wholly and automatically debarred from all knowledge of the subject who are sure not to appreciate the same and for fear of whose neglect the writer is afraid to narrate it fully.

Sri Sukadeva's hesitation to divulge the secrets of the Vedas is well-founded. The conduct of Sri Jayadeva Goswami in speaking out without reserve is equally in order if we remember that his book cannot be understood at all by those who are lacking in the highest spiritual culture.

Certain uncritical writers have not, indeed, scrupled to throw mud even at the author of the Geeta Govinda; but they are the exceptions. The generality of writers have thought it wise to avoid all reference to the subject for the honest enough reason that they have failed to understand how a book which has a most obscene exterior could be cherished by all the great devotees of the country whose conduct is universally admitted to have been free from any taint of casuality. It is this paradox that has always exercised a salutary restraining influence on the saner sections of writers in regard to the treatment of this unintelligible subject.

So much by way of preface. Coming to the subject-matter itself we find it impossible to throw any light on it that would be of real help to the average reader. We would, therefore, confine ourselves to the more useful task of exploring the distant philosophical approaches instead of attempting to describe the relationship itself.

Shree Radhika is realisable as the Counter-Whole of the Personal Absolute. She is the Predominated Moiety of the Absolute Whole. Shree Krishna, in regard to Shree Radhika, is the Predominating Moiety. The conception of Male and Female refers to the principle of Personality. As both Personalities are fully Divine no grossness or inadequacy of the corresponding mundane conception need be imported into the subject. But it is imperative to admit the Absolute logical validity, under the reservation of inconceivability by our present understanding, of the conception of the Divine Pair, possessing actual Male and Female spiritual Forms.

If this is not admitted the Absolute Realm is at once divested of the supreme cementing principle for holding together its diverse atomic personalities. In this phenomenal world the personality of man is defective in many ways. But all other personal relationships are found to be less intimate than that between male and female as pair. If the world had been entirely peopled by males or females there would be no intimacies of the family relationships. Parenthood and Consorthood supply the conditions of the specific forms of the most intimate of all personal relationships in this world. This is the general rule, although there may be apparent exceptions. But even the most intimate friendship of this world, outside the family circle does not bring about the complete identification of the interests of two persons on an agreed indissoluble basis as the pair relationship has been allowed to do.

In the pair relationship the constancy of the partners in their loyal and exclusive attachment to each other is regarded as all-important. This ideal is sought to be satisfied and perfected through the institution of marriage. But the ideal is incapable of realisation in this world on account of the presence of inevitable opposing factors. The fear 'lest one good cause may corrupt the world' is true of the apparently best of earthly causes. The very laudable conditions of the marriage relationship preclude the fullest exercise of individual choice of the six partners. In proportion as male and female become capable of an effective desire to live their own independent individual lives by their unhampered choice those institutions which were found essential for their happiness at an earlier stage of their progress towards the full individual and social life, are found to be an actual obstacle to their further advancement. It becomes thereupon necessary to get rid of the most cherished older institutions after they have outlived their usefulness.

The burning question of the day for empiric moralists relates to the position of females. The males have been left free to follow their inclination within their mutual voluntary agruments i.e, without unduly encroaching on the freedom of one another. The same degree of freedom is being demanded for females and is on the point of being conceded by universal consent. The institution of marriage is likely to be remodelled to be brought in line with the requirements of the equality of the sexes. This reform will react on all domestic relationships. It is yet impossible to forecast the moral consequences on society.

If man and woman strive to be really independent of one another the degree of intimacy of the pair is bound to be materially lessened. The virtues of constancy and loyalty is likely to go by the board as being inapplicable to the changed position. The sexual relationship will drop much of its wholesome and unwholesome present obligations. Not a few persons are beginning even to dream of a possible desirable return to the unconventional sexual promiscuity of the hypothetically happy 'state of nature' minus its animality. But the physical body is identical with the principle of animality and so long as the body will continue to claim its needs animality will stay. To restrain animality it is necessary to regulate the bodily activities

Two physical bodies can have only animal relationship to one another. Two mental bodies can be related to one another by the needs of the physical body in a more subtle form. In both cases it is material relationship through and through. If the superior intellectual powers of man are dedicated on principle for the elaboration of the physical relationship the mere possession of such powers does not raise man above the level of the brute, but, on the contrary, tends to sink him lower than non-moral animals. The immoral man is not to be supposed to be actually better than the brute, although potentially the human life is certainly higher than that of the so-called lower animals.

These considerations point to the true ideal of human life. The needs of the physical body require to be subordinated to a higher purpose. This higher purpose must be other than the needs of the physical body. The empiric moralists suppose that the needs of the mind supply this desideratum. They think that if the refined needs of the mind are substituted in place of the gross needs of the physical body human life is necessarily raised above the level of brute life. Yes, but in the sense that the human life is thereby made only more elaborately and charmingly brutal. That is all. Both occupy the same plane, one of them being only clearer in securing their common animal purpose by a pretty common method. Man is made a clever animal, but is not raised above the plane of the brute, by his empiric intellectual achievements.

But so long as the needs of the physical body and of its auxiliary mind remain the determining factors of human choice, man can never hope to rise above the level of the brute, and greater freedom in such condition would only sink him deeper into the sloughs of the grossest forms of animalism. From this point of view all institutions that act as a restraint on the fuller indulgence of his animal nature should be regarded as conducive to the welfare of man's truly higher personality which has no affinity whatever with the potential animal moiety of himself.

But the negative function cannot satisfy the needs of the higher self. There is a positive function which aims at the satisfaction not of the negative needs of the physical body and the materialised mind but of the positive needs of the soul who is substantively different from both. The solution of the sexual problem is not attainable within the mental and physical scope in as much as it really and substantively concerns the soul. None of the problems of human life can be solved by the deluding temporary satisfaction of the apparent needs of the flesh.

Can they be solved on the plane of the soul, and if so, in what manner ? Is there a problem of sex on the spiritual plane ? How can the soul be male or female ? If the masculine or feminine needs of the soul are satisfied would such a solution settle the problem of the sexual needs of the physical body and mind ?

The case should be put in another way. It is not possible to supply the animal needs of the physical body and mind in a permanent or satisfactory manner. Neither is it necessary to try to do so because it is no concern of our real selves. The physical body and mind have no conscious feeling of their own needs. They are galvanized into an abnormal kind of conscious endeavour by the requirements of the soul who alone possesses real consciousness. Therefore, the so-called claims of the physical body and mind are really needs of the soul in this abnormal state. For this reason it is never possible to fully satisfy those needs. The abnormal needs only require to be replaced by the natural needs of the soul if a real solution is to be sought.

The sexual aptitude, therefore, represents also a need of the soul. The abnormality of the need in its present unwholesome manifestation need not be supposed to be without any basis for the existence of the corresponding spiritual need in the proper nature of the soul. It is necessary to get rid of the abnormality but not of the principle itself which it misrepresents. The abnormality is due to the necessity of the employment of the physical body and mind on the mundane plane. The natural function of the soul is located on the transcendental plane. Just as the soul can be dragged down to the level of the flesh it should be possible in an analogous manner to lift the employment of the flesh to the level of requirements of the soul. The soul should be allowed to predominate, neither the flesh nor the material mind.

In order to establish the natural supremacy of the soul it would be necessary to reclaim him from his present state of self-ignorance. This is the paramount duty of man in this world towards himself and his fellows. As soon as the necessity is really admitted the way is found to lie open to the view of the awakened soul. Then begins the positive spiritual function which is inconceivable to the dormant soul for the simple reason that he does not want to know it at all by following the only process.

There is a function for the corresponding sexual principle on the spiritual plane. The nature of that function is not intelligible to us so long as we are not established on the spiritual plane. That function is categorically different from the corresponding physical and mental activity. The appearance of the natural spiritual function should be allowed to replace the abnormal activity. The two have nothing in common except their incompatible correspondence due to the difference of plane.

In the real function male and female have distinctive natures who may be described as complementary personalities. They are the two reciprocal halves of the whole conscious personality. But the two are nevertheless essentialy one. This supplies the clue to the nature of the wholesome relationship between the two halves. One is the Predominating and the other the Predominated Moiety in the Absolute Cognition. The Predominated Moiety is simultaneously distinct from and contained in the Predominating Moiety. The Predominating Moiety can be but One. The Predominated Moiety alone may possess a plural nature without upsetting the principle of real Monotheism. The individual human souls are dissociable particles of the Predominated Moiety. The Predominated Moiety is of the nature of the Power of the Predominating Moiety Who is the Possessor or Proprietor of Power. The Predominating Moiety is the Male Absolute. The Predominated Moiety is absolute female possessing the aptitude for obeying every direction of the Predominating Moiety for supplying all conditions of the Activities of the Predominating Absolute.

This is the dry philosophical idea so far as it is possible to express the ultimate transcendental reality by means of the language of mundane thought. The real entity lies entirely off the plane of all mental speculation. Shree Radhika is the Eternal Associated Counter-Whole of Shree Krishna, Her Male Consort. Shree Radhika is the Source of all individual souls whose function is to be employed in the service of Shree Krishna by the alternative methods of loyal conscious submission, neutrality or actual opposition. The individual souls serve Shree Krishna as constituents of Shree Radhika When they forget that they are constituents of Shree Radhika they forget the nature of their own selves, and engage in the abnormal activities of the mundane plane.

The relation between one individual soul and another is that of obeying each other as constituents of Shree Radhika in the performance of their alloted service of Shree Krishna. To use mundane analogy all individual souls are spiritual females in a subordinate position to Shree Radhika whose service of Shree Krishna they naturally share by their nature as constituents. The objects of endeavour of the individual souls is to learn to obey Shree Radhika. Only by obeying Shree Radhika they can serve Shree Krishna.

Shree Krishna is the only Object of all worship. Shree Krishna alone is the Recipient of all service. No individual soul can be the recipient of any service on his own account or on account of any other individual soul. This points to the true significance of the Scriptual injuction to abstain from all sexual activity and avoid the company of all sensual persons, for qualifying for the service of Krishna on the spiritual plane. No idea of the positive nature of the function on the higher plane corresponding to the sexual activity of this world can be conveyed to those who are not completely freed from the diseases of the mundane sexual desire. It for this reason advisable to abstain from all empiric study of the descriptions of the Amorous Activities of the Divinity till one has been actually freed from every form of worldly passion by the preparatory service of Shree Krishna under the direction of the bonafide Acharyya.

Presidential Address at the All-Theistic Conference

ON the preceding day we began the discourse on the subject of Reference under the second head, viz., 'knowledge of real and non real entities.' We intend to speak a few words in pursuance of the same topic also today. We were telling about the desire for knowledge regarding the self. The meaning of the word 'atman' is rendered as 'Hari' by virtue of his qualities of 'extension' and 'maintenance.' The 'atman', or the individual soul, is part and parcel of the Supreme Soul. 'Hari' is the Supreme Soul. The word literally means the double function of Godhead viz., those of 'creation' and 'maintenance' 'even as the mother nourishes her child.' The nourishing function of the mother is, as a matter of fact, a tiny distorted reflection of the Function of Hari. Vishnu or Hari, Whose Form is made of spiritual essence, is the Deity Who presides over the function of conti nuance or existence which is distortedly reflected in the state of temporary existence intervening between the acts of creation and destruction in this world. All entities are nourished, none are destroyed, by the Supreme Soul. The function also points to expansion, the other co-ordinate activity of the soul denoted by the literal meaning of the word 'atman'.

The Sruti says, "The jeeva (i.e. the individual soul) is a tiny entity as tiny as the hundredth part of the breadth of the tip of the hair. Know that he is very small in magnitude and also unlimited". In other words the jeeva-soul (jeevatma) is an infinitesimally small particle of the Cognitive Potency. But he is unlimited by being of the essence of the Plenary Cognition. All those qualities that inhere in the Plenary Cognition are also present in the jeevatma in an infinitesimal measure. What soever is there in the Plenary Entity is also present in the tiny soul. But Plentitude is not tiny, the Integer is never a fractional part, nor a fraction of a fraction, nor a fraction of a fraction of a fraction. In many places in the Scriptures the Supreme Soul, Paramatma, is referred to by the term 'Atman'; and the jeeva is also often referred to by the word 'atman'.

The word 'jijnasha' means 'inclination to know'. The inclination to know about the 'atman' precludes the inclination to learn about divisible entity or fragmentary time. The discourse has in view the whole entity and time in all its fulness. The word 'atman' implies that the entity bearing the name is in a position to fully maintain himself. That which is not able to maintain itself cannot be termed 'atman'. The term 'atman' is used in this sense irrespective of his great or small magnitude. Today it is our task to speak about the attainment of the knowledge of the 'atman'.

Knowledge is located mid-way between the knower and the object of knowledge. Unadulterated knowledge occupies a position that is intermediate between the knower, whose exclusive function is to know, and the Object whose exclusive function is to become known to such knower. If any third function happen to intervene there can be no such thing as pure knowledge. That from which knowledge is obtained, that which supplies the proof of the reality of the cognitive function, can be one of three categories. It may be either pure cognition, a mixture of cognition and non-cognition, or non-cognition. If there intervene any non-cognitional entity in conjunction with cognition, it is mixed cognition.

'A-chit', or non-cognition, is the opposite of the conscious principle. When the object of knowledge is 'a-chit' (non-cognition) and the knower is a mixture of cognitional and non-cognitional elements the knowledge of such knower constituted of cognitive and non-cognitive elements is knowledge of 'a-chit' (non-cognition). In such circumstance the function of pure cognition is dormant, resulting in the consequent dormant condition of the recipiency of pure knowledge. If the object of knowledge were in possession of any cognitive potency it would have made some use of its free initiative.

When inquisitiveness regarding the nature of the 'atman', or the question 'Who am I ?', is asked by the conditioned soul he can obtain by way of response only knowledge which is a mixture of cognitive and non-cognitive elements. This must be so because in this case that by whose means the enquirer is to know viz, his knowing aptitude is shrouded in a gross and subtle covering which has imparted to it the condition which is a mixture of cognitive and non-cognitive elements. If the knower as well as the object of knowledge are both of them pure cognitive entities only then can there be any complete knowledge. If the knower happens to be more or less in contact with the external world then knowledge which is more or less of a mixed quality; can alone be attainable.

The Supreme 'Atman', (Paramatman) and the 'Brahman', are one and the same Entity. The nature of the Brahman implies 'non-duality' and 'greatness'. The distinctive characteristic of 'pervasion of the Universe', that is found in the Supreme Soul (Paramatman), is absent in the Brahman. Each and every limited entity produced by the Material Energy is devoid of the essential characteristic of the 'Brahman'. No limited conception is to be attributed to the unlimited Brahman.

Both the mundane and transcendental functions are located in the conception of the Supreme Soul (Paramatman). The limiting principle is left out in that of the 'Brahman' by the theory of the non-potency of the Absolute. The Supreme Soul implies the consideration of mundane and spiritual potencies. When the non-potent 'Brahman' is regarded as the Absolute it results in the destruction of the quality of distinctiveness represented by the specific existences of seer, seeing and seen. One aspect of the greatness of the Absolute is non-distinctiveness devoid of all distinctive manifestation ; the other aspect is that of the Possessor of the Plenary Potency full of distinctive manifestation.

Seekers of the Truth are divided into two classes. One of these maintain that they did not possess any knowledge previously and that their knowledge had a subsequent beginning. The other class will continue to know till the process of knowing itself automatically ceases at the long end. By the term "Seeking to know the self" are targetted positively the desire to know about the self and negatively the desire to know about the non-self.

The non-distinctive view of the "Brahman" expresses only the absence in the "Brahman" of the qualities of this world. The professor of the distinctive view declares that the non-distinctive view itself is also one of the infinity of the specific features of the distinctive spiritual manifestation. The non-distinctive view represents a specific distinctive manifestation viz., the conception of the absence of all mundane distinction. The level of view that takes into its consideration the simultaneous presence of the non-distinctive and distinctive aspects of the One Entity is that of the Oversoul or Paramatman.

The Oversoul according to the latter view is the comprehensive vast cosmic form as opposed to mere non-distinctive existence (?). The aphorisms of Patanjali viz., "or by enquiry about Iswara (Ruler of the Universe)", 'Yoga is suspension of the faculties of the receptive organ of consciousness',— embody a process of thought that is somewhat different from the view that professes the non-distinctive nature of the Brahman. By those aphorisms the falsity of all entities on the basis of a theory of illusion has not been admitted. The view of the potent Oversoul also betrays the admission of the internal, marginal and external potencies of the substantive Entity. The consideration of relationship between the living organism and its incorporated limbs involves the recognition of ownership of the limbs by the organism. Limb and organised body, form and possessor of form, potency and possessor of potency, are correlated pairs, the first terms supplying evidence of the existence of the entity denoted by the second. The substantive entity is one, its potencies are numberless. The view of the non-potent Brahman which does not recognise any distinctions as within the identical entity, within the same class, as between different classes or between knower, known and knowledge, is located at a long distance from that of Patanjali.

A certain number of persons think that the cessation of conception and perception should be the objective. In the period subsequent to that of Sakya Singha the view of absence of cognition i.e., imponderable material principle, and still later that of the finality of non-distinctive cognition, have become current. This last asserts that non-differentiated cognition alone survives while the distinction of seer, seen and sight passes away.

The Oversoul in His unity is an extended Entity, the incorporated fractional parts are small in magnitude. In the external potency there is present the aptitude for being affected by time, such disruptive characteristic being incompatible with the principle of unity. The internal potency presents the characteristics of permanence and wholesome integral differentiation. In the exoteric potency there is misery, in the esotoric potency everything is unmixed perfection.

If we give up the non-cognitive element, if we abandon the consideration of even the subtle mental body, we arrive at the view of pure cognition and are no longer influenced by the power of the exoteric potency. But when we proceed to join to our thinking the gross and subtle bodies, we are made aware of the mixed existence compounded of the principles of cognition and non-cognition and of those considerations that underlie the process of Hata Yoga on the path of fruitive material activity or that of Raja Yoga on the path of speculative knowledge. By these processes we are instructed in the views of a final desirderatum that is compounded of cognitive and non-cognitive elements.

When God is actualy realised the tiny particle of unmixed cognitive potency finds himself attracted by the plenary cognition. The relationship of incorporation or externality in regard to the potency of the substantive Entity, then becomes noticeable. The elements that are made of the measure of mundane quality produce the numerals one, two, many. Difference of seer, difference of the seen, difference of sight, vision of plurality, many images of the one entity reflected in many mediums, make their appearance.

In the realm of the inner potency all things displaying a unity of significance the numerals 1, 2, 3, 4,...indicative of diversity donot express any mutually contending relationship. The eternal diversity of the realm of the inner potency is not characterised by the qualities of mutual opposition, changeability and destructibility. Temporality or destructibility is not the proper nature of the eternal maternal function, is not the proper Nature of Vishnu, but only the semblance of the spiritual, fashioned by the Limiting Energy of of Vishnu. In this world the different things are perishable. They are not definable by the term soul or self. They are non-soul, ephemeral.

The individual soul is not non-soul. The atheist says that the individual soul is non-soul. The theist says that the individual soul is an eternal, spiritual entity—is an unadulterated cognitive entity in his own nature—is akin to the potency of the Plenary Cognition in a small measure—is eternally subordinate to, overruled by the Plenary Cognition.

Godhead possesses One variety of Limbs that are internal and another variety that are external. In the external Limb the full Cognition is obstructed, there is the aptitude of being affected by time. This mundane world has sprung from the external Limb. In this world everything is on the move. Every mundane entity evaporates like camphor. There prevails the quality of changeability in this world. The child grows into a young man, old age, then falls a victim to death,—is led to different strata of the mundane existence by the impulses of his desires, —is born in the womb of his mother, through semen and blood. It is our duty to enquire about the nature of our real selves. It is not our duty in this life to engage in the quest of the non-self. We have the follwing in the second chapter of the Geeta:-

'As a man puts on different and new clothing by casting off his old worn out apparel in like manner the in-dweller of the body is born in another new body by giving up his old worn-out corporeal frame. Weapons do not pierce the soul, fire does not burn him, water does not drench him, nor does wind dry him up. .....The soul is incapable of being cut by any weapon, of being burnt, drenched or dried up. He is permanent, free to inhabit any form, unchangeable in his essence and quality and ever-existent.'

In the Seventh Chapter of the Geeta there occurs the following:—

'My other and different Nature consists of solid, liquid, gaseous, heat, space, mind (Pradhan—material principle subtler than space), intelligence (Buddhi—prime material principle) and the ego (Ahanker). All this is secondary.

Know that my Supreme Nature is different from this. The Potency that is the source of all individual souls who lord it over this world is constituted of My Superior Essence."

These and other similar Shlokas give an account of the nature of the individual soul. The jeeva soul possesses a certain character when he is in the conditioned state. He has a different character when he is freed from the bound state. He displays a third different nature when he is marginally situated showing an aptitude for both bound and free states. This may be illustrated by the analogy of a gnomon whose opposite sides bear different designations.

Religious Endowment

MODERN socialism in its organised form aims at bringing everything under the control of the masses, irrespective of the competency of the latter for the proper discharge of responsibilities with which they are intended to be saddled. If the individualistic function of every person is controlled by the masses we would have the destruction and not the improvement of the individual. The masses, however, consist of the very persons the destruction of whose individual function they propose by this extreme assertion of the power and function of their aggregation.

If the aggregate were really more competent than the individual for the performance of the task they propose to take over from the latter the process would still involve a great loss of value by reducing the responsibility and consequent worth of individuals affected by the process. The rational principle requires that the mass activity should be supplementary to that of the individuals and should develop the scope of individual activity instead of lessening it in any way. If the mass wants to eliminate or weaken the initiative of individuals it will thereby only dig its own grave.

The above observations refer to all activities, secular as well as religious, regarded from the empiric point of view. The necessity for thinking out the issue in a really clear manner is all the more imperative at the present critical moment of the world's history, in as much as the omnipotence of majorities consisting largely of the urban proletariat thoroughly organised for the most vigorous concerted action for carrying out the mass mandate, is being confidently proclaimed from the house-tops by the miscellaneous host of aspirants to popular favour and the demand is being endorsed by most responsible leaders of secular society. The serious attention of all who aspire to lead the mass is invited to the above fundamental principle of any tolerable form of social existenc in the hope that no one should on principle try to add to the troubles of a sufficiently embarrassing position.

The only way in which the legitimate claims of the individual may be properly co-ordinated with the requirements of the salutary functioning of the aggregate, is by the inauguration of a reformed system of popular education on sounder lines. In proportion as the average individual is helped to acquire the effective sense of individual responsibility, possible only in a position of individual freedom, the aggregate will find it superfluous to try to regulate the details of the conduct of individuals within the individual scope proper. The raising of the level of character of the individual should, therefore, be the main concern of all aggregate activity intended for the improvement of its own quality. That kind of aggregate activity which is based upon the unprincipled support of the galvanised mass or of co-erced individual members, cannot but be suicidal in the long run.

The present systems of education do not sufficiently help in increasing the proper kind of confidence of the individual in his own individual judgment. From infancy the individual is sedulously nourished upon the materialistic literatures that provide no footing for his free individual personality in any important sphere of his activities. He is notoriously treated as a mere deduced and auxilliary functionary incapable of standing on his own legs or on legs selected by his own free judgment. The State and society are always at his elbow to make him their puppet at the tragic worldly show. He is trained to be yoked to an admittedly vicious system in the manner that will effectively prevent him from being ever really disengaged. He is expected to bear his trial heroically by being taught to be loyal to the voice of the people. This type of education, however favourable it may be to the maintenance of the status quo, has produced the very mischief which a really sound system of education should have tried to prevent at all costs.

The community of the future will have to deviate materially from the current democratic or other ideals if it is to consist of individuals with really free initiative in all matters which they have never yet possessed under any system that has been tried or imagined. The required system will limit itself to no individualistic or communistic ideals of the current types. It will have to harmonize all rational claims of the aggregate without coercing or curtailing the full freedom of a single individual. This, and nothing short of this, should be the only acceptable ideal for all consistent thinkers to whichever school he or she may find it necessary to belong for the time being. It is this system which is found in its only true and practicable form in the spiritual society set forth in its minutest details by the teachings of Shree Krishna Chaitanya as recorded in the extant works of His associates and eminent followers. A brief outline of the system is reproduced below.

The spiritual, which is also universal, society is based upon a carefully graded classification of its individual members. There is a real basis for this classification. The necessity for such classification lies in the fact that the dispositions of individuals vary. The degree of attachment for the service of Godhead in the stage of development of the Theistic disposition is the principle of such classification. The Theistic disposition implies a natural tendency to the sincere quest of the Absolute Truth and unconditional and loyal submission to the Truth. Those who deny the practicability of finding the Absolute Truth are non-Theists and are necessarily excluded from membership of the Theistic Community. If such persons are not actively hostile they will be in a position to co-operate to the extent they may agree and in the manner that is consistent with the principle of exclusive spiritual service.

The realisation of the unavoidable necessity for the quest of the Absolute Truth and of its practicability necessitates a thoroughly unbiased examination of the grounds of the current faiths. This should be the primary duty for individuals as well as communities that really seek for the proper solution. So-called revelations need neither be accepted nor rejected without a cautious and scientific examination of the grounds for such claims. Nothing need be admitted as revelation which does not forward the quest of the Absolute to the entire satisfaction of our unprejudiced cognitive faculty. There need be no prejudice and no weakness in the proper performance of this all-important duty.

To all persons who are sincerely desirous of knowing the real Truth the Absolute is pleased to reveal His True Nature by the process that is part and parcel of the revelation. The sincere seeker is intimated the true nature of the bonafide servant of the Absolute and thereby enabled to begin his quest of the Absolute under his absolute guidance. The teacher of the Absolute is fully aware of the disposition of all persons. When the bonafide seeker is directed by the mercy of the Absolute to the teacher of the Absolute he is made aware of his function towards the other members of the spiritual community into which he is admitted by the mercy of his teacher.

The spiritual community is identical with the eternal association of the pure souls. It does not require the help of anything else for its functioning. It neither fosters not retards the natural course of secular society. There is no ground for quarrel or disagreement between the two, as they are separated by a difference of plane. The spiritual plane transcends the mundane.

Every conditioned soul possesses a double nature. One moiety of his composite nature has affinity for the mundane and the other for the spiritual plane. If the mundane moiety is allowed to predominate by a person he finds himself located on the mundane plane for having the requisite scope for his elected activities. If the spiritual nature is allowed to have its sway, a person finds himself on the spiritual plane that corresponds to his spiritual nature. But a person cannot belong to both the planes at the same time. It is possible for him to choose to belong to either plane at a time. His individual choice will not, however, suffice to make him belong to any plane without help from Divine power. He will have to obtain the necessary help by agreeing to submit to power having control over the particular plane of his choice in order to be enabled by her grace to have a footing there. This voluntary, active, unconditional obedience to a greater power than himself makes a person responsible for the condition in which he may be placed although no condition is attainable by his own unaided efforts.

The manifestation of the theistic community in this world requires the co presence of more than one person who are sincerely prepared to submit to the power competent to admit them to the spiritual plane as the reward of their sincere hankering for the service of the Absolute Truth Whose grace alone can make them realise the nature of, and necessity for, such submission.

The spiritual community is incapable of being controlled by any mundane authority. This constitutes the real unbridgeable gulf between the preceptor and disciple, the laity and the clergy, which terms apply only to those who desire to serve the Absolute by their proper co-operation. The spiritual church consists of the preceptor and his disciples. The Preceptor wields the authority of the Divine Power admitting to, and maintaining on, the spiritual plane those who submit to be there by His grace. The Divine spiritual Power is the source of the spiritual authority of the Preceptor over the Church. The best of the servants of the Lord is elected by Him to wield His Authority. The members of the spiritual community obey the Acharyya unconditionally by the spontaneous impulse of their pure serving disposition. The Guru alone may admit or refuse admission to the spiritual plane. He is responsible to Godhead alone for his actions. It is the function of the members of the community to serve his transcendental activities with the help of the Scriptures and causeless Divine Grace.

This autocratic power of the Guru provides scope for the fullest, unhampered, exercise of the spiritual faculties of all pure individual souls. The organisation of the spiritual community is an Absolute Autocracy ensuring perfect freedom for all individual initiative. This Harmony can result only from Theism. Spiritual autocracy and democracy must not be confounded with their perverted reflections found in this world. What is best in the other world corresponds to the very worst of this world. It need not be supposed to be either for or against the principle of democracy or autocracy as they are to be found in this world. Krishna is the Absolute Autocrat of the perfect Realm of Goloka. We need not justify the autocratic form of any government of this world by the precedent of the spiritual. The relative conditions of the two planes are such that everything is best on the superior plane and nothing on the mundane plane is free from the gravest defects, although there is a correspondence between the two.

It should, therefore, be open to the secular State to recognise the rationale of the unconditional spiritual power of the bonafide Guru. The State should reserve the right of withholding its recognition of the spiritual authority of the pseudo-Guru. The secular State will be in the position of discharging this double responsibility by its attitude of patient deference towards those who appear to be bonafide teachers of religion by the spiritual test. If the secular State is disposed to prefer its mundane interests and seeks to subordinate the interests of the spiritual association of preceptor and disciples to those of secular society it would be guilty of acting irrationally and would thereby play into the hands of the pseudo-teachers of religion. The secular State could not adopt a more disastrous policy from the standpoint of the eternal welfare of everybody concerned.

The question of the control of religious endowments by the secular State is bound to come up in the near future in all the civilized countries of the world. The democratic State with its dependence on public opinion should be able to avoid the blunders of cynical worldliness liable to be engendered by too great material prosperity. The democratic State cannot have any legs to stand upon if it has to depend on the opinion of the empiric experts for its educational policy. The spiritual emancipation of the masses is not so impossible as is represented by the materialists. On the contrary the democratic State should weigh carefully the consequences of continuing to provide for the masses instruction in purely empiric knowledge by the exclusion of real spiritual culture. The democratic State can make no better use of its opportunity than by devoting its serious attention to the promotion of the comparative study of religion with a view to provide true spiritual education for the masses. The Gaudiya Math stands for a rational and real policy for State-regulation of all religious endowments in furtherance of the cause of real spiritual culture among all peoples of the world on the definite lines indicated above. The Gaudiya Math claims that the policy which it advocates has the sanction of all the revealed Scriptures of the world provided they are interpreted in an open and rational manner.

MIDDLE PART

328 "When Time, which art Thy form, O Lord, Brings about the destruction of all creation,
329 "Even then have I no fear by the Power of Thy Name.
What cause for alarm is there now when Thyself is present in my home ?"
330 Saying so Pandit Sreebas entered into the state of trance,
And saw the Manifestation of the Lord, in the company of his household.
331 By Whose sight the four Vedas long to be blessed,
Even Him saw all servants of Sreebas, male and female alike.
332 What shall I say of the disposition of Sreebas,
By the dust of whose feet the world is sanctified ?
333 As Krishna made His Appearance in the home of Vasudeva
And manifested all his Blissful Pastimes in the abode of Nanda.
334 Even so the Appearance of the Lord was now manifested in the home of Jagannath
And all His Pastimes were displayed in the house of Pandit Sreebas.
335 Pandit Sreebas is loved by all the Vaishnavas

All of them experience a great exultation by stepping into his house.

336 The Same Who is praised by recital of Vedic texts in consonance with the attitude of devotion,
The male and female servants of Sreebas beheld with joy.

337 When serving the Vaishnavas is the best of means,
Krishna is certainly attained by the mercy of the Vaishnavas.

338 Lord Biswambhar commanded Sreebas, 'Never speak of these occurrences to any other person.'

339 Biswambhar was ashamed at heart on regaining external consciousness.
Having re-assured Sreebas the Lord returned to His Own Home.

340 Then Sreebas Pandit was filled with gladness,
With his consort, daughter-in-law,
brothers, servants and maids,

341 Thus hymned Sreebas on beholding the Manifestation of the Lord ;
Who listens to it becomes the servant of Krishna.

342 Divine Balaram in His Form as Controller of all from within Commanded to sing the narrative of Chaitanya,

343 This is my humble prayer to the feet of the Vaishnavas,
"May the 'Holder of the Plough' be my Master in every successive birth."

344 As the 'Man-Lion' and the 'Lion of the Yadus' differ only in Name,
Just so are 'Nityananda' and 'Baladeva',— this I do know.

345 Balai is the Form loved of Chaitanya
Chandra,
The Same whom now we sing as the Moon of super-ascetics.

346 Listen, brother, with a singleness of heart to the narrative of the Middle Part,
In what manner the Lord performed the Kirtan for the space of one full year.

347 Sree Krishna Chaitanya and Nityananda
Chand are the life,
At Whose twin feet sings Brindabandas.

Here ends Chapter Second entitled 'Beginning of Sree Sankirtana' in the middle part of Sree Chaitanya Bhagabat.

VOL. XXIX | JANUARY 1932, Chaitanya-Era 445 | NO. 7.

Circumambulation of the Divine Realm of Braja

(Shree Braja Mandal Parikrama)

IT is not necessary for the sadhu to perform the extraneous circumambulation of Braja for attaining the sight of Godhead. The pure soul is eternally in the Realm of the Supreme Lord. The mundane tract of the country-side that is trod by every passer-by must not be confounded with the Highest Sphere of the Realm of the Absolute. It is not the glorification of any mundane locality, cause or person for which the devout pilgrim sets out on the Parikrama of Sree Brajamandal under the lead of the sadhu. Those who turn their attention to the landscape and the external features of the Object of worship or choose to regard the bath and the journey, eating and sleeping, as identical with the spiritual function, gain very little by their laborious journey. The whole attention of the pilgrim has to be given not to the landscape nor to any Shrine or figures. It is least of all necessary for him to attend to the activities of himself. It is imperative to turn all his attention to the minutest doings and sayings of the sadhu under whose direction he has chosen to perform the devotional journey. If he goes on indulging his own fancies and viewing with his own eyes the entities on the spiritual plane he may, indeed, succeed in deluding himself but he will assuredly miss the only legitimate object of his pilgrimage. If he attends and acts up to the instructions of his spiritual guide and does not allow himself to be directed by any other consideration he will automatically find himself on the plane of archanā in course of the performance of his spiritual journey, by the unsolicited and causeless grace of the sat-guru (bonafide spiritual guide).

The very first principle, therefore, which all intending circumambulators should accept in their heart of hearts is to attend fully to the instructions of the bonafide guide and prefer following them to every other occupation. If he tries to do so he will find that the bonafide guide will put him to activities which may be neither such as are to his liking nor what he had previously arranged for. The sat-guru will upset all his pre-arranged plans. The pilgrim is not expected to be allowed to guide himself in any way. It is the nature of the conditioned soul to be tempted to assume his own guidance however much he may profess to be guided by another.

It is not the journey but the method of its performance that really matters. Any journey that is performed under the lead of the sadhu is a spiritual function. No journey that is not so performed can have any spiritual value. The circumambulation of Shree Brajamandal has the further advantage of spiritual association which are of great help to the novice on the path of spiritual endeavour. The novice is in a position on such occasions to be put in mind by the sadhu that he is never to attend to the scene at all, because what he will see if he does so is not the thing which he should see but something else the sight of which will be obstructive of the real function for which he is out on his pilgrimage. The sadhu himself will see everything very carefully and minutely but he will never encourage the novice to any function of the kind. If the novice submits to be so thwarted at almost every step and is prepared to do whatever the sadhu tells him to do with loyal faith he will have gained the real object of his pilgrimage.

It is for the purpose of inspiring a real regard for the transcendental realm of Braja in the minds of the circumambulators that the function has been manifested by the sadhu. The mundane realm enables the sadhu to do this in a concrete way. In the realm of Braja it is not jeevas who enjoy the landscape. It is Krishna Who is the Sole Enjoyer of that Realm. The jeevas have no other function but to minister to the Pleasures of Krishna. The landscapes of that Realm are instinct with perfect spiritual life. They direct their denizens in their constant service of Krishna. The sadhu is the whole-time servant of Krishna. He can understand the directions of the spiritual realm that does not manifest its responsive nature to the eclipsed consciousness of conditioned souls. The sadhu alone is thus in a position to employ the conditioned soul in the service of the Realm of Braja although the latter is necessarily not fully aware of the same till after he has been freed from all obscurity of vision.

It may of course be asked why the mundane landscape should be at all necessary for the spiritual purpose. To this the reply is that the land of Braja is specially privileged for being used by the sadhu for his purpose. Mundane landscape is no doubt different from the spiritual realm. But the mundane in this case has a quasi-spiritual value as soon as it is used by the sadhu for kindling the spiritual consciousness of dormant souls.

The full spiritual process is not devoid of distinctive features. So much so is this the case that the abstract mental function is the furthest removed from the spiritual. Those, therefore, who choose to suppose, for no reason whatsoever, that the nature of the difference between the spiritual and mundane resembles that between the mental and physical, are, by reason of this very initial misunderstanding, prepared to disown with special vehemence any spiritual value of the gross mundane landscape. These persons are however much more condescending to the claims of the mental process to be regarded as being in close proximity to the spiritual.

But as a matter of fact neither the mental nor the physical process can have any spiritual quality of its own. Such a quality may be impressed on either by the Grace of Godhead. The land of Braja has been endowed with this privilege by the fact of the Appearance of Shree Krishna Who performed His All-Holy Pastimes there. Why should it be altogether impossible for theists to believe in the previleged nature of the land of Braja in view of the above fact ? The land itself is not spiritual. It will not benefit any person if he serves the inanimate landscape of Braja by the resources of his mundane nature. The guidance of the sadhu, however, needs must be allowed to make a vital difference, as it enables even the conditioned soul to be used in the quasi-spiritual service of the transcendental realm of Braja apparently to an external observer in terms of the mundane landscape. But the service of the mundane tract of Braja is not thereby rendered identical with the quasi-spiritual service (archan) of the transcendental Realm under the guidance of the sadhu who uses the privileged mundane tract for the purpose of enabling conditioned souls to obtain the unconscious service of the transcendental realm.

Those who choose to suppose that they are enabled to serve the transcendental realm of Braja by simply residing in the mundane district of Muttra or by following mechanically any course of ceremonials laid down in the Scriptures under the guidance of persons who have themselves no access to the spiritual plane, are no less deluded than those stubborn atheists who do not believe in the testimony of the revealed Scriptures or affect to regard the Scriptures as the concoctions of the fertile imaginations of barbarous peoples. The perusal of this discourse cannot materially benefit either description of persons.

The worship of Godhead can have only the character of an eternal quest of the Truth in consonance with the principles of transcendental epistemology. Those who take this mundane existence to be identical with the transcendental are either fools or knaves. It is of course possible for persons with a dull intellect to accept (?) anything and everynhing 'on trust' (?). But this kind of innocent (?) stupidity will not help any person in arriving at the real Truth. Nor can any person find the Truth by means of his intellect alone. But that also is no argument in favour of the least neglect of intellectual alertness on the path of spiritual endeavour. The Truth makes His Appearance to the pure cognitive faculty. He refuses to appear to the non-cognitive aptitude. The reason why the intellect cannot find truth is not that it is disposed to exert itself but that it does not do so in the proper manner and with sufficient thoroughness. The legitimate function of the intellect in approaching the Absolute is of a receptive nature. The intellect of man commits an offence against itself the moment it attempts to comprehend the incomprehensible by its own resources. This type of aggressive intellectualism is the mother of atheism and is not less harmful than even deliberate stupidity.

It is possible to desire to have the perfectly receptive attitude towards the Truth, waiting for Him to take the initiative for enabling us to find Him. This waiting for the Truth is the only real form of the quest after the Truth. To a person with such bonafide receptive disposition the Truth reveals Himself to the extent that is sufficient for enabling him to continue the quest in a successful manner. The success consists in this that such a person is able to distinguish between the Truth and non-Truth when either of them presents itself to him for his receptive acceptance. He is also enabled by the quest to recognise those persons who are bonafide seekers of the Truth. He is thereby enabled to cultivate their society by the method of receiving enlightenment from their words and deed. All this, however, does not mean that the seekers of the Truth can actually trod the spiritual plane itself. Neither can he be regarded as being wholly confined to the mundane plane. He is quasi-free. He is said to be free even in this life (jivan-mukta) by the Scriptures.

Shree Krishna Chaitanya exhibited the ideal of conduct of a person who has been favoured by the gift of love to the feet of Krishna by the grace of the sadhu. He did not perform His Pilgrimage under the lead of any other person. He gave an explanation of the cause of His Own peculiar conduct to Prakashananda, the atheistical pedantic leader of the sannyasins of Kashi of His day. He said in effect that He was a wholly ignorant and dull-headed person. Sri Gurudeva took pity upon Him for His extreme dullness and told Him that it would not be possible for such a foolish person to profit in any way by the study of the Vedanta. He was instructed to take the Name of Krishna instead. As He did so, in a short time He experienced a great change of disposition. It was no longer possible for Him to control His own Activities. The Name of Krishna entirely mastered His Whole Self and made him dance, sing, cry and in short behave like one mad. He was alarmed by the appearance of those symptoms and repaired to His Guru and submitted to him His condition. His Guru told Him that he was most fortunate in having such a disciple as the symptoms were those of a person in whom love for Krishna manifests itself by the Grace of the Holy Name. His Guru then explained to Him that the Name of Krishna has a power to excite love for Krishna if He is chanted without offence and that love for Krishna is the one thing needful for the soul and the end of all spiritual endeavour.

When love for Krishna makes its appearance in the spiritual essence of the perfectly pure soul such a person forgoes all inclinations for any form of sensuous activity of both the gross and subtle varieties. He is then entitled to visit the realm of Braja. He is also impelled to do so by his irrepressible love for Krishna. But he finds the realm of Braja itself in mourning in its agony of separation from Krishna. The sight only serves to still further augment his own sorrow.

There is thus no change of mood for the lover of Krishna when he is in the realm of Braja. He does not find Krishna in the realm of Braja but meets instead the denizens of the place undergoing grief of separation from Krishna like himself. Krishna is not to be found in this world in this age. This is a matter of life and death to the person who really loves Krishna. There can be no happiness nor solace for such a person during his sojourn in this world. He is never happy in any other sense even by his residence in the land of Braja.

The circumambulation of the realm of Braja has no significance for any one except those who really love Krishna. Those who love Krishna can alone understand how the ceremony was performed by Shree Chaitanya. Unless one takes the Name of Krishna in the manner that is free from offence revealed by Shree Chaitanya as the Divine Dispensation for this Age of Discord (Kaliyuga) by His Conduct and teachings, one can attain to no real love for Krishna. A true follower of Shree Chaitanya is, therefore, alone entitled to perform the spiritual pilgrimage of the realm of Braja.

Shree Chaitanya is Shree Krishna Himself Who alone is the Source of His Own Service. Shree Chaitanya is Shree Krishna exhibiting the Mood of Love for Himself. The Mood of Love is only the Exterior of Shree Chaitanya. But this exterior is not less Absolute than the Inner Personality Who is no other than Krishna Himself. Krishna is also Chaitanya. The Master is the Source of His Own service. Krishna as the Source of Love of Himself, is Caitanya. The two Aspects of the Divine Personality are not complementary but are identical. Shree Krishna is eternally served by the denizens of Braja. He is thus served in a visible form in the Dwapara Age in this world. Shree Krishna is also served in a visible form in the Kali Age. In Kali Age He is served as Shree Chaitanya by the denizens of Shree Nabadwip which is identical with the White Isiand (Shvetadwip) of the Scriptures. The service and associates of Shree Krishna Chaitanya are identical with those of Shree Krishna. The service of Shree Kaishna Chaitanya alone is attainable in the Kali Age. Those who aspire to the service of Krishna in this Age have no other alternative but to serve Shree Krishna Chaitanya. Unless they are fully prepared to do so they are bound to go astray and be betrayed into a course of sensuous activities under the garb of religion.

Idealism

IDEALISM is one of the commonest forms of ego-worship. The empiricists are as a rule subject to hugging this form of error. It is a psychological product of the infatuated soul in his conditioned state. As soon as the soul begins to seek his own elevation it becomes necessary to set up an ideal to be realised. This ideal is nothing but a fancied desirable state based on the experience of one's sensuous self. In the conditioned state the soul regards his own physical and mental welfare (?) as the centre of all his activities. This welfare is conceived in a twofold manner. It is supposed to consist of acquisitions of new and enlarged faculties for the improvement of the quality as well as volume of one's so-called "happiness". It is negatively considered as consisting of dropping certain mal-acquisitions that have been found to be undesirable by actual experience. This picking and choosing process issues in the formulation of an ideal state which it is considered, is the duty of all rational persons to seek to realise as the goal of his activities.

This method is sufficiently bad as laying down the standard for the activities of an individual. It becomes a profane nuisance when it is used for the purpose of conceiving the Nature of Godhead Himself. The motive that obviously underlies all idealistic attempts for the formulation of a "theory" of the Absolute is to create a God who would be serviceable for the realisation of the greatness of the manufacturer of the "Idea". The Subjective Existence of Godhead is to be wholly ignored. The necessity of having to serve the pleasure of this concoction of one's 'puppy brain' is also clean forgot.

Is it possible for a person rationally speaking to be the slave of an Idea? It would be nothing short of an agreement for stopping all activity for the sake of enjoying the supreme satisfaction of a stagnating stupefaction. The reason of man commits suicide the moment it is seriously impelled to tie itself to any ideal. All this is so evident that it is necessary to have an oxymoron in order to avoid the clear consequences of such a stupid folly. And accordingly we meet with the proposal of the duty of having a "progressive ideal".

But is not the real implication of the term 'progress' incompatible with the purpose that underlies the idealistic process itself? Let our memory be refreshed a little for realising this fact. The "Ideal" is to be the goal of all our activities. A progressive goal is no goal but only the wayside. Is it necessary to conceive a goal that is really in order to be misled thereby?

It is, of course, assumed by the fashionable empiric psychology that the process of thinking would be impossible if one is to be prevented from the attempt of realising such a progressive ideal. The mental process is defined to start with the formulation of an ideal state on the basis of one's past experience, at any rate after the mechanical stages of puerile activities have been passed. As it is the nature of the mind to act in this way one has to be content with it whether it is reasonable or not.

The idealist is a very frank person who is "sure as anything" of his own theories professing all the time that they are "by no means" final. It is, indeed, prima facie a very noble psychology that would commit us to a palpably irrational course without being able to prove "in a final sense" its real necessity. That is also never to be considered as the reason why it is baking mighty little bread during its long period of 'progressive' existence.

May it not be more rational, and therefore more scientific, to agree with those Oriental investigators who declare that the mental process is an abnormal occurrence which is capable of being restored to its normal rational position. By indulging an abnormality one can not be rationally held to be 'progressing towards any state that should be really desirable for a rational being. There is a real distinction between the naturalistic and the rational activity of the mind. The naturalistic is inconsistent with the rationalistic. One is of course free to choose either course as the basis of his own individual conduct. But no clear thinker need confound the one with the other, nor proclaim in and out of seasan the impossibility of following the strictly rational course.

The idealist surrenders himself consciously or unconsciously to the naturalistic impulse. He is thereby borne to the opposite point of the compass to that to which the rational faculty should advise him to proceed. The root cause of the trouble is also clearly stated by the transcendental psychologists. They say that the enquiry should be directed to the soul, the source of the mental activity. The empiricists affect to believe that the mind can be studied on its own terms. This dependence on the mind involves the stultification of method and the futile quest of no final solution of any thing particular.

Just as the empiricist refuses to take cognisance of the actual existence of the soul as the substantive source of the mental function, in like manner and by reason of his illogical dependence on the limited mind he fails to take cognisance of the actual Subjective Existence of the Absolute as being both the Pathway and the Goal of all activities of His constituent subservients.

Listening to Harikatha

WE must distinguish between Transcendental words and mundane words. Whenever mundane words enter the ear four other senses inspect them to see whether they agree with previous experience. When the Transcendental sound comes it carries all necessary implements and things that sweep away wrong ideas as well as supply accommodation for the vacuum caused by dismantlement of older constructions by the Transcendental sound. It clears up all previous deposits of knowledge.

The Transcendental Sound should not be confronted with ordinary sound. It offers no scope for any invasion of the challenger. It does not allow any opposing sound to disturb its progress. When it comes ordinary sounds give way to make progress towards it.

The Transcendental Sound is called Harikatha (discourse about the Godhead). Mundane sounds give facility to our enjoyments. We display two different sorts of feelings towards them. We either welcome or don't give invitation. We don't welcome pain. The Transcendetal Sound does not give pain in any way. The Transcendental Sound is furnished with all sorts of good wishes that we require. We should study it in this life. This is initiation diksha), consisting of the utterance of some mantras that dispel all sorts of wrong impressions and we are placed in a plane where no opposition is met. That sound is needed by every body. Though some people who cherish materialistic ideas do not care to give their full attention not feeling that there is any such necessity. But we require that persons holding the materialistic view should be given to understand that we are in urgent need of studying the Transcendental sound. It is efficacious in our present stage also.

People now-a-days freely indulge all sorts of materialistic views. They do not entertain the idea that everyone is vitally interested for studying the Transcendental sound which they neglect by accepting the materialistic views. All of us seek help and strive to utilise every thing for ephemeral purposes. The receiver as well as grantor of such help are both of them liable to be transformed. So the empiric knowledge is inadequate to cope with the Transcendental sound. But Transcendental sound furnished all sorts of help necessary for its proper acceptance.

We cannot help ourselves at the time of birth, in infancy. As a matter of fact we are always in need of constant help. This is our life-long experience. With growing experience we scrutinize about gradation of the help received. We become aware that a Grammar school imparts less knowledge than higher academies which furnish more information.

We are always seeking greater education. The rationalistic propagatory agencies force us to look for sources of help. We find that Infinity can meet our demand. That Infinity should be Ever Existent, All-knowledge All-Blissful. We should not neglect the study of these things. We poor people must get help from others. All help is to be received from the Fountain-Head. He can do no wrong to us. We need not associate any wrong idea in the Fountain-Head. But our poor achievements trouble us with the idea that we can easily dispense with such help from the Fountain-Head.

The primary thing is that we require help. A knower requires that knowledge should intervene to cement him with the source of knowledge. The conception of theists should not, therefore, be dismissed. We are allowed to stay in the mortal coil for some time. But I am to leave off my mortal frame and should not be satisfied with my present predicament. We should never be satisfied with mundane aspirations only. This life is short in comparison with the eternal life. We should pay more attention to preparation for that life.

We may attend to some of our primary necessaries of this life and need not be deprived. But this need not lead us to forget that this is not the summum bonum and to consider that we should have purely mundane interest and should have no interest in the eternal Transcendental.

We can have access to distant objects through the medium of sound only. Ocular activity cannot help us to be in contact with things lying behind the screen. Sound enables us to have an idea of things located out of sight at a long distance, beyond human scope, beyond our intellectual horizon.

We show natural eagerness to go further than the human scope. That can be by the Transcendental Sound carried by a messenger who cannot give any time to these mundane examinations. This is only three dimensions,—line, surface and cube. This space permits us to have no idea of fourth and higher dimensions and divisible parts. Our senses cannot go beyond three dimensions.

We are always looking out for having our knowledge extended. That can be by the Transcendental Sound which possesses this particular potency. The great peculiarity of that Sound consists in this that it is identical with colour, figure, attributions, qualities, activities, and need not be challenged and testified by the four other senses, or arguments. We should allot a portion of time to the study of this subject. We should always be impressing on our friends, who have got an atheistical tendency for prefering material advancement, that the soul has got a sacred duty of getting rid of the restricted duties and that therefore, we should give a lending ear to the Transcendental Sound whenever such an opportunity presents itself.

Putana

THE first act of New-born Infant Krishna recorded by the Bhagabatam is the slaying of the demoness Putana .

The demoness Putana was deputed by King Kansa to kill all the new-born babes of the realm of Braja where he was informed by the Divine sage Narada that his would-be slayer had been recently born. Meanwhile Shree Krishna had been born in Kansa's prison and had been conveyed by His father Vasudeb to the house of His foster parents Nanda and Yasoda in Braja during the night of His advent. The guards of the prison had failed to detect the movements of Vasudeb who had returned to his prison with the new-born daughter of Yasoda with whom he had exchanged His own Boy without the knowledge of Yasoda herself. Vasudeb had carried Krishna in his arms across the flooded Yamuna lashed into fury by the tempestuous weather of that moon-less night. He had waded on foot the deep waters which had been turned into yawning whirlpools by the fury of the tempest. The iron chains, bolts and locks of the barred gates of the prison had opened of their own accord on the approach of Vasudeb carrying Krishna to the home of His foster parents. The daughter of Yasoda was thereupon duly reported to King Kansa as the new-born dreaded eighth issue of Devaki. The King rushed into the prison-call on receipt of the tidings for which he had been waiting through long years of sleepless nights. He was at first willing to spare the life of the baby as the prophecy was to the effect that he would be killed by a male-child, eighth issue of Vasudeva and Devaki. But he thought of being relieved of all possible doubts on the point by putting to death the new-born girl. As, however, King Kansa was on the point of dashing the baby on the block she escaped from the grip of the King and disclosing herself as the Deluding Energy of Godhead as she remained visible for a short time in mid-sky, assured the King of the certainty of the birth of his future slayar but dissuading him from the fruitless attempt of avoiding his fate by the cruel murder of innocent infants. Saying this Mahamaya disappeared from the view of the astounded King. Kansa was subsequently informed by the sage Narada that his future slayer must have been born among the denizens of Braja and that if he was mindfull of his safety he should lose no time in taking drastic measures for nipping the danger in the bud. This advice was relished by the blood-thirsty coward and he had accordingly deputed the demoness Putana to kill by an unsuspected process all the new-born infants of the surrounding country.

The demoness Putana accordingly made her appearance in Braja and presented herself in the home of Yasoda during the absence of Nanda who was then in Mathura to pay the tribute due from him to King Kansa. The demoness had assumed the form of a most beautiful matron with a most benignant aspect as she approached the couch where Infant Krishna had been put to sleep by Yasoda. Yasoda had noticed the unknown female as she entered the house, but did not suspect any foul play. She accordingly watched the new-comer without any anxiety as she made her way to the couch of the Baby, took Him up in her arms and offered her breast to the Infant to give Him suck. But the nipples of Putana's breast had been tipped with the deadliest poison.

The Infant Krishna was aware of the intention of the demoness and took hold of the breast of the monster with His supple Arms. The grip of the Infant was so terribly severe that it was enough to drive the demoness to despair of her life as she was convulsed by the mortal agony of the pressure of Krishna's little Hands. The Infant then applied His lips to the breast of Putana and sucked away her life in an instant. The terrible monster bellowing with pain was compelled to disclose her own huge, loathsome demonaic form as she fell lifeless on the ground covering with her hideous carcass a long distance with Infant Krishna still clinging to her poisoned nipples.

Accordingly the first act of the milkmaids, who with Yasoda rushed to the spot, was to snatch the Infant Krishna from the breast of the terrible demoness. Then they all marveled how the Baby could escape unhurt from the clutches of the demoness. They attributed the safety of the Infant to the mercy of the gods who are specially kind to the helpless. The affrighted milkmaids invoked the help of all the gods and goddesses for their continued protection of the Infant.

Meanwhile, Putana was saved by her service to Krishna for having offered Him the suck of her poisoned breast. The author of the Bhagabatam is careful to mention that the good fortune of the demoness equaled that of Yasoda in as much as her breast had been sucked by Krishna. Putana, therefore, attained to the eternal status of the foster-mothers of tho Supreme Lord in the Realm of the Absolute.

The above narrative of the Bhagabatam embodies a most important moral for the seekers of the Absolute. But before offering the interpretations of the texts favoured by the former Acharyyas I would like to draw the attention of the reader to certain possible misconceptions regarding the nature of the interpretations about to be offered.

There is a class of persons who insist on the texts being taken in their literal worldly sense. Much ingenuity has been expended for extracting meanings that may be satisfactory to the empiric judgment of the interpreters working by this literal method. Their argument is not unintelligible. As the revealed literatures are to be regarded as containing the information of the Absolute the language should be regarded as part and parcel of the meaning of the text. From this conclusion the literal interpreters jump to the wrong inference that it should be possible for the conditioned soul to ascertain the real meaning of the scriptures by sticking to the lexicographical sense of their actual wordings. This latter part of the argument is inapplicable to the subject which is transcendental. The words possess a double meaning. The lexicographic meaning refers to the entities of this world and is, therefore, inapplicable to the case. The esoteric meaning is not accessible to the gross senses and mind of the conditioned soul. This is the great and insuperable difficulty. The literal interpreters who follow the lexicographical meaning of the words err grievously in overlooking this all-important consideration.

The transcendental meaning of the words cannot be conveyed to the senses of the conditioned soul so long as he does not agree to follow the method of submissive listening to the transcendental sound appearing on the lips of the pure devotee. There is a definite line of succession of the bonafide teachers of the truth. The bonafide teacher should be available sooner or later to the real seeker of the Truth. The bonafide Acharyya is not recognisable by the hypocrites and atheists who do not really want to serve Godhead. So long therefore, as the bonafide teacher does not manifest his appearance to the pure cognitive essence of the seeker of the Absolute Truth it is necessary for the candidate for spiritual enlightenment to concentrate on self-examination to be able to avoid harbouring any lurking traces of insincerity. The words of the sadhu are also available, by his causeless mercy, for bearing the efforts of such candidates, for finding out their own insincerity.

It is by overlooking or deliberately neglecting to undergo this preliminary training for obtaining access to the transcendental meaning of all words that the literal interpretationists who follow the ordinary lexicographical meaning of the words of the scriptures fail to understand the necessity of never deviating from the interpretations offered by the self-realised souls to whom the transcendental meaning of the words is available. Those empiricists who, while following the lexicographical and syntactical method of the literal interpretationists, do not scruple to read their own meanings into the texts under the impression that the scriptures and the products of the human brain liable to every form of error and, therefore, fit to be corrected by the equally erring caprices of other hypothetical thinkers on the ground of allegations of error that cannot be proved, are disposed to think that the interpretations offered by the Acharyya are not scrupulously faithful to the texts and offer allegorical explanations for supporting their own sectarian views

These possible misunderstandings are stated to invite the attention of the reader to their bearing on the following interpretation of the narrative of Putana based on the exposition of the former acharyyas heard from the lips of the bonafide teacher of the Absolute. The interpretation is not offered as a literal lexicographical explanation nor as an allegory concocted in the light of empiric knowledge of the past history of the race and may accordingly be accepted as such.

Shree Krishna manifests His Eternal birth in the pure cognitive essence of the serving soul who is located above all mundane limitations. King Kansa is the typical agressive empiricist. He is ever on the look-out for the Appearance of the Truth for the purpose of suppressing Him before He has time to grow up. This is no exaggeration of the real connotation of the consistent empiric position. The materialist has a natural repugnance for the transcendental. He is disposed to think that faith in the incomprehensible is the parent of dogmatism and hypocrisy under the guise of religion. He is also equally under the delusion that there is and can be no really dividing line between the material and the spiritual. He is strengthened in his delusion by the interpretation of the scriptures by persons who are like-minded with himself. This included all the lexicographic interpreters. The lexicographical interpretation is upheld by Kansa as the real scientific explanation of the Scriptures and one that is perfectly in keeping with his dread of and aversion of the transcendental. These lexicographical interpreters are employed by Kansa in putting down the first suspected appearance of any genuine faith in the transcendental.

King Kansa knows very well that if the faith in the transcendental is once allowed to grow it is sure to upset all his empiric prospects. There is historical ground for such misgiving. Accordingly if the empiric domination is to be preserved intact it would be necessary not to lose a moment to put down the transcendental heresy the instant it threatens to make its appearance in right earnest. King Kansa acting on this traditional fear is never slow to take the scientific precaution of deputing empiric teachers of the scriptures backed by the resources of Dictionary and Grammar and all empiric subtleties to put down, by the show of spacious arguments based on hypothetical principles, the true interpretation of the eternal religion revealed by the scriptures. Kansa is strongly persuaded that the faith in the transcendental can be effectively put down by empiricism if promt and decisive measures are adopted at the very outset. He attributes the failures of atheism in the past to the neglect of the adoption of such measures before the theistic fallacy has time to spread among the fanatical masses.

But Kansa is found to count without his host. When Krishna is born He is found to be able to upset all sinister designs against those who are apprised by Himself of His Advent. The apparently causeless faith displayed by persons irrespective of age, sex and condition may confound all rabid empiricists who are on principle averse to the Absolute Truth Whose Appearance is utterly incompatible with the domination of empiricism. But no adverse efforts of the empiricists, whose rule seems till then to be perfectly well-established over the minds of the deluded souls of this world, can dissuade any person from exclusively following the Truth when He actually manifests His birth in the pure cognitive essence of His soul.

Putana is the slayer of all infants. The baby, when he or she comes out of the mother's womb, falls at once into the clutches of the pseudo teachers of religion. These teachers are successful in forestalling the attempts of the good precepter whose help is never sought by the atheists of this world at the baptisms of their children. This is ensured by the arrangements of all the established churches of the world. They have been successful only in supplying watchful Putanas for effecting the spiritual destruction of persons from the moment of their birth with the co-operation of their worldly parents. No human contrivance can prevent these Putanas from obtaining possession of the pulpits. This is due to the general prevalence of atheistic disposition in the people of this world. The church that has the best chance of survival in this damned world is that of atheism under the convenient guise of theism. The churches have always proved the staunchest upholders of the grossest forms of worldiness from which even the worst of non-ecclesiastical criminals are found to recoil.

It is not from any deliberate opposition to the ordained clergy that these observations are made. The original purpose of the established churches of the world may not be always objectionable. But no stable religious arrangement for instructing the masses has yet been successful. The supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya in pursuance of the teaching of the scriptures enjoins all absence of conventionalism for the teachers of the eternal religion. It does not follow that the mechanical adoption of the unconventional life by any person will make him a fit teacher of religion. Regulation is necessary for controlling the inherent worldliness of conditioned souls. But no mechanical regulation has any value even for such a purpose. The bonafide teacher of the religion is neither any product nor the favourer of any mechanical system. In his hands no system has likewise the chance of degenerating into a lifeless arrangement. The mere pursuit of fixed doctrines and fixed liturgies cannot hold a person to the true spirit of doctrine or liturgy.

The idea of an organised church in an intelligible form, indeed, marks the close of the living spiritual movement. The great ecclesiastical establishments are the dykes and the dams to retain the current that cannot be held by any such contrivances. They, indeed, indicate a desire on the part of the masses to exploit a spiritual movement for their own purpose. They also unmistakably indicate the end of the absolute and unconventional guidance of the bonafide spiritual teacher. The people of this world understand preventive systems, they can have no idea of the unprevented positive eternal life. Neither can there be any earthly contrivance for the permanent preservation of the life eternal on this mundane plane on the popular scale.

Those are, therefore, greatly mistaken who are disposed to look forward to the amelioration of the worldly state in any worldly sense from the worldly success of any really spiritual movement. It is these worldly expectants who become the patrons of the mischievous race of the pseudo-teachers of religion, the Putanas, whose congenial function is to stifle the theistic disposition at the very moment of its suspected appearance. But the real theistic disposition can never be stifled even by the efforts of those Putanas. The Putanas have power only over the atheists. It is a thankless but salutary task which they perform for the benefit of their willing victims.

But as soon as the theistic disposition proper makes its appearance in the pure cognitive essence of the awakened soul the Putanas are decisively silenced at the very earliest stage of their encounter with New-born Krishna. The would-be slayer is herself slain. This is the reward of the negative services that the Putanas unwittingly render to the cause of theism by strangling all hypocritical demonstrations against their own hypocrisy. But Putana does not at all like to receive her reward in the only form which involves the total destruction of her wrong personality. King Kansa also does not like to lose the services of the most trusted of his agents. The effective silencing of the whole race of the pseudo-teachers of religion is the very first clear indication of the Appearance of the Absolute on the mundane plane. The bonafide teacher of the Absolute heralds the Advent of Krishna by his uncompromising campaign against the pseudo-teachers of religion.

Relation between the Transcendental Activities of Shree Krishna and Shree Gaursundar

SHREE Krishna is the only Object of worship of all animate and inanimate entities. There is none who is His Equal or Superior. He is the only Supreme Lord of everything. The Names of Shree Krishna are identical with Himself and are not to be classed with any other names which are non-Krishna. The names of the Infinity of the Primary and Secondary Manifestations of Krishna are also Divine but none of them are either Equal or Superior to the Names of Krishna Himself. Krishna is the Source of all Divine Manifestations and as such is infinitely Superior to all of Them.

But Krishna is All-Powerful. He is full of Infinite Powers the nature of which is wholly inconceivable to the paltry reason of the tiny soul of man. The jeeva soul even in the state of his perfect spiritual existence is incapable of knowing Krishna as He is. To the pure jeeva soul Krishna is, indeed, pleased to reveal His Transcendental Nature, but only an infinitesimally small part of the same. The fortunate soul who is so favoured by Krishna also does not want to know Krishna fully. He only wants to know Him in any way and to any extent that it may be His Pleasure to make known to him for the purpose of enabling him to serve His Pleasure. The least knowledge of Krishna partakes of the Quality of the Absolute Truth and is also the fullest knowledge being the indivisible knowledge of the only Reality.

The above asserts that Krishna or the Absolute is a Person. He is a Male Person. He has got His Own specific Name, specific Form, specific Quality, specific Activity and specific servitors. The above denies that the Absolute is a non-specifiable entity, that the Absolute is non-existent, that the Absolute is impersonal, that the Absolute is identical with the phenomenal or that the Absolute is devoid of all activity.

The above also asserts that Krishna is knowable to jeeva as his Supreme Master when He is pleased to accept his willing service. But Krishna is not only the Recipient, He is also the Bestower of His service of the jeevas. The service of Krishna is ultimately performed by Himself. He is absolutely self-contained. He is also at the same time the only Recipient of the free services of all jeevas. These two Roles although they seem to be contradictory are exquisitely reconciled in the All-Powerful. Krishna can bestow on jeeva His own service which is ultimately rendered by Himself without interfering with the full initiative of the jeeva in the matter.

Those speculative philosophers who forget that Krishna is possessed of all power try to include Him within the four corners of the logic of the limited intellect of man. Such attempt is both profane and self-contradictory. The Absolute can override the forms of mundane logic without committing any offence against the true rational principle. Nay, the Absolute fulfils the requirements of our rational nature by overriding all limitations that are binding upon the conditioned state.

If the empiricist objects to the statement that Krishna is the only Person Who is really available to serve Himself, he would thereby be deprived of the Truth by illogical deference to the forms of the logic of limited existence. Krishna is both the only Master and the only Servant of Himself. Who is then the jeeva ?

The jeeva is also of the Essence of Krishna but with a distinctive nature of his own. The jeeva is so constituted that he can function as a separate and independent agent towards Krishna, although he is also part and parcel of Krishna. By the Will of Krishna this nature of the jeeva is also eternal. The jeeva is not Master. The jeeva is an eternal servant of Krishna. He can, however, wish to be Master. Such a wish will also go against his own proper nature. As the jeeva is a free animate agent by his constitution he is allowed to act in accordance with his unnatural wish in a correspondingly unnatural realm where he appears in the seeming role of Master in place of Krishna. This is the deluded conditioned state.

What really happens to the jeeva when he is in the conditioned state is that he is encased in a spurious nature which he considers to be identical with his proper self. The nearest analogy to the conditioned state is that of a person in the state of dream. In a dream a person does not lose the sense of his identity, but neither does he know that he is not really the person with whom he identifies himself in the state of dream. In the conditioned state a person similarly supposes himself to be identical with his physical body and limited mind. He is, for all practical purposes, not at all aware that he is not really either of them. At the same time it would not also be quite accurate to assert that he is not wholly aware of his supermental personality. He is, indeed, always dimly aware of the latter, but without being able to make any practical use of his composed intuition. He is also apt to become wholly engrossed in the fortunes of his limited nature and to have no grievance on account of his inability to realise his superior nature of which he hears definitely from the revealed Scriptures.

But the jeeva does a great harm to himself by choosing to remain contented with the affairs of his body and mind. He fails utterly to render the service that he owes to the Truth. He is engaged in misleading himself and others from allegiance to the Truth. This is really suicidal as he does not want to do anything of the kind either while awake or while in the state of his dream. It is the nature of the jeeva to seek the service of the Truth under all circumstances. He can never be divested of this peculiar impulse, no not even when he is born in the shape of an animal. There are gradations of the sense of this responsibility to be sure, but it is never wholly absent in a definite form.

The physico-mental state of existence derives its value from the fact that during such existence also the spiritual consciousness is retained in the nascent form and perpetually strives to become manifest. No condition of the flesh is able to quench the thirst for spiritual living. The conditioned soul is thus found to pursue the identical object as the soul in the state of grace, but under circumstances that are a really insuperable barrier to the realisation of the common purpose.

If the soul in the conditioned state could be really satisfied with the results of his activities the question of spiritual living would not arise at all, because it would have been nobody's business to worry about a matter that supplies nobody's wants. The jeeva can be really interested only in activity that satisfies his own perpetual cognitive requirements. The hankering for the service of the Truth thus becomes his chief requirement.

The soul in the conditioned state is in a position to require external help for realising the objects of his desire. This help can also come only from Godhead. It is, or rather should be, the duty of the jeeva to seek the service of Shree Krishna by His Grace. It is his nature to do so. If he does not seek the service of the Truth he has no other alternative but to seek the thraldom of un-Truth. But nothing is also really untrue. He is, therefore, reduced to the dire necessity of stunting his own rational faculty or perverting the same for the purpose of disowning the Truth even when He presents Himself to him. But the soul of the jeeva is by his nature incapable of undergoing any substantive change. The change has, therefore, to be brought about by means of a proxy in the shape of the physico-mental sheaf which is supplied by Godhead Himself through His Deluding Potency. The jeeva is apprised at every step of all the inevitable consequences of his perversity ; but he nevertheless chooses to serve his perverted facsimile for spitting his own proper self.

Under the circumstances there can be no opening for the reclamation of the conditioned jeeva from the state of the bondage of self elected ignorance in as much as the jeeva being a pure cognitive entity cannot be forced to really accept anything against his own individual judgment. How is he then to be reclaimed at all ?

The Personality of Shree Gaursundar supplies the answer. The conditioned soul cannot, indeed, be forced to serve Godhead. But he is also not able to exist at all without a function. He is accordingly supplied with a function which he, or rather his perversely inclined self, is enabled to consider as worth his willing acceptance. That which the perverse self considers as worthy cannot be identical with the function of the soul in the state of grace. The difference between the two consists in this that in the perverse state the soul desires domination and refuses to submit except for having domination. Shree Gaursundar accepts even service on this condition. But as Shree Gaursundar is really no other than Shree Krishna Himself any service rendered to Shree Gaursundar on His Own terms is ipso facto service rendered to Shree Krishna Himself. The service of Shree Krishna has this natural quality that any person who once really performs the same is thereby enabled to resist all the suggestions of the non-rational constituent of his nature. Shree Krishna refuses to receive service on condition. But as the jeeva in the conditioned state is determined not to offer unconditional service Shree Krishna manifests His Eternal Role of His Own Servant for enabling the perverse soul to be saved on his own terms.

Shree Gaursundar and His servitors are identical with Shree Krishna and His eternal subservients. Shree Gaursundar and His servitors appear in this world in order to serve Shree Krishna in the manner in which Shree Krishna is served by His milkmaids of Braja. But Shree Gaursundar does not find Shree Krishna Whom He is to serve in this world. He asks everybody to tell Him where and how He is to find Shree Krishna. This quest is continued all through His Career with an increasing earnestness without being concluded.

From the moment of His Initiation He gives up all worldly occupation and behaves as one who finds Shree Krishna in everything and yet experiences the agony of a perpetual separation from Him. These two attitudes are hardly reconciliable in one and the same person. The story of Shree Krishna's Amours with the milkmaids of Braja is found in the Bhagabatam in a form that does not appear to have anything in common with the performances of Shree Gaursundar and His associates. The sexual note appears to be wholly absent in the Career of Shree Gaursundar. On what grounds, therefore, can the Activities of Gaursundar be claimed to be identical with Those of Shree Krishna ?

A number of the followers of Shree Gaursundar were celebates and sanyasins while many others were married persons with children and occupations. They form a congregation of worshippers and meet together for chanting the sankirtan of Krishna and discoursing to one another regarding Krishna. Their conduct is, however, by no means popular, although the personal influence of Shree Gaursundar and His associates is never the less marvellous. But the Pastimes remain practically confined to those persons who are subsequently identified with the corresponding characters in Krishna Leela. What influence, if any at all, did this performance so strictly confined to His own produce on the people generally ?

Many individuals were converted to the spiritual life, but almost wholly by personal influence. Arguments were used in a number of cases, but even in those cases the conversion, when it took place was wrought in an inexplicable way. How then was any person really converted ? Those who were converted have always said that their conversion was entirely due to the causeless mercy of Shree Gaursunder and of His associates. This must mean that no merit on their part was necessary. Can this also be described as salvation wrought on the terms of the persons saved ? If this was so why were not all persons saved ? Why did Shree Chaitanya meet with a growing popular opposition even after He had renounced the world in order to placate His opponents ?

The ideal of the service of Shree Krishna that was put before the people by the conduct and precept of Shree Krishna Chaitanya and His associates was too high for any person of this world. But this aspect also failed to win anything like general recognition. Krishna was made to appear in the Form of His Kirtan within the scope of the hearing of all persons. The chant of the Name of Krishna was the weapon used for the conversion of the masses. Were they actually converted ? The books answer in the affirmative. But History, specially empiric History, looking only to the surface of things does not record that the external forms of the religious practices of the people underwent any general and decisive change.

The Kirtan itself was popularised but only at a subsequent period. It is of course, no proof of the real success of any religious movement that it has been enabled to secure the allegiance of a large number of professed followers. The actual teachings of no prophet are followed by more than a very small minority of his professed followers.

Shree Gaursundar teaches the all-sufficiency of the kirtan of the Name of Krishna. The ritual is the simplest possible. The only condition that has to be fulfilled is that the Name has to be chanted in the company of a saint. If there is no saint there is no Name Who only makes His Appearance on the lips of His bonafide devotee. No person is likely to object to listening to a saint if he is really such. But there are those who may object to the Name, Krishna. There may, of course, be persons who are prepared to object to the whole process as being too simple and puerile. But Krishna-talk may attract those who object to the chanting of the Name. The talk should be universally acceptable in a speculative Age like the present. But no talk on the part of the conditioned soul will be effective unless it is held with a person who really serves Krishna.

The method of Shree Gaursundar accordingly is that as soon as a person has found his spiritual nature due to the causeless mercy of the bonafide devotee he should forthwith give up all other occupation and engage in the wholetime chant of the Name of Krishna. He should go from door to door chanting the Holy Name with a loud voice so that He May be heard by everybody. Krishna is to be hawked as a free gift at the door of all the slumberers of this world, that Krishna may have a chance of being heard by the most graceless of egotists if He goes down on His Knees, as it were, to obtain the most casual form of mere recognition of His very existence.

But there will still be those who may behave like Shukracharyya. When Shree Vamana Deva begged King Bali for the gift of no more than space of the measure of three strides of Himself Who appeared to all superficial observers to be no bigger than a very short statured dwarf, the magnanimous King was advised by Shukracharyya, who was the King's preceptor, not to agree to the proposal as the Dwarf was no less a Personage than Vishun Himself Who was asking for the gift in order to deprive the King of his sovereignty of Heaven, Earth and the Nether-worlds.

The papers report that the Viceroy has been pleased to propose to hear the kirtan of the Name of Krishna chanted by the devotees of the Gaudiya Math. This will be taken in all quarters in the spirit of genuine good humour as portending nothing very serious. But if Shree Gaursundar is to be believed the chant of the Name of Krishna by the sadhus is no less an event than the Form of the Appearance of the Absolute Person Himself to the eclipsed consciousness of the conditioned soul by the unobjectionable process of begging to be heard.

Shree Madhvacharyya

THE point in the system of Shreeman Madhvacharyya that led Mahaprabhu Shree Krishna Chaitanya to prefer it to the other Vaishnava schools, is that Shree Madhva holds that the individual soul is categorically and eternally distinct from Godhead. If there is anything which Shree Madhvacharyya disapproves with all the strength of his pure theistic nature it is the open and covert attempt to insinuate the equality and similarity of the jeeva with Krishna. The distinction between them is final and unbridgeable notwithsanding the fact that the jeeva is certainly part and parcel of Godhead in the sense that nothing can exist outside Godhead.

The logic of Shree Madhva is at once searching and decisive regarding the point at issue. If, he rightly contends, there is distinction and non-distinction between any two entities the distinction is the real nature of their substantive relationship with one another.

According to Madhva the jeeva is a constituent part of Krishna. It is not admitted in this exact form by the Gaudiya School. The jeeva, according to the Gaudiya view, is a manifestation of an infinitesimally small particle of the Marginal Potency of Godhead. The nature of the jeeva is thus of the same kind as the Marginal Potency of Godhead. The jeeva is not akin to the Possessor of Potency. This distinction is not explicitly admitted by Shree Madhvacharyya. But it does not make the two systems differ vitally in actual practice.

Unless the distinction between jeeva and Godhead is admitted to be real and categorical the relationship of service stands on a very shaky basis, indeed. The position taken up by Shree Ramanuja is midway between those of Shankara, who is a exclusive monist, and Madhva who is a rigid dualist. Madhva thinks that Ramanuja endangers his logical position unnecessarily by what he regards as a concession to the Monistic view.

The jeeva is the eternal servant of Krishna. He is never the master except when he may be delegated authority for the purpose of service. The mastership of jeeva is no less service than any other more palpably recognisable serving function. The essence is the same always. If he is realised as power the point is clearly and absolutely defined.

The controversy is thereby shifted to the more intelligible ground of the nature of the relationship between Power and the Possessor of Power. Is Power to be considered identical with the Possessor of Power? The two should be distinguishable in practice. I possess the power of vision but I am not identical with the function of seeing. My nature as subject is no doubt expressed in the act of seeing. I can also make my existence effective only through my activities. But I am always free to express myself in any way I like. I am not subject to the expression. It is my activity that is the derived category. The expression may stand separately on its own legs without interfering with my freedom to disown the same if I like. This logical subserviency of the expression to the will indicates the nature of the true relationship between them.

Logically speaking the Power of the Absolute is also necessarily Absolute. The Power of the Absolute should express only the Absolute. Are we, therefore, to admit two Absolute Entities ? How also can the Absolute be the subservient to Himself ? But the relative also cannot be subservient to the Absolute by the same logic. The relationship between the two is realisable as one of actual subserviency The forms of the empiric logic cannot reconcile the apparent incompatibility. But the fact need not be disowned by undue deference to an admittedly faulty Science which is limited to certain cut and dry forms of procedure.

The Power of the Absolute is Absolute in the sense that it is unlimited as regards its scope and form of operation. The Absolute Power is capable of operating in all conceivable and non-conceivable ways. That does not mean that it is not subservient to the Absolute Possessor of Power. One of the inconceivable ways in which the Absolute Power is found to operate is that it can produce the manifestations of the Limiting Principle which are incompatible with its own subjective nature.

The jeeva is a product of Power. He is an eternal self-existing manifestation of Power. These are not contradictory when we bear in mind that the expression may exist independently and eternally by the Will of the Possessor of Absolute Power. In this sense the Biblical dictum that 'man is made after the image of God', and not exactly as God, may be admitted with all necessary reservations to prevent any misconceptions of the nature to which exclusive Monists are found to be prone.

Shree Madhva did not analyse the relationship to the point of precision that it attained in the hands of the Gaudiya Acharyyas. But his sane theistic instinct unerringly fastened upon the supreme importance of emphasising the absolute nature of the distinction between the jeeva and Godhead as regards their respective natures and functions.

The jeeva is not only the product of Power, he is a spiritual agent who is detachable from subserviency to the Absolute Spiritual Potency eternally obeying Her Absolute Master. The jeeva is, therefore, in the position of the under-servant whose proper function is to obey the Master under the guidance of the Plenary Spiritual Potency.

The jeeva is capable of being led astray if he does not allow himself to be guided by the Plenary Spiritual Potency. It is, however, legitimate and practicable to distinguish between the relationship of the jeeva to the Plenary Potency and that with the Possessor of the Potency. The plenary Potency is not the Master but the only Servant of the Master. The jeeva can never directly serve the Master. There is always one of two intervening Agents between the jeeva and Godhead. One of these Agents is called in the Scriptures the Plenary spiritual Potency to whom reference has already been made. The other Agent is the Deluding Potency. This Latter gets hold of the jeeva who does not want to be guided by the Spiritual Potency but wants to be his own guide. Being himself of the nature of Potency it is not wholly unintelligible why he might desire to avoid the service of another whom he is to regard as his fellow-servant.

In other words the Plenary Potency is distinguishable from Godhead as the Obeying Principle in the Absolute. She is capable of being designated as the Counter-Whole of the Absolute. That which carries out the Will of the Absolute is, therefore, the eternally associated Predominated Moiety of the Absolute Integer. It would be a grave error to regard the Plenary Spiritual Potency as an entity that is separable from the Absolute. The operation of the Plenary Potency is the only modus operendi of the Absolute.

The jeeva is placed in a lower grade of agents. The Plenary Potency may or may not allow him to serve Godhead. The Aspect of the Plenary Potency that is presented to the jeeva whom She wants to deprive of the service of Godhead is termed in the Scriptures "Maya" or the Limiting Potency. The jeeva is provided by the Limiting Potency with limited faculties and functions in a corresponding world on the scale of his tiny magnitude in order to allow him to indulge his disloyal attitude towards Herself. If the jeeva wants to serve Godhead according to his own judgment his inclination is nothing less than a form of unwillingness to serve at all. Because he must know very well that the guidance of the Plenary Potency is identical with that of Godhead Himself. It is, therefore, imperatively necessary to prevent any possible misconception of the difference that separates the jeeva from Godhead and His Proper Agent in Her Benign Un-deluding Aspect. The jeeva is no servant of Godhead except by permission which has to be earned by a disposition of active loyalty in obeying unconditionally the Guidance of the Spiritual Potency.

Presidential Address At The All-Theistic Conference

WHEN I desire to be dressed up as 'Master', to lord it over others, I become subjected to Physical Nature and profess to be an exclusive Monist, (Mayavadin). The Buddhists are materialistic Monists. The Mayavadins who profess to follow the Scriptures are designated masked Buddhists as they rely on the evidence of their senses and to assume an overt attitude of challenging controversy.

The harmonious adjustment of all differences on the spiritual plane is based on the correct form of Moni-m (Shuddhadwaita). Sripad Shreedhara Swami professes the principle of correct Monism. Those who profess the doctrine of exclusive Monism (Kebaladwaita) endeavour to misinterpret the correct Monistic views of Sreedhara Swami in terms of their hybrid principle. This motive of the undifferentiated Monist is dishonest. Sharbajna Muni promulgated the doctrine of correct Monism many centuries before the time of Shankaracharyya. His native village is Kalyanpur in the District of Madura. Correct Monism was distorted in course of time to the form of exclusive Monism which subsequently attained the position of predominance by the contrivance of a wise providence for confounding the atheists. There has even been an attempt to confuse the popular judgment by identifying Sharbajnatwa Muni, who lived after the time of Shankara, with Sharbajna Muni by the method of deliberate manipulation of evidence.

In as much as unwholesomeness in the shape of a doctrine of pervertibility would tend to be prominent if the theory of the jeeva being a constituent part of the substantive Reality Himself as found in the writings of Shree Madhvacharyya, were accepted. Shree Gaursundar has approved the doctrine of Shakti (Potency) as propounded by Shree Lakshman Desika. That this world is not the perversion of the Substance but of His extraneous Potency, has been stated by Shree Gaursundar. The theory of the followers of Jesus Christ that jeeva has been created by God within the limits of time, is unsound. The jeeva is a differentiated part of the potency of the substantive Reality. In jeeva there are present simultaneously the qualities of permanent and temporal existences.

All the eternal substantive qualities are present in the Inner Potency. The triple qualities of sattwa, rajas and tamas are to be found in the external Potency or mundane Nature. The pure sattwa (cognitive existence) is eternally present in Vishnu, the Ocean of blessings in the shape of all permanently existing qualities. In Him there is no conditioned state. This world which is a product of the triple mundane qualities of sattwa, rajas and tamas is characterized by the conditioned existence. The mundane qualities of sattwa, rajas and tamas are mutually dependent categories.

"All activities in this mundane world", says the Geeta, "are performed by mundane Nature (Prakriti) by means of the triple qualities. The conditioned soul, blinded by the principle of mundane egotism (ahankara), chooses to regard himself as master" (Geeta 3.27). The principle that is diametrically opposed to the mundane world, which is the product of the triple qualities, is that of inaction or the state of deep slumber covered by the theory of non-differentiation. "I slept at ease". "Easy sleep" is retainable by one's memory. A person is conscious of his ego even during deep, easy sleep; otherwise there could be no remembrance of such happy slumber. There is a similar state when a person can remember and give out experiences of his previous births.

"The state of error is traceable to the misconception that the soul is identical with the physical body". The conviction that this gross physical body is myself is the cause of mistaking one thing for another. "I am this physical body which is liable to be damaged by time,——I have been scolded by such another person"—these and such-like statements are applicable to the relationship of the gross and subtle physical bodies.

The real unalloyed 'I' have no beginning nor end. I am neither the gross physical body, nor also the mind. I am not the mind that changes when the morning changes into noon and noon into evening. I am not the mind which is sometimes cheerful and at other times miserable.

That conception of the truth that undergoes change is a function of the mind. That consciousness which is capable of getting mixed up with the non-conscious, is a product of the marginal Potency. What a wickedness it must be for one who is a product of the marginal Potency to entertain the idea that he is himself the possessor or regulator of Power. It is such persons who are referred to by the Shlokas of the Geeta viz., 'Prakriti Kriyamanani...', Isworohang...', etc.

Just as paddy stalk is really quite different from 'shyama' grass and it is necessary to weed out the latter; in exactly like manner spiritual consciousness is substantively different from non-spiritual, and it is not less necessary than to get rid of the latter. Those persons who profess the compatibility of the claims of the spiritual with those of the non-spiritual are apt to imagine that association with saint and sinner, paddy plant and 'shyama' grass, devotion and aversion to Godhead, are one and the same thing.

CHAPTER III

Summary :—In this Chapter have been described the condition of the Lord under the overpowering influence of the loving mood, the Lord's Manifestation of His Form of the Divine Boar in the house of Murari Gupta, the hymn of Murari on beholding the Divine Manifestation, the doings of Sree Nityananda, His arrival at the residence of Nandan Achaiyya, the Lord's narration of His Own wonderful dream, requistion of wine by the Lord under the influence of the mood of Baladev, the arrival of the Lord with His Own at the house of Nandan Acharyya and His meeting there with Nityananda, the devices of the Lord to make known Nityananda and other events.

1 All glory to Biswambhar, Beloved Lord of the lives of all;
Glory to the Lord of Nityananda and Gadadhar.

2 All glory to the subservient of His devotees, of whom Advaita is the foremost.
Vouchsafe, O Lord, to deliver the humble by the gift of the boon of devotion.

3 In this manner at Nabadwip Beautiful
Gauranga
Swam on the high tide of bliss in the company of all His Own.

4 All His servants are as the life of the Lord.
He wept uttering the name 'Krishna' as He clasped them all by the neck.

5 On beholding the Love of the Lord all
His servants
Wept, forming into a ring round Him.

6 Let alone His servants, by the sight of His Love
Even dried wood, stones and hardest stuff are bowed to the ground.

7 All the devotees, discarding wealth, son, home,
Sang the Kirtan all night and day, in the company of the Lord.

8 Gaura Chandra became full of devotion for Krishna;
When and whatever He heard the Lord was affected by the same.

9 When the Lord began to weep in the Mood of His servant
The Ganges would appear and pause for full two praharas.

10 When the Lord laughed, He would laugh for the space of one prahar
When in the state of trance He did not breathe during the prahar.

11 Ever and anon He realizes His Own
Nature, sits up in a defiant Mood,
Laughs saying, "Verily I am Himself;
I, indeed am He".

12 "Whither has old Nara gone who has brought Me here?
I will go from door to door and distribute unsolicited the Sweet liquid of devotion"

13 Forthwith that very instant He bursts into the cry 'Oh Krishna! Oh My Darling,"
And entwines His Own hair, round his Feet.

14 Reciting the verses that describe the conveyance of Krishna by Akrura Forthwith falls on the ground in the act of prostrated obeisance.

18 One day, hearing a text expressive of the Mood of the Divine Boar,
The Lord in Person proceeded to the house of Murari, growling with a voice of thunder;

19 At heart overflowing with love towards Murari,
Like unto Lord Ramchandra Himself towards Hanuman.

20 As the Lord, Son of Shree Shachi entered the home of Murari
Gupta greeted His Feet with reverence.

21 The Lord, as He sped on His way, repeated the word "Boar".
The astounded Murari Gupta looked on all sides.

22 Biswambhar entered the Shrine of Vishnu.
He saw in front of Him a beautiful vessel of water with spout,

23 The Lord became the Form of the Boar at that moment;
He lifted the vessel with His teeth by His Own Divine Impulse,

24 The Sacrificial Boar grunted and manifested
His Four Paws:
The Lord said, "Murari, recite the hymn of My praise".

25 Murari was struck dumb by the Vision
unseen before;
Murari did not find any words that could be said.

26 The Lord insisted, "Say on, have no fear;
Thou didst not know up till now that Myself am here."

27 Murari trembled as He said in a supplicating mood,
"It is Thyself Who alone know'st how to praise Thee.

28 "He, one of whose hoods accommodates the infinity of the worlds,
Praises Thee by putting forth a thousand mouths,

29 "Yet does find no clue, as the selfsame
Lord has declared,
Who else is then able to speak Thy praise?

30 "The Veda whose view is acted upon by all the world,
The selfsame Veda does not know All that Thou art.

31 "Whatsoever we see or hear, O Lord, this boundless world,
Is absorbed into the cavity of one of Thy Hairs.

32 "Thus, ever Full of Bliss, art Thou in what-so-ever Thou dost.
How, indeed, then can the Veda know it?

33 "Whence it is that Thou alone know'st Thyself.
The recipient of Thy favour also knows, if Thou make'st him know.

34 "What right have I to utter Thy Praise?"
So saying Gupta wept and made obeisances

35 The Divine Boar was pleased with the words of Gupta;
He made reply, giving vent to His Wrath against the Veda;

36 "I have neither Hand, Foot, Face nor Eye ;
For so, indeed, does the Veda malign Me.
37 "At Kashi the wretch Prakashananda teaches so.
The wretch cuts My Body to pieces.
38 "He teaches the Veda but does not admit My Form ;
His body is afflicted with leprosy in every part, yet he knows it not.
39 "My Body, so Sacred, Full of all the sacrifices, Whose Quality is sung by Aja, Bhaba and others as high as they,
40 "By whose touch purity is sanctified,
How dare the wretch say My Body is not true ?
41 "Listen, Murari Gupta, I tell you what you must know as essential ;
I will divulge to you the secret of the Scriptures ;
42 "I am the Sacrifice, the Divine Boar,
Essence of all the Scriptures ;
Myself in olden times delivered this world ;
43 "Myself have come down as soon as the sankirtan has begun ;
I will destroy the wicked for the sake of My devotees.
44 "I cannot bear the oppression of My devotees.
I kill the oppresssor even if he happen to be My Own son.

U.P. Propaganda :—Editor addressed a large meeting at Jagadisprasad Hall, Muzaffarnagar, U.P., on Nov. 29. A party of devotees accompanied Editor on a visit to Shukartal (in Muzaffarnagar District) on Nov. 30.

Shukartal is famous as being the holy tirtha where the Bhagabatam was first revealed to the world at large by being recited to King Parikshit in the presence of a numerous gathering of religionists of all denominations by Sree Shukadeva Goswamin who had received the Divine Theme from his father Sree Vyasadeva to whom it had been revealed by the mercy of Sree Narada, desciple of Brahma, the original recipient of the knowledge of the Absolnte from Shree Krishna Himself. King Parikshit was then undergoing the state of intense inquisitiveness regarding the Absolute on the sacred bank of the Ganges unmindful of his approaching end by the bite of the venomous Takshaka within a week by the curse of Shringi, son of Shamik Muni. King Parikshit was thereby disposed to listen to the narration of the Bhagabatam from the lips of Sree Shukadeva Goswamin without caring to waste a thought for guarding himself against his impending death which occurred by the bite of Takshaka after Sree Shukadeva had left the spot on the recital of his narrative. In our next issue we intend to deal with the spiritual significance of this famous event that has made Shukaratal one of the holiest tirthas of the world. The editor is desirous of establishing a permanent center of propagaanda of the teachings of the Bhagabatam on the site where King Parikshit, forgetful of his impending death, listened to the Narrative of the Deeds of the Supreme Lord from the lips of His beloved servant, Paramahansa Sree Shukadeva Goswami, a nude shining boy of Sixteen whose very presence had the effect of disposing all persons to love for Krishna.

First Anniversary of the disappearance of Bhaktiranjan Sreshtharya Jagatbandhu Das Adhikari ;—The Festival of the first anniversary of the disappearance of Bhaktiranjan prabhu was celebrated on Dec. 9 at the Calcutta Gaudiya Math. Many distinguished persons of the Metropolis joined the great assembly of the citizens of Calcutta in the spacious Lecture Hall of the Math to pay their tribute of loving homage to the memory the devotee of Krishna. Mr. Justice M.N. Mukherjee of the Calcutta High Court presided over the meeting of the evening Honourable Sir B. B. Ghose, Srijut Nalinbikash Ganguli, Mr. H. C. De Attorney-at-Law, Rai Hazari Mal Bahadur, Raja Narayan Das Barman, Mr. Abinas Chandra Das M.A., Ph.D., Prof. Anantakrishna Aiyer Rai Bahadur, Principal Rajkumari Das, Raja Khitindra Deb Rai Mahashaya, Srijut Kiranchandra Datta and other leading citizens were present.

The function opened with the wellknown song by Thakur Bhaktivinode consecrated to the particle of dust of the feet of the pure devotee", which was sung by Sripad Ananta Vasudeb Paravidyabhusan. Mr Justice M. N. Mukherjee was then duly proposed to the Chair by the Editor seconded by the Hon'ble Member Mr B. B. Ghosh. The Editor of the Gaudiya then read his paper, 'Biraha-smriti'. He was followed by Srijukta Jadunandan Das Adhikari who read a poem in English, 'In Memoriam' and by Srijukta Manujaprasad Sarbadhikari who read his poem' Sraddhanjali.' This was followed by a speech by the Editor.

The President in addressing the meeting said that the occasion was of a unique nature. It was not an ordinary condolence meeting over which he has been asked to preside. 'We read in our Scriptures as well as in those of other countries that Godhead sends His chosen servants for conveying His Grace to the Peoples of this world when they are in sorest need. His Divine Grace Srila Prabhudad has been Divinely commissioned for re-establishing the Vaishnava Religion in its pure form. Srila Jagabandhu Bhaktiranjan was sent to this world for doing his bit in the promulgation of the religion of love by giving to the citizens of Calcutta a palatial building where they might assemble in strength for listening to the Word of God. This is the firm conviction of my heart. In association with you all I, therefore, Offer my tribute of deep reverence to Srila Jagabandhu Bhaktiranjan Mahashaya on this day of the Anniversary of his disappearance,

The function was concluded by a song of Thakur Bhaktivinode voicing the sentiment of reverence for the greatness of the pure devotee of Godhead sung by Srijukta Haripada Vidyaratna

Sanatan Dharma

Lectures at Bani-Bhaban

(Benares City)

THERE was a large gathering of residents and visitors at Bani-Bhaban on the 18th Nov. 31, to listen to the lectures that had been arranged to be delivered by the Bengali Tola Durga Puja association. The speakers were His Holiness Tridandi Swami Sreemad Bon Maharaj, Pandit Sripad Sundarananda Vidyavinode, B. A., Editor of the Gaudiya and His Divine Grace Paribrajakacharyya Sri Srimad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj, Acharyya of the Gaudiya Vaishnava Community, Who follows the Supreme Lord Sri Krishna Chaitanya. His Divine Grace was President of the meeting. The Subject of the discourse was 'Sanatan Dharma' (the eternal natural function of the soul).

After Srimad Bon Maharaj and Sripad Sundarananda Vidyavinode had placed before the audience the general bearings of the subject by their respective speeches the President delivered his learned discourse. A few of the points of the lecture which took about two hours in delivery are presented in the following imperfect summary.

The speaker introduced himself as one who is 'meanest of the mean' in the language of one of his superiors, the Acharyyas, who had adequately dealt with the subject and requested his audience to overlook any austereness of his language on the ground that he has been tied to his method by a long habit.

The eternal function is that which is unchangeable and suitable for all time and persons, that which has for its support the One Eternal Supreme 'Purusha'. Purusha signifies, in the sphere of pure cognition, dominating activity. The reciprocal term to Purusha is 'Prakriti' whose function is to be dominated by the 'Purusha'. The eternal function may be located in the sphere of the Dominated or it may be supposed to belong to the realm of the Possessor of Power. In this mundane world we find ourselves in the realm of the dominated supposing ourselves to be the possessors of dominion.

The eternal function is not directed to Power but to the Possessor or Source of Power, the 'Real Entity' of the Bhagabatam, as distinct from the plurality of entities that are the products of Nature. The Absolute Reality of the Source of all power distinguishes Him from the category of Power. The Source of Power is not identical with Power. The Bhagabatam does not tell us of the products of Nature, but of non-produced eternal entities. The terms used to designate the two divisions of the entities are 'Prakrita' (products of Nature) and 'Aprakrita' (not produced by Nature).

The objects that are knowable to man are products of Nature and are also made cognisable to him by the same agency. They are part and parcel of the Mundane Power. They do not take us beyond the category of that Power. There can be no function without Power. Philosophy accordingly aims at the elimination of the normal activity characterised by the triple texture of knowledge, knower and known, in order to get at the Source of Power. The cognitive function of our senses is confined to the activities of Nature. The empiricist is limited to examination of the transformations of Physical Power. Such examination leads to the proposal for elimination of the triple condition. Indivisible knowledge has the opportunity of manifesting His Appearance only on the elimination of the triple mundane quality. Transitoriness is the characteristic of all phenomena on this mundane plane. The transitory activity cannot be designated as the eternal function. That which transcends 'a-tat' (non-Absolute) is 'tat' (Absolute) the Real Indivisible Knowledge. He is different from all so-called knowledge obtained by us as enjoyers, or as abstainers from worldly enjoyment. Inanimation offers itself to our consciousness as the goal at the point where the faculty of mundane enjoyment is sought to be artificially extinguished. The triple specification of knowledge, knower and object of knowledge, is concomitant of the limiting activity of the senses. This activity creates all difference and discord and is the real impediment of uninterrupted harmony and love. In the attempt to avoid limitation the dualistic principle is sought to be discarded by dint of mere metaphysical argument. We seek to get rid of our separate free existence to extinguish the triple texture of the mundane activity. Those conclusions are the products of imagination and do not touch the real issue. They are the products of the operation of the Deluding Potency, the result of the inaptitude to receive the enlightening meaning of the words of the Scriptures.

Had this not been so our pure spiritual essence would find Vasudeva in everything. The opening verses of the Bhagabatam instruct us to address our prayers to the ultimate Truth as distinct from the mundane. The ultimate Truth cannot be realised except by His own light. Those who realise Him are many. There are distinctive individual personalities of servitors in the realm of the Absolute.

I do not see because my vision is liable to be eclipsed when I am located in the realm of three dimensions. These wrong conceptions are not got rid of till I am established in the purely spiritual state which is free from all mundane conditions. They have established their firm hold on me by my neglect to take into my serious consideration the claims of the trascendental existence. In the Bhagabatam Viswanath instructs Satee as to the proper Nature of Vasudeva. He tells her of the activities and realisations of the unalloyed spiritual essence. Biswanath makes his obeisance to Vasudeva. Those who are willing to hear those words, in the spirit of humility exhibited by Biswanath, can hear them. Those who covet fame and wealth are given those things by Mahamaya.

The teachings of Sree Gaursundar refer to the same unalloyed function of the soul. The person in whom the real hankering for listening to Hari-katha (Word of God-head) manifests itself, displays total absence of every form of worldly pedantry and vanity. To such a person it is not the summum bonum to attain even a high degree of material civilisation. The alternative of merging in the Brahman presents itself to the choice of the soul as the Summum bonum at a certain stage of development of mental speculation. The formulation of such a doctrine marked an advance on the Buddhistic position which had put the principle of mercy to all animation above the acquirements of worldly elevationism. The Service of Purusottama is beyond the range of speculation of those who regard merging in the indivisible cognitive principle as the goal. Sreemad Bhagabatam has accordingly advised us to cease from all such speculations and concentrate on the consideration of the Real Entity. It is, therefore, necessary to turn our attention to the serious consideration of the function of the pure soul in the positive eternal world.

The unborn has precedence over the born. The Truth was revealed in the heart of Brahma before he began to create this world. Subsequently, when by the operation of the influence of time different speculations on the subject of the ultimate Reality made their appearance in this world, Krishna came down to the mundane plane in different Forms to prevent different erroneous views that sprang into existence regarding the nature of the Absolute eclipsing the knowledge handed down by Brahma through the medium of the bonafide spiritual teachers. The Ten Avataras of Krishna were for the purpose of re-establishing in this world the eternal function of the soul (Sanatan Dharma).

That function is not limited to the narrow scope of the partial visions of Bodhayana Rishi and Lakshman Desika. Anandatirtha could rise above them to the conception of the worship of Boy-Gopala. The Sonhood of Krishna is inconceivable to the reverential serving attitude. Sree Ramanuja has offered his arguments against the desirability of intimate relationship with God-head on the ground that it would give rise to great evils. But Sree Chaitanya Deva, Billvamangal Thakur, Vidyapati, Chandidas, Joydeva and the followers of Sri Chaitanya Deva have helped to extend our spiritual vision.

We are disposed to accept as our eternal function nothing short of the ideal of the service of the milkmaids of Braja, taught and practised by Sree Chaitanya. Consorthood constitutes the highest plank of Theism. Other opinions are for the enlightenment of the ignorant. They are of no further use on the attainment of enlightenment. Those opinions have different objects in view and have put very different interpretations on the Scriptural evidence. They are hampered by this radical defect by their poverty of convincing power. The Sankarsan Sutra has dealt with this vital point. The enlightening potency of the transcendental sound purges our minds of all preventive dirts and enables us to accept the true meaning of the words of the Scriptures. We are thereby enabled to avoid all hasty conclusions which have a tendency to drive us more or less to seek to merge in the Impersonal Aspect of the Absolute.

The worship of those who praise God-head by the offer of their reverential homage, is inferior to the intimate service of Braja. We should not remain content with the level of service of Arjuna. Chitrak, Patrak, Sridam, Sudam stand on a much more intimate footing. They offer to Krishna the remainders of their tasted food. God-head is cherished with the tenderest affection. They do not know whether Krishna is any other's friend. They only know that He is certainly theirs. The son is served by his parents from his infancy. Krishna is not served by Nanda and Yasoda in expectation of any return of service from Him in their old age.

If we remain confined to the two and a half varieties of reverential service by accepting the tidings of Ramanuja we would not be relieved thereby from the cultivation of the remaining two and a half varieties of intimate relationships to be found in this world. But there can be no absence of fullness in God-head. In the Theistic Exhibition it has been demonstrated how we can see only the lower half of the Supreme when we look up to Goloka from below. Sankara and some of his followers have taken exception to Vaishnavism alleging that it is opposed to the Vedas. Sankara's views had an undoubted efficacy for his times to prevent the abuses of the Buddhistic thought. But his disregard of considerations in favour of the distinctive transcendental activities of pure souls, altogether untenable. The point of view of Sandilya Rishi whom he attempts to refute stands fully vindicated to all sincere enquirers. This has been conclusively shown by many distinguished writers.

We are also not satisfied by the level of worship of Rama-Seeta, which stands in the way of the Pastimes of non-conventional Divine Amour. It is not possible for us to realise the nature of the service of the milkmaids of Braja as long as the existence of the gross and subtle physical bodies persist to obscure our vision. The desire of the Rishis of Dandakaranya to serve Rama Chandra in the relationship of consorthood was not fulfilled till after they had been reborn in Braja. The cult of Vasudevism as imagined by Bhandarkar and European scholars is not reconcilable with the needs of complete self-realisation. The perfection of service is not attained thereby.

Associates of Shree Chaitanya

SHREE Krishna Chaitanya is Shree Krishna Himself. The Associates of Shree Krishna Chaitanya are Constituents of Himself. It is our object in this short paper to study the implications of these doctrines.

Shree Krishna's Active Existence involves the undivided operation of the following six Divine Entities viz., Gurus, Devotees, Avataras (Divine Descents), Divine Manifestations, Divine Powers, and Godhead Himself. All these are jointly and severally Divine.

As Shree Krishna Chaitanya is identical with Shree Krishna the Active Existence of Shree Chaitanya also implies the co-operation of the above six Divine Categories.

When Shree Krishna Chaitanya was pleased to manifest His Appearance on this mundane plane all the six Constituents of Himself also necessarily made their appearance as part and parcel of Himself. In the marvellous work, "Gaurganoddesha dwipika", we have the detailed identification of the several characters who are Divinely associated in the Performances of Shree Krishna Chaitanya with the corresponding characters in the Dwapara-Leela of Shree Krishna. This correspondence is an essential part of the religion of pure devotion propounded by Shree Krishna Chaitanya. In the opening verses of his great work "Shree Chaitanya-charitamrita" Shree Krishnadas Kaviraj Goswami accordingly makes his obeisance to Shree Krishna Chaitanya in His above sixfold Form.

The Appearance of Godhead in this world implies the Co-Appearance of all His Divine Paraphernalia. Godhead must not be conceived as in any way separable from His Entourage. Godhead shorn of any of His Paraphernalia is a delusion. In the same way the Appearance of Divine Paraphernalia involves the Appearance of the Divinity. The Two are distinct yet inseparable Forms of the One Supreme.

Shree Chaitanya is the Divine Personality Himself. His associates share His Divine Nature. Shree Krishna Chaitanya is an Extended Subject. All the six Divine Forms have to be worshipped if it is the intention to worship Shree Chaitanya.

The Guru is one of His Constituents. It is necessary to receive initiation from him. It is also necessary to be instructed by him. As teacher the Guru has two forms. He guides from within. He also appears as a guide and instructor existing outside his disciple. Initiation is received from one person only. Instructions may be had from many Gurus. Shree Kaviraj Goswami himself was instructed by the famous six Goswamins.

The Guru is the Embodiment of the Manifestation of the Divinity to the pure receptive spiritual essence of the disciple. The Guru is the real and original recipient of the Truth. He communicates his knowledge to the disciple. The disciple is too small a particle to be able by himself to receive the Whole Truth. He is enabled to receive Him through the power of the Guru. The Guru, as it were, takes the disciple by the hand and guides his every step on the plane of the Absolute. It is perpetual tutelege on the part of the disciple. This fact may be expressed in another way. The cognitive faculty of the individual soul can have no ground to stand upon unless the Divinity Himself condescends to be the legs as well as the ground on which he is to stand to function at all. This Function of the Divinity is performed by the Guru. As a matter of fact the Divinity actually reveals Him only to Himself. The individual soul is a separable constituent of the Guru. It is only when he happens to be associated by his own free choice with the Guru in a completely dependent manner that he can be on the plane of the Guru's service of the Divinity. He may or may not choose to be so associated. The Guru may or may not choose to admit him to his association. When there is active willing assent to such association on the part of both that it is possible for the individual soul to attain to the service of the Divinity in the really conscious form.

Every one who is cognisant of the true Nature of Krishna is alone fit to instruct another in the knowledge of Krishna. The Divine Paraphernalia are the Gurus of all individual souls. In this sense all the six Divine Categories are identical with the Guru. It can be so by reason of the fact that on the plane of the Absolute there is no separative difference. On that perfectly wholesome plane there is distinction without difference. But there is also the distinctive function of the Guru which must be considered as also simultaneously distinct from that of any of the other categories. One who neglects to seek the special favour of the Guru and to enter into the relation of discipleship with the spiritual guide will miss entry to the spiritual plane. Nityananda is the Primary Manifestive Constituent of the Divinity. Nityananda alone possesses the distinctive function of the Guru. In Nityananda the function is Embodied. Nityananda is the servant-God. He serves Shree Goursundar by the distinctive method of reverential servitude. He is identical with Sree Balaram of Krishna-Leela. Sree Balaram is not the chum of Krishna, but His respected elder brother. It is intimate relationship characterised by becoming reserve on one side and respectful deference on the other. Individual souls are under the direction of Nityananda. They receive their service of Sree Goursundar i.e., of Krishna, at his hands. Nityananda is not a jeeva. He is Divinity. He is the ultimate Source of the jeeva. The jeeva is a potency of Nityananda. No jeeva can be the medium of the service of the Absolute to another jeeva. The Absolute alone may communicate His service to the separable constituents of Himself. This is the real nature of the function of the Guru.

But all jeevas are not liable to be eclipsed by the Deluding Potency. Those who are so liable are again distinct from the eternally free jeevas. The eternally free jeevas are inseparable associates of Nityananda. They are integrated part and parcel of Himself. They never fall into the clutches of Maya. When Nityananda manifests His appearance on the mundane plane His inseparable constituents also appear in His Company. They sometimes manifest their function on this lower plane in a visible form on the errands of Nityananda. They are Vaishnavas whose subordination to Nityananda is natural and ingrained in their nature. It is not necessary for such souls to undergo the process of enlightenment for being restored to the spiritual plane. Unless this fact is borne in mind the conditioned soul may be tempted to undervalue the constant guidance of the Guru on the hypocritical plea of following (?) in the footsteps of the eternally free pure devotees. Those, therefore, who suppose that deliverance from the bondage of this world should be practicable without the constant guidance of the spiritual preceptor, confound the conditioned state with the free.

The guidance of the Guru is no curtailment of one's spiritual freedom. Those who are eternally free also follow his guidance by the spontaneous undeviating impulse of their perfectly pure nature. Guidance of the Guru is the only Divine Guidance. Only atheists who are by their choice opposed to the service of Godhead, can be consistent opponents of the obligation to serve the Guru in the same unconditional way as one should be prepared to serve Godhead Himself. There is no difference between the two functions. If the claim of the one is denied it necessarily involves the denial of the claim of the other. Nityananda and His companions form one of the five groups of the associates of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, Whose distinctive function is that of the Guru.

But Nityananda does not directly instruct in the confidential service of Krishna. Srimati Radhika is the Guru of the inner circle of the servants of Krishna. Srimati, however, accepts the offer of service of only those souls who are specially favoured by Nityananda and are deemed by him to be fit for Her service. There is, therefore, a most intimate relationship between the function of Nityananda and that of Srimati which is at once supplementary and inclusive of the former.

The Guru admits to the Service of Krishna. The next Divine Category is the Bhakta or devotee. In this case also as in that of the Guru, Service of the Divinity, which is the distinctive function of the Bhakta, is not confined to him only. The servants have been divided into two classes viz., (1) servants other than consorts and (2) consorts. The Guru has distinctive function as Master. The servant has no distinctive function as Master. This distinguishes the Guru from the Bhakta. The Bhakta is also Godhead in the distinctive form of this servant to whom the Guru manifests the Divinity. The mercy of the Bhakta enables the dissociable soul to receive the mercy of the Guru. The Guru and the Bhakta are the inseparable Divine counterparts of one another.

The Guru and the Bhakta are thus two distinct entities forming the five categories. The Avataras (Descending Divinities) are the third category. They have their distinctive functions in the maintenance and deliverance of jeevas inclined to Divine service. They have distinctive functions as master. The difference between the Avataras and the Divinity as Master consists in this that the Avataras are derivatives from the Divinity possessing the Plenary Divine Nature. The relation between the two is analogous to that between the original self-existing source-light and other shining lamps that have been lighted from the source. There is no substantive or magnitudinal difference between the two. But there is distinctiveness in function. The Avataras have distinctive Natures of their own. But the Divinity is their common Source possessing all their distinctive functions in a synthesis which distinguishes Him from the Avataras without suffering any diminution of His Divinity by the eternal parallel Co-Existence of the distinctive Activities and Personalities of the Avataras also as Divinities.

Another Divine Category is the group of the Divine Manifestations. The Manifestations are Divine Forms Who are either identical with that of the Divinity or of a distinctive Nature. Krishna can appear simultaneously in the same form or in different forms to different persons and also simultaneously retain His Own Form. All these other forms are His Own Manifestations.

The fifth Divine Category is Divine Power. Divine Power is the Predominated Moiety of the Divinity Who is Predominating Whole. Sree Radhikā is the Predominated Counter-Whole of Sree Krishna. Sree Radhika has Her duplicates and constituents who are also of the nature of Plenary Powers of the Divinity. Sree Radhika is the Female Consort in the Supreme Divine Pair. She is the source of all the distinctive Divine Powers that serve as the corresponding counter-wholes of the infinite Manifestations and Avataras of the Divinity. She also directly serves Sree Krishna in an infinity of ways in Her countless distinctive plenary and secondary forms.

The associates of Sree Krishna Chaitanya are made up of the five Divine Categories. If any of these Categories be left out the Truth Who is indivisibly One, refuses to present Himself to the arrogant aptitude of the pedant who does not fully submit to be enlightened by grace regarding the necessity of serving the Divinity in and through the Distinctions.

The pedant is disposed to be sceptical by reason of a lurking belief that it is the look-out of the Divinity to make Himself known to him. But the jeeva is a dissociable particle of the Divine essence with the onus of choosing for himself from among the alternatives of a serving, a neutral and a disobedient career, his own relationship to the Divinity. He cannot escape the privilege of exercising this responsibility except by conscious self-deception or by hypocrisy.

The dissociable individual soul is distinct from the Divine Categories. He is a particle of the Marginal Potency of the Divinity. Sree Nityananda Who is identical with Balarama is the ultimate source of the jeeva. The conditioned soul is a particle of the Marginal Potency, who has been sent into this world by the Will of the Purusha, viz., Vishnu reposing in the Causal Ocean, Who is a Plenary Part of Nityananda exercising the Divine function of creator of all mundane existence including the conditioned state without Himself belonging to the mundane plane.

Batsasur

BATSASUR is one of the demons slain by the Boy-Krishna. He represents evils that are peculiar to boyhood. The neophyte is extremely susceptible to such evils. They cannot be got rid of except by the Mercy of Krishna. If one engages in the service of Krishna the juvenile vices are completely eradicated at an early stage.

There is an English proverb that sowing of wild oats is inevitable at a young age. The term 'Puritanism' was originally coined to express the protest of boys and youngmen against any undue curtailment of the scope of enjoyment that should be regarded as permissible to them. Boys and youngmen claim the right to be merry and frolicsome. There is nothing objectionable and much that is of positive value in the display of these juvenile qualities. If the attempt be made to stifle this innocent play of the boyish nature under the impression that it is an exhibition of sensuousness and for that reason, as being as harmful as similar conduct on the part of grown-up persons, the result is not assurance but discouragement, of juvenile innocence.

There are, indeed, black sheep and these should not be allowed to taint the whole flock, for this purpose caretakers with full sense of their delicate responsibility are required to keep watch over them for ensuring the innocence of boy-hood and youth without killing their joys. But with every precaution it has been found impossible to attain this double purpose.

The Scriptures say that it is not in the power of man to ensure the immunity of boys and girls from the blight of precocious sensuousness except by means of the service of Krishna. This is declared to be the only effective and natural method. Let the boys be exposed to the attraction of the Cow-Boy of Braja. They will soon learn to pick up His Company. They will easily realise that the Boy-Krishna can alone save them from every form of danger to which they are exposed by the 'right' of their juvenile nature.

Why should this be so? There is a very simple reason. Krishna does not limit His service only to the middle-aged and old people. The Puritanic ideal of Godhead is a conception which owes its origin to persons who are elderly although honestly enough anxious to establish the 'Kingdom of God' on this earth. But if you scratch the thin coating on the surface of their sage and sober scheme as befitting their age you only detect the rotten arrangement for securing the maximum of sensuous enjoyment even for those very children who are to be brought up in this 'virtuous' way. If the child is allowed to spoil his health in boyhood, think these righteous people, he will not be in a position later on to enjoy the legitimate pleasures of the grown-up man. Unless the youngman husbands his resources of sense-capacity he will also be a victim to premature old age. It is a policy of expediency of postponing a small present enjoyment for reaping a much larger measure of it through the long tracts of the years to come.

The spurious Brahmacharya ideal as misconceived by its worldly supporters embodies this Puritanic outlook. The Scriptures, indeed, enjoin that every one should serve Godhead from the womb. This is the real meaning of Brahmacharya. The ascetic practices that have come to attach themselves to the conception were interpolated into the Scriptures in order to ensure worldly values by this form of the empiric method. The scheme requires that the laws of the growth of the physical and mental bodies should be observed and followed. Nature is regarded as the kind mother who favours only those of her children who cultivate the filial habit of prying into her secrets. Nature is supposed to be unable to avoid divulging her secrets to her inquisitive children although she is well aware that her children will exploit this knowledge for troubling herself by harnessing her to their service. In other words it is also assumed to be the duty of the kind mother to consent to put herself in chains in order to minister to the sensuous appetites of her worthier children. Nature is assumed to be able to do good to her children only by submitting to be the victim of their lust.

The practices of asceticism are really conceived in the epicurian spirit. The ascetic dreams of obtaining the mastery over Nature by the method of controlling his senses. If the senses grow callous to the temptations of the world the ascetic thinks that he will have less chance of falling into the power of Nature. He has an idea that when he will have perfected these defensive arrangements he will have become the real master of the situation. The Brahmachariu, according to the ascetic point of view, is to pass through a period of training in severe abstinence with his guru in order to be fitted to discharge the duties of citizenship, which will make a great demand on his nerves and muscles with greater thoroughness. There is no reference to the service of Godhead or to any spiritual issue.

We have had many occasions to explain that the spiritual is transcendental. No mundane consideration can form any part of spiritual training or conduct. It is not a spiritual affair to be even able to control one's carnal desires. Such self-control is, indeed, automatically produced by the awakening of the soul. But self-control itself is not therefore a function of the soul. The soul has nothing to do with the senses. The soul desires neither sensuality nor sexual purity. The soul is not a mere moral being. If Brahmacharya means a method of gaining moral power it is wholly a mundane affair and is as such not only of no concern to the soul but is positivly obstructive of spiritual well-being.

This is bound to be so because the point of view of the soul is all-embracing. The soul rejects nothing. He regards nothing as redundant or useless. The soul has a use for everything. But the soul sees everything as it is really related to himself and to other entities. There is, therefore, no room for the temporary type of morality in his relationships with the other entities. Everything is absolutely good on the plane of the soul. The scriptural Brahmacharya institution accordingly means service of the Brahman i.e. the Reality Who is always the Great and always the Help. The servant of the Absolute is free from all delusion.

Morality is a valued commodity only on the plane of delusion. But it has no locus standi on the plane where the conditions of existence are perfect.

Till the service of Godhead is realised it is impossible to be really moral in the sense of being needlessly and perfectly virtuous. If a person is causelessly virtuous in the worldly sense he or she will be a subject of easy exploitation for all the cunning rascals of this world. This is so because morality as conceived by the empiricist, has a reference to the physical body and the changeable mind and is, therefore, liable to change so long as the conditions are not radically altered.

The empiric contriver of juvenile welfare strives to produce conditions that will favour the growth and continuance of the empiric moral aptitude. These artificial conditions are confidently enough expected to be likely to prove of permanent benefit to those young persons who are brought up under those improvised conditions. But the brand of morality that has to be produced by the artificial manipulation of the natural environment is likely to prove of little value when the props are withdrawn. The analogy of needed protection for the growth of delicate plants does not apply as such plants are always exoterics. Hot-house morality is thus a misnomer and a delusion in relation to the soul.

Brahmacharya fully embodies the substantive ideal of spiritual purity distortedly reflected in the empiric ethical conception. Brahmacharya means service of the Absolute. Juvenile innocence is not the monopoly of young persons, any more than juvenile naughtiness. They are the animal entities corresponding to analogous spiritual qualities. The spiritual activities are perfectly wholesome. They include all value and harmonise all disruptive conflict both of which are so utterly wanting in their mundane pervert reflections to be found in this world.

It is not to be supposed that everything is done by Krishna and there is nothing to be done by ourselves in any matter. As a matter of fact there is a division of parts to be played in functions that relate even to ourselves, as between us and Krishna. Certain duties are allotted to us. Certain other functions are reserved to Krishna. Batsasur cannot be killed by us. He is too strong for us. This is in keeping with the experience of most educationists. Juvenile innocence is a necessity for both young and old. One cannot acquire it by any artificial process. No person can also ordinarily retain it after boyhood and youth. This is a real tragedy of human life.

Juvenile innocence is desired on account of its enjoyability. But it should properly be desired only for the service of Krishna. The parent can have no higher duty than to employ his boy in the service of Krishna by putting him under the proper teacher viz., the pure devotee of Krishna. No parent is entitled to undertake the charge of the spiritual training of his own boy. He is unfitted for the task by his mundane relationship. Once such relationship is grasped to be an obstacle in the way of juvenile training the necessity of sending the boy at the earliest opportunity to the proper teacher becomes self-evident. If the parent continues to retain his paternal interest in the boy after he has been put to school for the above purpose he will be only standing in the way of his boy's progress. The training is not for the boy only but it is a training for his parents as well.

Boyish naughtiness is apt to be overlooked, nay encouraged, under the impression that it is his nature to be naughty. This opinion overlooks the all-important factor that the training is intended for the welfare of the soul of the boy and not for the juvenile body or mind. The soul does not require to be treated with indulgence. He is neither young nor old in the worldly sense. The body and mind of the boy have to be employed in the interest of the soul. Boyish naughtiness and boyish virtue are alike unnecessary for the soul. It is necessary for the soul to be freed from either form of worldliness. The mundane nature of the boy is no less a clog to the wheel of spiritual progress than the adult nature of the grown-up worldling. The process of training is identical in the two cases as the soul is neither young nor old.

Much irrational pity is wasted on boys who are employed from early infancy in the wholetime service of Krishna, on exactly the same terms as grown-up persons. Persons who affect much kindness of disposition towards juvenile frailties profess to be unable to understand why juvenile offences are taken as seriously in spiritual training as those of adult persons.

But the teacher in charge of the spiritual training of boys can perform his duty by them only as the special agent of Krishna. If such a teacher choose to confide in his own devices he is bound to be undeceived at every step. What he has really to do is to use the boy constantly in the service of Krishna. For this purpose it is necessary for the teacher himself to be a whole time servant of Krishna. It is only by abstaining to do anything that is not distinctively commanded by Krishna or His real agent viz., the Sat-Guru that the spiritual teacher of boys can hope to be of any help to his pupils.

The so-called science of pedagogies requires to be thoroughly overhauled in order to afford a free hand to the bonafide devotee of Krishna in managing young persons. The present arrangements based on the experience of this world and on the hypotheses of an absolute causal relationship connecting each phenomenon with the rest, by leaving out the reference to Krishna, can only realise the tragic part of a quack lightly administering all the wrong drugs to a patient smitten with a mortal illness.

The King ofatheists Kansa is always setting the demon Batsasur to corrupt and destroy the boys. The teacher of the young employed by the athiestical society is verily the agent of King Kansa. The atheist is afraid lest the boys are employed in the service of Krishna He is naturally anxious to prevent any acquaintance of the boys with Krishna. But if a boy has really found Krishna the nefarious attempts of the empiric teacher are powerless todestroy his innocence. If such a teacher perseveres in the fruitless attempt he will thereby quickly bring about his own utter moral degradation and his sorry trick will also be fully exposed. Because in this case it is Krishna Himself Who opposes his wicked activities on behalf of His protege.

As a matter of fact the concern of empiric educationits for ensuring immunity of boys from the blighting effects of precocity is altogether hypocritical,

The empiric pedant only wants the boy to grow a body and mind that will ensure greater and longer scope for their worldly use. He does not want that the worldly use of his body and mind should be curtailed in any way. In other words he is on principle opposed to the employment of the healthy body and sound mind for any spiritual purpose. But why does he want a healthy body for his nasty purpose? Is it only in order to be able to have the pleasure of a more prolonged wastage and the rake's progress in downright earnest? A sickly body is not really harmful to a person who has no higher object in view than undiluted self-gratification.

The Super-Excellence of the Teachings of Shree Krishna Chaitanya

(Delivered on 24-1-32, by the Editor in a public meeting called under the auspices of the members, Madras Gaudiya Math on the occasion of Installation of Shree Vigrahas at the Gaudiya Math, North Gopalapuram, Madras)

In the demonstration of teaching, there are two parties—viz., the 'teacher' and the 'taught.' We find a reciprocal relation between the aforesaid two. The position of a taught has a special significance in paying his attention to the words and in observing the deeds of the teacher as well as in the true goal of his attempts. If he is found to be negligent to receive anything from the teacher, he will simply miss the real standpoint of a taught. His function as a recipient would vary according to the nature, capacity and degree for whole-hearted attention. When his nature is brought into account, we find that he must own himself as a follower of an elevationist, or a salvationist or a devotee. This mentality is considered as holding of a corresponding intuitive function. By availing himself of the teachings he is expected to fill up his inadequacies by rectifying his wrong notions and assimilating the essence of the knowledge he is going to receive. He can regulate his mentality by any addition or deduction to and from his store of intuition respectively.

The teachings of a teacher are, therefore, meant for enriching, regulating and inviting the impulse of reception of a taught in order to enable the latter to make further progress. If he has a non-reverential mood, he will prove himself to be a callous and non-susceptible agent. If he proves himself quite worthy of receiving the teachings while enriching himself, he would be deemed fit for his further mental activities. But some amount of diffidence may be hampering in his dutiful advance.

The theme of teaching has different phases. The teaching of merely elevating the mentality of the audience will no doubt differ from that of one who is busy to stop the phenomenal existence by the process of meditation as well as to shake off the three mundane positions of the observer, observation and observed. The devotional teachings need not follow any of the two transactions that have victimised both elevationists and salvationists. So the teachings of a devotee should neither help any aspiration of both nor advocate their cause. Devotional teaching has already disclosed the fact that any knowledge secured from finite objects could not possibly lead to the Absolute position in a realm where no temporal phases of phenomena are working. Such dealing with the existence of a field of fourth to infinite dimensions should not be restricted to be brought under intra-mundane speculations. Devotional teaching would never subscribe to the policy of altruistic misapprehension for living peacefully in a plane of transforming phenomena. The devotional method does not, however, deviate at all from altruism when it shows a transcendental temperament of the cognisance of the Absolute. The altruistic views of pedants of the atheistic school cannot protect the futile predicament of intra-sentient beings who are very busy to show their predominating influence over devotional thought. Devotional teaching should never show such demeanour as to confine its theme to the restricted horizon of elevationists and so-called transcendentalists who are ambitious for checking their activities in every way by annihilating their egoistic intra-mundane attempts.

As regards the position of a true teacher we have observed that he is never expected to be the possessor of mere mental speculations concerned with phenomena or noumena. The teacher should be unprejudiced and should not be challenged for any seeming fault of his in his thought, word or deed. The teacher of some particular department of phenomena or noumena should never be recognised as participating in any teaching of transcendental observation. The unprejudicnature of a true preceptor who has no other function but to remain eternally under the banner of the Absolute is to impart the ever-existing unshaky position of the Absolute Knowledge enriched with Ever-Blissful Entheasm.

The All-Blissful Ever-Existing Absolute has emanated the rays of knowledge which can disclose the true transcendental position of the Fountainhead. So a taught should invoke Him to delegate such power unto him in order to enable his progressive march in the Region of the Absolute Personality where the significance of the First Person has preponderance over the transcendental manifestations of Infinitude. The Fountainhead of Infinite Wealths, viz., All-Majesty, All-Prowess, All-Goodness, All-Beauty, All-Knowledge and All-Dissociations with flesh and mind grants the prayers of different actors on this stage of the world who take initiative in the temporal region of space and time. The Personality of Godhead has awarded full facility in their sojourn of limited knowldege in proportion to their amount of knowledge, eligibility and praying capacity. When we turn to the various activities of seekers of different limited treasures, we observe that those prayer-mongers who want to dovetail themselves with the object of their prayer are also endowed in proportion to their capacity for enabling themselves to discover such partial manifestation of the Personal Absolute. So our much coveted treasures will store for us our respective goals in proportion to our acquisitions. But a true devotee is not satisfied with having the boons from an empiricist whose impoverished knowledge is found to seek for ameliorating personal selfish wants merely. And those who are content to pose their location in Infinity are found to enervate themselves in a frenzied mood, while a devotee is always found to chastise their intoxicated demeanour for accommodating themselves in temporal soap-bubbles. So we do not find any frenzied disposition in a devotee like that in an elevationist or a salvationist.

The essential devotional activities of an unalloyed soul are fully impeded in the mentalities of atheists and are enshrouded with intellectual activities of agnostics and sceptics as the latter are always found to hinge their flexibilities of speculation on their imperfect and restricted sensuous knowledge only. A true devotee can also easily see the alloyed activities of so-called knowledge which passes by the name of nescience helping its victims in their march towards a fabricated manifestation of a temporal plane known as 'paradise'. This may be termed the second group where the frenzied ignorance of the aforesaid group is eliminated. Next when we come to examine the third group who are trying to dismiss all intra-mundane thoughts, they are seen as located in a peculiarly hallucinating non-manifestative sphere of their self and we may undoubtedly say that this is a self-deception tantamount to an Alnascarian disposition. The owner of the astral and physical bodies has been, by the abuse of his free-will, obliged to remain in a sleeping condition when he has delegated his powers, during his conspicuous activities in the mundane world, to the two different covers which claim to be owned by him.

A true devotee never submits to any high-sounding reasonings of Elevationists or Salvationists when he is truly realising his own self as a conciliatory ancillary fragment of a particular manifesting Energy, the position of which is on the geometrical line between the mundane phenomena and the transcendental manifestations. So a devotee is not expected to indulge in the method of the so-called speculative philosophers of the world. The oft-disfigured sublime views and the eternal theme of the Vadanta do not go to prove any hallucinative imposition of different sexological questions to be associated with the Ever-Existing Blissful Knowledge. All varieties of the knowledge of Finitude must not intoxicate and cripple the transcendental march of the presumptuous owner of this world of three dimensions.

Whenever any inclination is observed in a sojourner for a conception of the Absolute, these sexological questions check his activities ; but when his activities are scrutinised they are found to be in a particular chamber of a neuter aspect or a male or female aspect of that Object. The Personality of the Absolute Ecstatic Knowledge can only be had if the true discernment of the real self shakes off by his free will all finite temporal conceptions.

Being empowered with mercy from the All-Blissful the owner of all intra-mundane speculations can easily shake off the chains of the habit of measuring transformable things. An unalloyed soul only can get rid of his deluding conceptions of physico-mental shields. The eternal devotee is emancipated from non-realistic ideas by the causeless help of the Absolute, or in other words, is set free by his love for the Latter. No clutches or prisoners' restrictions should be imposed on him like those that are necessary to be put on Elevationists and Salvationists. He has now got the unconditional mercy from the Supreme Fountainhead and he need not be compelled to be classed as a prisoner of physico-mental cell.

So Shree Krishna Chaitanya has disclosed the Transcendental Manifestation which can be approached by a theist only who is confident of his realisation of the Ever-Existing Ecstatic Absolute Transcendent,as he has absolutely no reliance on the seeming activities of a temporal mundane observer, observation and observed. The theist can then approach Shree Krishna as Arjuna did when the latter played his part in the great Mahabharat war. The elevationist and salvationist warriors had been combating with their physical and mental powers in order to predominate over each other. But the Song of Shree Krishna relieved them from all such gross and subtle undertakings. The War of the Mahabharatam has shown us the contending positions of physical and mental heroes busily engaged in this region of mundane speculations. The Mahabharatam has disclosed the fact of different positions of elevationists and salvationists, viz., their positions, deeds and their final goals.

We have got the true comparative idea in the literary expression of the word "Excellent" i. e., one who has excelled all the rest of the members generally of his community. There can be no question when the final result is targeted to the word "excellent". We need not again put that to a controversy. A transcendental harmonising plane would tell us, through transcendental sounds, that the manifestations in the regions of three dimensions are not to be confused with those in the Manifestive Region of Shree Vaikuntha which in the preamble cannot welcome any challenge of an empiricist when the region itself is endowed with spirit and not with deformed and mutable matter. So, as devotees we have no discussion with an empiricist or a challenger in as much as we live free from the clutches of mundane measurement, and the position of a devotee need not, therefore, be degraded to the position of an elevationist or a salvationist.

When we finish the perusal of the Mahabharatam which includes the "Mokshadharma" "Sanatsujatiyam" and the "Bhagabat Gita", we can safely be entrusted with dealing with the transcendental book which is alike revered by both Bhagabatas and Sattwata Pancharatrikas. The best Scripture of the Bhagabatas is the Bhagabatam which is a narrative offered to us by Shree Suta Goswami to Shree Saunaka and a legion of sages who sat for such a valuable teaching in Naimisaranyam. The present Book of Srimad Bhagavatam has incorporated all true Pancharatrika views and is known as the true commentary of the Aphorisms of Vadarayana that go on to show the connecting link and consistency of apparently conflicting Mantras of the Vedas.

The physical aspect of the Vedas would lead people to base their exploits on the Vedas upon the physico-mental endowments but not upon the permanent and unalloyed knowledge of the Absolute. In order to give men a relief from the clutch of physico-mental exploiters some impersonalists have jumped into the pacification of mundane meddlings which the Bhagabatam does not advocate. We see then that Bhagavatas incorporate all Pancharatrikas.

The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya has encouraged His followings to learn Bhagavatam in an unalloyed mood. Though the Excellent Teachings of the Full Manifested Transcendent Absolute have been narrated through the medium of words, still a devotee may often engage himself in the outward manifestations which might be dissuading agents for entangling him in the temporal world. So the seeming realisation of Archa (Transcendental Image) of the Iconographised Transcendentalism need not betray an attemptor; nor the symbolised Transcendental Words should bring the same in a controversial position.

The most important and crucial point of the Srutis has been ignored by Impersonalists. So they could not make any progress when they empirically peruse over the Mantras of the Vedas. The Super-Excellent Teacher by His Super-Excellent Teachings has given the best and greatest facilities to His taughts, who will turn in no time serving Agents of the Super-Excellent Transcendental Teacher, Who is Himself identical with the concept of the Supreme Godhead. By the word "Super-Excellent" the gradation in the Transcendental Region has been found to reach the climax.

In the conversazione of Lord Ramananda and the Supreme Lord, we find the Predominated Aspect of the Transcendental Absolute was giving replies to the interrogatories of the Supreme Lord. The true comparative studies of the different positions of devotees could only be made by submitting unconditionally our ownership of intellectual and physical store to the very Fountain-head. We shall then be classed as occupying different stages of devotion. We shall then find that the song of Sree Krishna ये यथा मां प्रपद्यन्ते तांस्तथैव भजाम्यहम् could not be mutilated by our mundane speculationist in their degraded unethical views of approaching Him. We are told of five different Rasas by the erudite professors of Aesthetic rhetorics in our perusal of Transcendental literature by our spiritual senses, which have no ambition whatsoever to meddle with mundane reciprocal situations. The Transcendental Supreme Fountainhead of Absolute Knowledge—Shree Krishna Chaitanya ——has disclosed the five different moods of predominating "Rasamaya" and predominated "Rasikas". So the Transcendental Super-Excellence of His Teachings would never be available to mundane sages or impersonalists until they absolutely submit to the ending song of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna, viz., सर्वधर्म्मान् परित्यज्य मामेकं शरणं व्रज ।

In courting, therefore, the Love of Sree Krishna Chaitanya we must not be busy with equipping ourselves with troublous acquisitions of imperfect manifestations, but simply undergo an operation to remove our cataract by the beneficial spike of His All-good Teachings. We need not be troubling ourselves with the physical enquiries in order to enable ourselves to indulge in Anthromorphism or to take recourse to Apotheosis. The unconditional surrender to Sree Krishna or Sree Krishna Chaitanya and to His true followings would relieve us of being plunged into functionising our handicapped organs of senses to scrutinise the aspects of the different subjects of our knowledge. As true and sincere devotees our spiritual culture would never mean to indulge in our mental activities as we do in Economics, History, Geography, Chemistry, Physics, Iconography, Archeology, Chiromancy and Palmistry different branches (बहुयनशाखाs) of the Vedas, altruism, utilitarianism and other allied subjects. If we take any one or the whole group of the above subjects for examining Sree Krishna Chaitanya our fruitless labour would not be fully paid in the act of approaching the Supreme Lord. It is Transcendental Rasa which alone will enable our Trauscendental finite ego to have an approach of the Transcendental Blissful Infinite.

Circumambulation of Sree Nabadwipdham

THE Circumambulation of Sreedham Nabadwip will commence this year on the 12th March and will be completed on the 20th. The festival of the Anniversary of the Advent of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya will be celebrated on the 22nd March. A certain amount of the details of the ceremony is to be found in the Nabadwip Almanac published by the Gaudiya Mission.

The preliminary (adhibas) Kirtan will take place on the 11th evening. The 'Nine Islands' will be circumambulated during the nine succeeding days in the following order.

March,	12th	Antardwip (including Sreedham Mayapur)
,,	13th	Simantadwip
,,	14th	Godrumadwip
,,	15th	Madhyadwip
,,	16th	Koladwip
,,	17th	Ritudwip
,,	18th	Jahnudwip
,,	19th	Modadrumdwip
,,	20th	Rudradwip

The circumambulation of Sri Nabadwipdham is an ancient institution which can be traced in literature to almost the time of Sree Chaitanya. The well-known devotional work, Bhaktiratnakar, which is about two hundred years old, contains the ancient traditions connected with the different localities. They have been published in a handy form in Bengali with the title 'Chitre-Nabadwip'. The reader is referred to that work for a detailed idea of the Subject in its different aspects.

There is an impression among a certain class of thoughtless people that the sanctity of a place or creed is somehow enhanced by its greater antiquity. Most of the places on this earth were in existence at the time of Sree Chaitanya and have been in existence from time immemorial. If the ancient history of a site is known the circumstance certainly adds to the human interest of the place. But it cannot sanctify i.e., confer any spiritual value on such locality.

Spiritual connection with Godhead or His devotee is the cause of the sanctity of a locality not because any mundane place is supposed to be able to recall the memory of the event which is transcendental, but for the entertainable reason that the locality itself is not mundane at all. Sir P. C. Roy in opening Sridham Mayapur Exhibition was led to declare that every particle of dust of Sridham Mayapur is sacred due to its association with Sree Chaitanya. If the localities surrounding Sridham Mayapur are annually visited for this antiquarian reason by pilgrims from all parts of the country such a custom would be of no help in preserving the real memory of Sree Chaitanya and His teachings.

The circumambulation of Sridham Nabadwip is not a national and antiquarian performance for showing respect to the memory of a great historical personality. Sree Chaitanya is Godhead Himself. Sreedham Nabadwip is the Eternal Transcendental Divine Realm. Sree Chaitanya, His Realm and His Activities are Eternal and are also capable of being realised as such by devout pilgrims in their performance of the circumambulation of the spiritual sphere, by the Grace of those perfectly pure souls who serve Sree Chaitanya in the Spiritual Realm. The performance of circumambulation of Sridham Nabadwip under the guidance of the Sadhus is thus a purely spiritual function and the pilgrim in the course of his journey actually traverses not a number of mundane localities but the various constituent spheres of the Realm Absolute.

No particle of mundane dust can have any spiritual value whatever. Godhead and His saints never tread the mundane plane. They belong eternally to the spiritual Realm. The Appearance of Godhead to the view of mundane spectators is not a mundane event. A mundane spectator, till he is spiritually helped, can see nothing that is not mundane. The mundane entity which is observed by such a person is neither Godhead nor any of His saints but only a deluding mundane entity. Godhead certainly can and does manifest His Appearance in this world, without becoming thereby a mundane entity or getting alloyed by mundanity. He is declared by the Scriptures, to descend to the view of the spectators of this world with all His Divine Paraphernalia. But it does not, therefore, follow that the fleshy eye can have the actual sight of Godhead even on such occasion.

It may appear to be reasonable from the empiricist's point of view to ask for the proof of the Divinity of Sree Krishna Chaitanya. The empiricist happens to think that it is his function to sit in judgment for allowing the claims of a person to the title of Divinity. Nothing can beat the impudence of such a ludicrous claim. Has the empiricist any faculty by which he can allow or dis-allow the claims of the Divinity ?

The truth is that the empiricist is always denying the claims of the Divinity by requiring Godhead to produce such proofs of His claims to his allegiance as will be acceptable to his limited understanding. The attitude has produced the inevitable result in that the Divinity has never submitted any proofs for meeting such a laudable purpose. But on the contrary He has ever been supplying him with overwhelming proofs against all his claims. The empiricist has thus attained the state of utter ignorance of the Truth under the hypocritical conviction that what he is pleased to think as true for the time being, is, therefore, necessarily true. This may flatter his vanity at the expense of everything that really matters.

To this fool's paradise the empiric pilgrim also is inclined to condemn himself by his so-called convictions and seeming critical caution. They only throw him more completely into the clutches of the deluding energy. By trying to avoid any concession to dogmatism he is made to grovel in the fit of abject submission to the degrading dogmatic freaks of the Arch-Enchantress who is the mother of this material world.

It is necessary for the real seeker of Truth to approach Him by his genuine serving disposition. The wish to dominate Truth is the fruitful source of every form of ignorance. There is no other degradation for the soul than the hankering for such domination. There is no truer elevation than artless receptive serving humility in presence of the Absolute Indivisible Truth Who is all pervading. The Divinity is the Truth. He is a Person. His Personality is the reciprocal of our own transcendental nature. He is the only master. We are all His servants. Our pure animation is enabled to retain his spotless purity by His service.

But as Godhead is the Indivisible Truth His Realm and eternal servitors are part and parcel of Himself. It is no service of the Absolute which leaves out of account His eternal servitors and His eternal realm. Godhead manifests Himself through the functions of His constituents.

The 'jeeva' is a particle of the Divine Essence. But he is a detachable part of His Essence. He is privileged to serve Godhead by remaining eternally detached from Him. He is located in the superfluous or marginal zone of the Essence of the Divinity. There is also a negative zone. The 'jeeva' is a particle of the positive zone projected into the no-man's land between the spiritual and mundane spheres of existence. He is liable to be drawn into the mundane sphere although he is by constitution a particle of the positive Essence of the Divinity.

The Realm of the Divinity is also of the Essence of the Divinity. The 'jeeva' is a detached particle of the Spiritual Potency of Godhead. The Realm of the Divinity is the Plenary Spiritual Power of the Divinity. The 'jeeva' can serve Godhead only in and through the aid of the Divine Realm. The Divine Realm is a spiritual Entity with freedom to allow or disallow the overtures for the service of the Divinity. But it is necessary for the 'jeeva' to seek her aid against every sort of apparent discouragement. The 'sadhus' who are the accepted proteges of the Divinity, teach us by their example and precept how to secure her favour.

The pilgrim who is, therefore, anxious to obtain the sight of Godhead, is under the absolute necessity of seeking the aid of the Divine Realm. The sight of the Divine Realm admits us automatically also to the Presence of the Divinity Who abides only there. But the Divine Realm tests our sincerity as seekers of the service of Godhead before she condescends to aid our endeavour. If she finds that we want to dominate and not to serve the Truth she presents her unapproachable face to our view. She appears as dumb as the sphinx to our hypocritical entreaties for her aid. This is the plight of the empiric pedant on the threshold of the Divine Realm. But the 'sadhu' is always at our elbow with his counsel of genuine submission to the Plenary Power of Godhead in recognition of Her Divine Nature. The sadhu speaks to us in concrete and intelligible language. But the sadhu speaks with real knowledge of the requirements of the position. There is thus imperative necessity of making the pilgrimage under the guidance of the real sadhu.

But the words of the sadhu also may appear to be irrational to one who is inclined to set up his experience of the world to be judge of the propriety of the sadhu's counsel. Mundane experience can give no positive help in the quest of the spiritual. It is not necessary to turn to it for such help. The words of the sadhu can give every help that one requires for the spiritual purpose, provided only that one is not really willing to have anything mundane.

The spiritual realm is realisable in and through the words of the sadhu. The spiritual realm cannot be seen by the mortal eye, nor touched by the hand of flesh. Neither is it the closed ear that can hear the true voice of the sadhu. The ear of the soul is to be opened to the spiritual sound. In other words one is to listen to the words of the sadhu with the conviction that the words themselves are identical with the object which they signify, that if the words are only received by the fully receptive rational impulse the whole indivisible substantive reality will stand self-revealed. If the result is otherwise, it can only be due to the deliberate withholding of one's full attention. It is in one's power to correct this error of method when it is pointed out by the sadhu. In proportion as the receptive attitude of hearing is perfected the true import of the words of the sadhu manifests itself to the soul of the hearer. It is necessary to offer this form of service by way of the preliminary on the threshold of the Realm of the Divinity by all those who really want to enter there.

The pilgrim is required to give up his preference for pseudo-knowledge if he is to be benefited by his pilgrimage of the Divine Realm under the guidance of the sadhu who has a natural and exclusive attachment for the Real Truth. The guidance of the sadhu is necessary for enabling him to lend his full attention to his words by discarding all explicit or latent partiality for untruth. The function of the cognitive faculty is to be relieved from the consequences of its wilful and perpetual attraction towards un-truth. Guidance for such an end is not any curtailment of one's freedom of rational choice. The rational faculty is only then true itself when it submits to be guided by a competent person in the quest of the Truth Who is located beyond its reach. It is prepared to submit for its instinctive and causeless love for the Truth. It is enabled to attain its fully expanded natural state by such submission. Neither the end nor the method indicated above proposes any form of mechanical subordination to an external agency which is being always enforced without any protest on the part of the conditioned soul by his material environment. Unless we are prepared to adopt the only rational course that is open to us the attainment of the knowledge of the Absolute Truth in the form of willing submission for receiving Him from His agents we really abdicate our rational function by preferring to follow the irrational alternative. We are of course free to go astray. We are also free to maintain that such irrational course is rational. But such sophistry will not enable us to avoid the logical consequences of such a procedure in the shape of losing sight of the Truth altogether.

True, the description of Sree Nabadwipdham in the literary works penned by the devotees who speak of the Absolute Truth, is bound to appear to the uninitiated as being apparently opposed to the evidence of one's senses. This is the standing grievance of the empiric historians and antiquarians in regard to the statements of the devotees. But the devotees always take good care to inform their readers that they are not describing anything that is limited by space and time. Empiric historians and antiquarians cannot be expected to understand on their own terms the nature of spiritual entities. Neither is that their function nor purpose. The erratic excursions of empiric historians and antiquarians into the domains of the spirit should be avoidable by the exercise of the ordinary honest common sense that is happily to be found also in this mundane world.

It is not proposed that the empiric historian and antiquarian should be debarred from approaching the subject of the Absolute. It is the duty of all persons including the atheists to seek the Absolute and to seek nothing but the Absolute. But the empiric method which is employed by the historians and antiquarians who are engaged in the so-called investigations of the phenomena of this world by the resources of their defective limited senses, cannot enable one to understand at all the subject-matter of the revealed Scriptures. It is, of course, open to the empiric historian and antiquarian to apply their own method to the investigation of a spiritual subject for deducing a purely mundane conclusion against the principle of rationality. This has actually been done by more than one famous writer. But such attempt constitutes only one of the numerous departments of changeable human knowledge which have nothing to do with the spiritual.

One who undertakes the pilgrimage of Sree Nabadwipdham with the conviction and in pursuance of the method of the empiric historian and antiquarian, will certainly enrich the range of his worldly experience which he values. But he will miss the spiritual end which is declared by the Scriptures to be attainable by the performance of the journey under the guidance of the sadhus. We invite all persons to join the devotional function with the attitude that is necessary for ensuring the success of the spiritual quest which alone matters.

It will not be irrelevent to consider at this place the nature of the objection that has actually been taken by certain persons to the practice of asking pilgrims to serve Sree Gaurkunda and Sree Radhakunda at Sridham Mayapur. These objectors probably think that Sree Gaurkunda and Sree Radhakunda are merely tanks that have been made by recent excavation and cannot, therefore, have really anything to do with either Sree Radhika or Sree Gaursundar Who appeared on this earth long ago.

But those who make the pilgrimage to Sridham Mayapur never suppose that either Gaurkunda or Radhakunda can be any pool of water of this or any other period, or that bathing in Sree Radhakunda is identical with a bath in some ancient tank of the British District of Mathura. Sree Radhakunda is always invisible to mortal eyes ; nor can any mortal ever bathe in the same. But Sree Gaursundar appeared in the Form of His Power in the home of Sree Chandra Sekhar Acharyya. Sree Chaitanya Math occupies the site of the residence of Sree Chandra Shekhar Acharyya. Sree Radhakunda is certainly to be found in the home of Sree Chandra Sekhar by one who seeks for a bath in the same. Sree Gaurkunda is to be eternally found only in the home of Sree Jagannath misra. Those who have no faith in Sree Gaursundar are not likely to understand the sayings and doings of His devotees, nor ever attain the sight of the Eternal Transcendental Realm of the Divinity. Faith in Sree Gaursundar cannot be obtained except by the grace of His bonafide devotees. It is not the so-called blind faith of the empiricists of this world to which the reader is asked to subscribe. Neither is it asserted that true faith is any product of the so-called empiric knowledge. Spiritual faith on the contrary, is that perfectly rational disposition of the pure soul which seeks patiently and unceasingly for the service of the Absolute Truth. The sincere seeker of the service of the Divinity is alone privileged to be favoured by the sight of the Truth for the purpose of rendering such service.

Sree Sree Chaitanya Bhagabat

MIDDLE PART

45 "I cut down My son for the sake of My servant ;
I am not telling a lie, Gupta ; so may you listen attentively

46 "At the time when I wrought the deliverance of this Earth
She was made pregnant by My Touch.

47 "A mighty son was born by name 'Naraka'
I Myself did instruct My son in all the religion.

48 "My son became King of kings ;
He maintained all persons by serving the gods, Brahmanas and superiors.

49 "By bad luck he fell into evil company.
By association with Bana he took delight in oppressing the devotees.

50 "I cannot bear the persecution of My servants ;
With My Own Hands did I cut down My son to protect My servants.

51 "In every successive birth you have ever served Me ;
So have I told you the whole truth".

52 On hearing these words of the Lord
Murari Gupta unable to control himself began to cry.

53 All glory to Gaurchandra in association with Murari !
Glory to the Boar Who is the Sacrifice, Protector of devotees !

54 In this manner, at the home of every one of His servants,
Out of His Mercy, Godhead made Himself know.

55 All the servants recognising Him, their own Lord,
Were filled with transcendental bliss in their hearts.

56 No more did any of them fear the pashandis ;
All of them sang aloud the Name of Krishna at all the public places.

57 All the devotees joining the Company of the Lord
With the greatest joy performed the kirtan night and day.

58 All the devotees were now joined together, all save Nityananda ;
Gaurchandra was deeply grieved by missing His Brother.

59 Biswambhar's memory incessantly went towards Nityananda ; Nityananda, Divine Ananta, came to know this.

60 By way of context listen to the narrative of Nityananda;

I will tell of his appearance and activities in outline.

61 In the country of Rada there is a village
by name Ekchaka
In which was born Lord Nityananda.

62 At some distance from the spot there is a god, Moudeswara ;
The same has been worshipped by Nityananda, Holder of the Plough.

63 In that village there lived the Brahmana,
Hadai Pandit,
Like one extremely unttached to the world, of a kindly disposition

64 His loyal consort bore the name of Padmavati ;
The mother of all was the supreme power of Vishnu.

65 The Brahmani and Brahmana were both most open-minded,
In whose home Nityananda Himself manifested His birth.

66 Eldest-born of all the sons was Nityanandarai,
Marked out by all good signs, whose sight was a solace to the eye.

67 Manifold are the early activities of boy-
Nityananda :
To tell them all would make this narrative too long.

68 In such manner did the great Nityananda stay for a while In the home of Hadai Pandit, in blissful activities.

69 The Lord then made up His mind to renounce His home ;
But His parents, in fear of grief that would befall, did not leave His company.

70 If the mother did not see Nityananda even if only for a moment
She thought it was an Age, more so did the father.

71 Leaving behind his son Nityananda Hadai
Never went anywhere even for a minute.

72 Whether engaged in his fields, in the home of his disciples,
In the market-place or on the wayside,
howsoever occupied,

73 In constant fear lest Nityanandachandra might leave him,
Hadai Ojha would turn back to see a hundred times every minute.

74 Ever and anon he would clasp him into his close embrace ;
Like a figure made of soft butter the delicate boy would merge in his body

75 In this manner, in the company of his boy, he wandered everywhere ?
Nityananda was the life and Hadai the mere body.

76 Nityananda, who guides from within, knew all this.
He lived on with His father performing the duty of ministering to his pleasure.

77 Providentially one day a fairlooking sannyasin
Came to the home of the parent of Nityananda.

78 The father of Nityananda, after begging him to accept the alms of food, Induced him to stop in the house, with a feeling of great joy.

79 The father of Nityananda passed the whole night in his company, Occupying himself in mutual discourses regarding Krishna.

80 At early dawn, as the sannyasin was about to leave the house,
The best of sannyasins spoke to the father of Nityananda.

My Guru-Puja

Response on the occasion of the Fifty-eighth Anniversary at the Vyas Puja Celebrations on the 26th February 1932

PUJA or worship is a reverential submission performed by one in favour of another in the shape of service. A reverencer or reverer approaches a revered with fear arising from high respect or respectful awe through his words, body and mind. The verbal adoration, corporal prostration and mental humiliation are the conciliatory parts of the Puja to invite good wishes of the respected being. In the Puja a higher platform is always offered to a Worshipped, and generally the touching of the lowest part of his limb, i.e., his feet, the offering soothing encomiums and the cherishing of reverential feelings on the part of a worshipper are involved. When a respected entity can be had directly through our senses, we can render direct service to him without any intervention; but in the case of a distantly located object, we have to transmit our services through symbolised sounds, through lips and scripts only. In both the cases Puja can be conducted by a worshipper with gross articles, as well as through subtle medium of sound and through a submissive mentality which makes the worshipper nsider himself situated in a lower fice as a Laghu or less weighty, hile the Guru or heavy object in an per office in comparison to himself ; it the case becomes otherwise, when e mundane plane is changed for the anscendental one, which has quite a stinctive feature.

In this mundane plane, Puja is erformed with a share of personal gain, hen we are desirous of having some- ing in return for us. Puja may as ell be conducted for the attainment our Salvation, where we want to nihilate all our desires, and even to come identical with the Object of orship, thereby to attain the full apersonality ; though no desire whatso- ver is traceable in the actual annihila- on, neither any gain for the Positive ntity of Godhead in the shape of service. o all these Pujas effect the merging of ne's self, the Gurudev as well as the 'ersonality of Godhead in one neutral osition where their different entities re not traceable. These sorts of emporal services should never be onfused with the Eternal Servitude or Love. Nevertheless the Puja, meant n a dignified position, should also never be confused with the true confi- lential service. So Paramarthic Guru and Paramarthic Guru-Puja are quite different from the activities of pseudo-attemptors who have some other ulterior selfish and personal motives.

A Real Spiritual Preceptor is defined as One Who dispels the dark- ness of ignorance of our relative plane and opens our blind eyes by his prevailing influence. He is the One Well- wisher without a second to help us to concentrate our scattered activities in the Personal Absolute. So he has no deviated standpoint from the Prime Cause of evolution, susten nce and dissolution. He is the true and perfect guide to show us the transcendental track to approach the Eternal Full Knowledge and Incessant Bliss, ignoring all sorts of gradation of relativity, as well as the undisturbed all-engrossing acme of magnitude. His position will not permit a bona fide approacher, if latter is not insincere and apathetic, to be a possessor of a partial entity merely, hankering after the supplying of his own personal or selfish needs by means of perishable objects, full of contamination of ignorance and of interruption. His Eternal Personality is never to be ignored by means of any unethical principles which do not attend a thorough affection for his disciple while considering all the stages and aspects of his ward, viz., the disciple.

The semitic ideas entertained by a section of so-called intelligent people in fixing preceptorship on an individual of a particular time and space on the basis of ultra-metempsychosis are no cogent ratiocinations by which the audience could be dissuaded from accepting the undeviated position of the Personal Absolute Truth. That sort of mentality is due to an apprehension of impeding the course of contamination and outside infection, and of obstructing the fallibility of disciples that promises to make up his shortness in future, instead of paying whole attention to the most urgent need. The apprehension of such speculations of the Absolute position will prove futile when we consider the fluctuations of different mentalities of intransigent sects or persons due to their unforeseen conditions which have been disclosed in details by assertive statements congenial to a particular locality and fulfilling a temporal purpose.

The deadened mentality produced by an association with insentients and less sentients cannot be enlivened, if a wrong interpretation prevails upon them to posit themselves in an incredulous position. The four-fold flaws or defects of (1) mistake, (2) inebriation, (3) imperfection or inadequacy of senses and (4) deception are companions of every conditioned life. As we are located in such a situation, all our final decisive conclusions are but products of a particular angle of vision. This hinges on associative reflex actions of fallen souls. In order to set us, fallen souls, free from this perverted position, we should crave the help of a transcendental agent who can vouchsafe our march free from the chains of those four fold agents of irregularities. A bona fide regulator should be sought to give us eternal relief from the maladies and sought by bona fide rationalists in praying the Fountainhead.

The Prime Cause of all effects need not be mutilated or manufactured by our unblossomed prerogatives. We are limited entities, but the Unlmited Infinity minus our infinitesimality would give us, as a result, an almost infinite gulf. We earnestly require to search for and target the tie between us and the Unlimited Entity. And in fact that tie is not a rupturer of the harmony or a contending entity, but the most kind-hearted personality. We cannot expect to tide over those four-fold difficulties or pitfalls in our crossing the ocean of Samsara by catching the tails of puppies, I mean, the order-suppliers of our mundane desires. We are no doubt eligible to receive mercy from the All-merciful, when we in our prayer show a clean heart free from all encumbrances of selfish or personal desires in the shape of unconditional surrender.

Our own personality should not incorporate any outside material to obstruct the full vision of the Personal Absolute, but can seek regulation from the Personality of the Absolute Who does not prevent Himself from disclosing His own Person when we are actually free from being overpowered with anything in our communion with Him. The Absolute will no doubt send an Agent to carry His Personality to our unalloyed personality, though susceptible to foreign invasions.

This Transcendental Mediator or Sri Guru Deva is a loving Agent of the All-love and kind to us who are seeking for a tie of love with the All-love. This Embodiment of Love will gradually lead our loving mood to that One Who is the Fountainhead and Mainstay of all aspects of eternal love. This Messenger is the Pioneer Figure of Love, the Courier of the All-love, the Establisher of all relations of love and the Regulator of all our non-loving principles. If we ignore this fundamental principles we will be taking the prerogative on our own accounts and showing jealousy to our fellow-brothers.

The Harmonising Energy of the All-love can shower His blessings personally or through his Agents. Our perception of numerous units in this perverted world has given rise to lord it over them but that act is the very perspective of our wrong apathy towards concentrating our unconditional activities in and for the All-love. If we have a devotional aptitude for the Preceptor, we are sure to get at our Final Goal through him who liberates us by changing our wrong mentality in two processes.

The Deluding Energy of the All-love that is fully opposed to our eternal interest of love towards the Absolute shows a pair of pincers or shafts in order to grip us in her two-fold clutches, viz., that of dislocating and that of enwrapping. The Preceptor is found to combat with her dislocating propensity and enwrapping aptitude against His disciples by means of His kind but sure treatment. So the sincere activities of the Spiritual Guru always tend to give permanent relief to his disciples from those two-fold clutches of Maya which have given rise to the measuring aptitude of disciples, thereby extending their knowledge of the Absolute and removing the foreign obstacles of double layers of dirts that cover them.

A mere flatterer's position to lull and indulge in wrong aptitude of a disciple should never be targeted in the selection of a real and true Guru, but a submissive temper with unconditional surrender on the part of a disciple to the All-Love will invoke Him to condescend to our prayer. The cogent but loving potency of the All-love will then be operating on us to pacify the turmoil arising out of our baneful activities. The Preceptor will never cog us to fall into the extensive snare of Maya as He has no ulterior motive to dissuade us from having a sure access to the transcendental treasures. He will show us for our inspection or examination a comparative chart of the magnitude of time, space and entity. When we submit to measurement, we see no necessity of any outside help; but when we consider Him to be our most intimate friend coming down to us out of causeless mercy, and at the same time to be the bona fide and sure healer of our present maladies we find that He is identical in His activities with the All-love and that He is not only superior to us in every respect but He ever remains in the same direction with Godhead, possessed of a transparent entity to witness the Absolute; whereas, other so-called preceptors are always opaque, as they impede our impressions of the Eternity, Full Knowledge and Incessent Bliss of the All-love.

Our own eternal function is to associate ourselves with the Eternal—to sever our connection with everything temporal, to engage ourselves in All-Knowledge—to dispel all darkness of ignorance as well as to develop and progress with our inherent transcendental entheasm.

I myself have singular business with the singular All-love. I do not require the second person 'You' who have got some other position than my Object, viz., the All-love. I need not trouble myself with the company of 'him' who has no true kindness to me or who has no whole-hearted love for the All-love. So the Personality has a singular significance quite distinct from such Impersonation as we do here, owing to our apathy to the Personality of Godhead, which is improper in itself and which is, in other words, a contamination with incompatible concomitants. I myself should not be polluted by that discord which is always found in the plurality of this miserable manifestation, but I have every inclination to make my friends quite compatible with the All-love, provided you or they count me as one of you or them. I will then be in a position to designate my company in that plurality, as all of us shall there have one aim and object and no conflicting discord due to our mutual rivalries. But I will be all the more pleased if I find another competes in my line to please my All-love in a better way perhaps than I can render. This lower gradation of myself will not harm or prejudice me in the least, but will develop and augment the cause of my unalloyed devotion to and love for Him; I will rather regulate and conciliate my wrong elements harmoniously and count my co-sharer's singular service in the proper light of my Guru. My co-sharer, by rendering closer service to the All-love than my humble devotion, must needs draw more love for my Guru, and on my part I should please my Guru by non-interfering with the greater facility closer service rendered by my sharer. My friends who have greater ·titude of love for the All-love Krishna ·uld not then despise me, but will ndly count me as their humble friend their graciously allowing me to be ·essed with an unalloyed devotion to d love for my own Guru Who is ·ntically the same with the Predo- nated Counter-whole of the Predo- miuating Aspect of the All-love. I will 'therefore' never be hostile and apathetic to those who have a loving tendency for the All-love, but I will reckon them as confidential members whom I should serve with all intimacy and love for their close services to Him in a plane where I have also got an humble position.

I GAUDIYA MUTT, CATHEDRAL MADRAS,
26th February 1932.

SIDDHANTA SARASWATI.

Slippery way to Degradation

THE slippery way to degradation is charming at the very outset, parently invigorating, is enriched ·h pseudo-expectations, an apparent ·uisition of chewing the cuds of sweet ·ams, a tantalised plane of seeming ·unciation and a store-house of phan- magoria or a high mansion of will-o- ·-wisp. If hopes are entertained ·miting suicide from the acme of Everest, those attempts of falling ·y meet obstruction by the uneven ·es of hilly deserts. But the way to ·vn fall from the transcendental plane ·o very smooth, polished and lubricated ·ne of marble that hardly any trace ·esisting pins could be had in such ·nslation.

If I get a turn of mind to follow the slippery path to degradation, I will be unconsciously reaching the lowest point of the nefarious plane. When I meet such an unfortunate position of degrading myself, I find, our well-wishing dictators and Vaishnavas appearing on the scene as checkers and obstructors. But I find my irregular independence setting out in hundred ways to chalk out my track in inventing thousand and one paths to be successful to reach the lowest level. I then find my fitness to embrace degradation for the success of my whims under the impulse of my invigorating charming dreams regarding my benefactors as impediments to whatever is dear to me. The bewildering propensities at the very outset forge my fetters by invincible reasonings and are thereby ensured the progress of their successful march. Sometimes my propensities read aloud the unfailing pretension of incurable disease, sometimes they take resort to the unanswerable plea of a house holder's wants, disadvantages, debts, rigours of law and all others which may serve to bear the appearance of entanglements to check the benign tongue of the Preceptor and His associates; and the sequel is to come down to the unfathomable bottom of destruction.

Generally I put my petition on the table of my Preceptor and His associates that a change is necessary to go back to the soil where I was brought up or placing irrefutable reasons on their table for the necessity of going back to make settlement of my properties; or I court the approbation of mixing freely with my kinsmen. These frivolous reasons are offered as arguments for a change from the association of Vaikuntha to the horrors of the atmosphere of pandemonium.

The sudden change of the association from the highest level to the lowest degradation appears to me to show my shameful conduct putting away my transcendental life and the high jump of going back to the fiery hovel from the peaceful situation of Vaikuntha as quite opposed to my practices. To pacify my revolutionary conception I place my pretended above reasons for shifting my position from the umbrage of my Preceptor and His associates. This inborn appetite makes its appearance as a gangrene covered with a seeming phase of a healthy skin. I spin out hundreds of pretensions for reverting my positions by the open beat of drum in procession and to be furnished with travelling expense of my journey for the objects in my view. I am prone to disclose my heart that I am obliged to get into the life of a householder to attend to my infirmed parents, as there is none to attend them. It is with great apparent diffidence that I progress to be obliged to lead a family life and to submit to the misery of working for livelihood for my old parents who are quite incapable of earning their bread.

I formulate a hundred reasons to decorate and enrich the amenities of the household of the Geeta of the proverb with a view to degrade myself under pretext of reasonings. I take resort to innovations in a clever way to enjoy the world and to save myself from remonstrations likely to be offered by my true friends. Sometimes I play the dodge of forwarding my reasonings to the effect that as mendicants and savants who by the clear call once definitely renounced the world, are also degraded with their mentalities changed, so, following them, why should I not protect myself from evils by changing the apparel of a Brahmachari to that of a householder ?

The robe I embraced hitherto was never meant to offer the highest standard of serving my Preceptor heartily, nor was it meant for my cognisance of the true self. Had it been purported to target my real self, I would have succeeded in ascertaining my future duties. I would have picked up the transcendental words of my Preceptor which incessantly flowed into my ears. I could not ascertain who my real parents are. I was fascinated, 'Are the parents associated with my structural body ?—For what have I come to this world ?' If I had a bonafide intention to know all these, I would have continued my association with my Preceptor and His associates. To tell the truth I took my robes with an insincere motive though I concealed my inner heart, to pass the sweet life of a householder. So I was a pretender, I joined the mission as a dishonest seeker, not as an honest one. I played the part of a deserter from the sweet association of my family and children not for serving heartily my Preceptor but for satisfying my external senses. As a pretender I masqueraded my irregular independence and was actually concealing myself to lead an irregular life just like a fiery horse without reins.

I had observed before entering the Mission, the householder's life to be full of misery and pains, troublesome and entangling and enchaining myself. So under the then impulse I was led to deem it fit to be instigated to live an irresponsible and comfortable life, to get rich dishes under the pretext of Prasadam, to dance independently under the garb of devotion. I craved enjoyment of paradise under the pretext of devotion. I falsely played the part of a true devotee to win approbation. I thought I could delude my competitors with these seeming activities by apparently getting over misery, pains, troubles, needs, dependence and relativity.

But now I find that I am overwhelmed with misery, pain, dependence relativity. I find I could not set myself free from the slavish disposition and to say the truth, I have never been in touch with my Preceptor and Shree Krishna in my serving mood. If I disclose my heart I could recognise my position that I really jumped into the mission of devotees being instigated by dreams of enjoyments in order to get rid of the unbearable afflictions which victimise and trouble a householder's life. But I had my stream of enjoyments flowing undetected, concealed beneath outward covering of sands. Now I entertain that I should go back to my former intoxicated position of a rat seeking for his old shelter and this has brought me to the slippery plain of slaughter. I am now visioning the sweet dreams of flowery enjoyment, offering my head to be chopped off by the guillotine. Oh! This is the powerful engine of twisting, my mentality, which was never detected before.

I know it perfectly that my Preceptor is often shouting with His usual mandates to grant me a license which could give me relief from the impending clutches of seeming apprehension. Will not my sleepy condition break down and receive the transcendental tidings? Hark! The song of dissipating my slumber is being sung. This has a different music from the charming lullabies of the world.

The true song was sung by the Preceptor,—'Ye fishlike human souls! Why do you entangle yourselves in this snaring net of the measured existence? Don't you know you will ever be captivated there by the tempting baits of enjoyments? You will have to remain within the prison-bars like a criminal and you will lose your independence by undergoing punishment? But I advise you to lead the life of a subservient to Krishna in the Ocean of Love where you will find your full independence, if you have at all any loving mood for the Transcendental Absolute.'

It was before now my mentality that whatever is talked of by my Preceptor, can have no real footing in this world. I cannot claim that I have freed myself from that sort of mentality. But now I realise by my actual experience that all the words that were uttered are true to the letter. I had that sort of innate inclination in me of enjoying the world by my senses. The very genesis of enjoyment has formulated the development of need, disadvantage and ill-health which is to break asunder all sorts of remonstrations to lead me to gain, and this wrong impulse is nothing but jumping into the burning flame of worldly enjoyment.

This indomitable wrong spirit might have corroboration and approbation from the so called worldly advisers or pseudo-preceptors. But the real and bonafide Preceptor is always in the mood of really sympathising with the miserable like ourselves. He is always our well-wisher. He is found to impede our agreeing and disagreeing mentalities by His apparent rigours of disciplinary words to save us. Once we had heard the mortal champion Napoleon to say as he stood before the Alps, "I don't find any mountain before me." But greater Alpses are just in front of falling souls who are ever apathetic to regain their serving mood, instigated by their sensuous efforts, temptations, which are better instances than millions of Himalayas that are observed to have their apparent locus standi. Our Preceptor has ignored all these and the temporal conceptions of millions of mortal Napoleons with His incomparable highsounding shouting. He is found always to have possessed all the transcendental powers in His speech when He says that no barrier of want can impede our course, no amount of ill-health can dissuade us from serving Krishna all time which is the essential function of unadulterated souls. The only need we experience of man here is the want of delineation of the song of Krishna and this forgetfullness is the root cause of all ill-health. I know not whether there is any instructor who has so boldly preached this doctrine, having had the true diagnosis, like the transcendental Supreme Authority of service-holders, I mean Valadeva. I know not any other Preacher Who has so sincerely wished our success in dispelling the apathy to our serving Krishna eternally. I know not any Acharyya Who has boldly impeded the erroneous views of the deluded eternal souls. I know not any Acharyya Who has got so firm a determination of more well wishing mentality than our present Preceptor. I know not any Acharyya Who has such determination against offering the slightest license of enjoyment. Surely I have not come across a description of such an Acharyya Whose well-wishing excelled that of our present Preceptor; but we have never witnessed such fullest view as in the out-and-out true impulse in words and deeds of the Preceptor.

Inspite of my eternal aptitude for enjoyment, my eternal deafness, my eternal propensity to fall, I am not fully disappointed of the standard of the highest boon of the immortal situation of my Preceptor. I still possess a confidence in Him that I could be lifted out of the Abyss into my life-boat which is identical with His Lotus Feet. I am not despondent of my success. I entertain full hope of ascending up the Purpose Tree of the Lotus Feet of Sri Krishna Who are the fulfillers of my highest ambition. I have come to the conclusion that in every stage of our different births, we will be supplied with our reciprocal needs of senses. But I must not allow even a second to pass in any other engagement till my life-breath is over. I should seek my eternal good.

Reply to Welcome Address

Lecture delivered by Editor at 6. 30 P. M. on the 1st Feb. 1932 in reply to the Welcome Address given by the President and members of Bhagabat Prarthana Samajam, Ellore (Madras)

My Loving friends !

THE address you have given me this evening I have heard patiently but my real position would not allow me to receive such eloquent encomium for me. I am a most insignificant being. So it is not at all fit for me to receive such an address. I am asked to explain to you the best and highest duty of man, as instructed by the Supreme Lord Sri Krishna Chaitanya, the gist of Sri Bhagabatam as well as Krishna Bhakti. These are the three things I am asked to explain to you.

First of all we have to determine ourselves as to what we should do and what should be our duty. I find a shloka in Bhagabatam—"लब्धा सुदुर्लभमिदम् बहु सम्भवान्ते मानुष्यमर्थदमनित्यमपीहधीरः । तूर्णं यतेत न पतेदनुमृत्यु यावत निःश्रेयसाय विषयः खलु सर्व्वतः स्यात् ॥ We should attain first to this that we are in need of receiving the Divine boon, our own boon of the self. As we are now in human frame, we can have the opportunity of knowing the fact of transcendence. Inanimate beings are not known as sentient. They are deprived of the function of audiencing the transcendental sounds. They cannot be communicated all that we are in need of in future. But we have now got a human life and this predicament has allowed us to hear from a source through the medium of transcendental sound in response to our desire of the best thing for which we crave.

We have experienced finitude in our previous births and in this life too by our empirical activities. We have come across many things and we have come to the conclusion that we should seek for the best ;-and, in order to do so, we require that we should pay sufficient attention to our own acquisition, eternal acquisition ;—and this is based on the opportunity offered to us.

When we think that we are conditioned souls we always look to the outer side of our existence, that is, the external body we have, and then we come to inspect the inner aspect which we call our astral body ; and both these come and go, but these two have no eternal reference associated with us. But as our souls are eternal, we cannot consider that the futile external body as well as the internal temporal body are identical with the soul. They are incorporated later on by the abuse of our independent will. When we abuse, that free will, or when we show our diffidence to serve the Absolute, the Over-soul, we think we are to predominate over Nature and Natural Phenomena. But these things, so to say, have only temporal level. The eternal self should never be considered as identical with the mind who is but an agent of the soul to meddle temporarily with the external world. We are but part and parcel of the Over-soul, that is, of Paramatma. We are all human souls. We must not be confusing that by breaking the jar, I mean, the material body, we can come to the conclusion that we have no other situation but to be identical with the Over-soul. But that is not the case. We are measurable cavities. Simply by the breaking of the external frame, we cannot think that we will be turned immeasurable. We are decidedly always measurable things. This measurement or the very platform of finitude is quite sufficient for us not to consider ourselves to be the Over-soul. A finitude cannot consider that the very finiteness can ever claim that he is the Infinite. So, Sree Krishna Chaitanya has told us that in your entity you are no other but Karshnas, or Vaishnavas. You have no other eternal functions but to serve Sree Krishna. If you are forgetful of rendering your service to Sree Krishna you will be denied the whole thing and you will be put into staging of this conditioned life. So the duty of the mind is to associate itself in all, through the senses. We are now accommodated in passionate senses and the senses are directed to different directions and not to One. So there is a deviation from the Absolute. By that deviation, we find hundreds of things appearing before us. They tempt us and we engage ourselves in rendering our services to them. When we are assured that the only duty of the soul is to render service to the Over-soul and the other incorporations are but temporal, we then decide that we should clear out our position from the different engagements of the world that are placed before us. We come to understand that we are part and parcel of the Fountainhead, the Over-soul, and we are not the Substance but we are fractional parts of one of the potencies. We are given to understand that in the transcendental region no foreign thing should be included and in this world we do not find the unalloyed position of transcendence. We get a mistaken idea by posing our situation here considering ourselves to be a part of this universe—a part of this phenomenon,—as we are now in our conditioned life. We are now, rather enwrapped by the two wrappers; and these two wrappers are made up of matter and obstructing subtlety. So we run the risk of subscribing to the view of identifying ourselves with material phenomena, or, if we are moveable, we find that we have got an astral body. We can be drawn to the Absolute from the limited concrete world and we can fancy upon those drawn-up ideas of matter. So our duty should not be confined to the foreign wrappers associated with the foreign things only, I mean the material body which has got sense and these other equipments, and these equipments are meant to abstract ideas from the concrete. But these ideas vary according to our fitness in empirical activity. This much of phenomena is for the external and internal bodies but is not meant for the soul.

But we have got our own position in the eternal land, that is, the land between 'Chit' and 'Achit'; and we call that plane 'Tatastha'. Some human souls are conditioned and some are liberated. Liberation is nothing but to go back to the original position, that is, to offer our services to the Eternal Being, as we are eternal objects. If we mean that we should come under the temporal clutch we may do so by enjoying this world which gives us happiness (?); but the normal condition of this world is full of miseries as all experienced men have observed. That very thing itself is puzzling. Why have we come to this place? It is so because we have exercised our free will to play on a particular level and we have been abusing our free will to turn 'Kartas'. In other words, we have taken an initiative to enjoy this world and we have thereby submitted to the trap or rather to the laws, of Karma. We think that we have had everything on our own risk. But when we come to know from good counsel that the external body is misused by the association of this world and our internal body is misused by mental speculation or by meddling with these external phenomena, we realise that our own entity is lying in a dormant condition inside that, and if the interest of the soul is scrutinised, we will find that service of the Absolute is the eternal function of the soul and the only duty.

In our conditioned life we see here that we have got five different relationships. We trace these five relationships among our friends, and some of us think we should approach the Over-soul with a definite purpose of our own to please Him, to serve for Him, to render service to Him, that is, to place ourselves before Him, to attend to His eternal necessity and not to attend to our temporal seeming necessity. As an elevationist, as a Karmi, we require that happiness should come to us. As a salvationist we think we should merge into the Absolute so that the fruit is to come to us personally, whereas we always deprive the Over-soul of having our services for Him. We do not give Him any opportunity to love us by our Karmakanda or Jnanakanda. We do not give any privilege to the Absolute as we have got a strong inclination of acquiring something for ourselves which we think will give us happiness for our sensuous purposes. All these phenomena come to us, and as soon as we come in contact with a real sage who can give us a true idea, a thorough idea of the thing, we will at once adopt that process and thereby relieve ourselves from this conditioned life. When we are in need of having the counsel of an entity who is conversant with the thought of transcendence we seek his protection. Considering our present position Sree Krishna Chaitanya, as Jagadguru, has preached what we require. I quote the original shloka in Sanskrit 'तृणादपि सुनीचेन तरोरिव सहिष्णूना। अमानिना मानदेन कीर्त्तनीय सदाहरिः॥ A man who is desirous of having the greatest boon should always utter the Name of the Transcendental Absolute, the Eternal Absolute, the Eternal Knowledge, the Eternal Bliss, the Ecstatic Bliss, the Complete, Who is called Hari. The very Word Hari is the Transcendental Sound and this should never be confused with the ordinary conception of Allha, God, Brahma, Paramatma, &c., of different languages. The dictionaries have given us the light of the words and we are conversant with the object of the words and they targeted us to a brief compass, instead of the fullest aspect, of the all-embracing Object of love. So Sree Krishna Chaitanya wants that if we wish to liberate ourselves from these puzzling questions we should hear first from the lips of a conversant in transcendentalism and he should utter the Name of Hari. He will be quite eligible to go with his chanting the Name of Hari all along twenty-four hours in the day. He can have a privilege of uttering the Name of Hari for all time. If he can claim that he has the lowest and most degraded position, instead of considering himself as Brahma,—'Aham Brahma',—identifying himself with the All-Persuasive. If he is found that he can endure any amount of trouble that may be offered by some agencies, he can have a patience to undergo all sorts of troubles offered by everybody; and if he is in the mood of uttering the Name, the Name being identical with Hari Himself, that uttering of the Name would allow him to consider himself as the humblest of all and most enduring which will point out his way to bliss, which sets him free from all earthly things and from his seeming friends who may be giving him temporal comforts. He will then surely find his way to ignore all non-Absolute that seem to enrich really to impoverish him.

He should be always considering himself to be the lowliest and infinitesimal, so as not to participate with matter or in some other mental thought that may be drawn out of Nature's productions. He should consider himself a non-entity in this mundane world. If he considers that he has somthing to do with this world and is in need of this world's acquisitions in the shape of intelligence or in the shape of acquisition of some material objects such as land etc., he would be a failure in his transcendental march. But if a devotee knows his position well, he should think that he is not a big thing in the estimation of all the people in this world. He should simply connive at the people. He should patiently bear all that could be offered to him. He might be called a fool or he might be called an incompetent man. Still he should not show any resisting mood to such aggressive implications. So the soul is asked to utter the Name of Krishna first. He should hear the Name of Krishna from an unconditioned soul who has no aptitude whatsoever for the world. He should audience such Sound from him. His model would be sufficient to follow and he will then come to know that chanting is possible for the soul all the twenty-four hours every day without leaving a single second for some other purpose. If he is found to be impatient, if he is found to be hankering after a position in this mundane world, he would fall back to chant the Name of Hari, the Transcendental Being.

Krishna or Hari has got no mortal coil to come under measuring clutch, like us. He does not require any labour on our part for chanting His Name. So we should be accepting the views of Sree Krishna Chaitanya in our transcendental march, in perference to any other advice. The position of the unalloyed soul should adopt a non-interfering policy of the mind as well as of the body; and if we can alienate our position, we would find that we are relieved of all this mundane anxieties by it in the shape of matter or in the subtle form of intelligence. Leaving aside these, the function of the soul is to take the Name of Krishna, as Krishna is the fullest view of the Transcendence of the Absolute, of the ever-existing Manifestation and is All-Knowledge and is All-Bliss. He is Satchidananda and that Satchidananda will prevail on us by our so welcoming the transcendental Word. If we are sincere He would be coming upon our vision and we would find Him. We must not be thinking that this material world is the full aspect of His manifestation, as our different senses connot approach Him, our eye cannot see Him our nose cannot get smell of His Body, the flowers that we offer cannot reach Him. We cannot relish Mahaprasadam if it has not been accepted by Him. In all, we must rely on Him as the Sole Enjoyer of everything and we are His subservients in every way.

As the Transcendental Name of Hari is identical with His Person in every respect, that Name Himself has all the attributions and every-thing connected with Hari ; and as all are to be found in the Transcendental Namam, we can safely follow the track of Sree Krishna Chaitanya. What-ever we desire we get from His Name. No ignorance can be ascribed to Him. He is enriched with all sorts of Rasas. He is possessed of all the Rasas. Krishna Himself is full of all senses. He is embellished with all the Rasas required by His associates.

In the manifested world we find a thing which passes by the name of Rasa, rather a relishing thing, an object of taste. It is a perishable drink. But Rasa in Krishna is the Emporium of all Rasas, in Whom all the five are included. We must not be thinking that Rasa in Krishna's service is identical with the mundane Rasas which are inadequate and full of deformities. The Scriptures show that Rasa of Krishna. In the beginning of the Bhagabatam this is what we find,— Rasas are drinks which are relished by the soul's eternal senses and these have different denominations than what are presented to us for a few hours or a few days. This worldly Rasa does not continue. But the eternal Rasa, which is not implicated with any ignorance, has no miserable face, no depriving face, like the Rasa of this mundane world ; they are limited for our purpose here to give us to understand that we would amply rely on by this spark here of Rasa, and we can go back to the Rasa if we at all think that we should be eternal 'Rashikas'. 'Rasamaya' is Sree Krishna and we are to submit our loving service for His purpose of tasting. We are to approach Him not for our own enjoyment. These senses are meant that all enjoyment should go to Him. We see that all sorts of manifestations are for Him and the direction of pervertad Rasas requires to go back to Him and not to be shared by us. We should always place ourselves in a serving mood and we would be always welcoming the Name of Krishna and send our words to Krishna purporting to His services ; but on the other hand, if we find that we should enjoy the Rasa through Krishna, that would simply degrade us to the ditch of selfishness and he would be assuming the part of an enjoyer, and we are surely to be deprived of perfect Rasa. This Rasa is never expected to continue, as the components are of a trivial nature. Whereas Krishna is Rasamritamurti and we are to depend upon that Ocean of Rasa. We will then look forward to give Him all facilities to enjoy our spiritual eternal activities. Our case of enjoying Rasa from appetite of the senses would lead us to deal with an inanimate thing. When we extract some Rasa from dependent objects then that Rasa would never be our continued companion. That Rasa would simply desert our companionship and we will be depriving ourselves by tantalising our poor senses. But Sree Krishna is not likely to delude us by allowing us to keep our affinity for something else. He is a Spiritual Being and not an Achit, insentient. He has not only to enjoy Rasa but He is full of Rasa. And if we want to be in touch with eternal Rasa, we can become transcendental Rasika. In case we seek for temporary Rasa we would receive Birasa, perverted Rasa. Krishna has monopolised all Rasa. He is the Fountainhead of all the Rasa. The Name is very storehouse of all the Rasas which we should seek without making any difference between the Name and the Object pointed out by the Name, unlike the case in this temporal world which has got destructive merit. Krishna is identical with the word Hari, His Colour, His Size and the Attribution and Activities. Krishna is Himself Eternal. The Name of Krishna is Eternal, and does not mean any object of Nature. Nature's phenomena have nothing to do with Krishna Who is not a transitory manifested view of this world. These are all temporary things and we must not be confusing the Leela of Krishna with them. If we do so our such conception would be erroneous, we should refrain from mistaking the mundane thought for that of transcendence. We should make our position clear here.

He is full in Himself. नामचिन्तामणिः कृष्णश्चतन्य रसविग्रहः। पूर्णः शुद्धो नित्य मुक्तोऽभिन्नत्वा न्नामनामिनोः॥ All sorts of activities are manifested in Himself He is the store of all. If we require to exercise our senses we must resort to other's help. But in the case of Krishna it is quite different. He does not require any assistance from anybody. He is Nitya, Suddha, Poorna and Mukta in Himself; He is unconditioned. Nothing can wrap Him. This talk of Krishna, His Name, the Transcendental Name, is identical with Krishna but that is not the case with other things than Krishna. When we name something of this world we necessarily give the opportunity of examining its validity by different senses. The taste, smell, sight and perceptions offer to examine the personalities of things. But Krishna does not require such examination as is not an object of our jurisdiction. is the Autocrat. He does not care be helped by us.

So the ordinary name, that is a ne which does not mean Krishna, s got a different significance. We st not be bringing all names of ferent gods, men, lower creation, entient objects under the deluding luence of maya in the same category the Absolute Krishna. We would rather hopeless if we consider that e Name Krishna is but a word of mmar and that Name was given to ero only whose deeds were recorded history. This is not the case with e Transcendental Name which history d other mundane subject cannot ssibly eclipse. The name is comple- y identical with Krishna, the Perso- lity. So His Name has no difference m Krishna Himself, as difference stick to temporal and limited jects only.

In the iron age of materialism ople are very fond of their relativity knowledge and by their empiric gumentative appetite they hasten count everything under motion and atter. But if we utter the Name of rishna every contending phase would transformed into harmony and we uld get perfect concord. We do t chant the Name of Krishna leaving ide all that are detrimental to the anting. So as we are surcharged in the atmosphere with erroneous impressions here we cannot expect at the very outset to utter the Name properly without difficulty. We never welcome Krishna proper by uttering His Name, but in course of chanting hundreds of rotten rubbish things intervene owing to our uncontrolled desires.

We are associated with many mundane impressions, so we require to hear about those ten offences that should not be committed during the chanting of the Name of Hari. Without getting rid of the ten offences we cannot make any actual progress. (1) If we show our affinity towards men who have thought it fit that only the process of uttering the Name of Krishna will not do us any good, the preceptor or bonafide Sadhus, being faulty. Then we would be committing the first offence. (2) The second offence will be when we think that Krishna is not the only aspect of Hari and place some other name of delegated gods from our experience of this mundane world in the position of Krishna that their names should be installed instead of Krishna's Transcendental Name; this will be no doubt an offence. As the Word Krishna has got the full denomination of the Thing no other words can be replaced against the Word Krishna. All other words are all eclipsed and incomplete expressions of Krishna, whereas the Word Krishna can give us all Bliss in case we do not cripple our vision to witness the actual sight of Krishna. If we would denounce this we would be committing the second offence. So we should be careful not to consider the Name of Krishna as on a level with the name of others. As the Word Krishna is enriched with all sorts of equipments—all sorts of attributions that are possible here,—so in tracing the Fountainhead of everything, we are to resort to the Word Krishna and to no other word. The other words have got crippled meanings. The whole entire thing Krishna cannot be represented in the full vision, if we neglect Him. The word Brahma can not claim the full representation nor the 'Paramatman' or Oversoul, not to speak of some other concepts of men.

If we consider that curd is the same as milk it would be a sheer folly. The milk has got another position. When the Word is transformed we find some other conception of the Word Godhead. The Word 'Krishna' can give us the full impression of the Object of our love and worship but the word 'Rama' cannot give us the full aspects of Vishnu in all Rasas. All the different aspects of the Personalities of Krishna should not be considered to have all Rasas in them.

He is void of all Gunams or qualities. So Satchidananda is ever-existing, All-Blissful and All-Knowledge. He accepts all who show a particular aptitude of serving Him. Leaving aside the Name of Krishna in other names of gods known as Brahma, Sankara, we cannot get the same relation as we expect in Krishna, the Avataree. So this is an offence to the Name of Krishna.

I do not mean that the name of Rama should be placed in the same category with other minor gods, as He is Vishnu. In other words, Rama is Krishna. Rama is an Avatara of the Fountainhead of all Avataras. Whereas Krishna is the Avataraee. Only four partially obscured aspects are to be found in Rama Who is not the whole aspect of encouraging different kinds of Rasikas. But that is a partial aspect of Krishna Who is the fully manifest Rasa. We should resort to Krishna for the full aspect. We must not be thinking that Rudra and other gods are full, when Hara is perceived as the destroying agency who assumes a disfigured vision of the Object. He is not the full object of our worship. Brahma and Rudra are evolutionary and dissolutionary agencies of the eternal Sustainer Vishnu Who has three potencies. If Rudra, the energy of destruction, is replaced in the position of the Sustainer Vishnu, we will never get similar result. We should, therefore, dispel such erroneous impressions. He has got delegated power of Vishnu ; but Vishnu is the Absolute entity. We must not be misled to subscribe the second offence.

(3) The third offence is to show an apathetic mood towards Guru. We must not be neglecting Him. A man who thinks that he would lift himself up to the Absolute by his own attempts can never do so unless he accepts His favourite counter-Whole, the Guru. The analogy of the entity should not be ignored when we get a glimpse of the same through Him, as the existence of the Sun is proved by rays. If a ray is asked 'who you are ?' Then the ray will declare that he is the Sun. But if you ask again—'Are you the whole of the Sun ?' he will say in reply that he is only a part or pencil merely. So infinitesimal as we are the full knowledge is to come from the Fountainhead of knowledge and full knowledge is never secured here by our emipricalactivities. We must not be guided or induced by the knowledge of finitude of the phenomenal world. If we do so the result will be confined to the mundane horizon only and we would have no opportunity to go beyond this sphere. So we should always rely on the Scriptures and Guru whenever we seek for transcendental message.

Scriptures tell us many things of the transcendence to which we are debarred to have any access. We see all the horizon round us and we see half the sky when the bottomnal half is covered by the opaque earth. One quater of the space is kept in front of us as we are not provided with eyes in our back, so three quarters are not visible to us at one time. So our argument and our impressions, bearing one quadrant only, are all partial. We must rely on the transcendental sound of Scriptures which do not submit to our senses. (4) We should not be discouraging the Scriptures as they are the only source of knowledge of the Absolute left for us

We cannot commit the considerable amount of offence which can be relieved by once uttering the Name. We can get rid of all sorts of sins if we utter once the Name. (5) Having been assured of this fact that one transcendental Name can relieve us of all sorts of sins that we do in our past life and in this life, and that one Name can manage to efface and extirpate all sorts of wrongs, if on this assurance we go on committing all sorts of wrongs, it will be the fifth offence and this offence would never be pardoned.

There are other five offences. (6) If we think that other acts like ablution in sacred water, virtuous deeds like Jajna (Sacrificing rituals), may lead us to the same result as the chanting of the Name, then this becomes the sixth offence. (7) If we are unmindful during the chanting of the Name we would be committing the seventh offence. (8) The eighth offence is committed when we associate worldly affairs with our peverted ego or mentality while uttering the Name. (9) The ninth offence would be committed when we consider the unique power attached to the utterance of the Name as an exaggeration to induce us to submit to the process of singing. (10) The tenth offence is to instruct Nam Bhajan to men who have no regard for the same.

These are the processes that would admit early facility for our progress in devotional development. The different eight stages of a devotee are inculcated to make him acquainted with his progress. They are,—(1) 'Sraddha' or confidence in the words of Guru and the Shastras ; (2) This reliance will prompt us for the company of the real Sadhu ; (3) 'Sadhu-Sanga' or company of sadhus will lead to devotional activities ; (4) Such activities will have the effect of eliminating all evils associated with our wrong mentality. These are the four function which form the first division of the cultural stages of devotion. Having gone through these we can devotionally engage ourselves in Nama. Then follow the latter parts of four kinds of stages : the first stage is Nistha which is followed by Ruchi, and then by Ashakti and then our cultaral Devotion is developed into Bhava. Nistha is undeviating temper, Ruchi is predilection, Ashakti denotes firm attachment and Bhava is the blossomed state of Love when we mark Kshanti, Abyarthakalatvam, Birakti, Mansunyata, Ashabandha, Samutkantha, Namagane sada ruchi, Ashaktistad-gunakhyane, Pritistad Basati-sthale. In Bhabhabhakti we mark a composition of four ingredients with Rati. This mixture is known as Rasa or palatable drink. We can set out ourselves free from mental speculations and we reach a plane where all sorts of good come to us, to relish in every way, and this can only be had, when we have got a purified mind—when we do not find any disturbance in the mind—when the pacification of the mind is obtained. Then we can have Rasa. The state is never referred to in this worldly Rasa of sensuous enjoyment, as the enjoyment we are given in this world is temporal and inadequate. We should not consider ourselves to be identical with Him instead of considering ourselves as His eternal servants. This has a wide gulf. All the services that we are going to render to Him should be in His favour and interest and not in our favour or interest. When we chant His Name the Transcendental Name will be on the look-out to regulate us and will automatically teach us the principle of Bhakti. The higher stage of Bhava- hakti is known as Prema-Bhakti, or ll Love of Krishna. This love is the ıly thing to be sought from Krishna ıd He gives us all sorts of facilities r which we can offer our services to im in any one of the five different ages. He has assured us firmly that e would accept us if we tend to bmit to any one of the five. The ıly crucial point is that we should fer our services unconditionally so as give something to our Lord and not get something from the Lord. We ould not have any desires ushering e devotional attempts and should t compel Him to give us something in turn. If we have got that sort of ssionate desire we will surely fail to ove ourselves genuine. We should gulate ourselves in such a mood as to always serviceable to Him and not get from Him any boon or comfort return. To get service from Him is to share a part of the Enjoyer Krishna which is the greatest offence in a true devotee. So we should have a devotional temperament to the Kamadeva and not the temperament of enjoyer of this world. This is the true service to Him, which all unalloyed souls can do, but which the mind can not do properly by wrong speculations. In fine I may tell you that we have many things to supplement these devotional topics by way of giving solution of different ideas which are no doubt puzzling. The only thing that we should have is an unalloyed and unconditional devotional spirit which is quite different from the mentality of an elevationist or a salvationist. An unconditional devotional mood is the only function of the unalloyed soul. We should underline this cardinal point many times which will bring Prema for us from the Supreme Lord.

Some Queries put by M. R. Ry. Y. Jagannadham B. A. Pantulu Garu

(In his letter to Editor dated 11. 2. 32. Editor's answers there to dated 20. 2. 32.)

Q. The position of Chit-Jagat and Mayik Jagat.

A. The Chit-Jagat or the transcendental world has got a full manifestive representation ; whereas Mayik Jagat is a perverted reflectien of that transcendental manifestation. We are endowed with senses which get an impression of the phenomenal world, the perfect original ideal of which lie in the Chit-Jagat. Every entity in Chit-Jagat is intelligent, cogent and harmonious ; whereas matters here are not sentient to take any initiative. Chit-Jagat is known as Vaikuntham ; whereas Mayik Jagat as Brahmanda. In Chit Jagat there is only One Supreme Authority and the others are His true dependent or subservient ; whereas in Mayik Jagat, we find millions of masters or enjoyers with millions of enjoyed subservients. Chit is eternal and indestructible, whereas matters or products of Maya are of transformable and limited nature which proves their inadequacies and deformities. In Chit-Jagat there is no ignorance whatsoever of free souls whereas in Mayik Jagat, mayik impressions of fallen fettered souls are always obscured with intervening materials.

Q. 2. The name and the position of the waters which cause the perverted reflection and the position of the Mayik Jagat.

A. The Karana Ocean is the primitive cause of the universes with their inhabitants. The Garva Ocean accommodates the universes and the Kshira Ocean causes the individuality. The reflected part of Chit-Jagat i.e., this universe, is minimised according to the level where it is reflected. Original aud perversion are opposed to each other. Water is the reflected plane and the Original is perverted when it shows similarity ignoring the original position. Maya has a distinctive reference from Satchidananda. Maya has two different phases viz., (1) her efficient phase properly known as Maya, (2) her materialistic phase known as Pradhana. Mayadheesha has no perversion and He is no reflection like mayadheenas. The unperverted perfect reflection is His Prakasha Bheda (different Aspects) ; whereas the perverted reflections have got similar activities with the differentiations of perversion.

Q. 3. The Location where Tatastha Shakti operates ; the creation of souls and what makes them either fallen or saved ; their nature before Maya Shakti.

A. Krishna has got innumerable Shaktis of which Tatastha claims the Intermediate position between Chit and Achit Shaktis. The pure soul is not created within time, but is ever-existing, unadulterated knowledge and is endowed with eternal bliss. Creation is restricted on the plane of Guna-Maya. The Gunas or Qualities disclose the obscured specification of the Eternity and this Creation, Sustenance and Destruction within Time and Space.

Tatastha has both the eternal power of associating with temporal as well as eternal planes. Souls who have got their stations at Tatastha have got free will. Each of the Individual souls by exercising his free will can abuse or properly use his independence. He has got two different fields in two different directions. He may choose one of these for his stage. When he is in an enjoying mood and considers himself identical with the Predominating Object or the Absolute he is said to be fallen and when he shows an aptitude for serving the Transcendental Predominating Object, he is freed from the clutches of limitation and limited enjoyments and is eternally associated in serving the Predominating. The souls in the Tatastha position are not one, but many in number. They are not to associate themselves with unalloyed Chit-Shakti or unalloyed A-chit or Maya-Shakti In Tatastha position, souls do not show any activity but they are found to be in an indolent state.

Q. 4. The Location or the position obtained by Jnanins who desire liberation affecting the fourth Purushartha.

A. The Jnanins view the liberation in the fourth Purushartha in different ways by communion in the same plane with Brahma, by nearing Him by attaining all His powers, by attaining His Figure even in His Impersonal Form and by merging into Him. The annihilative impressions of a liberated Jnanin have no basis. but the other positions viz., Salokya etc., are but fruitive results due to their particular whims, having some approbation of Godhead. These may be sought when they are stationed on the mundane plane. Unelevated positions often induce them to hanker after such fruitive results. But when they find that unalloyed service in the inherent quality of human souls, they set no value to the former at the time of their liberation e. g., Bhag. Canto III. Chap XXIX, Sl. 13.

Q. 5. The details to which the illustrations regarding the threefold appearance of the mountain, as speck of cloud, as a hard mass of stone and and as containing within itself all the glories of Nature, refer I mean the technical Names i. e. Brahma Paramatma, Bhagawan.

A. This is an analogy by which the conception and spirit of the words "Brahman" "Paramatman" and "Bhagawan" is illustrated. The hazy outward conception which is no true conception of the Object is known as "Brahman". When communion is established, penetration is effected of senses allowing us a better knowledge of the object like Yogins, which though different from the hazy idea we maintain from a distance which is the conception of "Brahman", is however, a partial perception. The full conception and perception of unalloyed souls is different from communion with and witnessing the Absolute from a distance. This is how a Bhakta should render his unalloyed service (भजन) to his Object of devotion. The distant Object will seem as a speck of cloud and the hardness of the stone will not permit us to have an easy access to or full association with the Object as in the case of the full conception and perception by our eternal transcendental senses. Brahmagnas or Jnanins, intermediate Yogins and freely associated Bhaktas have got their Object known as "Brahman" "Paramatman" and "Bhagawan" respectively e. g., Bhagabatam. Canto 1, Chap. ii, 11th Sloka :—

"वदन्ति तत् तत्वविद्स्तत्वं यज्ज्ञानमद्वयम्।
ब्रह्मेति-परमात्मेति भगवानिति शब्द्यते॥

Q. 6. Further and detailed information regarding Vasudeb, Lakshmi-Narayana, Sita-Ram, Rukmini- Dwarakesha, Golakesha conceptions of Godhead.

A. In considering the Absolute Position of Transcendental Eternity Full Knowledge and Incessant Bliss, we are dissuaded in fixing Him in sexological questions. When we take up the neuter phase with its prominent feature, we do naturally pin the same in the neuter phase. The position of relativity prompts us to target Him in the Masculine form. But when the question of reciprocity intervenes, we necessarily jump into tracing the Material Cause neglecting the Efficient Cause. In our atheistic considerations, the question of sexology is more or less found to terminate in temporary view only. When we proceed to attend to the cause of this universe, this cosmographic investigation leads us to the apparent phases of things. So, when the exoteric manifestations win over our heart, we see a poly-atheistic view of the Object. Sometimes it turns to animism, as Taylor would tell us; or sometimes henotheism enshrouds our contemplation.

When polemical questions disturb us, we show a different mood of assimilating everything in one category, eliminating at the same time numerical question. When that view is scrutinised thoroughly, we indulge in a finitudinal mood by accepting the origination of every thing to be an indolent entity. Up to this time, we do not take up the theistic phase of Vasudeb. The first impression of theism leads us to Vasudeb, the Personality of Godhead, where we find no prominence of the neuter demonstration of the prerogative. We find the Efficient and Material Cause, simultaneously manifested in the singularity of Vasudeb. Vasudeb is considered as the first quadrant of the four-fold Aspect to complete the circumambulating inspection of the Circular Personality Who has four directions. The introductory commencement of Vasudev has terminated by the appendix or the three other folds of the same.

When the Personality is viewed in His Predominating Aspect we find the manifestation of the Predominated Reciprocal Disclosure. So in the second phase of the Theistic view, we witness the Transcendental Vasudev in His Lakshmi Narayana Aspect, where the Efficient Cause of the Transcendental Vasudev is obscured. This very inquisitive temper must not lead us to scrutinise Lakshmi-Narayana like finite objects of this world which have a despicable phase of relativity.

But the transcendental phase of relativity will relieve us of all baseness and grossness, when we find, in Rama-Vaikuntham, eternal Dasaratha with Kaushalya, whose descended manifestations are traced in time and space for the publicity of those who deserve it and not for any preferential attachment of imperfection of historicity. We find Seeta-Rama in the Third phase of Theism.

One more variegated Aspect can be secured by a peep into the Entity of Dwarakesha where the restricted imposition of worldly ethics get no value. So we necessarily see that the full extensions of all the manifestive Rasas is not wanting in this Object of our offering different service. This supreme stage of theistic manifestation would not admit mundane restrictions of the evils found in worldly relativities. If we keep for our enjoyment a portion of the temporal world, we do not thereby sever our connection with the troublesome enjoyment of this world. If we are fully relieved of all sorts of tempting influence of the relativities of this world, we cannot but come to the acme of the theistic representation of Shree Radha-Krishna. No disquisition whatsoever can possibly ladder us up to that summit by their crippled polemical insinuations.

Q. 7. How Nama is Bhagawan Himself? Theories and illustrations for supporting the same with citations of Original Treatises.

A. The respective functions of each one of the senses give different values. Names of products of Nature or Jeevas that are non-Bhagawan target different brittle obscured entities of the Integer and these entities could be discerned through the agencies of different senses. For example when we are in need of a particular thing we move to a shop, where it can be had. When we are in need of some other different things which shops could not afford us, we go to a market where different shops sell different things. But when we are not disposed to shop our articles from different locations, we require an emporium from which we can procure everything that we are in need of. The general conception of such an Entity is known as Bhagawan and not imperfectly or partially specified as 'Paramat ma' or 'Brahma' as the connotations of these two are different from the first.

When we cripple our final Object of pursuit we show an aptitude of dealing with the Object reverentially. But when we extend our aptitude to deal with all the aspects, we hanker after the infinite Ocean of Rasa—the largest emporium of our theistic enterprise which is the fullest service that can be accorded by the Predominated Aspect of the Transcendental to the Predominating Aspect. The naming of a finitude would lead us to a particular object, so we will be failing to participate with the Highest and Exalted Emporium of our need. Our restricted mundane activity of naming a mundane thing would restrict our association through the medium of our finite senses. But when we deal with the Transcendental Name, we see a distinctive phase which regulates all our sentient activities in our wandering in this region of three dimensions where name, disclosure, attributes, paraphernalia of different particulars and activities are dissimilar to those of the Transcendental Name.

Bhagawan is not an object of nature that creates the external forms, but as He is Transcendental, no mortal and mundane sense can possibly reach Him. We always find in this plane also that the significant sounds form couriers of distantly located objects of this universe. By the words 'distantly located' I mean objects far beyond the access of our activities of our eyes and nose as well as those of our tongue and skin. So we find conclusively that the ear and mind are the two receiving instruments by which we can come in contact with the partial aspects of things which deny the presence and inspection of other senses. As we talk of transcendence, so the Names of that plane should not point out any objects which are productions of Nature. All mundane objects which have names are enjoyable by our senses, whereas Bhagawan is not an entity meant for our enjoyment; but He is to enjoy not only all ether things besides Him, but also enjoy Himself. So the Transcendental Name has got a distinctive singular potency which we cannot expect in mundane names.

In all mundane things we find the holder of potency is different from the potencies themselves. In the transcendence, the case is quite opposed to this restricted view. In infinite time and space, as in the straight line, we cannot impose restrictions of finitudinal properties and angularities respectively. In mundane plane, names are not identical with objects they connote or denote which can be inspected by four other senses; whereas Bhagawan has reserved the right of not being exposed to such senses; in other words, the Name of the Transcendent is identical with the Transcendent.

The 2nd Sloka of श्रीशिक्षाष्टकम् teaches us this Truth and Padmapurana also says—"नाम चिन्तामणिः कृष्णः श्चैतन्य रस विग्रहः।
पूर्नः शुद्धोनित्य मुक्तोऽभिन्नत्वान्नामनामिनोः॥" aphorism of Vadarayan says "आवृतिर-सकृदुपदेशात्" where no other determination is possible. Here शब्द is meant for वाच्य and not as वाचक simply as is found in साधन।

This question is so very big that it should require a transcendental life to be acquainted with all the varieties in that Realm.

Q. 8. What does chanting Hari's Name connote? Does it connote the serving attitude of Jiva who is an intrinsic Vaishnava towards his Eternal Master, Shree Krishna? Or does it signify a call or invocation of the Sound so that He may come down in अवरोहपथ and manifest Himself and His Leela in the hearts of His Devotees.

A. Here in our present predicament we have two covers and two different reciprocal planes or atmospheres. These four impede our direct activities of rendering service to Sri Nama Who is identical with Hari. Here we have got chanters and chanting located in different planes. So the chanting of the Transcendental Name of Hari is to exclude many secondary significance. We should have unconditional serving attitude for the Object with an invocation of the Supreme Lord to heave us up, without any tendency whatsoever to oblige Him to come down to us but to give us an opportunity of approaching His Leela by regulating our heart filled up with mundane filths of Nature. So chanting has coherence with the seven results inculcated in the first verse of श्रीशिक्षाष्टकम्।

The process of chanting Hari Nama connotes His initiative faculty as well as the cognisance of His inherent transcendental attributions that help to dismantle the wrong construction of our mind as well as to give a relishing taste of a server's mood. Both the purposes are served by chanting Hari Nama as it has not only the singular efficacy of rescuing us from the offence of mundane utterances but also to lead us to some positive platform where no Nature or matter could peep even—a plane where all positive eternal spiritual demonstrations are permitted for our transcendental conceptions and perceptions.

Madras Presidency's Homage to Sree Krishna Chaitanya

SREE KRISHNA HALL

Foundation Stone Laid By H. E. The Governor

HIS Excellency Sir George Frederic Stanley performed yesterday evening the very pleasant function of laying the foundation stone of the "Sree Krishna Hall" of the Sree Gaudiya Math, Mowbrays Road, Royapettah Madras in the presence of a very large and distinguished gathering of ladies and gentlemen.

On arrival, His Excellency and Lady Beatrix Stanley accompanied by Mr. A. D. Crombie, Private Secretary and Sir Charles Buchanan, Military Secretary, were received by the Swamijis of the Math at the gate and conducted to the dais. At the dais, Sir P. S. Sivaswami Iyer introduced Sreemad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj, the President Acharyya of the Sree Krishna Chaitanya Mission to His Excellency and Lady Beatrix Stanley. Then His Excellency and others were garlanded.

After prayer, an address of welcome was presented by Pandit Atul Chandra Banerji, Secretary of the Mission, enclosed in a beautiful silver casket made by Messrs. Veecumsee Chabildess and sons, Madras.

Sree Tridandi Swami B. H. Bon Maharaj then introduced Mr. T. Ponnirulu Pillai, Railway Contractor who has promised to construct the Lecture Hall free as his voluntary contribution to the Mission, to H. E. the Governor and Lady Beatrix Stanley, after which, the Guru Acharyya of the Mission blessed Mr. Pillai and presented him with prasadams of flower.

His Excellency the Governor then, at the request of the President of the Mission laid the foundation stone of the Lecture Hall amidst loud cheers and spoke as follows :

His Excellency's Speech

It is not often during a Governor's term of office that he has the opportunity of presiding at a function under the auspices of a religion other than his own, and it is therefore with the greater pleasure that Lady Beatrix Stanley and I have come here this evening for the laying of the foundation stone of the 'Sree Krishna Hall' of the Madras Gaudiya Math. I have heard with considerable interest what the objects and activities of your Society are and although, we may differ in the means by which we approach the end, there can be no doubt that the objects of your Math viz, service to God and the brotherhood of man, are universal to all the great religions and can be supported by members of every creed.

The calm and lofty thinking which religion inculcates was never more needed than at the present time. The world is but slowly recovering from the effects of a disastrous war and the economic depression which follows in its train. For most people these are difficult days and it is easy for the clever and unscrupulous agitator with his enticing slogans to bewitch the unbalanced with a promise of the speedy attainment of the millennium by unconstitutional, even revolutionary means. Your Mission, however, recognises the futility of such preaching and realises that loyal support of established authority is the only sure means of attaining that true and lasting peace to which we all aspire. Loyalty has always been a cardinal tenet of the Hindu faith and will I feel sure find its highest expression in your Mission.

Inspite of the very short time in which the Mission has been established in Madras, it has obviously made great headway ; it has attracted many influential men to its flood and has succeeded in finding a permanent site on which to expand. I congratulate you on the energy of your moving spirit in Madras, Tridandi Swami B. H. Bon to whose untiring efforts you will, I feel sure, agree that most of the success is due. Our congratulations are also due to Mr. T. Ponnirulu Pillai who has at a time of depresssion shown his public spirit by generously agreeing to erect free of cost the Lecture Hall the foundation stone of which I have just laid.

Lastly I wish to say what a great pleasure it is to me to meet today the spiritual head of the Mission, the President Acharyya and I pray that His work and that of all the members of the Mission may be blessed by the Divine Grace which inspires them and that they may ever progress towards their object of bringing peace to India and all mankind.

Dewan Bahadur G. Narayanaswami Chettiar proposad a vote of thanks to H. E. and Lady Beatrix Stanley and after a short speech of thanks given to the sympathisers and patrons of local Math by Tridandi Swami B. H. Bon, the function terminated with prayer and 'Harinamasamkirtanam.'

Ourselves

Sridham Mayapur—The PARAVIDYAPEETHA and Thakur Bhaktivinode Institute of Sridham Mayapur were inspected on January 10 by Dr S. N. Das Gupta M. A., Ph. D., I. E. S., Principal of Calcutta Sanskrit College. who was pleased to record his high appreciation of the stimulating, healthy, moral and religious atmosphere in which the students of the Institutions are receiving their education. This, remarked Principal Das Gupta in the visitors' book, is bound "to have a deep impression on the future career of those students..... I wish and hope all endeavours of the Institutions may be crowned with the best success which they so richly deserve."

Comparative Position of Sree Chaitanya—Mr. Justice Dewan Bahadur Sundaram Chettiyer of the Madras High Court had an interesting conversation with the Editor at the Madras Gaudiya Math on January 14. The substance of it has been published in Bengali in the Gaudiya of January 23. On the conclusion of the discussion Mr. Justice Chettiyer expressed his conviction that the system of Sree Krishna Chaitanya as expounded by the Editor fully accommodates everything of permanent value in the teachings of the four founder-Acharyas of the Vaishnava Communities as well as of Sree Sankaracharya, while surpassing them all in respect of universality of scope and most exquisite mellowness.

Propaganda in the District of Midnapur, Bengal—His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti vivek Bharati Maharaj, Sripad Siddhaswarup Brahmachari and a party of Brahmacharis of the Gaudiya Math in course of their preaching tour in the District of Midnapur reached the important village of Gokulpur on January 17. The party stopped there during 18th and 19th. On both days Swamiji Maharaj lectured to large gatherings on the subject of Vaishnava Religion illustrated by Magic Lantern Pictures. This part of the country is probably the most favourite one of the happy hunting-grounds of the pseudo-teachers of the Religion of pure spiritua love practised and taught by Sree Chaitanya. This is due to the fact that most of the inhabitants cherish a deep regard for the teachings of Sree Chaitanya and profess the Vaishnava Religion in the usual happy-go-lucky spirit of conventional orthodoxy. The lucid and frank discourses and wonderfully persuasive eloquence of the famous preacher have served to place before the general body of the people the real principles and practice of the only universal Religion of loving spiritual service of the Supreme Lord thereby enabling all sincere persons to avoid the dreadful errors that are instilled into unguarded minds of innocent people by the bogus professionals.

Bharati Maharaj and party stopped at Amarshi during January 23 to 26 where His Holiness expounded the Bhagabatam at the residence of Srijukta Murarimohan Kar. A large number of erudite Brahmana Pandits of the adjoining villages were present and greatly appreciated the conclusions offered by Swamiji Maharaj in conformity with the realteachings of Sree Chaitanya.

Another party of devotees under the lead of Srimad Sagar Maharaj visited Parbatipur in the same District where on the 27th January His Holiness explained the career of Prahlad to a vast audience.

Madras Gaudiya Matn—The sacred functions of the laying of the foundations of the New Buildings and the Installation of Sree Vigrahas of the Madras Gaudiya Math were performed by the Editor on January 23. The tense expectation which filled the devotees as they come out in procession before day-break to sing the Holy Name in the streets of the Metropolis of the South for announcing to every household the approach of the Installation of the Sree Vigrahas of Sree Sree Gaursundar-Gandharbik - Giridhari for the first time in South India hallowed by the Foot-Prints of the Supreme Lord, no words can describe. On the return of the Sankirtan procession to the Math the Sree Vigrahas were solemnly installed by the Editor in the Sanctum of the Math. Thereafter, the Editor and a large procession of the devotees followed Sree Shalagram with the chant of the Holy Name to the site which had been recently acquired for the New Buildings of the Math. There on the selected spot the Editor dug with the spade the foundation of the New Buildings followed by the Tridandi Sannyasi Maharajas and all persons present each of whom worked at the spade. Then with the due performance of the Homa ceremony the foundation was formally laid by the Editor's hand. Many ladies and gentlemen joined the great body of devotees and honoured the mahaprasadam at the Math in the evening.

The tidings of the Installation was formally announced to the public with great pomp the next evening. The august function consisted of a vast gathering of sympathisers to whom it was explained in a suitable speech by the Editor, Sir P. S. Sivaswami Aiyer Kt. K. C. S. I. C. I. E. in a few touching words conveyed to the Editor the gratitude of the people of the South for his efforts to promote the highest good of all souls. Sir Sivaswami was seconded by a well-known advocate of the Madras High Court who said that the people of the South stood in great need of the blessing of loving devotion taught by Sree Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. The coming of the great Acharya is an augury of the speedy fulfilment of that great and universal need. The gathering included a very large number of the most distinguished residents of the Province. All stayed to honour the mahaprasadam at the Math. The function was an unqualified success.

His Excellency the Governor of Madras laid the foundation stone of Sree Krishna Hall, the Natyamandir of the Madras Gaudiya Math, on the 27th of January. The details of this historic function are given on another page.

Sree Janardana Prarthana Samaj, Ellore presented address to Editor on January 30. Editor's speech in reply is reproduced in this number.

Propaganda in Tipperah—His Holiness Srimad Aranya Maharaj lectured on the supreme excellence of the Vaishnava Religion to a most distinguished assembly, in presence of His Highness the independent Chief of Tipperah, in the Palace of His Highness on the 1st of February Festival of the appearance of Sree Vishnupriya Devi—was duly celebrated at all the Maths of Sree Vishwa Vaishnava Raj Sabha on the 11th of February. His Holiness Srimad Bharati Maharaj addressed a great gathering on this occasion at the Calcutta Gaudiya Math on "Bani Puja".

Sree Vyasa Puja—Sree Guru Puja was performed by the Editor at the Madras Gaudiya Math on the 26th of February. Some of the addresses in English received by the Editor on this occasion and his reply are published in this issue.

Sree Vyasa Puja was celebrated with great splendour at the Calcutta Gaudiya Math when Acharyatika Sripad Kunjabehari Vidyabhushan Prabhu read the response of the Editor made in Bengali.

A very large number of adddresses in all languages as is usual on this occasion, were presented to the Editor from all parts of the country.

Kishoreganj—His Holiness Srimad Parbat Mabaraj gave an exposition of the narrative of Kapila and Debahuti at the village of Bhatijalkar to a large gathering of the people at the residence of Paramabhagabat Sri Krishnaprasad Das Adhikari on Jan. 24.

Sraddha ceremony performed according to Sri Haribhaktivilas-Sripad Bhababandhachchhid das Adhikari B.L. performed the sraddha ceremony of his departed father on the 17th of January at the Calcutta Gaudiya Math in accordance with the procedure laid down in Sri Haribhaktivilas.

Reply to Welcome Address

Lecture delivered by Editor at 6-30 P. M. on the 30. 1. 32. in Reply to the Address given by the President and members, Janardhana Prarthana Samajam, Ellore, Madras.

My friends,

I feel it a great honour that I am received in this place by the devotees of Sri Janardhana Prarthana Samajam, Ellore, so heartily ; but I am not fit for such reception as I am very poor in my devotional activities. You have very kindly mentioned in your address that I am doing great service towards the propagation of devotional activities, but I think, I have done nothing. As you have mentioned in your address that your people and your friends of this place are almost unaware of the Happy Message, I mean, the Transcendental Message, that has been given to all beings by the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya during His journey in this Andhra-Desha, so to realise and rejuvenate that conception the very felicitious position of devotion requires to be told by me to some extent.

I read a Sloka " अनर्पितचरीं चिरात् करूणयावतीर्णःकलौ समर्पयितुमुन्नतोज्ज्वल-रसां स्वभक्तिश्रियम्। हरिः पुरटसुन्दरद्युति कदम्बसन्दीपितः सदा हृदय कन्दरे स्फुरतु वः शचीनन्दनः ॥ " from the writings of our old Acharya, that lescribes what Shree Krishna Chaitanya ias meant by Theism and what He has given to the people. In that Sloka, ve find that He has awarded us the onception of different sorts of transcendental and unalloyed services that an be rendered to the Supreme bsolute Shree Krishna as well as that f a special feature of service which as hitherto quite unknown to theists. nd that special aspect of service was iven by Him to the people right and ft. The conception of Theism before is disclosure was confined to reverenal and awful principles only. Shree rishna Chaitanya has given us that e may approach Shree Krishna with ir unconditional services in all sorts aspects. And He has shown us the mparative excellence of the most nfidential relationship between Godad and human souls. Up to that me, we were quite familiar with the ea of approaching Shree Krishna by ir other devotional principle only. 'e were simply worshipping Him, aving aside the most attractive aspect rendering our services to the Lord. 'e were thinking that the services to ie object of our worship should be erformed by the upper part of the dy and the lower part of our transendental eternal body cannot possibly fer any acceptable service to the eloved Whose secondary conception Omnipotence and Omniscience etc., only were prominent to the theists. We were neglecting that we have got a transcendental entity called 'soul', however infinitesimal, inside our external frame; or inside our astral body. So, up to that time we were confounding ourselves with a philosophy which meant mental speculation only, always restricted by external views of the world and avoiding the cognisance of our unalloyed ego who is meant for rendering eternal service to the Transcendental Object, as the Sentient Being, I mean the eternal Over-Soul. So the level we had of theism up to that time in our possession was that we were denied serving Him in higher aspects, I mean serving Godhead as our closer and more confidential Friend, Godhead as our Son and Godhead as our Consort. Thus we were keeping this transitory relationship with only perishable objects here. But our Theism should not confine us in ignoring the confidential services which can be offered by a free human soul to Shree Krishna. Hitherto we were not positive as regards the Position and the Entity of the Oversoul, that He alone should be the Object of our devotion in all aspects as Shree Krishna.

We find, unless the Supreme Absolute Krishna kindly graces us as the Recipient of our services, we cannot do for Him all sorts of confidential services and in any other Aspects of Krishna i.e., in Matsya, Koorma, Varaha, Nrisingha, Vamana, Rama, etc., our reverential activities are rather limited to a certain extent. Here in this perverted world we can offer our confidential services in all the five rasas (relishing relationship). Shree Krishna and no other is the Centre, the very Fountain-head of all Divine Aspects Whom we could serve with all the aspects of our confidential services. Shree Krishna is 'Akhila-Rasamritamoorti' that is the Fountain-head of all Rasas. And we can approach Him in any one of His five reciprocal different aspects. In engaging all our activities in Him by our transcendent soul's body, we can offer Him our eternal services in five different aspects ; whereas, in other Forms of the Entity of Godhead we are debarred from offering our confidential services.

For instance, in the case of Ramachandra, we cannot offer our services in all the five different aspects. He cannot stand as our Consort, because otherwise Seeta might prove that Her devoted Husband Ramachandra would be crossing His limits and His ethical principles, and moreover Seeta would never allow any soul that sort of service to be rendered to Ramachandra. As we find in the case of Dandakaranya Rishis when the Rishis approached Ramachandra ; Ramachandra would not accept them because they got male forms and He was devoted to only one wife, in other words, for fear of violating ethical principles He could not accept that sort of service from them. Ramachandra could accept the services of His subjects, could accept the services of His servant Anjaneya, could accept the services of Lakshmana and others in some other aspect save and except in consorthood ; whereas Shree Krishna is eternally and can very easily be called the Bahu-Ballava. He can accommodate hundreds of His dependents as His consorts whereas Ramachandra can only welcome the four dependents, I mean, His parents and His brother-friends, servants and His neutral paraphernalia of His Realm who render unalloyed service to Ramachandra while all others except Seeta are debarred from offering any confidential services to Ramachandra in the capacity of consorts.

But in Shree Krishna, we find that there is no such restriction. Every soul can offer all sorts of unalloyed confidential services to Shree Krishna. Moreover we find that Shree Krishna welcomes every-body. He does not deny anyone. Though He does not allow anybody to keep that sort of mundane relationship among His temporary pseudo-servants, He admits every servant if he has got such capacity to approach Him in any of the loftiest moods and positions. Even Shree Krishna would always wish His devotees to accept Him as the Consort. No souls are restricted to make progress towards the confidential services to the Over-Soul in that capacity if He considers that they can offer, being ever subservient to His Predominated Counter-Whole, that sort of service to Him. So Shree Krishna does never check any sort of confidential services that we in our unconditioned stage are bent upon offering Him. The thing is that, in His other aspects we are barred to offer such services which are not acceptable to Him because we do confine ourselves in alloyed mentality or in mental speculations.

If we give up worshipping with our mental speculations—if our independent souls can have a wider and larger scope—we can easily approach that transcendental Being with all our sincerity. So He does not deny any body, neither does He allow anybody to keep that sort of engagement which is meant for some ther Aspects of Him, in as much He is the One Who is ever engrossing our soul. So we should scrutinise most minutely whether we should at all utilise and engage some limbs kept and meant for our personal benefits and some portions of our transcendental body for Godhead! But the real truth is that all our engagements—the whole of our occupation—may be engaged for Shree Krishna, whereas in other Aspects of Godhead we do not have the rarest fortune of performing all these things in the best way possible.

Shree Krishna Chaitanya has not taught us any anthropomorphic idea. Ordinary people might think that they may indulge in this sort of carrying ideas of this world produced by Nature to that Transcendental Realm, but such anthropomorphic ideas are never enjoined or entertained by Shree Krishna Chaitanya. All that we must know is that Godhead is the Full, Complete and Perfect Being and that He should in His Person have no partial and crippled aspects. We must not be thinking that all that we have here in this world with us—all that might be feasible or practicable and ethicals here—we should carry along with us to a region where such imperfect acquisitions are not wanted. We have no such ambition.

Shree Krishna Chaitanya told us that self-determination is first of all necessary; otherwise we would be confusing the mind with the soul. Mind is quite different from the Soul. The thing is that mind is the conductor of the physical world. Mind gets the impression of Nature through the medium of senses and through the working of our body, that is through the former's inter-mingling with external things which are made of matter.

Though we are used to meddle with those things yet when we take theism for our consideration, that is when we enquire what the actual Figure of Godhead is, we find in the Chatushloki Bhagabatam "यावानहं यथा भावो यद्रूपगुण कर्म्मकः। तथैव तत्त्वविज्ञानमस्तु ते मदनुग्रहात॥"

Said the Absolute Fountainhead to Brahma the Creator, "If I am to bestow my mercy to any body, I must expose myself to him fully. Persons who have wrong aspirations and speculations of mind will be debarred from having any unobscured perception of the actual Size, the Figure and the Colour that I have. They will be simply missing Me if I do not confer on them My mercy." So Shree Krishna Chaitanya has disparaged all mundane thinkers who are busy with high class philosophies or sticking to their mundane ethical principles, as well as those persons who are engaged in their altruistic enterprises.

In substance however we find in our Acharyya's writings—"सिद्धान्ततस्त्वभेदेऽपि श्रीश कृष्णस्वरूपयोः। रसेनोत्कृष्यते कृष्णरूपमेषा रसस्थितिः" ॥ Nobody must be misconstruing that we are talking of a wholly different Object Who is not Ramachandra when we talk of Shree Krishna. By the talk of Shree Krishna we do not mean that we are differentiating Shree Krishna from Shree Ramachandra. Shree Ramachandra and Shree Krishna are not substantially different Objects. They are identical. But as we find in this perverted region that one man is the father of somebody, the son of somebody, the physician of somebody, similarly in Transcendental Realm also we find manifold Aspects of the same Absolute.

So nobody must be thinking that we are talking of wholly different objects. Vasudeva is the same as Lakshmi Narayana ; Lakshmi-Narayana is identical with Seeta-Rama ; Seeta-Rama is the same as Krishna. We do not make any difference in them. There should not be any dissension, but there cannot be any such temperament in us as to draw distinction between Shree Krishna and Shree Rama save in the planes of respective Rasas. We want to appreciate the respective positions of the One Absolute.

We have no ambition to shift our position. But we are to do everything for the confidential services of the Over-Soul ; and this is safe too. We find a particular worship. We do not find that all our activities are engaged hundred percent in Ramachandra. We find that a part of our activities may be kept apart for our selfish personal use here, and some portion of our activities may go to that very Adorable Object. This is not perfectly disinterested. We often find that a man claims himself to be the master of several dependent things here believing thus,—'I have got many servants' 'I have got a big estate'; 'I have great learning', and so forth. If I am meant to confine myself in a particular Aspect, then it would be rather incompatible to human beings who have nothing to do with the other aspects of the same Object.

We need not keep anything for our engagement beyond the Absolute; otherwise we must pass for some other names than 'Devotees'. For instance, if we serve a horse, we would be called a 'groom', if we treat others with medicine, we would be called a 'Doctor'. These are different denominations we have here. But these designations are meant for individual beings like us, and our engagements are often found to be in different objects other than the Absolute.

Whereas Shree Krishna is the Fountain-head of all these manifestations. Therefore, there must not be any such gross ethical idea that He should be crippled or restricted to receive some particular sort of service only. We must not be doing so. We are to approach the Whole Thing, the one Entire Absolute, the very Fountain-head. He is Satchidananda 'Akhila-rasamrita-moorty' and cannot be disliked by any perfectly healthy thought. We should not participate with some other form which may give us self-centred happiness merely. That sort of engagement would be rather detrimental to our Final Cause or Goal. We find that the Fountainhead is possessed of all qualifications with all sorts of aspects; but a particular shape may often be seen in our engagements.

So Shree Krishna Chaitanya has given and shown us the Whole Object. And if we resolve that we are simply to follow Him, we shall then be called higher theists. That theism cannot be restricted and found in a particular aspect only, just as we find in this world.

If we can get rid of all our mental speculations, we would be relieved of this mundane conception of the universe by the help of the medium of Transcendental Words. If we confound them with created words of mundane lexicons we would be erring; because we cannot at a time give out All-pervading Transcendental expressions fully for that. The Transcendental Word, Sound or Concept is identical with that Great Personal Absolute or the Fountainhead.

We would be known to have cultured well in our theistic aspirations for that Fullest Form if the other awful and majestic attributes than All-blissfulness or All-ecstatic Beauty are taken out from that One Integer. So when we approach Shree Krishna we find that all sorts of Aspects are fully in Him and we can offer all sorts of confidential services to Him with our transcendental and eternal body. We can offer ourselves with all the closest intimacy to Him in all ways.

We must not be thinking that we should restrict ourselves in a particular aspect only, so as to quarrel with somebopy dealing with some other school of thought or philosophy or some other religious controversies, but we must require that the whole-time attention, hundred percent, should be devoted to Him and His Counter-Whole. This is the general outline of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya's Teachings.

Sree Nityananda and Sree Gaursundar

THE Madhva-Gaudiya Vaishnava Community are the followers and worshippers of Sree Gaursundar. They also worship Sree Nityananda. The distinctive tenet of the Teachings of Sree Gaursundar is to the effect that the worship of the devotee of Sree Krishna is higher than that of Sree Krishna Himself.

This is not a counsel for the worship of man. Sree Gaursundar is identical with Sree Krishna. Sree Krishna eternally exhibits the Transcendental Pastime of wearing the complexion and grace of His Counter-Whole Sree Radhika in order to taste the mellow quality of His Own Consort-hood. It is not a Role which is put on by the Divinity for the nonce. It is His Eternal Benign Personality identical with His All-Attractive Self. In other words the Supreme Renderer of His Own service is identical with the Supreme Receiver of the same. Sree Gaursundar is the Magnanimous Giver of Sree Krishna. Sree Gaursundar is Magnanimous Krishna. Sree Krishna is unapproachable except by the fullness of serving love. Sree Gaursundar is the Bestower of that unalloyed love that captures the Heart of Sree Krishna. The Two constitute in an equal and identical measure the Absolute's Own Supreme Self. There is nothing more fundamental than Either. They are One and the Same Person.

If Sree Gaursundar is worshipped Sree Krishna is necessarily and simultaneously worshipped. And Sree Gaursundar can be worshipped by all. The worship of Sree Krishna is not possible for the soul in the conditioned state. The worship of Sree Gaursundar is available even in the conditioned state for the mere asking. Neither attainment nor continuance of the unconditioned state is possible except by the service of Sree Gaursundar.

In others words those who do not avail of the Magnanimity of Krishna can never obtain His loving service. The worship of Sree Gaursundar, alike in the free and conditioned states, has thus a claim on all which is superior even to that of Sree Krishna Himself.

The worship of Sree Gaursundar is attainable by all for the mere asking. But this asking disposition itself is the free gift of Sree Nityananda. There is no cause for the grace of Nityananda. The causeless grace of Nityananda is the cause of the undeserved grace of Sree Gaursundar. Those alone who doubt or are disposed to minimize the Supreme quality of the grace of Nityananda are denied the worship of Sree Gaursundar. Nityananda is the Best-Beloved of Sree Gaursundar. Nityananda is Manifest Form of Sree Gaursundar. Nityananda is the accredited hawker of the Supreme Mercy of Sree Gaursundar. Nityananda calls everyone to the service of Sree Gaursundar. Those who do not respond to the call of Nityananda are doomed to eternal perdition. The only course that is fully open to all souls really desirous of serving Sree Krishna is to seek the worship of Sree Gaursundar under the guidance of Sree Nityananda Who manifests Himself to all without exception.

The apparently uncalled-for manifestation of Sree Nityananda to the eclipsed consciousness of man need not be regarded with that contempt which is so lavishly bestowed by empiric thinkers on that form of Elevationism which relies on the pseudo-Scripture for the cheap attainment of worldly felicity. It is no doubt possible for the conditioned soul by means of the resources of his limited reason working on sense experience to attain to temporary freedom from the conditions of limited existence. But if the attainment of liberation from the fetters of the Limiting Energy happens to be installed as the summum bonum of one's empiric activities the goal becomes realisable (?) in the form of the temporary suspension of one's individual existence. In other words the mundane contents may be artificially eliminated from our limited consciousness for a time resulting in a temporary mundane vacuum which is equivalent to the commission of empiric suicide. This consummation, indeed, possesses, at a certain stage of our worldly experience, a strange fascination as offering a respite to our baffled spirit. The so-called progress of our empiric knowledge produces at this stage a destructive recoil from the utter hollowness of its laborious acheivements. To honest minds who are privileged to feel this basic undesirability of the mental existence Nihilism in the form of despair of a realisable goal of earthly perfection, suggests itself as the only legitimate consummation of all worldly activity. Scepticism and Agnosticism which are also the offspring of worldly altruism (?), are never more than merely tentative attitudes. Whereas Liberationism is the definite shutting down of the door on the empiric stage. It is the deliberated, convinced and, therefore, mischievous and really fatal, acceptance of the Negation of existence as the result of dis-illusionment coming in the wake of the pursuit of so-called altruistic worldly activity.

Neither worldly Elevationism nor worldly Salvationism, the two alternative planks of Empiricism, can ever lead to any really desirable goal. It is absolutely necessary to reflect on the inevitable result of any course of activity before it can be definitely accepted as beneficial or recommended to others as such. In this world man is, indeed, found to be walking blindfold. He regards himself quite fortunate if he can secure any tiny morsel of enjoyment or avoid the painful consequences of the indulgence of his apparently natural aptitudes. But this is far too short-sighted. It is beside the point to plead inevitability by past experience for being reconciled to such a fearful lot. The iron barrier of all the empiric conventions need not make us be in love with the chains of eternal slavery. It should not prevent us from being eager for the attainment of our natural state of unalloyed eternal felicity which is the message of Sree Nityananda.

The revealed Scriptures tell us of the method by which we can get rid of the snares of both worldly Elevationism and worldly Salvationism. They point out the sure and fearful consequences of the pursuit of either earthly course. But their warning goes unheeded so long as a person continues to cherish altruistic, really malicious, worldly pursuits. Nay the warnings themselves are apt to be misunderstood as encouragements. There are pedantic schools who have set themselves to the task, which is so congenial to the worldly disposition, of proving Scriptural sanction for those worldly activities. This has given rise to the Elevationist and Salvationist interpretations of the Scriptures.

Even for a person who is sincerely desirous of not deceiving himself and others in this most important of all affairs of humanity the Scriptures themselves do not supply any real standing ground. He is sure to misunderstand them, or not to understand them at all, if he tries to find out their meaning by his own unaided limited intellect. It is, however, only to such enquirers that Sree Nityananda manifests Himself of His own accord. Sree Nityananda is at once recognised as the only Transcendental Teacher. The Scriptures themselves tell us that it is never possible to understand the real meaning of the Word of God without the Help of the bonafide Teacher or Sree Guru.

Sree Nityananda is the Manifest Form of Sree Gaursundar. He is the serving facsimile of Godhead Himself. There is an Order of Divinities. The Unity of the Divinity does not mean that He has not Infinity of Real Substantive Forms. All the Forms of the Divinity are Distinctive Divine Persons. They have distinctive Natures and Activities. Sree Nityananda is the Manifestive Form of the Absolute. Sree Gaursundar is, no doubt, the Only Teacher of all persons. But the Teaching of Sree Gaursundar is made available to the tiny intellect of man by the Grace of His Manifestive Form Sree Nityananda. To deny the Function of Sree Nityananda is to deny the function of Godhead as Teacher. Such denial is tantamount to the assertion that Sree Gaursundar should have no function in the matter of manifesting Himself. It would leave our puppy brain to its own undiluted sophistries which is so dear to the heart of the empiricist.

Therefore the Scriptures have put the worship of Sree Guru above that of Godhead Himself. Sree Guru is no other than the Manifestation of Sree Nityananda. The Manifestive Function of Godhead need not be opposed by any person who is really desirous of receiving enlightenment from Above. There are no doubt any number of pseudo-gurus in this realm of the Deluding Energy. It is no one's business to fall into the clutches of these rascals. Neither is it anybody's business not to seek the Help of the bonafide Teacher of the Scriptures. The bonafide Teacher is the Manifestation of Sree Nityananda Himself. Sree Guru is the Divinity Himself in His Eternal Role as the only Teacher of all souls. Numerical reference has an absolutely wholesome significance in the Absolute Personality.

Sree Nityananda eternally manifests Himself to all persons as the Teacher enthroned in every heart. Those who learn to pay proper attention to Him in due course find Him everywhere. Sree Guru who initiates us into the meaning of the Scriptures and the Gurus who teach us during the period of novitiate are realised as the associated counter-whole and counterparts of Sree Nityananda. Therefore do the Madhva-Gaudiya Vaishnavas, in strict pursuance of the Scriptural injunctions, regard the worship of Sree Nityananda, represented fully by the initiating Guru, as superior to even that of Sree Gaursundar Himself.

Shree Vyas-Puja Homage

At the Lotus Feet of His Divine Grace Paramahansa Paribrajakacharyya (108) Shree Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami on the occasion of the 58th Anniversary of His most Auspicious Advent

Our Most Affectionate Divine Master,

On the occasion of this 58th Anniversary of Your Advent into this world, we beg most humbly to lay at Your Divine Feet this humble offering of our heart's pure devotion. May our affectionate Divine Master out of His infinite mercy vouchsafe to overlook its inadequacies and imperfections and be pleased to accept it.

Most Revered Prabhupada,

What we owe to You we can only know and express by Your Divine Grace and through submission at Your Divine Feet. The greatest of mercies that You have vouchsafed to us has been this that You have taught us to submit to Your Divive Feet, which have bound us to them notwithstanding our wrong aptitude to run away.

Divine Teacher of the Absolute Truth.

You are the only preacher of the religion of unconditional service to the Transcendental Personality of Godhead in this age of contentions. You are the sole propounder of real theism in this age of almost universal atheism often masked under the profession of various selfish and worldly aspirations. By Your teachings, practice and special inimitable characteristics, You have unmistakably demonstrated that You are the real Acharyya worth the name, markedly distinguished from others who have adopted this name as a profession.

Divine Teacher of Unalloyed Devotion,

You have discarded in the most uncompromising repudiations all unethical and unscriptural conducts, and taught us that unalloyed devotion to the Personal Absolute should be totally devoi pand destitute of every form nay, of even the slightest tinge of worldliness. You have denounced most emphatically the deeds of the seekers of transitory fruits from their order-suppliers, we mean, obscured deluding aspects of the Absolute, who appear to be altruistic, and as such, fruitive acts with a bartering spirit more than often lead even the so-called theistic but really less cautious and scrutinising people astray.

You yield to none in denouncing in the most scathing and unequivocal terms the cult and doctrine of indolence or negation of reality and diversity as well as that Impersonalist school of thought which totally denies all-harmonious activities or manifestations even in the Transcendental Realm of the Personal Absolute.

Affectionate Divine Guide,

You have thus graciously protected, are protecting and will protect us, fallen souls, from those pseudo-benefactors of humanity by Your clearest warning and signalling against the most treacherous pitfalls of their deluding ideas, thoughts, activities and writings. You have there-by shown the distinctive characteristics of the real Acharyyaship of Theism in all its phases and stages.

Not only this, but by Your discourses, sermons and manifold activities You have further impressed, on every sincere seeker after the Absolute Truth, the Positive Personality of the Absolute. You have placed before us as the true and highest conception of our final Goal, the Entire and Full Aspect of Theism, targeted in the Personality of the Ever-Existent, All-Intelligent and All-Blissful—the All-Charming, All-Mellifluent Shree Krishna, the Son of Nanda-Yashoda of Braja, Who eternally shines in His All-Beautiful, All-Attractive Figure in Brindaban, subduing His Over-powering, Awe-striking, Majestic Magnitude and Prowess in His Person of Shree Narayana. He is the One Predominating Enjoyer of all sentient and insentient entities in the fullest æsthetic aspect.

Divine Messenger of the Absolute Truth,

You have further taught us that Shree Krishna in His Entire Form can and does come to us, feeble, fallen and fettered souls, in symbolic shapes as His innumerable Names, Words or Concepts, Who are certainly and unchallengeably indissociable from and identical with His Transcendental Figure. You are, at present, the unique Messenger of this singular message, appearing in the same line of succession from the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya Who graciously disseminated this Truth while traversing the South about 420 years ago. None can be competent enough to give Him away save and except Himself or His Predominated Counter-Whole. You are not satisfied with any lip-deed proposition of partial service. You urge every one to open, without the least reservation, his full receptive faculty for receiving this Full Gift. And you have never failed to bestow this Unique Gift, viz., the Name of the All-love Shree Krishna to all without any distinction whatsoever.

Most Revered Guide and Preceptor,

You have explained that this world of three dimensions is a perverted reflection of the Realm of the Absolute and that it is a prison-house of correction for those disloyal souls who have abused or misused their innate free will or independence by posing themselves as vain imitators of Shree Krishna in enjoying with all their senses Maya, that has transformed herself into the objects of this mundane manifestations. Shree Krishna, therefore, conceals Himself before their sensuous perception and they find only His dissociating and deluding potency Maya, that eclipses Krishna's Transcendental Entity from their angular vision and imprisons them with two garbs of a prisoner, viz., the body and the mind, which always meddle with mundane manifestations of phenomenal and noumenal Nature.

Most Beloved of the Personal Absolute,

The prominent characteristic of Your theistic enterprises lies in this that, no matter how foolishly arrogant or intoxicated with the pride of empiric knowledge people may be, You effectively try to correct and redeem these fallen souls and restore them to their Eternal Original Home—the Realm of the Absolute. The Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya, being Himself identical with Shree Krishna, has showed us the Royal Road how to love and serve best the Supreme Autocrat, remaining in this life and world even. The Supreme Lord with His Transcendental Personality, Attributes, Paraphernalia of Dependents and Pastimes out of His causeless mercy reveals Himself in His identical Names, Words or Concepts through the lips of His best Beloved to all His earnest, sincere and fully submissive hearers, viz., disciples. The Name gradually reveals and blossoms into His identical Figure, Attributes, Paraphernalia and Pastimes.

Most Merciful Revealer of Shree Krishna Nama,

You have for this purpose inculcated that the constant cultivation of Shree Krishna Nama with all His Predominated Dependents through ears and tongues is the only Means and Hope for a fallen soul who places his whole-hearted, all-time and unconditional service at the disposal of the Transcendental Courier of that Message. You have thrust these truths home into the hearts of all earnest and sincere seekers of the Absolute Truth by Your lip and life. By rightly following the cream of all the Vedas Shreemad Bhagabatam and the Embodiment of Bhagabatam—Shree Krishna Chaitanya and His Most Beloved Associates headed by Shree Rupa Goswami—You have taught us the Vedic Truth that every soul or entity undergoing sentences of penalty in this perverted prison-cell, is, in his unalloyed substance, an eternal servant of the Predominated Dependent of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna, and in order to be reinstated in his original abode and position, he should incessantly and constantly chant and utter the Names or Words of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna; this should be the central leading idea and guiding principle which must urge and actuate all his theistic enterprises and activities in this life and life after.

Most Revered Bestower of the Unalloyed Service of Shree Gaura Krishna.

More than this, since You have begun to carry on Your propagation work less than two decades ago, You have, in this world of idealistic theories controversy and challenge, translated with signal success Your theistic thoughts in numerous ways. Most humbly to refer to a few, among a legion of others—

(1) You have started purely theistic periodicals—a daily, a weekly, a fortnightly and a monthly, as organs of the Transcendental Message from the Absolute Realm in different languages in different centres and provinces of India which promise soon to spread throughout the world and to bring home both to the cultured and the uncultured irrespective of caste, sex or colour the absolute necessity of leading the purely theistic life of a Karshna.

(2) You have established Maths with residential preaching institutions, inhabited by hundreds of wholly dedicated and highly educated persons, pure in thoughts, words, and deeds ever willing to sacrifice themselves at the altar of the propagation of the Ever-beneficial Absolute Truth, for imparting and disseminating theistic education in all its aspects and stages to elementary as well as advanced students, and arranged to hold periodical celebrations therein, and theistic exhibitions—a revolution in the annals of theistic enterprises of propagation—in order to afford to sincere seekers a unique opportunity to come in contact with and grasp properly the esoteric super-excellent art, science and literature of their Eternal Transcendental Home.

(3) You have restored to the cognisance of lovers of theism, to their great delight, the specified but forgotten places sanctified by the Advent and Activities of the Supreme Lord and His associate Devotees by holding annually circumambulation ceremonies round these sanctified places.

(4) You have established printing houses whence You have arranged for cheap publications of theistic Shastras so as to bring them within easy reach of one and all, thereby disseminating broadcast the real unchallengeable cogent imports and purports of the generally inaccessible and impenetrable Shruties that reveal themselves in hearts, full of unalloyed devotion to the Acharyya.

(5) You are commemorating the Divine Footsteps of the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya Who flooded the whole country with waves of unalloyed æsthetic Loving service to the Autocratic All-love as is rendered by His Predominated Associate Counter-whole, by establishing His Divine Footprints in different specified parts of both Northern and Southern India after You have personally traversed them. By this, You have taught us to have our minds transformed into unadulterated and transcendental pedestals of the Divine Footprints of the Supreme Absolute—His Eternal Abode of Freedom—so that, the Autocratic All-love can most freely and wilfully move and manipulate us according to His Sweet Will. This is the Highest Goal and summum bonum of all human souls.

(6) Last but not the least is Your truly practical interpretation of unalloyed Varnashrama Dharma. Hitherto all other theistic and even non-theistic teachers, though professing to base their cults on the Vedas, have confined themselves to Varnashrama Dharma as their means. It is the Supreme Lord Shree Krishna Chaitanya and His Acknowledged Most Beloved Associates like You Who have exhorted most emphatically all people of this world, irrespective of caste, colour or clime, to follow the real underlying esoteric spirit and interpretations of Shreemad Bhagabatam that have shown unequivocally the pre-eminence, supremacy and super-excellence of Paramhansa Dharma which is innate, intrinsic and essential in all beings, irrespective of sex, caste or colour, both animate or inanimate. The unalloyed Varnashrama Dharma, that is subjugated by and subservient to Paramhansa Dharma, as propounded by Shremad Bhagabatam is the only divine institution which, when followed scrupulously, has solved, is still solving and will solve most conclusively many an intricate puzzling problem or dilemma regarding religion, ethics and society of mankind and which promises undoubtedly to usher in an era of Ever Blissful Harmony and Concord here, after extirpating disruptive discord from the face of the Earth. Further, we have had the rarest fortune of listening from Your Divine Lips that Krishna-Nama alone is the constant companion and object of incessant culture of all Paramhansas. As all souls, when fully awakened, are Paramhansas, so no soul is debarred from an access to or acceptance by Krishna-Nama, the Symbolised Form of the Supreme Autocrat.

Most Revered Representative and Acknowledged Successor of Shree Vyasdeva,

The One singular characteristic feature in Your writings and speeches is that no reader or hearer can, notwithstanding his pedantic erudition and strenuous efforts, misconstrue, misinterpret or mould the unequivocal and ultra-cautious words and sentences in them ; so much so, that he must either accept the import and purport which You spare no pains to hammer and drive home to Your readers and hearers with unfailing energy and unflinching zeal, or be totally callous to them. There could not be any alternative or midway ;—it is not an exaggeration in the least as we all know it.

Most Revered Messenger of the Absolute Truth,

In these ways, to name only a few of the special features of Your Lip and Life, You have most glaringly showed and taught us, Your incompetent disciples, how to devote hundred per cent. whole-time service to the Predominating All-Beautiful Autocrat and His Predominated Best-beloved Counter-Whole in both reverential and confidential palatable moods.

Best Beloved of Shree Gaura-Sundara,

In offering this humble homage at Your Divine Lotus-Feet, we thought we could do nothing more congenial to beloved devotees of the Supreme Absolute Shree Gaura-Krishna than describe Your acts of mercy by Your Grace alone. It is not our intention to try to please any one else in this matter. We make our prostrated obeisances to the Divine Lotus-Feet of Shree Gurudeva Who is most graciously pleased to open our eyes, sealed with the impenetrable gloom of utter ignorance or Nesisence, by the ever-beneficial spikes of the collyrium of Transcendental Unalloyed Knowledge of the Personal Absolute and lay ourselves wholly and completely at Your Divine Feet to be engaged and employed in the way that is pleasing and suitable to You for the furtherance of the Sweet Will of Shree Gaura-Krishna.

Your Divine Grace's most humble and eternal servants,

The Members of Madras Gaudiya Math.

A Review

"Shree Bhashyam" translated into English by Dewan Bahadur V. K. Ramanujachari. Vols I, II & III. 8vo. pp. 1–LXX. 1–930 & 1–224. To be had of the author, Kumbhokonum, Madras.

WE have on our table three handy volumes of "Shree Bhashyam" translated into English by Dewan Bahadur V. K. Ramanujachari. The whole is priced at Rs 10/8/- for bound cover and Rs 11/- for full calico. Lovers of theistic learning—readers who have got a theistic inclination as distinguished from speculative champions of mundane intellectualism can very well afford this small sum for decorating the shelves of their Library. The present edition is commendable to the readers for its nice diction as well as for its beautiful get up.

The not-easy style of the famous author of Shree Bhashyam of Brahma Sutras has been made easy as far as possible as the translator has spared no pains for his readers by supplying necessary notes where-ever they are needed. The third volume is a supplement furnishing the English translations of the Texts culled in the body; while the first volume covers the first chapter and the second volume the three subsequent chapters of the Shree Bhashyam. The translator has isolated some portion of his elaborate explanations to a different book in order to give relief to his readers while dealing with stiffer problems. Though Bodhayana, Dramirha and other commentators attempted to place their respective views in the minds of theistic community of old, such treatises are rarely available due to energetic exploitations of the writings of impersonalists. Shree Ramanuja at the instigation of his former preceptor Shree Yamunachari, penned his views in the theistic line in his "Shree Bhashyam".

The primary attempts of establishing theism in this materialistic Age should have a welcoming seat in the hearts of all lovers of true theism who should not be carried away by the nude but apparently inviting feats of monism. The intransigentism offered by the apathetic researches prove, in find, hard fetters to the easy-going impers malism of the soft-hearted henotheists who are apt to carry on their Zoo-morphic or Anthropomorphic sensuous endeavours suiting the mundane mentality of busy onlookers of sensuous conceptions.

The pedantic scholars of vague impersonalism as well as those counting upon inductive rationalistic tendency based on mundane manifestations, will have an unforeseen opportunity to go through these pages, if they can set themselves free from participating in their respective provinces. As a true realist, as a sincere following of the transcendental realists—we have every hope that a perusal of these pages of Shree Bhashyam can easily persuade the drooping mentality of the so-called intelligentia to submit to theistic devotion. The rationalistic and theistic arguments of the author of Shree Bhashyam that can dispel the foggy observations of the recalcitrants, though having seeming features of mundane conceptions that always impede the course of sojourners of the phenomenal sphere, will always be a relishing sauce to theistic thoughts. So we owe much to the renowed author of Shree Bhashyam in furnishing a lot of informations which contradict the short-sighted views of so-called retionalists.

The Gaudiya Commentary which goes by the name of Shree Govinda Bhashyam of the Aphorisms of Vadarayana is the latest exposition of all anti-theistic speculations and can be regarded as a very good supplement to Shree Bhashyam. And therein many oppositions have been met by the extraordinarily brilliant theistic genius of Srimad Baladeva Vidyabhusan. The late Major B. D. Bose of Allahabad has already furnished the theistic society with an English rendering of the same from the Panini Office. The specially characteristic exposition of Shree Govinda Bhashyam is known briefly as the famous Achintya-Bheda-bheda interpretation, instead of being included in the phase of Distinctive Monism only. On the other hand, the author not only included all healthy arguments of different theistic communities in his Govinda Bhashyam but has also suitably classified them with a clearer view of devotion, besides amply amplifyng them from the writings of the Great Master Sreemad Jiva Goswami of our Gaudiya school.

The real scope of the Vedanta has been briefly summed up in nine Prameyas (प्रमेय) through the undeviated appreciation of its singular position by Pramana (प्रमाण).

The Personality of Godhead is identical with the Transcendental Word. Impersonified connotations could never denote the full scope of denotation of the Absolute Personality. Though classed as an imperfect or partial phase of the Personal Integer yet this abstract neuter-phase would necessarily come under the category of the Full Personality of Godhead. He is All-potent. He has All-pervading and unceasingly manifestive blissful Existence. The subservient atomic potency of the Spiritual Existence is liable to be captivated by an overwhelming divergent potency that can operate on the infinitesimal ancillary part of His Sentient Energy. But though individual transcendent potentates only can sever connection with the rigorous capture of His Divergent Energy, they have originally proved to dislocate themselves from the Integer by bearing different transitory wrappers produced by that Captivating Divergent Energy. The transcendental message alone, through unfettered preceptors and savants acknowledged to be His Own, can recover the health of fallen diseased souls by effecting their liberation from impediments of Nature. The transcendental and mundane manifestive aspects as well as all entities are inherent in the Absolute Integer with their co-operating and differentiating phases. Unalloyed devotion to the Personality of Godhead will bring all souls here to the Absolute Integer Who is Incessantly Blissful, Who is All-Knowledge and Who is Ever-Existing to Whom uninterrupted service can be offered by unalloyed souls in order to develop eternal, all-knowing and transcendental entheasm.

TELEGRAM

On this day of Your Advent to this world, we beg to tender our hearty homage to Your Divine Feet. Though our frail bodies remain far away our hearts cling close to Your Divine Feet. You from a distance only augment our yearning and we feel Your influence everywhere and perceive Your presence in all our senses and our souls are drinking deep the sweet ambrosia of Your Lotus Feet.

Blessed is the Sun that dawned such a day on earth offering opportunity to us for having You, our Eternal Master, nearest and dearest Lord.

You have graciously appeared on this earth to reclaim Your own servants and for the deliverance of all fallen souls. Rightly You have shewn devotion to be the highest, to be the sublimest of all forms of Sadhana ever known to mankind. To undeceive the frail humanity You have exposed all forms of pseudo-religions in their true colours, by boldly offering a comparative estimate of different kinds of religion in vogue.

The unerring principles of theism have always been Your standard in such comparative study. You have upheld the banner of full-fledged theism by demonstrating the personality of Krishna as propagated by Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya. You have established the Absolute autocracy of the Paramount Lord Krishna Who is the Sole Enjoyer of the jeevas and everything of the phenomenal universe being mere objects of His enjoyment.

On a perfect analysis You have shown the distinction between body, mind and soul. You have taught body and mind to be the two perishable gross and subtle coverings of the essential part, the soul which is the separated part of Krishna and is thus eternal in nature, his real function being the eternal service of Krishna. Being infinitesimal in form he is capable of being engrossed by Maya but still deliverable by Bhakti alone. It is Your Divine Grace Who has expounded to us that Krishna-prem is the only summum bonum of life.

Shastric tenets seeming only as extraneous maxims so long proved meaningless but now they have been actually realised by Your living example; so You are the great Acharyya that India needed ere long.

We envy Dravida, today glorified with Your august presence. Dravida being the sheltering home of Sanatan Shastras will find in You the real fulfilment of their time-honoured Vedic culture. We thank the South for withstanding foreign influence of reckless living in hedonistic pursuit of what is now-a-days termed as life daubed with the name of civilization. Will they not know that You are in their midst as the embodied epitome of the ancient learning and Sadhana which have kept their life and culture so long intact. The South has been fertilised by streams of Satwata Sampradayas under the lead of four Acharyyas and is now surely fit for receiving and utilising Your sublime message and thereby the people of South will fulfil their Sadhana of ages.

We were aggrieved to see the atmosphere of the South for sometime vitiated by the prevalence of material eclecticism of some pseudo-Sampradaya getting hold of the simple-minded but now the atmosphere seems to have been purified by Your presence and the people of the South will now appreciate Your message and be able to discriminate between that modern mushroom religion and the Vedic Sanatan Dharma.

Your Divine magic touch has turned the distant Southerners today our kith and kin and we further hope to embrace the whole of the world in no time as our brothers through the Divine touch of Your Grace. We all wholeheartedly bow to Thee and are glad to congratulate the fortunate people of the South for worshipping You there today.

Father, we are at every moment reminded of that departed one, our most beloved Jagabandhu who so earnestly wished to celebrate Thy Puja in this Math last year but who, to our great sorrow, was snatched away from our midst in the dead of night before it could be done. As the ever-ready fulfiller of the wishes of Thy devoted ones may we not expect to carry out his hearts sacred longings next year in this Temple made by him of hallowed memory.

Sree Vyasa Puja Humble Homage

Your Divine Grace,

1. First of all we bow down our head and prostrate ourselves to your Divine Lotus feet.

2. We have come here this evening to worship Your Holy Feet by offering our heartfelt gratitude and showing our deep regard and love for Your Divine Grace.

3. Steeped in the gloom of ignorance (Avidya) we do not know how to worship Your Lotus Feet. We are ashamed of our ineptitude. Our Empiric knowledge is an anathema too foul to enable us to approach Your Divine Lotus Feet. The education we have received in the Universities is absolutely divorced from religion—the baneful effect of which is now being experienced by the authorities in the Godless spirit and don't care attitude of the young alumni placed in charge of their alma mater.

4. To redeem ourselves from this dreadful chasm of Nescience and enlighten us with the true knowledge of relationship between Godhead and ourselves Your Divine Grace has, out of Your Divine altruistic nature, established the Thakur Bhakti-Vinode Institute at Sreedham Mayapur, Dist. Nadia, after the holy name of Thakur Bhakti-Vinode—the pioneer of Vaishnavism—or Bhagabat Dharma of pristine glory—during whose life time a new era of unalloyed devotion dawned upon the horizon of the Vaishnava world.

5. Thakur Bhakti-Vinode Institute has been located at Sreedham Mayapur, Old Nabadwip the then Oxford of gal—the Birthplace of Sri Chaitanya aprabhu—to inculcate His teachings ng all young learners without nction of caste, creed or colour. The itute is, therefore, unique in its as it imparts University education d on ethical and theistic principles two main pivots upon which the dation of the Institute hinges.

i. Your Divine Grace is the itest of the modern teachers of the d, in the sense that the education irted by Your Gracious Self in the r preaching centres in different parts ie country of which Sree Chaitanya h stands in the fore-front has an loyed grounding in pure Theism morals.

'. Our life is an unending series rgetfulness, a series of inert inertia ing us to the merry-go-round gordola) of weal and woe, births rebirths, heaven and hell and so). But Your Divine Grace has ued us from this vortex of endless amorphosis by infusing in us the ering and invigorating influence of r soul-stirring teachings, as depicted the "Shikshastakam" of Lord itanya, the ever blissful Sree shna Sankirtanam, the very life of less Learning, the main prop and ar of all Theism, in their true aspect.

Your Divine Grace,

We are sojourners in this foreign l always hankering after the four-fold mirage of piety, wealth, lust and salvation with which we have been deluded, from time immemorial, to this doleful tantalisation. But Your Divine Grace, out of compassion for fallen creatures like ourselves, has appeared before us to deliver us from this four-fold enigma of self-deception by presenting before our soul's eye the ever-Blissful Region wherein is manifested the jubilant pastimes of the All-Beautiful, All-Loving, All-Attracting Lord Krishna with all His paraphernalia.

9. Your Divine Grace,

We have now fallen under the clutches of Kali Juga, the era of self-sufficiency and hypocrisy, gambling and carousing, debauchery and butchery, greed of emoluments, false name and fame, though instances of Hiranya-kashipu, demon Ravana and Kansa, Jarasandha and Durjodhana are not rare amongst us. But Your Divine Grace has redeemed us from the terrible grips of those demoniac characters by conferring upon us an ever-ready self-luminous Spiritual Search-light with which we can foresee those hydra-headed gorgons in human forms, lurking under cover of green grass out-side with a hideous mouth wide-open inside, ready to swallow us.

10. Your Divine Grace is one of the Greatest Exponents of Vedanta as taught and promulgated by Lord Chaitanya through-out the length and breadth of the country some four hundred years ago. Your age is therefore an age of regeneration of Transcendental Truths as expounded in the Vedas and Upanishads, the Geeta and the Bhagabatam.

11. Your Divine Grace has taught us the All-Embracing undisputed principles of the Bhagabatam, the only Book Divine that will ever remain enshrined with all His glory in the hearts of genuine Vaishnavas when all the works of the world are doomed to destruction.

12. Your Divine Grace has taught us this simple truth that every individual soul is an atomic part and parcel of the All-pervading Universal Soul simultaneously distinct and non-distinct a fact which is incomprehensible to human reasoning and is, therefore, a living Chaitanya Math wherein dwells the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya and His Associated Manifestive Counter-Whole, Sree Gurudeva identical with Nityananda.

13. Your Divine Grace has taught us this fundamental principle that unless and until a devotee approaches with submissive spirit, honest enquiry and implicit obedience to the Holy feet of Nityananda, now appeared before us as the only World-Teacher, he is debarred from attaining to the Lotus Feet of Lord Sree Chitanya, the combined Embodiment of the Predominating and the Predominated Moities of the Absolute. Your Divine Grace is, therefore, the living Manifestation of Sree Chaitanya-Bani the Gospel of Absolute Thuth Who, when enters into our listening ears, dispels the gloom of age-long ignorance (Avidyā) from our heart and makes it the bower of juvenile Pastimes of the Spiritual-Despot of Brindaban.

14. Every Logos emanating from Your Divine Lips is a source of perennial entheasm and represents a Spiritual Kaleidoscope which, when seen through our soul's eye, produces, at every turn, a panorama of endless variety of Beautiful Images harmonisingly dancing in beautiful circles round the Central Figure of Love, Truth and Beauty.

15. Your Transcendental discourses drop manna and serve as a panacea for all secular diseases, specially the three-fold miseries (Tapas) with which wise-acres of the world are generally afflicted. Your Harikirtana, like the self-effulgent Sun, always emits the light of true devotion to your followers eliminating thereby the darkness of mental turpitude arising from Karma, Yoga and Jnana.

16. Your Divine Grace,

We have been terribly suffering from the ulcerous diseases of Elevation and Salvation, the septic co-effects of our Empiric Knowledge. But Your sharp penetrating Shastric reasonings, like a successful surgical operation, while cutting to the quick, are, though bitter and painful at the outset, yet soothing and pacifying in the long run.

17. Your Divine Grace is the Namacharyya of the Modern age. You have, by Your ennobling influnces of ambrosial Sree Krishna Kirtan, established the super-excellent utility of Nama-Sankirtana as distinguished from the Twilight-Nama (Namavas) and the obscured-Nama (Nama-paradha). The obscurity vanishes as soon as the twilight (Aurora) appears in the eastern horizon and the twilight disappears as soon as the Sun of Holy Name is reflected and becomes visible in our unobstructed enlightened retina.

18. Your Divine Grace has conferred upon us the greatest boon of the true knowledge of the Nama (identical with the Personality of Godhead), the Dhama (the spiritual Blissful Abode) and the Kama (unalloyed burning desire for the gratification of the spiritual Senses of Lord Krishna), a boon which cannot be achieved unless and until one surrenders himself completely at Your Divine Lotus Feet. True Knowledge, by Your Divine Grace, grows in the awakened soul on the Transcendental Soil. But if, on the contrary, we assume ourselves to lord it over the Deluding Energy of the Lord (Maya), on the score of our empiric knowledge, we are at once enthralled by her three-fold gunas and identify ourselves with the fictitious name, fictitious region and fictitious mundane affinity forgetting our real name, real abode and real desire to serve the Absolute Reality. But Your Divine Grace by your incessant Sree-Krishna-Sankirtana has stemmed the tide of this whirlpool of misty illusion and steered clear our vessel of human life to the Spiritual Haven of Nama, Dhama and Kama, saving it from being foundered on the rocks of Scylla (self-aggrandisement) and the whirlpools of Charibdys (self-annihilation). Strict adherence to the proper and godly use of everything in the spirit of worldly artless detachment (Yukta-vairagya) and strict avoidance of pseudo-asceticism (Falgu vairagya) are the safe-guards vouchsafed by Your Divine Grace with which Your devotees safely keep themselves aloof from the contaminating influence of the simulators.

20. United we stand and divided we fall. Your Divine Grace has taught us this fundamental principle that spiritual separation enhances the bond of spiritual union. But this bond of union cannot be attained so long as we are couped up within the four walls of three-dimensions. All efforts, however great, to achieve this end, dwindle into insignificance when they are translated into action. Just as a circle is imperfect without a centre, myriads of cyphers carry no value without the initial integer one, so when the Central Figure of All-Love, All-Intelligence and All-Bliss, the One without a second is ignored, all our attempts, in any sphere of life, become null and void. But the super-excellence of Your Divine Grace's sublime teachings has always served as a stimulant to target all our activities to the gratification of the spiritual Senses of Krishna, the Lord of Brindaban, which alone can give us Krishna-Prema, the summum bonum of our human existence. Your Divine words teach us that the slightest deflection from the Central Figure of Love, Beauty and Truth will surely end in moral leprosy, chaotic disorder and disruptive destruction and that sincere service rendered by a devotee with whatever he possesses, his body, mind, word, wealth and soul towards the gratification of the Supreme Lord will surely stand him in good stead in this life and hereafter.

21. The education, therefore, according to Your Divine Grace, aims at not embellishing ourselves with the University distinction of Doctorates and P.R.S.'s the be-all and end-all of our existence but at awakening our now-lying-dormant inner-self to the loving service of the Supreme Lord and His devotees under the proper guidance of a self-realised soul who is Gurudeva or Representative of the Supreme Lord. Your Divine Grace has taught us also that he who has implicit faith in and abiding obedience towards Gurudeva and the Supreme Lord as well, which is the same thing, is in the ken of all Inspired Truths revealed in Vedas.

22. Your Divine Grace has enlightened us in regard to the fundamental principles of the Vedas, the three, distinct aspects of the Absolute Truth namely (1) the Knowledge of Relationship that exists between Godhead and ourselves, (2) of Means i.e. the unalloyed devotion of nine different methods of which the Holy Nama-Sankirtana stands foremost and lastly (3) of the Needs i.e. the Love of Krishna, the Final Beatitude.

23. In the days of yore the geocentric notion of earth was subverted by the heliocentric. Similarly, the magnetic influence of your sublime and powerful teachings has totally upset the geocentric thoughts of the following 'Isms' namely, (1) Psilanthropism (2) Anthropomorphism (3) Apotheosism (4) Henotheism (5) Cathonitheism (6) Buddhism (7) Pantheism (8) Agnosticism (9) Scepticism, (in other words Atheism) the illegitimate offspring of Godless Empiricism and established the heliocentric Truth of Theism embodying the natural aptitude of our unadulterated inner-self. Thus it may be truly said that ıe speculations of Benares School have stained a crushing defeat at the ınds of Your Divine Grace by the tablishment of the true principles of aimisharanya or Bhagabat School. he publications of Scriptural Texts in fferent languages under Your Divine litorship, the elucidation of Gaudiya-ashya by Your Divine Grace of those ıastric Literatures, the Periodicals ıd Journals published in different nguages, the preaching-centres estab-ished in different parts of the country ɔm where self-realised souls, under our Divine Guidance, preach the ıctrine of Universal Love, establishments the Divine-Foot-prints of the Lotus ıet of Lord Chaitanya in various parts the country, bear ample testimony the fact mentioned above.

24. Your Divine Grace has also lightened us with an analytical ınesis of Theism and Empiricism. ɔm the former spring up, in propor-ɔn to the Spiritual development of ul's realisation of God, the four-fold ɔrship of (1) the One All pervading-niversal Vashudeva (2) Lakshmi-arayana (3) Sita-Rama and finally lminating in (4) Radha-Krishna in rindabana. From the latter sprang) the gradual four fold off-shoots of) Atheism, (2) Scepticism, (3) gnosticism and (4) Pantheism. Your ivine Grace has re-established and vived the time-honoured systems of Varna and Ashrama, long in a moribund state, on the basis of pure Theistic principles as depicted in the Geeta and the Bhagabatam. One versed in the knowledge of Brahman, the Effulgent Aspect of the Deity, is a Brahmana. A Brahmana who attains to the worship of Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the Universe, at all times, under all circumstances, is a Vaishnava, be he a caste-Brahmin or Pariah, or pass himself off as a Brahmachari, a Grihastha, a Hindu, a Muhammadan, or a Christian, or whatever caste or community he may belong to

25. The sands on the sea-beach, the stars on the Milky-way and the ripples of the Ocean can be counted but the Divine attributes of Your Divine Nature can hardly be estimated by the limited knowledge of poor creatures like ourselves. Fallible as we are, we are always deeply engrossed with our mental speculations and hallucinative ideas. Under these handicaps we know not Who Your Divine Grace is and with what inner motive Your Divinity has come down to tread upon this terrafirma. Nobody can know Your Divinity unless Your Divinity manifests Himself to him. Nobody can chant any thing in praise of your Divinity, unless Your Divinity gives him power to do so. Your Grace reveals Himself to him whom Your Divinity pleases to be revealed to. Unless your Divinity reveal Himself in the purified heart, it is impossible for a devotee to realise Godhead. The Supreme Lord, therefore, reveals Himself through Your Divinity to the devotee in his unalloyed existence, as the Associated Counter-Whole of the Predominating Integer.

26. Like dwarfs aspiring after the moon we have tried to give vent to our feelings of Love and Reverence for Your Divine Grace and we know not whether they are eligible to touch Your Holy Lotus Feet. But knowing fully well that Your heart is too full of the milk of Divine kindness to overlook fallen creature like ourselves, we have ventured to approach Your Divine Lotus Feet on this auspicious moment with this humble prayer of our hearts.

27. May Your Divine Grace graciously accept this humble homage of our loyal hearts. May Your Divine Grace dwell in the inmost recesses of our hearts and bless us to obey Your Divine Command under all circumstances and teach us from within that we may learn to devote all our energies and activities to the loving service of the Supreme Lord Sri Krishna and His Loving Devotees with all humility, sincerity, and selflessness, under the benign Guidance of Your Divine Grace. Again we make our prostrated obeisances to Your Divine Lotus Feet Who has been graciously pleased to open our eyes, long sealed in the gloom of utter ignorance, by the spike of the eye-salve of Transcendental Knowledge.

In loyal obedience and submissiveness,
Your Divine Grace's most humble servants,
The Teachers of the Thakur Bhakti Vinode Institute

The Presidential Address at the All-Theistic Conference

The theory that professes compatibility of the spiritual with the mundane is, indeed, a perversion of Illusionism. The Illusionists (Mayavadins) profess with the lip that they admit the existence of all entities. But as a matter of fact they disown the existence of Godhead Himself. They do not admit the Eternal Name, Form, Quality, Activity and Individualities of the servitors of the Divinity. They manufacture the processes of anthropomorphism by attributing to Godhead conduct that is applicable to humanity and apotheosis by imagining the possession of Divine Power by mortal men. By these silly methods they seek to be-daub with mundane impurity the substantive Reality Who is the Fullness of Existence, Cognition and Bliss, by discarding the Eternal Sacred Name, Form, etc., of Godhead. Zoo-morphism which attributes Divinity to lower animals, is also a concoction of these people. All of them are worshippers of Idols (butparasth).

Real Rama-Nrisingha-Baraha-Matsya-Kurma etc., are Narayana Himself waited upon by all His distinctive Divine Paraphernalia,—Each with His Own Eternal Divine Name, Form, Quality, Infinity of individual servitors, Activity. Each is Lord of the Deluding Potency, All of Them being Transcendental Vishnu-Personalities. Every One of Them has His Own Eternal Vaikuntha (Absolute Realm). They descend by Their causeless Mercy at Their Own sweet Will to the world of limitations from Their Own Vaikunthas in order to manifest Themselves to the jeevas inhabiting this mundane world, by remaining fully in Vaikuntha and maintaining in tact Their unconditional immunity from all regulative principles. They are not the categories of the objects of worship or heroes of the professors of anthropomorphism, apotheosis, zoo-morphism, idolatry, latitudinarianism that seeks to include spirit and matter in a common category, or illusionism.

The fancies, hypocrisies, pretences of worship, of those who affect to make no categorical distinctive between spirit and matter, like unto the futile endeavours of the demon Ravana in his abduction of the mundane duplicate of Divine Seeta, can never touch the fringe of the Divine Category of Vishnu Who wholly transcends all limiting attempts. Those who possess the knowledge of the soul offer their eternal worship to the Divine Person Who is Eternal, Real, Indivisible, Full-Existence, Full-Cognition, Full-Bliss, having His Eternal Name, Form, Quality, Activity, distinctive Servitors,—by discarding all impurities of this extraneous world.

The Illusionist (Mayavadin) cherishes the evil aptitude of attributing, or carrying, to the Divine Personality the limited unwholesome concepts of this world. The intoxication of his illusion never quits its hold of him. Even when he engages in the worship of Divinity Himself the blunder of confounding the Divinity with limited entities puts in its appearance. It is for this reason that the Mayavadin (illusionist) attributes the quality of unwholesomeness to things pertaining to the Divinity and fancies the Eternal Name, Form, Quality, Activity and Servitors of Godhead to be products of Physical Nature. A few even among the worshippers of Christ have supposed the chain of our Pauranic religious teachers to be apotheosists or zoomorphists. Such an attitude is due to absence of full consideration of the case on their part.

Real Sanatan-dharma (eternal function of all souls) —the religion preached by Shree Chaitanya—is not what such persons think it to be. The fundamental principle has been clearly expressed by an eminent follower of Shree Chaitanya. His words are, 'There is no worse blasphemy against Vishnu than to suppose that the Form of Vishnu is anything mundane."

Vishnu is uninterruptible Cognition, Existence and Bliss. In this world of limitations there is a plurality of substantive objective entities. In Vaikuntha there is One Indivisible Object of worship. In Vaikuntha there is no henotheism, polytheism or cathonitheism. Max Muller has applied the term 'henotheism' to convey a part of the significance of the process of worship known as 'panchopasana' (worship of five deities). Sadananda Yogindra has imagined an 'Ishwara' (Ruler of the world) as being the aggregate of inexpressible unknowables starting from the conception of 'sat' (existent) and 'a-sat' (non-existent). The ephemeral 'Ishwara' manufactured in the workshop of the imagination of Sadananda Yogindra is never the Entity Who is Real Godhead worshipped by fully theistic persons.

Shree Gaursundar says, "the Indivisible Cognitive Principle is Son of the Chief of Braja in Braja". In Absolute Cognition there is no mundane dualistic cognition. "The apprehension of good id Evil in the dualistic state, is wholly speculation of the mind. 'This is ood, this is evil' all such knowledge is Error".

There is eternal difference between xclusive Monism and the Doctrine of conceivable Distinction-cum-non-Distinction. This difference is realisable the religion of spiritual service of e Divinity. It is unjustifiable to tempt a reconciliation of the eternal ference that separates the unspiritual alisation from the spiritual, the pure guition of the soul from the erroneous inking of the non-soul. Such an tempt is opposed to the principle of service of the Divinity.

In the philosopical literature of the School of Ramanuja we meet the consideration of the Potency of Godhead, categories being chit (cognition), a-chit (non-cognition) and Iswara (ruler). In the literature of Gaudiya Vaishnavas we find the terms antaranga (innner potency,) Bahiranga (outer potency) and Tatastha (potency of the line between the innner and outer potencies). If the term chit (cognition) would have been thoroughgoing it would not mix with a-chit (non-cognition).

Taking Refuge in God

Longing for realisation

1 And by me unawares When shall I forget
The memory of my gross self ?
Shall behold with my eyes The beauty of the realm of Braja
Full of the eternal spiritual bliss ?

2 In Brishabhanu's town When shall I have my birth, Shall be married in Yabata ?
The mood of the milkmaid of Braja Will be my nature,
And there be no other disposition ?

3 My own realised body, My own realised name,
My own form, my own apparel,
By the power of Radha's mercy, O when shall I gain ?
And initiation into the love of Krishna ?

4 Going out to fetch The water of the Yamuna
Shall understand the love of the Divine pair ?
And smitten by love, Like a distracted maiden,
Shall sing the praise of Radha ?

Thakur Bhakti-vinode Institute, Sridham Mayapur

Mr. P. C. Mukherjee second Inspector of Schools, Presidency Division, Bengal, accompanied by Mr. J. C. Sikder, District Inspector of Schools, Nadia, officially visited Thakur Bhakti-vinode Institute of Sridham Mayapur on February 20th for reporting on the claims of the School for recognition by the University of Calcutta. In course of his inspection Mr. Mukherjee was pleased to record in the visitors' book his opinion that "the authorities have placed before themselves schemes and ideals which when fulfilled will be an object of pride not only to the district of Nadia, but to Bengal as well."

Sree Vyasa-Puja

Sree Vyasa-Puja was duly celebrated with an elaborate and special programme at Sree Purusottam Math, Puri on the 26th February. A samkirtan procession paid the Editor the compliment of visiting the sight of His Birth on this occasion of worship of Sree Guru.

Sree Vyasa-Puja was performed with great rejoicings by the devotees of Sree Chaitanya Math, Sridham Mayapur, on the 26th of February. The students and teachers of Thakur Bhakti-vinode Institute took a prominent part in the performances. Sripad Narahari Brahmachari performed the archan of Sree Guru at the Avidyaharan Natyamandir of Sree Chaitanya Math and was followed in the same function by the other devotees. Sripad Atindriya Bhaktigunakar spoke in praise of the greatness of Sree Guru and addresses in English, Bengali, Sanskrit, Oriya and other languages were read. The assembly joined enthusiastically in the aratrika at eventide as well as at the evening offering of bhoga to Sree Bigrahas and in the samkirtana, and honoured the mahaprasadam at the Math.

The Festival was also celebrated at all the branch Maths all over the country.

Festival of the disappearance of Srila Jagannathdas Babaji Maharaj

The Festival of the disappearance of Srila Jagannathdas Babaji Maharaj, the great Vaishnava saint who has made manifest to the view of the people of this Age Sridham Mayapur, the All-Holy Birth-Place of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya, was celebrated with great solemnity on the 8th of March at Sree Gaudiya Math of Calcutta. On this sacred occasion His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Vivek Bharati Maharaj narrated to a huge and representative gathering of the citizens of Calcutta, the teachings and transcendental career of Srila Babaji Maharaj in a most eloquent discourse lasting for ever an hour and a half.

Propaganda

In the town of Khulna—His Holiness Tridand Swami Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj with a party of devotees arrived in the town of Khulna on the 28th of February. His Holiness conveyed to the people of the locality the tidings of the teachings of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya during Feb. 28--March 4 according to the following porgramme help of lantern slides in such clear manner that they may be intelligible to all persons. An attempt was made by upholders of pseudo-teachers of the religion to bring about a controversial opposition to the movement but their champions wisely refrained from undergoing the exposure of an open controversy. His Holiness toured these parts from Feb. 29 to March 2, addressing huge gatherings of the people on the subject of unalloyed devotion to the Lotus Feet of Krishna made available to all persons of this Iron Age by the unsurpassed mercy of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya.

Feb. 28-29—exposition of Sanatan Siksha from Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita, at the residence of Babu Sarat Chandra Ghose B. E., District Engineer of Khulna.

March 1-2—lecture on the purpose and magnanimity of the Appearance of Sree Gauranga, at the Temple of Satya-Narayana of the Marwari community.

In Jaipur, Madras—Their Holinesses Tridandi Swamis Srimad Bhakti Hriday Bon Maharaj and Srimad Bhakti Rakshak Sridhar Maharaj with Sripad Pyarimohan Brahmachariji visited the State of Jaipur at the invitation of H. H. Raja Bahadar Sree Sree Sreebikramadeva Varma Maharajaln Garu for the purpose of preaching the religion of pure devotion there. Their Holinesses lectured in Sanskrit and English on Sanatan dharma at a meeting in the Palace presided over by His Highness who was very much impressed by the discourses and kindly promised to bear the cost of the erection of a Temple of noble dimensions to serve as the centre of propaganda of Sanatan dharma in the town of Madras. Sree Chaitanya in South India

ACCORDING to the testimony of Srila Krishnadas Kaviraj Goswami, the most illustrious author of Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita embodying the authentic account of His Transcendental Activities, the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya visited most of the holy tirthas of South India during 1510–11 A.D. Srila Kaviraj Goswami is careful to state that the Supreme Lord exerted the Power of His mercy even more bounteously in the South than in Nabadwip itself. Whatsoever person He came across during the whole course of His sojourn was made a Vaishnava and was infused the power of the Guru and commanded to instruct all people in the religion of pure devotion to Krishna by imparting to them the Name of Krishna. In this manner, says Kaviraj Goswami Prabhu, the entire population of South India were made Vaishnavas.

Empiric historians affect to regard these statements of Srila Kaviraj Goswami as the mere eulogies of a staunch partisan. Even honest persons who have the deepest regard for the author of Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita fail to understand how all trace and even memory of the conversions wrought by the Supreme Lord can have disappeared so completely from all those parts of the country within such a short period.

Now-a-days the importance of a Religion is calculated by the numerical strength of its professed followers. This is one of the ordinary reasons why a Religion is always very particular that its followers should use its distinctive ceremonials and external marks. It is a common enough sentiment that impels even cultured persons to be conscientiously opposed to open compliance with the rituals of a creed that is not his own. Not that a rational person does really object to much of the forms and methods of the other creeds or cherishes any decidedly more convinced sentiment in favour of the conventions of his own professed cult. But nevertheless the sentiment is there in a very effective form. There is nothing very extraordinary, rationally speaking, in chanting the Name of Krishna in the company of bona fide devotees. It is the simplest conceivable form of worship in which a number of persons can actually and fully join. It is possible to induce other people to join in the function by substituting the names Allah and Jesus in place of Krishna. But even so there are not a few persons who, although they put up with much in their own religion that is regarded as conventional, will refuse to repeat a new name in company as being nothing short of a silly performance instead of being the highest religion.

The name of Krishna on the Lips of the Supreme Lord had the Power of making all persons, who heard, realise the Truth of Whom they had been told by the Scriptures. This was a most marvellous experience. In this Iron Age it is only the Name Krishna appearing on the lips of a bonafide sadhu who can lift the conditioned soul to the plane of the Absolute. As a matter of fact even the Scriptures also can only faintly express the Personality of Godhead. The mere study of the Scriptures can convey no full knowledge of the Absolute as Substantive Entity. But the Name Krishna has power to put a person on the Absolute plane and endow the words of the revealed Scriptures with their living meaning. On the plane of the Absolute all entities serve Godhead in an infinite variety of forms that run harmoniously into, instead of clashing against, one another. The vision of the person who once hears the Name of Krishna undergoes this marvellous change. He can only then really believe in Godhead because he understands and sees Whom he is to serve. He becomes in the Substantive sense a bona fide theist or Vaishnava.

One of the most familiar tenets of Vaishnavism acquaints us with the significant fact that it is impossible for one to know a Vaishnava except by the mercy of the latter. If the external marks and the regular performance of the rituals recommended by the Scriptures could make one a Vaishnava then the process could, indeed, be handed down from father to son intact. But one person may scrupulously perform all these affairs and continue to be a non-Vaishnava, while another may omit them wholesale and yet be a genuine Vaishnava. It is never possible to find out the Vaishnava by these external marks.

But can a person be designated a Vaishnava who behaves contrary to the injunctions of the Scriptures? The Scriptures themselves exempt all Vaishnavas from the obligation of following any rule except the unerring impulse of their own pure selves.

This brings us to the all-important question of the place of ritualistic observances in the scheme of duties that are prescribed during novitiate under the bona fide spiritual guide viz., the Vaishnava Guru. No one except a Vaishnava is a real spiritual guide. The Vaishnava Guru does not make his disciple follow any definable course. He is found to act as an autocrat in relation to his disciple. Neither does he appear to pay the least attention to the letter of the Scriptural injunctions in settling the duties of his charge. One who is on a visit to one of the numerous Maths, or centres of training, established under the auspices of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha all over the country, cannot fail to notice the absence of anything like conventionalism. The conventions themselves, to the extent that they are allowed to be practised by particular inmates, are also found to be fully as natural expressions of a living faith in the Absolute as the unconventional life prescribed to another inmate of the institution.

It is for this reason that the life led by the inmates of these Maths has proved such a baffling enigma for the conventional understandings even of their genuine well-wishers. The Guru alone really knows his disciple. The Scriptures must not be supposed to be on a level with our so-called blundering rationalism. They never favour the creation of sect or dogma in their ordinary worldly sense. They want to set us free from the fetters of all wordly creed and dogma. They never prescribe any mechanical course to any individual. The formulation of general rules which are intended to be binding on the members of a community, is the sorry device of our bankrupt rationalism for contriving the destruction of free individual functioning.

Under these circumstances it is very hazardous to be at all sure on the honest assurance of the observers of external occurrences that the wholesale conversion of all souls that Srila Krishnadas Kaviraj Goswami Prabhu declares to have been effected by Sree Gaursundar, is only the baseless statements of an extraordinarily impudent partisan of an unsuccessful well-meaning reformer of Religion. The Church of Lord Nityananda is open to all souls who really desire to function on the plane that is absolutely free from all limitations. All that is necessary for this purpose is to listen attentively to the Name of Krishna from the lips of His pure devotee. The Name being identical with the Enlightening Absolute, thereupon, automatically sets the hearer on the plane of pure cognition where he can function perfectly without any artificial aid of any kind whatsoever.

It is necessary to fix one's attention wholly on the Absolute. The devotee of the highest grade sees the Absolute in everything even of this relative world. The right vision sees everything right. The right vision does not confound wrong with right. There are pseudo-teachers of the Absolute who want us to overlook the distinction between wrong and right. There are those also who justify wrong and represent it as right. This is, to the extent that it is actually practised, the theory of conduct of exclusive unilateral non-distinctive Monism. These monists would make a clean slate of everything. They are against all rituals. They are against all activity, even cognitional activity of the right sort. What then are they for? They are for the commission of willing suicide for no reason whatever. It is not this content-less rationalism or hallucinative speculationism that the Vaishnava School offers in recommending the eternal spiritual service of the Absolute Person.

There are unlimited duties towards the Absolute to be rendered by every individual soul in the state of grace. It is not a clean slate. Those duties can have no mundane form which limits the scope of our activity. They have non-mundane form which does not so limit. The monist does not admit the possibility of unlimited form for the reason that it is incompatible with the conclusions of our present defective reason. On the plane of the Absolute there is both form and individuality as well as oneness. This is no doubt inconceivable to us at present. Neither need we strive with our present cognitive resources to measure the immeasurable.

True, the Scriptures do prescribe certain forms and rituals for the guidance of the novice. The disciple is not asked by the Scriptures to put himself under an incompetent guide. He is required to place himself under the unconditional guidance of the bona fide spiritual teacher. This apparently conflicts with the prospect of his unfettered freedom. But the bona fide teacher, and he alone, can remove the honest doubts of the enquiring pupil regarding the realisable free state by putting him on the plane of the Absolute. It will not do to refuse to understand the true meaning of the Scriptures. Neither need one refuse the help of the bona fide spiritual guide for the purpose of being enabled to understand what it is beyond our present faculties to know. It is only then that we can understand the nature of the function on the Absolute plane. If we are less sincere we are liable to misunderstand everything.

The historian of Christianity, Muhammadanism, Buddhism, Hinduism etc., has, no doubt been very busy in chronicling the stories of the respective religions that are professed by the majority of the human race. No articulate critic professing those religions has yet declared it impossible for anybody to tell in the human language the story of the Doings of God. And if the Religions do not propose to tell us of the Doings of God do they deserve the name of Religion ? The doings of men have undoubtedly been recorded in the way that is perfectly intelligible to all men who take the trouble to read those records. But why should certain doings of men be called by the separate title of religious history ? A very old gentleman once told me that the Scriptures are as much the handi-work of man as any branch of human knowledge. According to our Scriptures the view which chooses to regard the doings of man to be on the same plane as the doings of the Divinity, is termed offence against Godhead.

The world stands in no need of any reformer. The world has a very competent person for guiding its minutest happenings. The person who finds that there is scope for reform of the world, himself stands in need of reform. The world goes on in its own perfect way. No person can deflect it by the breadth of an hair from the course chalked out for it by Providence. When we perceive any change being actually effected in the course of events of this world by the agency of any praticular individual we also know very well that the agent possesses no real power at any stage. The agent finds himself driven forward by a force belonging to a different category from himself.

The course of the world does not require to be changed by the activity of any person. What is necessary is to change our outlook on this very world. This was done for the contemporary generation by the Mercy of Sree Chaitanya. It could be known only to the recipients of His Mercy. The change in outlook must also have been effected without involving any necessarily perceptible change in the external look of affairs to which the vision of the empiric historian is necessarily confined. The Scriptures declare that it is only necessary for one to listen with an open mind to the Name of Krishna from the lips of the bona fide devotee. As soon as Krishna enters the listening ear He clears up the vision of the listener so that he has no longer any ambition of even acting the part of a reformer of any other person, because he finds that nobody is left without the very Highest Guidance. He is, in fact, only anxious to realise this fact in all its fullness. It is, therefore, his own reform by the Grace of Godhead whose supreme necessity and nature he is increasingly enabled to realise by the eternally continuing mercy of the Supreme Lord. The empiric historian who is busy with the husking of chaff has no sense by which he may take note of events that affect the grain within.

The ambitious aptitude which is inherent in the idle brain of empiric hair-splitters, clouds the vision of deluded humanity and prevents it from paying its due attention to the Voice of Truth. The empiric brain must give up its attitude of self-sufficiency if it really wants to be enlightened. If its possessor viz., the conditioned soul is ever really enlightened by the causeless mercy of Sree Gaursundar the awakened soul will find himself on a plane which is beyond the ken of all the empiric chaff-grinders of this benighted world. But his deliverence will never be even suspected by his sage contemporaries.

Sree Ramanujacharya

IT is the intention of this short discourse to indicate the position of Sree Ramanujacharya in the order of the theistic teachers by the standard of the Absolute made fully available by the teachings of Sree Chaitanya. Sree Ramanuja's system admits all persons to the service of Godhead without distinction of caste or creed provided they submit unconditionally to the guidance of the spiritual preceptor. The followers of Ramanuja withdraw from all communion with society outside the pale of their own community.

The high honour accorded by the system to the servants of Godhead makes it resemble the system of Sree Chaitanya in one most important respect. The servants of the Lord stand apart from and above the classes of this world. They form the community of pure souls in which there is no room for distinctions based upon the mundane principles of age, sex, occupation, learning or any quality of the head or the heart. The relations of the members of such society are entirely regulated by super-mundane considerations which are wholly unintelligible to the uninitiated.

The story about the wife who promised to offer her body to the lust of a neighbour in order to obtain the wherewithal for providing the alms of food for her spiritual preceptor and his associates when they chanced to present themselves to her home during the absence of her husband who praised her for her conduct in doing so, may not be appreciated by those who do not believe the sequel of the story. We are told in the concluding part of the narrative that as the remains of the food which had been offered to the Lord was taken to the neighbour by the couple who expressed their gratitude for his help asking him to honour the same there was a sudden change of mind of the amorously disposed trader. As he reverentially tasted the mahaprasadam all his former evil propensities left him for good and he fell down at the feet of the loyal lady whose mercy was the cause of his undeserved deliverance.

The above story is no exageration of the absolute submission to the Guru that is insisted upon by Sree Ramanuja as the most essential condition for admission into the spiritual community. Equal reverence is required to be shown to the associates and all the disciples of the Guru. The members stand to one another in the relationship of unconditional and unlimited service that has to be offered unasked. The only difference being that the Guru and the associates of the Guru are entitled to receive service without rendering it to the disciple.

This unconditional reverence for the Guru and His associates on the part of the disciple is the sine qua non as regards the practice of the function of bhakti or serving devotion to Sree Narayana Himself Who is, according to Sree Ramanuja, the only and final Recipient of all service. The unconditional service rendered to the bona fide devotee and specially to Sree Guru and His associates is identical with service rendered to Sree Narayana Himself. Ramanuja is very careful to distinguish between the bona fide devotee and the mere external assumption of the dress and signs of devotion. There is no question regarding the exclusive nature of the service that has to be offered to the Transcendental Object of all worship. The Holy Manifest Form (Archa) is not to be confounded with any object of this mundane world and is to be duly worshipped. No other devata except Vishnu can be worshipped. All communion with nondevotees of Vishnu is to be carefully eschewed.

But all this notwithstanding Sree Chaitanya preferred the system of Madhva to that of Sree Ramanuja. Sree Madhva accepts the worship of the Cow-Boy of Braja as the Supreme Object of all worship. The Leela of Krishna is assigned a secondary place in the scheme of Sree Ramanuja. This is the most fundamental difference. It is due to the fact that Sree Ramanuja according to Sree Madhva and His followers, does not insist with sufficient emphasis the point of eternal and significant difference between the Supreme Lord and the jeeva. According to Sree Madhva the jeeva is a dissociated constituent of the Supreme Lord. By deference to the forms of Logic Sree Ramanuja is careful to point out the distinction and non-distinction that separates and unites the jeeva with Godhead. This appears to the followers of Madhva to be liable to be misunderstood by atheists who identify jeeva with Godhead. Madhva is emphatic on this point. He insists on the distinction between the jeeeva and Godhead as forming the only basis of all relationship between the two.

The system of Madhva is thus directly opposed to that of the exclusive Monists like Sree Sankaracharya. The essential feature of the religion of spiritual service of the Divinity consists in this that the service itself is the eternal natural function of the individual soul as its acceptance is that of the Divinity. The individual soul can never be recipient of any service by his own nature. The Personality of the Guru, as Guru, is identical with that of Godhead as the only Teacher. No jeeva as jeeva can be the teacher of the Word of Godhead. The principle is also recognised by Sree Ramanuja in his classification of jeeva. There is distinction between the eternal servants of the Supreme Lord and other jeevas who are liable to fall into the clutches of the Deluding Potency, in the phraseology of Sree Chaitanya. This distinction is stated but not fully developed by Sree Ramanuja. The activity of the Divine Potencies ensuring the eternal difference of function between the jeeva and Godhead and the conception of jeeva himself as being of the nature of an infinitesimal particle of the Divine Potency Proper, are more fully brought out in the system of Sree Chaitanya. In this most important respect the dualism of Madhva is nearer the mark than the distinctive Monotheism of Sree Ramanuja.

The Guru is Godhead Himself. There is no distinction of category between the Guru and the Supreme Lord but only one of function. The Guru is Godhead manifesting Himself as His Own Servant. Service of Sree Guru is, therefore, identical with the service of Godhead. The jeeva cannot serve Godhead by his own right. The dissociated particle of Power cannot serve the Master of Power except as a subservient of Power. The Guru is Master of Power in the Role of Power for bestowing subserviency to Power. The Guru manifests Himself in and through His pure devotees. The pure devotees are the associated counterparts of the Guru. All this is implied by the system of Sree Ramanuja in one way and by that of Sree Madhva in a slightly different manner. There is no essential difference between those two systems but only a competition of love for unambignous exposition of their common position as advocating the exclusive and eternal transcendental service of the Supreme Lord Vishnu Who is Same as Krishna.

Both systems condemn the point of view of Monism which is the worst form of atheism. The plank of all Monistic philosophy, represented in current Hinduism by Sree Sankara, is absolute indentity between jeeva and the Ultimate located beyond all perception and conception as an inexpressible non-animate Singular Entity. This is bound to be the seemingly logical conclusion of empiric Logic seeking to build a theory of the Absolute with the materials of our present defective sense experience. In contradiction to this the system of Ramanuja taking its stand on the evidence of the revealed theistic Scriptures points to the existence of a concrete spiritual realm which is inaccessible to our present senses and to which our souls belong by their true super-mundane nature. That on this transcendental spiritual plane the soul has no other function than the exclusive service of the Divinity by actual direct spiritual communion. But both the spiritual realm as well as this mundane world are categorically distinct from the Divinity by Whose will alone they can be operative. The system of Madhva takes care to insist on the eternal nature of the serving function and condemns the view that there can be a more ultimate position. By His Declaration of the inconceivable transformability of Divine Power Sree Chaitanya demolishes the non-Distinctive Monistic position by furnishing the complete exposition of the function of the jeeva on the mundane plane as well as in the realm of the Absolute.

Sree Vyasa-Puja Homage.

(On the occasion of the fifty-eighth anniversary of the most auspicious Advent of my Divine Master Om Vishnupad Paramahansaparibrajakacharya Sree Sreemad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj.)

My most affectionate Divine Master,

I make my obeisance to my Divine Master who opened my eyes, sealed with the gloom of ignorance, by the spike of the collyrium of knowledge.

I make my obeisance to the Vaishnavas who fulfil all our cherished desires, who are oceans of mercy and sanctifiers of the fallen.

By the causeless mercy of the pure devotees who are the eternal associates of my Divine Master I obtained the refuge of the Lotus Feet of my Divine Master on the most memorable day of my remembered existence, a little over five years ago. It has never been possible for me since then to distinguish between the mercy of my Divine Master and that of His associates. I have always felt them to be identical, but the mercy of the latter is the sure and only means of securing the mercy of the former. I repeat my firm conviction that the mercy of all His associates which is indivisible is the only means of obtaining and understanding the mercy of my Divine Master. But as His associates never permit any salutation to themselves in the presence of their Divine Master I shall not transgress against the wish of their hearts by my insufficient expression of a retationship that cannot be put into words.

My affectionate Master,

I have been accustomed ever since I found the refuge of Lotus Feet of Your Divine Grace to undertake nothing without seeking therein Your conscious guidance. I know well that no activity would be worth anything unless You have the guidance of it. The value of the guided activity is also no other than the guided activity itself. But although I have always been accustomed to invoke Your guidance at the outset of every undertaking I have received the real response only when I have had the privilege of acting by the advice of Your associates.

The recipient of your Grace alone knows that no one can really deserve it by any previous merit of his own. Those persons who confound merit with spiritual deserving can understand neither You nor your associates' ways. One is made deserving of your Grace in and by the process of being delivered by Your causeless mercy. Therefore qualifications and disqualifications are alike and rightly ignored by Your associates in pressing the claims of seemingly the most undeserving persons to Your gracious acceptance.

My most affectionate Master,

But all this notwithstanding there is really such a thing as obstructive hypocrisy. There are persons who are hypocritically determined on principle not to listen to the advice of your associates nor act in accordance with the same even when they know that it is for their benefit. This is the really dangerous form of the vice and the only thing that shuts out all chance of redemption.

This is so because the recipient of Your Grace has to be a consenting party. Full consent is not expected under the circumstances. But deliberate opposition is required to be given up. Opposition to the Truth on the part of jeeva who is by his true nature capable of being disposed to the service of the Truth, is sometimes due to want of clear knowledge or unconscious perversity engendered by habitual preference for un-Truth. Such cases of lapse are not altogether incurable.

But as the conditioned jeeva is also really capable of wilful mischoice, and as this is the original cause of his present perverse ignorance, this dangerous fibre of his composite nature must by no means be overlooked. Those who are willing to extend their sympathy indiscriminately to these persons, do more mischief than good by their exhibition of such spurious liberalism. The hypocrite is not so condemnable as the person who is disposed to overlook absolute distinctions by deliberately refusing to have a clear perception of the end they ought to have in view. In the quest of the Absolute it is not given us to be able to succeed by the method of malicious bungling which is supposed by its employers to be sometimes efficacious in this world of delusions.

It is of course possible to refuse to correct one's loose ways of thinking on the plea that it has never been possible for man to arrive at a unanimous decision on any subject. Persons who are so disposed on principle, supposing it to be real liberalism to remain unconvinced, should not be allowed the free hand they desire in the matter. They are stubborn atheists whose crooked want of love for the Absolute Truth need not make us their lovers. These are the obstructive forms of hypocrisy. Unless a determined attempt is made from the very beginning to oppose and eschew all connections with the professor of such views it is never possible to attain to the real service of the Absolute.

My most affectionate Divine Master,

I pray at Your Lotus Feet for the disposition of this absolute repugnance for the un-Truth and all followers of the un-Truth and equally absolute sympathy for all followers of the Truth of all grades. I now know by Your Grace that it is absolutely necessary to be at least on the Path if any substantive progress is to be achieved. I also know that the Path is identical with the Absolute and that those who show the least disposition for compromise on this vital issue have no love for the service of the Absolute.

My Divine Master,

You are the rock on which we have built all our prospects and present activities. You are the support, we are only the supported. Those who seek Your absolute support are fully incorporated with Yourself. No external association can bring any person to the plane of Your genuine associates. But even so those who choose to follow You, for any purpose except that of opposing the activities of Yourself and Your bona-fide associates, are sure to reap the supreme benefit of association with the devotees of the Absolute. The only danger against which we ought to be on our guard is conscious and unconscious hostility to Yourself and Your associates. I pray in all humility for the disposition that automatically saves from this dire offence.

My most affectionate Master,

You know everything. It is not possible for me to know everything. I can and need only know what it is necessary for me to know for understanding your purpose in regard to myself. I pray to you for the loyal disposition that is content with the measure of your Grace that may be vouchsafed to me as one among your accepted followers and which is in a position to realise the unequalled nature of your mercy in the same.

My affectionate Master,

May I have no fear in serving you without any reserve whatsoever. May I never enquire about your dispositions for to morrow except in regard to any part that concerns me. May I be disposed to know my part unreservedly from You and Your associates. May I be enabled to know that You forgive before You are prayed to for forgiveness and that You are equally forgiving even when You do not seem to forgive. May I never have the disposition to oppose You and Your associates in inconceivable purposes by my clamorous insignificance.

My affectionate Master,

May I have absolutely no fear either for the present or for the future. That is entirely Your look-out. May I always have perfect faith in Your absolute guidance. Those who know the real nature of Your guidance also know that the only thing needful is to seek spontaneously what is, as a matter of fact, eternally and causelessly offered to all entities. They do not want anything that does not already exist in the fullest measure. They only want the disposition to seek it of their own accord.

One may lose sight of You in two ways. One may wish to avert his face from You in order not to see You. One may also wish to see You but may not be blessed with Your sight. One who does not wish to see You is not, however left to himself. He also sees You, not as You really are, but as he wishes You to appear to him. What such a person actually sees is not really Yourself but Your deluding face. But he has no organs by which he may enter into relationship with Your deluding aspect. He has accordingly to be given by Yourself suitable organs for cultivating his aversion to You. That is his intention and also his realisation. But You love him so well that You cannot afford to forego his love.

My most affectionate Master,

You are no poorer by missing the love of those who do not wish to love You at all. But they are certainly poor by missing their love for You. Their higher nature is left without sustenance by ceasing to love You. The spiritual body of the jeeva is subjected to unimaginable miseries by being thus deprived of every nourishment and being deluded into swallowing earth and stone in lieu of food into the bargain ; because the eternal service of the Absolute Truth is the very life of the soul in the state of his native purity as a particle of perfect cognition. The case of the soul in the conditioned state is verily like that of a person who is possessed by a vampire whom he hugs to his bosom but who can live only on the life-blood of her infatuated victim whom she also hates with all the hideous fury of her diabolical nature.

To turn one's face away from the Source of all enlightenment is to court the tender mercies of the vampire who by means of the physical body and mind sucks the life-blood of our soul by deluding us into the strange infatuation that the physical body and mind require to be nourished by a perennial supply of sensuous enjoyment by the abuse of the faculties of the soul in the interest, but really for the utter ruin of the soul. It is this sad condition, into which we choose to place ourselves with full knowledge of the inevitable to spite all the contrivances of the Source of all good, that instead of exciting the Master only calls forth the most exquisite manifestations of His causeles mercy.

My most affectionate Divine master,

But there is also another way of losing sight of you. One may wish to see You but may not be blessed with Your sight for all his striving. In this world it is not possible to see You with our physical and mental resources that are made to prevent Your sight. But it is possible by Your causeless mercy to be miserable by missing Your sight. This realisation is thereupon fostered by all the entities of this world so that what was a source of forgetfulness of You becomes by Your matchless grace the potent means of feeding the wholesome misery of utter separation from You.

As soon as this realisation is attained there is found to exist an interminable series of activities towards every entity of this world. The object of these activities is to be thereby enabled to serve in the spirit One Who is inconceivable by the mind. You are no doubt visible to me in a certain mysterious way even now when my spiritual eye still continues to retain its worldly bondage. But it is now like looking at the reality through the speckled glasses that are always persuading me to the admission that You are really an ordinary mortal being like myself. The proceses has its obvious disadvantages. It is very easy to be persuaded that You are a mortal being and to treat You accordingly without being able to feel any anomaly. It is not less easy to suppose that I myself, meaning my present state, am also a pure soul and on the same level of existence with Yourself. These are no doubt very serious disadvantages and may produce the most fatal results if we are not on our guard against their insidious approaches.

But there are advantages that more than make up for the difficulties. It is only now possible for us to listen to Your words from Your own lips. Your words never deceive. It is also practicable to behave correctly towards You by the direction of Your own words. Thus relationship is established with You on Your own plane invisibly to ourselves. It is also possible for the same reason to have now a use for all entities of this world in the way that will have a reference to Your actual service.

My most affectionate Master,

There is yet another advantage of a most extraordinary nature. No person who is inimically disposed to You can be an associate in these activities. He is automatically left out. It is not, therefore, a mixed service that is rendered to You by conditioned souls who are the recipients of Your mercy. The spiritual is never amalgamated with the material. They are related to one another as light and darkness. There are gradations as one moves towards or away from the Source of light. But the Source of light cannot be approached by the resources of darkness.

As soon as one has his face turned towards the Source of light his activities automatically take him nearer the Source. Such activities are wholly beneficial. The activities of a person who is moving away from the Source of light are altogether unwholesome. It is one's bounden duty to eschew all relationship with such a person. There can be nothing in common between two persons who are moving towards opposite points of the compass. Whenever they meet they are bound to clash against one another. If they do not clash then it only shows that one of them must have been made to adopt the direction of the other. But,—as the power of the persons moving towards the Source of all power by the spontaneous attraction of the Source is bound to prevail over any opposition from the other who is under the centrifugal impulse,—the activities of Your accepted followers are entirely for the good of the world even though they sometimes seem to clash against the most cherished interests of the latter.

My most affectionate Master.

This world, therefore, is fit to be the plane of activity of Your followers as of Yourself with this all-important difference that whereas You are the Essence of the Plenary Spiritual Power of the Divinity having no affinity with the condemned mundane Potency which has no control over You and can not share Your Divine Nature with Your eternal associates; we, conditioned souls, are enabled by Your causeless mercy to find the very conditions that otherwise fetter us, transformed into the only means of progressing towards the service of the Divinity by Your protection and guidance even during our sojourn in this world. I am in a position to make use of this bold language due to my slight experience of association with Your accepted followers made available to me by Your causeless grace. It is for this reason that it is necessary for all to seek Your mercy for the purpose of performing our duty properly towards all entities of this world.

My most affectionate Divine Master,

It is in the above manner that there has been made available for mere sincere asking, the pirceless boon of spiritual association with the recipients of the mercies of Yourself and Your eternal associates for all conditioned souls who are debarred from spiritual living by the insuperable obstacle offered by the physical body and limited mind. Those who choose to be guided by You and Your eternal associates have their eyes turned towards the Source of light and for this reason there is no clash of interests in their society.

It is this spiritual society with open doors for all that You have made manifest to the view of all persons in this most sceptical of all the ages. I pray s Your Lotus Feet on this most auspious occasion of the anniversary of our Advent, in all sincerity that my resent nature is capable of, that I may e enabled by Your grace to progress owards the purpose. You have in iew in regard to me by submissive asso-ation with Your eternal associates and iscriminating association with those ho profess to serve unconditionally you nd your eternal associates, I pray to e enabled to realise by your Grace that he submissive association with your ternal associates is not interruptible by ny mundane obstruction. I pray to e endowed with the saving judgment hat I may cherish for your associates or all eternity, by Your grace, only the elationship of my unconditional suborination to them and may never aspire o be either their equal or superior.

Iay I never forget that it is only by dmitting unreservedly their eternal uperiority to myself that I can be orthy of me practising my uncondi-ional submission to your Lotus Feet in ccordance with my profession made when I sought entry into the society of the brotherhood of your followers.

My most affectionate Master,

In offering this homage of my soul to your Lotus Feet I have sought inspiration from the mercy of the pure devotees who are your eternal followers and who always teach me how to serve you by placing before me their transcendental conduct not for my imitation because it is inimitable by mortals like myself but for providing the ideal which I am to follow and by following realise the nature of your bonafide service after I am relieved of this mortal coil.

May your Divine Grace out of your causeless mercy be pleased to accept my most unworthy offering and by Your gracious acceptance prevent the offence that is otherwise unavoidable and impart to me that purity of loving judgment by which I can remain ever attached to the Divine Support of Your Lotus Feet.

With innumerable prostrated obeisances to the Lotus Feet of Your Divine Grace I beg to subscribe myself.

YOUR DIVINE GRACE'S MOST UNWORTHY SERVANT,

Narayandas Adhikari

BHAKTISUDHAKAR BHAKTISHASTRI.

The Serpent Kaliya.

THERE is a beautiful lake of very sweet water in the Yamuna which bears the name of Kaliya. This lake happened to be infested by a most venomous Serpent from whom the lake derives its name. On a certain day while the cow-boys of Braja were out pasturing their calves on the wooded banks of the Yamuna they happened to feel thirsty and not knowing that the water of the lake had been poisoned by Kaliya drank of its water which resulted in their instantaneous death. On being apprised of their plight Krishna came to the spot and restored them to life.

Thereafter Krishna got down into the lake with the intention of sporting in its water. This enraged the hideous monster who forthwith came out of the depths of the lake in the company of his adherents and fell upon Krishna coiling Him up in their great hoods for Kaliya was a thousand-hooded Serpent and his brood were equally formidable.

Thus attacked by Kaliya with his whole brood Krishna appeared to faint away under their murderous onslaught. On seeing Him apparently slain by His enemies the cow-boys and all the assembled milkmen filled the air with their loud lamentations. But Krishna soon showed that He was quite safe and He forthwith climbed up the hoods of Kaliya and began to dance on his thousand heads. He danced in an infinite variety of the most marvellous of figures. The pressure of Krishna's Feet crushed the towering pride of the myriad-hooded monster. Kaliya lowered his hoods and vomited blood. But the Dance of Krishna did not cease. Kaliya was found tottering towards death when his wives came out of the lake and with palms joined in prayer begged Krishna to spare the life of their husband. The prayers of the wives of Kaliya who had faith in Krishna moved the Son of Nanda to have mercy on Kaliya. Krishna now desisted from His terrific Dance on condition that Kaliya was to quit the lake at once and to betake himself to his original home in the island of Ramanaka Krishna gave him His assurance that Garuda would now do him no harm as he would respect the print of His Feet on hoods of Kaliya. The water of the Kaliya lake was now rendered immune from all poison and became as sweet as it was before the advent of Kaliya.

The taming of Kaliya is one of the Brindaban Pastimes of Boy-Krishna. Kaliya is the type of cunning and malice. He is the embodiment of unrelenting cruelty. There is no place for Kaliya in the happy realm of Braja. Deceit and cruelty are as poison to the artless loving nature of the denizens of Braja. It is quite conceivable for the confiding chums of Krishna not to entertain any suspicion regarding the malicious intention of cruel and deceitful persons whose purpose is to poison them against Krishna. They may even unwittingly fall into the counsel of such evil persons. But Krishna is sure to rescue His Own from the wiles of His enemy.

Nay Krishna has also a plan for curing the evil propensity of Kaliya himself. The process consists in making him feel the touches of His Dancing Feet. But Kaliya attempts to bear up against all curative chastisement. Instead of feeling the joy of supporting the Feet of Krishna on his nasty hoods the monster finds it impossible to bear his good fortune without undergoing the pangs of actual death. Even the loyal wives of Kaliya who desire the reformation of the monster and whose good wishes for his well-being are the cause of Krishna's mercy towards him are at last forced to intercede by a prayer for his banishment from the realm of Braja. But the pride of Kaliya had received a mortal check.

The banishment of Kaliya from the lake of the Yamuna has a most important spiritual significance. Those who have a purpose to create trouble among the pure devotees of Krishna by infecting their nature with their own malicious disposition meet with a certain degree of initial success in their nefarious undertaking. This emboldens them to make a direct attack on Krishna Himself when He appears on the scene of their depraved activities in order to restore the living faith of His Own bonafide associates.

Those who are not exceedingly clever can never be servants of Krishna. But the service of Krishna is also never available to those whose cunning is employed for depriving Krishna of the fullness of His enjoyment. Kaliya and those who are actuated by a naturally malicious disposition are also styled clever in the ordinary phraseology of this damned world. Such rascals may also have the impudence of taking their stand upon the texts of the Scriptures for using their cunning in the graceless attempt of depriving Krishna of the service of His Own. This kind of conduct may also pass undetected and may even be regarded as possessing the perfect skill of confidential service. But Krishna is sure to expose the real nature of the villainy just at the moment when it has been successful in misleading His best-beloved ones.

It is, indeed, very difficult to understand the Ways of Krishna. Krishna apparently permits almost every form of offence to be perpetrated with impunity against His most beloved ones. This has the effect of providing an opportunity to His Own for proving their incomparable love for Himself and by means of this unique exhibition of their love to defeat in the most fruitful manner the machinations of His worst enemies. The friends and chums of Krishna are offered to the malice of cunning and relentless brutes in order to bring out the difference between the two and thereby enable the latter to desist from troubling the devotees of their own accord.

But these brutes are never allowed to associate with the servants of Krishna even after they forego their malice towards them. They are eternally debarred from the service of Krishna in Braja. But the touch of Krishna's Feet makes a real difference between the recipient of His mercy and the other brutes. Kaliya is no longer regarded by Garuda as the enemy of Krishna. Kaliya is, therefore, allowed a place among the protected of Krishna.

It does not follow that it is a paying business to poison the hearts of His servants against Krishna which is sure to be rewarded by the grant of His protection. Yes, this is so after the pride of the miscreant is thoroughly broken by being trod upon by Krishna Himself. He is thereby inspired with a most wholesome dread which effectively prevents him from trying to breed mischief among the bonafide devotees by owning an unwilling allegiance to Krishna and assuming the badge of His servitude by wearing on his head the print of His lotus Feet.

The mercy shown to Kaliya is so obviously and disproportionately great in its magnitude in face of the extreme gravity of his offence that no rationalistic explanation can do justice to its full beneficent significance.

Restoration of Tirtha Sree Braja-mandal

A project for the circumambulation of the Holy Sphere of Braja has been under contemplation of the Editor for some time past. It has given rise to the need for propaganda for enlightening the public regarding the real nature of the function.

The doctrine of Tirtha or place possessing spiritual sanctity or, rather, sanctifying efficacy, is probably the common property of all the great Religions. The functions, such as pilgrimage to and circumambulation of Tirthas, are closely associated with the above doctrine. Places connected with the Activities of the Divinity and His devotees are considered to possess special sanctifying power. The Sphere of Braja is connected with the Early Career of Sree Krishna. The Braja-Leela of Sree Krishna forms the central topic of Srimad Bhagabat which, according to Sree Chaitanya, contains the teachings of all the Scriptures in their only unambiguous form.

The tradition of the Appearance of Godhead in this mundane world is recorded in the old Scriptures of this country. These Divine Descents are infinite in number. An infinitesimal portion of Their Activities alone has been handed down by the Scriptures. The Scriptural Account is therefore, by no means exhaustive. But the narrative of the Doings of the Divinity possesses the distinguishing quality of the One Indivisible Absolute Truth. One particle of such narrative, therefore, possesses the living potentiality of disclosing the whole Truth.

The very abundance of the revealed literature of this country has given rise to lack of proper interest in the subject both among the people of the country and foreign students of religious history, for different and diverse reasons. The people of India to this day continue to cherish their Scriptural records with a deep and manifest reverence. The Hindus still claim to be guided in the minutest activities of their ordinary daily life by the teachings of the Scriptures. They have been accustomed to do so from time immemorial. The customs themselves, according to our best available testimony, have not been materially different for at least the last two millenniums either in spirit or form from what they are at the present day. This has bred the natural and universal disposition on the part of the people to their mechanical acceptance. This is not by any means an irrational attitude if we care to remember that the principles underlying those customs have not lacked very careful and exhaustive consideration at the hands of a wonderfully gifted body of theological exponents during the long past with the result that the average person in India is in a better position to follow a theological argument of any real value than most persons in another country.

For one thing the Indian mind is accustomed to reject mechanically any proposition that aims solely at a mundane result. In the same way any proposal that makes any reference to Godhead is listened to with a patient reverence by young and old who consider the act of listening itself as a sufficient reward irrespective of any gain for the intellect. Towards a religious discourse the average Indian never seeks to excercise his critical instinct. All this is highly favourable to the reception of the Absolute Truth appearing on the lips of the bonafide Teacher. It also provides that perfect atmosphere of unprejudiced attentiveness on the part of one's hearers which is so necessary for being enabled to deliver the message of the Absolute.

The Indians revere the Sphere of Braja where Sree Krishna displayed to the view of humanity the Divine Activities of His Early Career. They mechanically perform the pilgrimage to the holy sites in the land of Braja sanctified by those Divine Events. They ask no questions, nor do they ever consider that it is necessary to know more than they do or what they will hear during the actual performance of the journey from their guides and associates. They are certainly liable to be cheated and misled often to their utter ruin. But only for preventing this possibility no Indian will consent to any radical change of their mentality in regard to the Absolute. The Indian is told by his Scriptures that the Tirtha derives its sanctity from the presence of the devotees of Godhead and their presence is guarantee against all real misadventure.

This leads to the question of the continual renewal of the sanctifying power of the Tirthas themselves by the presence of the sadhus. If no sadhu visits the Tirtha for a time then its sanctifying efficacy tends to become dormant. The sadhu knows whether a Tirtha is in the dormant condition or not. When Sree Nityananda made his pilgrimages to all the holy Tirthas of the country he found that Krishna was not to be found at any one of those places. Those Tirthas had been deserted by Godhead. In this Iron Age all Tirthas are said to have lost their efficacy. This must be evident to all impartial observers. The Tirthas are now the haunts of a large number of persons who possess a very questionable character. Add to this the fact that the reputation of Tirthas for possessing the power to cleanse from sin, leads many persons to visit the places to get rid of the effects of most heinous offences. It is said by the Scriptures that the presence of these great sinners tend to pollute even the sanctity of these holy places. Many confirmed sinners make it a point of merit to settle down at these holy place to a life of avowed sinfulness in the hope that even the immoralities committed at the holy places have a sanctifying power. In the Kali Age all the Tirthas have for these reasons become the meeting places of the most unrepentant sinners. There is no wonder, therefore, that Sree Nityananda Prabhu did not find Krishna at any of those holy places. There were, indeed, the thrones of Krishna but those seats were all vacant.

The visit of Sree Nityananda to the Tirthas was the precursor of the Visit of the Supreme Lord Himself to those places. Nityananda had been told by certain extraordinarily well-informed persons whom he had put the question regarding the whereabouts of Krishna that He was at Nabadwip. The Lord was then to be found at only one place in this world viz, at Nabadwip. From Nabadwip the Lord visited almost all the Tirthas of the country as a sannyasin. He is said to have restored the Tirthas of Sree Brajamandal by the agency of Sree Sanatan Goswami. Have these activities of the Divinity made any perceptible change in the character of those places? To an external observer the contrary of this seems to be the case. Both Nabadwip and Brindaban head the list of the Tirthas for their notoriety as resorts of all the immoral persons of the country. Those inhabitants of the Tirthas who wear the garb of sadhus are regarded with no less suspicion by the laity in respect of their sinful propensities.

What then, it may be asked, is really meant by the process of restoration of the Tirthas if by its means they are not made safe and clean places? It is not contended that there are no religious persons at all at those holy places. Although when Nityananda did not find Krishna at any of those places it certainly means that not a single sadhu was to be found anywhere in spite of the countless hosts of persons in the garb of sadhus who have always been found to infest those places for exploiting the charity of the numerous, well-to-do pilgrims.

Historically speaking we find that something was done by the famous Six Goswamins for restoring the splendour of Sree Brindaban by the construction of number of lofty temples which are the oldest edifices of the place to this day. There were no buildings worthy of the name at Brindaban when those temples were built. But there was the old tradition at the place that it had been the Scene of the Activities of Sree Krishna. Sree Chaitanya was shown all the holy sites by the cicerones during His Visit to the country in 1513 (?) A D. It is, therefore, possible for the local tradition to survive even when the Tirtha lies dormant. Sree Chaitanya did not re-identify the historic sites. This was not necessary as the old sites were already well-known.

The construction of the temples certainly added to the fame of the Tirthas and led to a larger influx of pilgrims. This is also responsible for the subsequent settlement of the suspicious characters in the garb of Vairagis and the almost open debaucheries that are practised by certain sections of so-called holy men and women in these days. The teachings of Sree Chaitanya and the Six Goswamins are now utterly neglected at the very shrines which had been set up for their practice. And in place of those teachings and practices one finds the prevalence of the very evils which it had been the purpose of their founders to cure by their means. Is the Divinity less powerful than the Principle of Evil ?

It is rank superstition that chooses to regard any place or entity of this mundane world as possessing any spiritual value. It is sheer contradiction in terms. The mundane is the denial of the spiritual. The sadhu has an eye for the spiritual. Sree Braja-mandal, the real Divine Realm, is never any earthly place or country. Nevertheless there is such a thing as the apparent use of the entities of this world by the sadhu who is the whole-time servant of Godhead. Why has the sadhu anything at all to do with the things of this world ? Can any mundane entity have any spiritual use ? Ambitious empiricists are always knocking at the portals of the Absolute for the right of entry there earned by worldly merit. Pseudo-sadhus are similarly crowding into the holy Tirthas by right of their garb and professing to be able to show others the way into the Realm of the Absolute by methods which no mortal man can understand. All this makes the confusion doubly confounded and one is apt to lose real sight of the issue.

For one thing it is necessary to shake off all lingering belief, if one is inclined to have any, that the Divine Realm of Braja cannot be reached by any human contrivance whatsoever. Neither can it be reached by simply donning the garb of a sadhu or by following mechanically or with honest faith the instructions of any person who has no access to the Absolute. The Scriptures give no direct help in the matter. The Scriptures are as much mundane to the uninitiated as the Sphere of Braja.

Can the Realm of the Absolute be reached by the practice of morality without reference either to sadhu or the Scriptures? If I am loyal, truthful, kind-hearted, charitable, possess control over the animal passions, if I am intelligent, well-informed, without prejudice, open to conviction and accustomed to act up to my convictions at a sacrifice of labour and comforts, etc., etc., will it follow as a matter of course that Godhead will be pleased to disclose to me all the secrets of the Universe? In other words will these qualifications, which lead to success in worldly undertakings, be of similar efficacy in obtaining for me access to the Absolute? The answer is obvious. These qualities are certainly calculated to lead to conceivable worldly results and their success in such matters is perfectly intelligible. But is there any reason for expecting from them an effect which is not intended nor, as a matter of fact, at all conceivable to our present understanding? Neither morality nor immorality can ever lead to the Absolute but on the contrary both of them can only lead to very definitely calculable worldly results.

When, therefore, a rascal in the garb of a sadhu tells me that an immoral course can, in a manner that is unintelligible to me, lead to the Realm of the Absolute he is calculating on my credulity or ambitious instinct for making me a victim of his perfectly non-spiritual purpose which it is my clear duty to be able to avoid and it is no less my duty to all persons to expose the rascality that is hidden under the garb of the sadhu.

When the Scriptures tell us that the Absolute is not accessible to our present understanding they certainly do not intend that we are not to make the fullest use of our present faculties that is available to us. They, however, tell us that by no manner of use of our present faculties we can legitimately expect to have access to the Absolute. This is so self-evident. Why then are we invited to undertake the pilgrimage to Sree Brajamandal? As it is clearly only a mundane performance so far as I am concerned it can only lead to a mundane result. Even if I admit for the sake of argument that the country can at all be the Scene of Divine Activities even in an unintelligible sense how can I also not admit that it has produced no other but a mundane effect on me with whatever purpose I have chosen to tread its holy soil for numberless times, if such is, indeed, the fact?

But if I shift the appeal from the land to the person can you not agree to listen to what the sadhu has got to say ? But who, indeed, is the sadhu to whom one is asked to listen ? There is a real answer to this question. One who talks of nothing else except the Absolute is the sadhu. It is possible for a person, if he is not disposed to be unduly prejudiced, to be able to follow the discourse on the Absolute. Such a person must not, however, commit himself to take anything on trust or to do anything that he cannot approve. It will, of course, be necessary to exercise full patience in order to be able to pick up the vocabulary of an entirely different plane.

Yes, all this is reasonable. But has this any connection with the call to join the circumambulation of the land of Braja as a function that is worth while from the rationalistic point of view ? Has the country about Mathura in itself got any spiritual efficacy ? Why should not the same result follow if I listen to the sadhu at some other locality ?

The two things are not exactly identical. Suppose you are introduced to this world for the purpose of picking up by direct perception what you are told by your teacher. It would be very easy for you to do so on account of your actual proximity to the objects that you are asked to observe. This world is not a figment of your imagination. It has got its own distinct subjective existence. So it is quite conceivable for you to be in the presence of this entity by obeying the conditions that obtain in this mundane world for the actual attainment of this particular purpose. You have agreed to listen to the sadhu. Your hearing faculty is a mundane thing. You do not object to make use of it. It is the purpose of the sadhu to enable you to make the acquaintance of the Divine Realm of Braja. In the same analogous way in which your present hearing faculty is to be enabled to attain the service of the Absolute your other faculties can also be made to render their service if only in order to cure them of their wrong aptitude of intervening with their mundane suggestion.

It is, therefore, only in order to help the function of hearing the transcendental sound from the lips of the pure devotee that it is proposed to find a corresponding occupation for the other faculties. Unless one serves Sree Brajamandal it is not possible for one to get rid of obstructing perception of limited space. But if one chooses to undertake only a sight-seeing excursion to the land of Braja in pursuance of one's idle inquisitiveness regarding a mundane subject, one cannot expect to find anything else than an undesirable aggravation of mundane proclivities.

It is, of course, perfectly true that the transcendental sound is all-sufficient and a person must in all cases have recourse only to the spoken words of the sadhu for the attainment of spiritual enlightenment. During the sojourn to the land of Braja also it is only the transcendental sound that can give one even a function for the other faculties. But it is easier for a person to hear a subject that is also really present in a perceptible form to the other faculties which have a natural tendency to disturb one's attention by going after mundane objects while one is really willing to concentrate on hearing.

But it is also open to the Land of Braja to refuse to appear before the mundane senses of the conditioned soul. The sadhu alone knows whether the Divine Realm will condescend so to appear. The Divine Realm obeys only Her Lord. The restoration of the Tirtha, therefore, means nothing short of a Divine Dispensation. By the Mercy of Sree Gaursundar the Holy Realm of Braja is now really perceptible to the mundane senses of the conditioned soul by the causeless grace of the sadhu. Sree Gaursundar has made it possible for the sadhu to call the pilgrims for circumambultation of the Divine Realm of Braja by listening to his spoken words both as means and object as regards the attainment of this spiritual function. One Dispensation only helps the fulfilment of another. They never run counter to one another. No sadhu will undertake to lead the pilgrimage to a Tirtha that he knows to be inaccessible to the faculties of mortal man.

Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode reduced the physical hazards of the pilgrimage to the land of Braja by his pacification of the Kanjhars who used to rob and murder the unwary pilgrims most systematically. But this act of the sadhu did not dispense with the necessity of performing the pilgrimage under the guidance of a bona fide devotee. The pseudo-sadhus are far more dangerous to the pilgrim to the Divine Realm than any brigands of this world. It was better that there were fewer pilgrims to the land of Braja through fear of the Kanjhars than that the number of the victims of the pseudo-sadhus should increase. Those who choose to visit the Realm of Braja under the guidance of themselves or of pseudo sadhus, commit an offence against the Realm of God either deliberately or through mere inadvertance. This short article has been penned in order to submit the teaching of the Scriptures before both classes of readers.

Madras Presidency's Homage

(MADRAS CITY CORPORATION)

Address to Sri Saraswati Goswami Maharaj

A brief but impressive function was witnessed in the 'Ripon Buildings' this afternoon the 29th. January, '32 when the City Corporation presented an address of welcome to Paramahansa Sri Srimad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj.

Councillors were present in large numbers as also a number of ratepayers and disciples of the Swamiji.

Mr. T. S. Ramaswami Aiyer, President and Mr. D. D. Warren, Comissioner, received the Swamiji at the entrance and conducted him to the Council Chamber. The Swamiji was garlanded.

Swami Anantavasudev Vidyabhusan a disciple of the Swamiji, gave a prayer song, after which the President read the address and presented it to Swamiji enclosed in a casket.

The address which was brief and extended a cordial welcome to Swamiji stated :—

"You have distinguished yourself not only as a religious teacher of profound learning in the several branches of theistic philosophy, but also as a practical reformer engaged in various activities for the universal welfare. While you are looked up to with reverence by thousands of your religious persuasion as a religious preceptor of rare erudition, you have maintained a lofty unsectarian outlook on life and on the many problems affecting our country. Your visit has been hailed with delight in our city as an event of great importance. We hope you will carry with you pleasant recollections of your visit to our city. In conclusion we pray that your laudable efforts in the religio-social and educational fields may be crowned with success and that you may be blessed with a long life full of love to all."

Reply

The Editor in replying, spoke as follows :—

My loving friends,—I deem it a great favour that you show this afternoon appreciative sympathy for an insignificant soul like me who have had the only ambition of serving you with a whole heart. The great Corporation you represent, constituted with generous and lofty-minded city-fathers like you has no doubt encouraged me by this cordial welcome. Worthy as you are, you look upon every individual of my calibre as an altruist ; but my feeble endeavours are not quite fit for your kind reception. By following the higher and the highest altruists I find, the principal criterion in them is the God-loving spirit which is as it should be, respected by both civic administrators and the administered.

My connection with you as a visitor has amply been remunerated by your wonted generosity. I will surely carry the present happy recollection wherever I go and as long as I live. The altruistic mood which I in my feeble attempt find you though meant for the service of, and love for human beings specially of this metropolis will, I hope, ever tend to terminate in the fullest service of Godhead whose conciliatory parts do represent the lives of human beings.

My experience in my humble but honest endeavours in religio-social service and theistic education has impressed me that all our attempts should terminate in the Fountain Head Who is the only Regulator of our versatile mentality.

Civic regulations and enterprises may mean for temporal happiness of every individual of your city who receives your co-operation as a citizen; but I cherish it the permanent need of us all to engage all our activities in the Eternal Sustainer I mean the Personality of Godhead.

In fine, I offer my hearty thanks for the kind sympathy and high honour you have shown to me.

The councillors were then introduced to the Swamiji, after which the gathering broke up.

MIDDLE PART

81 The sannyasin said "I wish to beg for an alms",
The parent of Nityananda answered,
"Be it as thou wish'st".

82 The sannyasin said, "I am going on a pilgrimage ;
I have no good Brahmana to keep me company.

83 "This eldest boy of yours
Do thou give to me as companion for some days.

84 "I will cherish him more than my life ;
He will see all the holy places by different methods".

85 On hearing the words of the sannyasin
the pure good Brahmana
Was stricken with a great anxiety and sorrow in his mind.

86 "It is, indeed, my life that the sannyasin has begged ;
But I think I lose all if I do not give.

87 "In the olden days all great men have given
Their lives to the mendicants with joy.

88 "His Son Ramachandra was the Life of Dasharatha ;
In those ancient times Biswamitra begged to have Him as alms.

89 "Although the king did not live after being bereft of Rama,
Yet did he give,—so says the Purana.

90 "It is the very same thing that has happened to myself this day ;
Krishna save me in this great crisis of my soul's trial".

91 Providentially it is the very same party, how can the mind be not the same ?
Or why else was Lakshmana born in his house ?

92 Pondering thus the Brahmana went up to his consort ;
And unto her he narrated all the details.

93 On hearing him the loyal wife, mother of the world,
Said, "That which is your wish is also mine, my lord".

94 Then the father of Nityananda came back to the sannyasin,
And, bending low his head, gave his son to the mendicant.

95 The good sannyasin went away taking with him Nityananda ;
In this manner Nityananda left his home.

96 No sooner was Nityananda gone than Hadai Pandit,
The Brahmana, fell prostrate on the ground in a swoon.

97 Who will describe the weeping and lamentations,
Stone and wood were rent hearing the same.

98 By the mellow quality of his serving mood
He became distracted and was like a dead thing ;
The people said, "Hado Ojha has turned mad".

99 For the space of three months he did not taste any food ;
His life was preserved by the power of Chaitanya.

100 Why does the Lord leave one who is so loving !
Such is the inconceivable intimate mood of Vishnu and the Vaishnavas.

101 Abandoning His mother, Devahuti, whose husband had already left her,
Lord Kapila went away from home with a tranquil mind.

102 Abandoning such a Vaishnava father as Vyasa
Shuka went away without once turning back his face.

103 Abandoning to her solitary home such a mother as Sachi
The Jewel of sannyasins left the world, quite unperturbed.

104 Such renunciation, in the cause of the supreme good, is never desertion ;
It is only rarely that some great soul can grasp the meaning of it.

105 All these pastimes are for the deliverance of the Jeeva ;
May the hardest wood be rent by listening to this.

106 It was a case like that of His father after he lost Sree Ramachandra.
By hearing which even the Yavana sheds copious tears.

107 In this manner after renouncing his home Nityananda-rai
Journeyed to the tirthas tasting the bliss of his own Divine Nature.

108 To Gaya, Kashi, Prayaga, Mathura, Dwaravati,
To the hermitage of Nara-Narayana, the magnanimous one bent his steps.

109 After visiting the home of the Buddhists he went on to the abode of Vyasa,
To Ranganatha, Setubandha and Malaya.

110 Then did the great One go to the holy city of Ananta, Traversing the solitary forests, supremely fearless.

111 He went to the Gomati, Gandaki, Sarayu, Kavery ;
He enjoyed the pastime as he roamed over Ayodhya and the Dandaka forest.

112 He journeyed to Trimalla, Benkatanatha, Sapta-Godavari,
To the seat of Mahesha, the city of Kanyaka.

113 To Reba, Mahismati, Mallatirtha, Haridwara
Where in the past, Ganga had manifested her appearance.

114 In this manner after visiting all the tirthas Nityananda-rai came back again to Mathura.

115 No one can know the holy realm of Ananta ;
He thundered as he beheld the place of his former birth.

116 Always in the mood of the child, seeking none other expression,
He played with the dust in the heart of Brindabana.

117 He did not go anywhere in quest of food ;
He rolled in the dust of Brindabana as a child.

118 No one understood his open-hearted behaviour ;
He fed on nothing but the mellow quality of Krishna.

Ourselves

Circumambulation of Sree Nabadwip-Dham The devotional function of the Annual Circumambulation of Sree Nabadwipdham was most successfully performed during March 12-19 by the devotees who assembled at Sridham Mayapur from all parts of the country. The vast concourse of the pilgrims starting from Sree Chaitanya Math in a huge samkirtana procession passed through the "Nine Islands" in due order in course of eight days under the lead of His Holiness Tridandi-swami Srimad Bhaktivivek Bharati Maharaj. Although the rush of pilgrims this year was very great on account of the lunar eclipse on the Eve of Advent of the Supreme Lord, the function passed off without untoward incident of any kind. The students of Thakur Bhaktivinode Institute offered their services as volunteers and proved of great help to the pilgrim.

Sridham Mayapur—The thirty-eighth Annual Meeting of Sree Nabadwipdhampracharini Sabha was held during March 20-22 and was attended by a very large number of devotees who had assembled from all parts of the country. The Editor presided. The Sabha met in the Natyamandir of Sree Yogapeetha on the 20th and the adjourned meetings were held on the 21st and 22nd respectively in the Avidyaharan Natyamandir of Sree Chaitanya Math. The detailed account of the meetings is given in the next issue.

Anniversary of the Advent of the Supreme Lord—The 446th Anniversary of the Advent of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna-Chaitanya was celebrated at Sreedham Mayapur, the Place of the Nativity of the Lord, on the 22nd of March on a magnificent scale by samkirtanam and discourses on Krishna by the assembled devotees under the direction of the Editor and Tridandi Sannyasi Maharajas, Brahmacharins and other members of Sree Viswa-Vaishnava Raj Sabha. The total number of pilgrims this year unprecedentedly large on account of the lunar eclipse.

Thakur Bhaktivinode Institute :—Srijukta Brajakanta Guha M. A., I. C. S., District and Sessions Judge of Krishnagar presided at the distribution of prizes to the students of Thakur Bhaktivinode Institute whichcame offon April 3. Many leading gentlemen from Krishnagar and other parts of the District were present. His Holiness Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj, Head Master of the Institute, read the Annual Report. Srijukta Rajendranath Sen M. A., I. C. S., Principal, Krishnagar College, spoke in appreciation of the high ideal of the Institution. The Editor also addressed the meeting on the necessity of bringing modern educational efforts into line with the teachings of Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya. The learned President expressed his great satisfaction regarding the management of the School and the activities of the Mission in connection with the holy place of Advent of Sree Chaitanya and thanked the authorities of the School for providing with the opportunity of visiting Sridham Mayapur which was the fulfilment of a long cherished desire.

Means of communication :—The roads to Sridham Mayapur, that are ordinarily availed by the pilgrims, viz., those from Mahesganj Railway station and from Hular Ghat, opposite Nabadwip Ghat Railway station, have been improved as regards average level and have also been provided with a bridge each so that it will now be practicable for pilgrims to reach Sridham Mayapur on land during the rainy season by both tracks. The public are thankful to the Local and the District Boards and also to Sripad Beerchandra Brahmachari of Sree Chaitanya Math who supervised the work all through, for this long-delayed improvement in the means of communication to the most sacred Tirtha of all Bengal. We hope that the District Board of Nadia owe it to themselves, for the prestige and glory of Old Nabadwip, to carry out the project of metalling the road from Hular Ghat at an early date for rendering it practicable for traffic in motor buses and cars with Sridham Mayapur for the convenience of the great number of pilgrims and visitors who make use of the said road at all time of the year.

BRANCH MATHS :

Delhi Gaudiya Math :—The 446 Anniversary of Advent of the Supreme Lord was celebrated by a large number of devotees who assembled for the purpose in the premises of the Math at No. 13, Hanuman Road, New Delhi, on the 22nd March in the evening. Their Holinesses Srimad B. S. Giri and B. B. Ashrama Maharajas addressed the public on the occasion.

On March 23rd His Holiness Srimad Giri Maharaj delivered a most interesting lecture on "the Philosophy of the Geeta and the Philosophy of Sree Chaitanya" on the invitation of the members, at the local Hari-Sabha, on the occasion of the inauguration of the New Buildings of the Sabha. His Holiness was under the necessity of refuting the view, which had been expressed by a previous speaker who had tried to prove that the Geeta teaches the cult of "work". His Holiness offered the theistic interpretation which establishes on irrefutable evidence that the Geeta teaches the religion of spiritual service (Bhakti) of Godhead from beginning to end. This interpretation was unanimously accepted by the large audience

Amlajora Prapannashrama :—Pandit Sripad Siddhaswarup Brahmachari delivered a lecture in the premises of the Math on the 30th of March to a large gathering of the local people in course of which Brahmachariji made it clear to his hearers that the true Nature of Godhead can be realised only by the method of submissive listening to the Transcendental Sound from the lips of the bonafide sadhus. This, said Brahmachariji, is the sum and substance of the preaching of the Gaudiya Math, the only institution that stands solely for this truly liberal spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures. On the following day Brahmachariji narrated to the people the Transcendental Leela of Sree Gauranga with the help of magic lantern slides.

Their Holinesses Srimad Sagar Maharaj and Srimad Bodhayan Maharaj conducted the Annual celebrations of the Amlajora Prapannashrama, which were most successfully concluded on the 15th of April by a great Nagarsamkirtana procession and the distribution of the Mahaprasadam to all the assembled people. Lectures were delivered every evening.

Sree Gadai Gauranga Math, Baliati Dacca :—His Holiness Srimad Nemi Maharaj arrived on March 31 and is carrying on a vigorous propaganda which includes regular Nagar Samkirtana.

Propaganda

Twenty-four Parganas (Bengal) :—

His Holiness Srimad Bharati Maharaj with Sripad Siddhaswarup Brahmachari and a few other devotees paid a visit to the village of Kolsur during April 3-4. On April 3 His Holiness expounded the episode of Vasudeva and Narada from the Bhagabatam in the Temple of Sree Sree Radha Gobinda. On the next day His Holiness and Sreepad Brahmachariji addressed a very large gathering of Hindus and Muhammadans of more than a thousand persons on the subject of 'the duty of human life.'

At Belgatchia, Calcutta .—During April 14-18 Pandit Sripad Siddhaswarup Brahmachari expounded the episode of King Ambarish from the Bhagabatam at Haripremashrama Harisabha Belgatchia, on the invitation of the members of the said Sabha.

At Chinsura .—His Holiness Srimad Sagar Maharaj lectured on the subject of "The Sanatan Dharma taught and practised by the Supreme Lord" on April 9 and 10 at the Haribhaktipradayini Sabha, at Kasuabazar, Chinsura.

At Mahadoi Rupchak, Midnapur—His Holiness Srimad Bharati Maharaj expounded the Bhagabatam to great gatherings of the local people during April 14/16. The Mahapatra Mahasayas arranged the distribution of Mahaprasadam on a big scale to the assembled people on the 16th.

At Ellore Madras—Their Holiness Srimad Bon Maharaj and Srimad Sridhar Maharaj with a party of Brahmacharins reached Ellore on April 9. On the following day Their Holinesses were taken in a great samkirtana procession by the inhabitants of Vanguru in connection with the Festival of Installation of Sree Murtis in the village. On April 11 the Swamijis delivered most interesting lectures explaining the difference between the worship of Sree Vigraha and Idolatry. Srijukta Addagarla Seshayya offered to bear the cost of the erection of a shrine of the Holy Foot-prints of Sree Chaitanya Mahaprabhu at Ahobilam.

Eternal Function and Present day wants.

THE analytic process has always reigned supreme in all positive scientific research into the realm of the unknown. Our present self certainly stands in need of a searching analysis for the exact determination of its analytical composition. This is not a hopeless task as is sometimes supposed from the actual experience of widely differing views on the subject that have been almost recklessly promulgated since the very dawn of religious thought. Let us try to gather up the points of agreement that are to be found in the conclusions of the differing schools of thinkers.

None could deny the presence of certain definite insentient components forming a kind of outer structure of our present self. The organs of senses are distinguishable from the insentient components of the external tabernacle, although they are found to be incorporated with it. The organs of sense differ from one another in their functions. But the whole sentient function is definitely distinguishable from the operation of insentient matter and motion.

What then is the exact nature of the relationship between the display of the sentient function and that of the brotherhood of matter and motion which is apprehensible as insentient? The labours of analytic scrutinizers offer us the proposition which seeks to recognize a relationship of categorical distinction between spirit and matter. The molecular and electron theories, of matter no doubt seek to ignore the substantive existence of spirit apart from matter. But these materialistic theories by their refusal to recognise any but the insensate components of our present self only obstruct the process of an effective analysis by their avoidable, irrational and insistent partiality on behalf of an ab initio assumption of imperfection in the prima facie components which form the very subject that is to be analysed.

The conception of spirit is incongruously associated with matter in the purely materialistic explanations of the components of our present self. This cannot be claimed to be a satisfactory result. If the material entity is conceived as the only component of our present self and as being resolvable into the form of material energy displaying a perpetual opposition of function in the final position, may not the unsatisfactory nature of this type of solution offered by the postulation of a dominating external entity, have itself brought about a natural reaction in favour of the more harmonious conclusion offered by the counter postulation of the indominant energy inherent in the spirit striving to eliminate the incongruent association of spirit and matter constituting our present obvious self, as being the more scientific view admissible by any real analytic enquiry ? The decisive superiority of the latter method at once manifests itself. It relieves us of the necessity of subscribing to the material theories which effectively obstruct us from arriving at any all-round solution which also accommodates the sentient. It does not condemn our conception to be restricted to the barren limits of mundane space and the category of insentient movables.

As a matter of fact no materialistic mental speculation can afford us relief from the hostile invasion of finitudinal objects. Mental speculation, on the contrary, is foredoomed to recommend the exclusive of the very physical thing and their subtle abstraction, against which we seek to be protected. The ambition to seek for the amelioration of our present condition, is inherent in our actual self. But our present store of accessories is obviously inadequate for enabling us to attain the success of such ambition. So long as we choose to remain confined to the limited outlook we cannot expect any real relief. It is, indeed, this bitter experience of our actual present condition which induces us to look for a region that is really free from the invasion of any mundane inadequacy.

Such a hope is based upon the actual recognition of the existence of an immaterial entity in our present composition which naturally seeks for our spiritual freedom by the postulation of the reality of our perfect transcendental existence. Under the lead of this new hope, the method by which we proceed to achieve the determination of the self also takes an entirely new direction. We no longer listen to the empiric demands that offer to be able to fill up the gap of our knowledge of the self by our defective exploitations, with the help of the treacherous future tense. We are led to examine much more carefully the implications of the word 'eternal'. This leads to startling and revolutionary discoveries.

And after we come to know the direction of eternity, we make the serious attempt to dissociate ourselves from the temporal position. The question of eternity is then solved in its three-fold manifestive nature viz., (1) Space, (2) Time, and (3) Person.

Our initiative function speculates in different plausible ways, formulating disruptive conceptions.

Sometimes we go in for restricting our terminal point with a short-sighted suicidal policy, being accustomed to go round in our finite position. Basing our thoughts on the eternal plane we hallucinate to be elongated by identifying ourselves with the Absolute Infinity. The multiples of spans of time suit our purpose to expand the series of numerals to unending position which is quite incomprehensible. This misconception originates from the ambitious view of manifolding our infinitesimality into infinity, which is but sheer hallucination.

The positive conception of the negative space is indulged to approach the transcendental region which has already revealed to the world the fact of its possessing the maximum enrichment of imperishable, unalloyed transcendental objects, hardly admitting any anthropomorphic conception to encroach upon the transcendental plane.

But the poverty of mundane manifestations, the rigours of finitude and craving wants, do not find any place in the fullest manifestive activity of transcendence. We need not disturb ourselves with filling up our wonted wants when we can acclimatize ourselves in the eternal region of transcendence. As soon as our function is realised there we easily sever our entity from this atmosphere of wants.

When we are set free from the intransigent scope of the transitory painful limited plane, we can then identify ourselves in our eternal functions of devotion—Bhakti. This function in her full swing clears out the true vision of the Object of Devotion as well the eternal position of a transcendental Devotee, void of all wants but found normal in the region of needs. The speculative self has been found to pass like electric currents in his mental track in the regions of elevation and salvation. The pure self who can get rid of the ambitious scope of elevationists and salvationists can only regain his eternal function and can truly determine his unalloyed self who is a part and parcel of the Infinite Blissful Co-gent Potency of the Absolute. He need not flutter like a bird in a different sky where the three-fold miseries are predominant and no trace of eternity could be discerned.

The unalloyed self-determination is never transformable, being identical with the absolute manifestive Bliss, void of all imperfections. We all consider ourselves quite unfortunate if we engage in secular engagements in the region of wants, instead of in an eternal life with our eternal reciprocal function, which is called "Devotion" to the Absolute in our present language in preference to an engagement as lords assuming the predominating aspect over the predominated.

This healthy view is to be imparted through the agency of unalloyed Spirit which can easily dispel the poverty-stricken view of a Paradise or that of annihilating of self into the Absolute or that of indulging in provisional fruitive transient attempts.

Our present identification is leading us to supply ourselves with the objects of our crippled impression. And on recognising our true self we can easily dispense with the current ideas of the intelligensia by sticking to the Eternal function instead of attending to the present day need, and which also proves incumbent upon us.

So there is a wide gulf between the two functions that bifurcate the activities in chalking out the paths of different directions in the tug of war between the two contradictory views of the same mental entity of a human soul. And this has induced the teachers of the Absolute to dictate the audience that simultaneous contradictory elements of manifestation and non-manifestation have disclosed the self, which will be paradoxical if judged by our limited senses.

In fine, the Absolute unhesitatingly declares His position to the non-Absolute entities who have got their recess between Eternity and non-Eternity, between Infinity and between substratum and attributes.

Sree Haribhaktivilas

Sree Gopal Bhatta Goswami showed the highest mercy to humanity by his compilation of his great work that contains in a graded arrangement all practices of the Religion of pure devotion enjoined by the spiritual Scriptures. Sree Haribhaktivilas is not one of the class works that are of the nature of books of reference, deriving their value from the systematic arrangement of matter that is scattered over all parts of an extensive literature. It is not a mere encyclopædia of theistic practice in which the information contained in the Scriptures is arranged in a classified manner for the convenience of reference. Sree Haribhaktivilas has made the practice enjoined by the theistic Scriptures, which was available only to self-realised souls, accessible to all conditioned jivas. It has brought down the transcendental within the reach of mortals.

The text supplied by Sree Gopal Bhatta has been cleared from the least chance of being misunderstood by the commentary that has been added to the work by the mercy of Sree Sanatan Goswami. Srila Sanatan Goswami does not so much explain the text itself as the meaning of Bhatta Goswami.

The meaning in each case is supplied by the Career and Teaching of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya. It was possible for the two Goswamis to get at the full meaning of the Scriptural practices in the form that would be really intelligible to the sincere enquirer of the Absolute Truth, in terms of the practice of Sriman Mahaprabhu and His associates. The Scriptures are found by them to contain a great body of practices that agree with the significance of the Chaitanya Leela. They accordingly separated these from the other practices which they found had got mixed up with them in the Scriptures in their written form.

It does not take much time for a person to pick up the grain from the chaff if the two stand open to his view in their real character. The Goswamis looked into the Shastras in order to pick up those practices that were in agreement with the conduct of Sree Chaitanya and His associates. Those practices attained their living efficacy for the Age by being thus sanctioned by the precedents of Sree Chaitanya and His devotees.

Sree Haribhaktivilas is, therefore, verily the only authorised code of spiritual practice for the present Age. All other codes of religious practice, therefore, require to be re-interpreted in the light of the Fullest truth available to the people of this world for the first time in the authorised form. Sree Haribhaktivilas is, therefore, the code of all codes and the specific sanction of practices that alone are authorised for the present Age. It is part and parcel of the Chaitanya Leela.

The existence of the authorised Code has made the service of Godhead available to the conditioned soul in this Kali Age. The Shastras had announced that there is a specific Dispensation for each Age. But they had not given anywhere the Dispensation of the present Age in its authoritative form. It is this which was supplied by the compilation of Sree Haribhaktivilas. It also marked the formal retirement of the previous codes from the position of authoritative sanction which had belonged to them in their respective Ages. There can be but one Divine Dispensation for the same Age. This rule was not recognised by the atheists in the past. The atheists did not understand the necessity of an authorised Code in the sphere of Religion. They put their trust in man-made codes to serve as so-called working bases for their admittedly hypothetical religious (?) performances.

The same thing has happened also in our own Age and for the identical reason. Within a short time of the promulgation of the Code of Sree Gopal Bhatta a rival code was compiled in avowed opposition to Sree Haribhaktivilas by the Smarta Pandit Raghunandan Bhattacharyya. The code of Raghunandan was prepared by the intelligensia of Bengal to Sree Haribhaktivilas. The reason was that Raghunandan's code simply authorised every current practice of the day and thus appealed to national vanity.

The Divine Dispensation is made available to the Age exactly when Atheism is at the zenith of its glory. No one really felt the need for a New Dispensation except one solitary God-loving Brahmana of Nabadwip, Sree Advaitacharyya. It was the invocation of this pure devotee of Krishna that had power to bring about the Descent of the Divinity into this world. It was when Advaita himself was satisfied that no one in this world was prepared to accept the service of Godhead which had been made available even to the people of this Iron Age by the Unequalled Magnanimity of Sree Gaursundar that he prayed the Supreme Lord to withdraw Himself from the view of the accursed generation.

It was, therefore, to be expected that an attempt would certainly be made by the atheistical camp to stamp out the last vestiges of the practices of the religion of bona fide devotion, at the earliest opportunity. The most effective method by which this was to be achieved was suggested by the promulgation of the Divine Code. There was no want of precedents for the atheistic code. Still it must have been with a good deal of hesitation that the absurd code of Raghunandan was at last launched upon the devoted heads of the people of Bengal. It seems to have been accepted without any effective protest on behalf of the people. The atheistical position was thus consolidated to meet the spiritual menace. Its apparent triumph has lasted to our day. But its victory was never achieved in the sphere of literature. The religious literature in Bengal has been profoundly enriched by the teachings of Sree Chaitanya, but latterly the wholesome effect has been greatly obscured by the effusions of His pseudo-followers to a most alarming extent. The Bengali literature has been used in a less degree as a convenient medium of propaganda also by the atheistic school.

The tragedy of the enslavement of the conditioned soul is enacted with his own consent. But the fettered soul is debarred from having any clear realisation of the deadly artifices of the Deluding Energy by his own speculative acceptance of the status quo. These cogitations themselves are, indeed, the pursuit of the suicidal course that is made available to those who are averse to the truth, by the Deluding Energy. But this bitter proposition is, for this very reason, also the only thing that is absolutely unacceptable to the conditioned state. It is this fact which makes the deliverance of the jiva from clutches of Maya rationally impossible.

But the jiva in his conditioned state is apt to worship his traitrous rational faculty which plays into the hands of Maya to effect his utter ruin. Maya makes her appeal to the egotistic worldly instinct which is by its nature opposed to unconditional submission to Godhead proposed by the genuine theists as the only cure of the malady of pseudo-rationalism. To the person under the influence of the fell disease the message of the only remedy comes as a counsel of self-destruction and makes the diseased person on principle an active enemy of all genuine theistic teaching.

Such however, was the Supreme Magnanimity of Sree Gaursundar that even those who detested the merciful import of His Teachings, were prevented by His Mercy from cherishing any hostility to Himself. On the contrary all persons, irrespective of caste, creed, or colour, experienced an over-powering attraction for the Personality of the Supreme Teacher. This has been specially the case in Bengal. And this was so inspite of the fact that the Smarta Pandits of Bengal, for whom the people of Bengal, to their credit be it said, have never cherished anything like the sentiment of love, have always been indefatigable in opposing the general currency of the real teachings of the Divine Teacher meant for the deliverance of all pervert souls including themselves.

It has been the great purpose of 'the Harmonist' to approach the present generation in Bengal and elsewhere with a faithful presentation of the real Teachings of Sree Chaitanya as exemplified by the actual illustrative conduct of an increasing number of souls sincerely disposed to the service of Godhead, to whom the Truth has been mercifully manifested by the Guru Who is identical with Sree Nityananda Himself.

Madhva-Gaudiya Literature

There is really such a thing as spiritual literature. The distinctive mark of such literature is that it records the Message of the Absolute in the mundane vocabulary. It, therefore, differs as regards its subject-matter from the great body of secular literatures of the world that deal with the affairs of this world. Madhva-Gaudiya Literature contains the record of the transcendental activities of Sree Krishna Chaitanya and His associates and bona fide followers and their spiritual realisations.

Judged even by the secular standard the Madhva-Gaudiya Literature is of considerable extent It includes a large number of Sanskrit works. This is supplemented by many books written in Bengali, and also in several other dialects mostly of Northern India.

The Sanskrit works are mainly of four kinds viz., (1) original works that treat of the Career of Sree Chaitanya and that of Sree Krishna as realised by the Chaitanyaites (2) commentaries on the Vedic Literature including the Upanishads, the Brahma Sutra, the Geeta and the Bhagavatam, (3) works devoted to the elucidation of the principles and practices of the Religion of spontaneous loving devotion taught by Sree Chaitanya. The fourth division consists of (4) hymns and prayers. These works have been written by the Acharyyas that is by persons who lived the life which they are authorised to recommend in their books to mankind.

The longer Bengali works deal mainly with the Career of Sree Chaitanya. Besides these, there is a very large body of prayers and songs of exquisite beauty. Thakur Bhaktivinode has tried to explain in the Bengali language the sense of these older writers in a form that is intelligible to modern readers. This had not been attempted by any other modern writer with any real spiritual insight before Thakur Bhaktivinode.

The Career of Sree Chaitanya furnishes the only real clue to the spiritual meaning of the worship of Sree Sree Radha-Govinda. The writings of the Acharyyas have preserved the spiritually reliable account of the Career and Teaching of Sree Chaitanya. The long series of Bengali writers before the time of Thakur Bhaktivinode, however, wrote their works for the edification of only those who possess a trained faith in the worship of Sree Sree Radha-Krishna. Thakur Bhaktivinode wrote for the average reader of a highly controversial Age, from the stand-point of the Acharyyas. Neither Bankimchandra Chatterji nor Sisirkumar Ghose, who also essayed to treat in a systematic manner, the subject of the worship of Sree Sree Radha-Krishna and the Career of Sree Chaitanya respectively in the Bengali language, accepted the mode of life or spiritual point of view of the bona fide Chaitanyites.

The question that will naturally suggest itself to the reader at this point is "whether the whole of the Madhva-Gaudiya Literature is proposed to be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of empiric criticism and treatment by this claim of its spiritual nature?" This has, as a mater of fact, been always the view of the Community itself. They do not admit the eligibility of any person who does not really belong to the spiritual Communion, to understand or offer any opinion worth anybody's consideration on the devotional Literature. It is for this reason that the opinions of Bankimchandra Chatterji and Sisirkumar Ghose are never regarded as binding upon the Community. But the opinion of Thakur Bhaktivinode has been accepted as authoritative on account of his saintly life in keeping with the practice and teachings of the Acharyyas. In other words no one is recognised as an authoritative teacher of religion of spiritual love who does not actually act up to the teachings of the Supreme Lord embodied in the writings and conduct of the Acharyyas.

But, it may be urged, if every religious community displays this kind of conservative partiality for the opinions of its avowed partisans there would be no possibility of any really open treatment of the subject-matter of religion. And in consequence of shutting the door on outside criticism such Community itself may also cease to live at all. Such criticism is also not altogether relevant in as much as it also overlooks the competence of a person who undertakes to offer his opinion on the subject. The spiritual Community is not a close Corporation. Every person who leads the spiritual life is ipso facto a member of the spiritual Community. It is, therefore, no proposal to shut out any relevant criticism to insist that the authoritative opinion should come from the proper quarter. Such a proposal is in keeping with the procedure that is followed in the case of every secular subject.

The Madhva-Gaudiya Literature is no doubt open to the whole world in its secular sense. No one is proposing to take away this so-called right of mankind to misunderstand it. But there is also a distinctive qualifying right which alone admits to the real meaning of the writings of the transcendentalists. It is merely a scientific proposition to insist on the fulfilment of the conditions of real eligibility if such eligibility is seriously claimed on behalf of any writer or reader. We have been trying these twenty eight years to meet all objections to these very fundamental principles of the universal spiritual Religion of loving service of the Absolute Personal Godhead.

It will hardly be claimed as worth the while of a novice to begin with a study of all the exploded theories in order to be enabled to acquire the elementary knowledge of any particular branch of empiric science. But there is a categorical difference between empiric science and the knowledge of the Absolute Truth. The difference consists in this that the latter is identical with the spiritual service of Godhead which is avaible by the Grace of the Divinity. This difference in the genesis of the two kinds of knowledge makes the growth of the one dependent upon challenging criticism while such criticism is debarred from all access to the latter and is calculated only to mislead both one who chooses to indulge in it and him who listens to such criticism.

It is, therefore, established that the literature that enshrines the real knowledge of the Absolute is by that very fact placed beyond the scope of all challenging empiric criticism. It has to be studied and understood by a very different method. It has to be approached in a spirit of utter humility and self-surrender to the feet of the Supreme Lord represented in the only accessible form by the personality of the spiritual teacher or Sat-Guru.

All persons are familiar with the dictum, which has been deliberately misrepresented and misapplied, viz., that the scriptures must not be studied by any except the twice-born The scriptures have been systematically misrepresented by designing atheists as being identical with a few books written in the Brahmi Language. Some of these insist that the literal meaning of a limited number of verses in the old Brahmi language, as explained by Grammar and Lexicon, constitute the only Scriptural knowledge, although this method reduces such knowledge to one of meaningless jargon. It is necessary for these interested persons to make a mystery of the scriptures in order to keep the power of interpretation in their own hands. They accordingly exploit the dictum regarding the twice-born as being alone eligible for the study of the scriptures as referring to their monopoly of the knowledge of the meaning of this jargon and claim that no one who is not born in a twice-born i.e. hereditary Brahmana family can have the status of the twice-born. The system is completed by the theory that if a non-Brahmana puts himself under the tutelege of a hereditary Brahmana in his religious practices he is thereby enable to be born in a Brahmana family in his next birth and become thereby qualified to study and understand the Scriptures.

The above is the view of the smartas. They affect to regard no literature as capable of possessing any spiritual value except what is mysteriously discernible as such by the hereditary Brahmanas. We do not want to debar the non-Gaudiyas from the study of the Gaudiya Literature by the adoption of the smarta principles. We have no ambition of making a trade of religion. We are against religion being made a vested interest for the purpose of monopolistic trade. We take our stand on the interpretation of the Scriptures by the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya and the revered Acharyyas who have recorded His Teachings. We, therefore, do not flout the scriptures. We only want to guard ourselves and others from being deprived of the knowledge of the Absolute by the perverse interest of a privileged few who profess to derive their authority from the scriptures.

We are prepared to admit the impossibility of understanding the real meaning of the scriptures except by the mercy of the spiritual teacher. But we are told by Sree Krishna Chaitanya and His associates that the spiritual teacher is not necessarily identical with the hereditary Brahmana. We are further assured that the meaning of the scriptures is capable of rational presentation by self-realised souls who alone have access to their real meaning ; that all persons in this present life can attain to the service of Godhead on condition that they are really willing to serve the bona fide servants of the Divinity and thereby prove their effective willingness for unconditional service of the Absolute. The Madhva Gaudiya Literature enshrines the account of the Career and Teachings of Sree Chaitanya and His associates from the pens of the eternal servants of the Lord. They not only rank with the revealed literatures of the world but furnish the only complete Divine Dispensation for all Ages, and the Specific Dispensation for the present Age.

The reason why the promulgation of the Divine Dispensation has not been followed by the establishment of unadulterated Theism all over the world is to be sought in our neglect to try to understand the Gaudiya Literature by the only method of approaching a transcendental subject viz., through the medium of the spiritual guide. The fear of being victimised by the quacks and pseudo-gurus need not trouble those who do not themselves intend to be so victimised in their quest of the Absolute. It is imperatively necessary for all persons who really wish to make the spiritual acquaintance of the Gaudiya Literature to engage in the quest of bona-fide Chaitanyites. If they are themselves not in earnest or are disposed to be content with anything less than the knowledge of the Absolute revealed by the Gaudiya Literature, they are foredoomed to failure or to fall into the hands of the pseudo-gurus. But no really cautious person who knows his own mind need miss the sight of the bona fide devotee of Godhead if he is really in need of the service of the Divinity.

It is not our contention that all people of this world are under the necessity of learning the Bengali language in order to deserve to be saved by availing the only Dispensation of the Age. The mercy of the spiritual Guide is open to all persons on the only condition that one really wishes to attain to the unconditional service of the Absolute. The Gaudiya Literature enshrines also that which is revealed by the mercy of the bona fide spiritual Guide. The Literature offers the Absolute in a continuous and visible form to all the people of this world. This is the function of all the revealed scriptures. These records are a great help to those who are given access to them by the mercy of the Sat-Guru. They represent the agency by whom the Divine Mercy is showered on all conditioned souls. The criptures and their authorised exponents have an identical complementary function which is nothing less than the duty of dispensing the Divine Mercy to the deserving as well as the undeserving alike.

The Gaudiya Literature will be translated into all the languages of the world by the agents of the Divine Mercy at the appointed time. There will also no doubt spring up a mighty host of pseudo exponents and an immense body of spurious Gaudiya Literature, as has been the case in the past. This is to be expected by all really thoughtful persons. But nothing can have the least power of depriving a person of the mercy of the real agents of Divine Mercy except one's deliberate refusal to avail of the same when it will be offered at his very door in a perfectly recognisable form.

As soon as a single person will have conceived the sincere desire of undertaking the promulgation of the tidings of the Gaudiya Literature to the peoples of this world he is thereby enrolled among the agents of Divine Mercy with power to forward the fulfilment of this expressed wish of the Supreme Lord. The Gaudiya Literature will not long remain confined to the Bengali-speaking people. It will in a short-time expand and display its full brilliancy through the medium of all the languages including those of birds, beasts and the vegetable tribes.

Rationale of Monism

(Adwaita Vedanta)

BY

Sree Yekantapada Vaishnava

The theory of the one essential existence, back of the Cosmic evolution of superimpositions, draws sustenance from the scriptural text 'एकमेवाद्वितीयम' and the like, interpreted in the light of Monism, and the Monistic structure is evolved. Back of the Cosmic evolution there is the Brahman of the Upanishads, attributeless, actionless, indivisible. Whence can, therefore, be the Cosmic evolutiou in disharmony with the Brahmic involution unless it be superimposed ? The evolution is the involution manifest, and vice-versa. This is in short the sweet song of the Vivarta-vada in Monism. The snake in the rope or the rupee in the mother-of-pearl, illustrates the superim position theory, which is dealt with at great length by Sri Sankara in his famous Sareeraka Bhasya.

We may examine the structure of this superimposition theory in the light of rationalism. There are conditions and their fulfilment, on which superimposition and Monism may pass muster. They are :—

(1) The basis.

(2) The general characteristicts of the basis.

(3) The special characteristics of the basis.

(4) Knowledge of the basis in its general characteristics.

(5) Ignorance of the special characteristics of the basis.

(6) Similarity of the superimposed object to the basis.

(7) Knowledge of the basis similar to the object of superimposition. For instance, knowledge of the real snake, to superimpose the snake on the rope, or the rupee to superimpose the rupee on the mother-of-pearl, or the impression thereof at the least.

(8) Sentient being to superimpose by virtue of the knowledge and ignorance of the general and special characteristics respectively, and the knowledge of the basis, or the impression thereof.

(9) Mind and other organs, the means of knowledge.

(10) Body, the support of mind and other organs.

(11) The five primary elements, meritorious and sinful deeds that effect the body.

These are the eleven conditions, direct and indirect antecedents to an erroneous impression, or superimposition. They embody the minutest details antecedent to superimposition. The process may be analysed and verified.

(1) In the absence of the basis with general and special characteristics, and similarity to the object of superimposition, there is no occasion at all for superimposition. Hence the basis of the above character.

(2) No general characteristics, no general knowledge of the basis, in the absence of any characteristics. Hence the general characteristics involved in the basis.

(3) No special characteristics, no occasion for superimposition. For there is the dawn and dispelling of superimposition in the absence of the knowledge and ignorance respectively of the special characteristics. Hence the special characteristics involved in the basis.

(4) If superimposition arises during the absence of the knowledge of the general characteristics, it may then arise even during deep sleep, or while the eyes are fast closed. But it never so happens. Hence the knowledge of the general characteristics.

(5) If the ignorance of the special characteristics is not a prelude to superimposition, then it may arise during the knowledge of their special characteristics that this is a snake, and this is a rope, and all the dispelling of such superimposition would be a quixotic feat. The very dispeller of superimposition is the knowledge of the special characteristics. The superimposition that could arise during the knowledge of the special characteristics is impossible of being dispelled. being effected during the presence of its very dispeller. Hence the ignorance of the special characteristics a prelude to superimposition.

(6) In the event of superimposition arising in the absence of similarity of the object of superimposition to the basis, then the superimposition of a snake on a stone, or the rupee on a piece of wood is even eventual. But so it never happens. Hence the similarity of the object of superimposition to the basis, a prelude to superimposition.

(7) If superimposition arises in the absence of previous knowledge or impression of the basis similar to the object of superimposition, then it is eventual in the case of an object never known before. No erroneous knowledge of this sort ever occurs. Hence the previous knowledge or impression of the basis similar to the object of superimposition, a prelude to superimposition.

(8) If there is not a being having the knowledge and ignorance of the general and special characteristics, and the knowledge or impression of the basis, who would then get into erroneous knowledge ? Thus is a being, endowed with the fore-mentioned attributes, a prelude to superimposition.

(9) If the fore-mentioned being does not own organs what is the medium then for the effectuation of knowledge impressions, and erroneous knowledge etc. ? Hence mind and other organs antecedent to superimposition.

(10) The body that is the support of organs is also a condition for fulfilment to effect superimposition. But for that the organs have no other support.

(11) The absence of the five primary elements, and meritorious and sinful deeds that effect the body, means the non-existence of the body itself. Hence they are also essential conditioning for the effectuation of superimposition.

Whenever there is superimposition of the rupee on the mother-of-pearl, or the snake on the rope, all the fore-mentioned conditions are literally fulfilled. We may see how presently :—

(1) The rupee with its special characteristics, and brightness and similar characteristics to the mother-of-pearl, is the basis.

(2) Brightness and similar characteristics of the mother-of-pearl, are the general characteristics of the rupee.

(3) The individuality of the rupee is its special characteristic.

(4) The knowledge that this exactly is the rupee in conjunction with its general characteristics.

(5) The ignorance that this exactly is the rupee in conjunction with its special characteristics.

(6) Brightness and such other similarity of the mother-of-pearl to the rupee.

(7) The knowledge or impression of the rupee.

(8) Any person who has the knowledge and ignorance of the general and special characteristics respectively of the rupee, and the knowledge or impression thereof.

(9) The person's organs.

(10) The person's body that supports the organs.

(11) The five primary elements, and meritorious and sinful deeds that effect the body.

The conditions are thus all fulfilled before superimposition results. The same is the case with the superimposition of the snake on the rope. The superimposition of the rupee on the mother-of-pearl, or the snake on the rope, is unimpeachable. We may test the superimposition of the Brahmic existence on the Cosmic existence in the light of the conditions and their fulfilment.

(1) The Brahman of the Monistic Vedanta being attributeless, has none of the general and special characteristics, along with similar ones to the Cosmos, which is the object of superimposition. So the conditions of the basis are not fulfilled in Brahman. Hence there is no superimposition of the Brahmic existence at all on the Cosmic existence. Granted, however, that Brahman is the basis, we may await the development.

(2) As the basis Brahman ought to own the general characteristics. Being attributeless, he has none.

(3) For the same reason Brahman is devoid of special characteristics.

(4) Being devoid of general characteristics, and being actionless, Brahman does not constitute the knower. And then there is not another knower. The fourth condition is thus unfulfilled.

(5) Brahman being devoid of special characteristics, the fifth condition falls short of fulfilment.

(6) Being attributeless, Brahman is not similar to the object of superimposition.

(7) There being the attributeless Brahman alone primordially and nothing besides, representing either a conditional existence or an absolute one, the knowledge or impression of similarity is primodially absent.

(8) The Monistic Brahman being attributeless and actionless is not endowed with the knowledge and ignorance of the general and special characteristics respectively. And there being not then another being endowed with the foremention ed attributes, the knowledge or impression of the basis remains absent.

(9) The Monistic Brahman is devoid of organs. And then there is not another being owning them.

(10) The Monistic Brahman is devoid of body. And then there does not exist another embodied being.

(11) Automatically there is the non-existence of the five primary elements, and meritorious and sinful deeds.

It may be thus seen that the rational link is missing in the Monistic chain, and the Monistic structure is love's labour lost.

The Sleeper

The angel calls unto the slumbering soul.
Does he hear him in his sleep ?
The voice coming from the angel's lip
Takes the form of the dream to reach the soul.

And the slumbering soul experiences the dream,
And recalls the voice of his friend ;
Wonders how he can his message send
To the sleeper and scarce recognised by him !

The angel's voice bids the slumbering soul
Shake off the potent charm ;
Tells him it does him harm ;
And implores him not to neglect his friendly call.

Once again the angel meets the slumberer,
Not in his dream, but as a real man ;
To offer him the Truth Who can
Him from his waking slumber also deliver.

Often-times, indeed, Maya also appears in angel's guise.
But she cannot deceive the soul;
Nor can he ever hear his call;
Only his intercepting mind hears her and makes response.

Mind deluded by Maya then joins issue with the angel;
And she also quotes the Scriptures
For misleading all the wiseacres,
And makes them prefer the course that leads to Hell.

Sree-Sree-Nabadwipdham-Pracharini-Sabha

The President then proposed Rajarshi Srijukta Nafar Chandra Pal Choudhury Bhaktibhusan, the Secretary of the Sridham-Pracharini-Sabha since its foundation to be Joint President of the Executive Committee of the Sabha. Rajarshi Srijukta Nafar Chandra Pal Choudhury was accordingly unanimously elected Joint President of the Executive Committee of the Sabha.

President proposed His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Pradipa Tirtha Maharaj to be Secretary of the Executive Committee of Sree-Nabadwipdham-Pracharini-Sabha who was elected to the office.

The President went on to observe that the services of a very large number of fortunate persons due to the effect of their previous services of sadhus, have been available last year for the propagation of the activities of the Dham-Pracharini-Sabha. He then read the names of those gentlemen declaring that they have earned the thanks of the Sabha reserving for the next day's sitting of the Sabha the business of placing the particulars of their services before the assembly.

The President read the names of the successful candidates who appeared at the Bhaktisastri examinations held during the year at Sree Gaudiya Math and Sree Chaitanya Math respectively.

He then read out the names of ten devotees who have disappeared from this world during the year in the performance of their services of the Divinity, reserving the submission of detailed accounts of their services for the next day. The President, however, observed that the Smarta Community do not ordinarily prefix the 'term' 'Srijukta' (endowed with beauty) to the name of a departed person ; but as a matter of fact the devotee, on his departure from this world, puts on his own real beauty. The servants of Hari are never wanting in 'beauty.'

This brought the proceedings of the first day's sitting to a close.

SECOND DAY'S SITTING

The President next proposed that all great souls who have during the past year, rendered services pleasing to Sree Gaursundar, might be thanked on behalf of Sreedham-Pracharini-Sabha by the expression of appreciation of their good qualities on behalf of the Sabha.

The President called upon several of the members of the Mission to perform this function on behalf of the Sabha.

Sripad Sundarananda Vidyavinode being asked by the President to speak in appreciation of the goodness of Srila Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj said that His Holiness brought to the speaker the first tidings of the Super-excellence of the Lotus Feet of Sree Gurudeva. He was the God-sent guide who first showed him the path of devotion. His words have revolutionized the tenor of his life by flooding it with the light of devotion. His Holiness's extraordinary frankness, causeless desire for the well-being of all persons, unique affectionate welcome, wonderfully loving disciplinary method, constant endeavour to impress the words of Sree Chaitanya on the pure cognition of all souls, impartial analytic exposure of the unspiritual vagaries apt to sway the hearts of novices, learning to walk in the path of pure service, have afforded an opportunity of attracting all to the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. Good Vaishnavas like Professor Sripad Nisikanta Sanyal Bhaktisudhakar, Bhaktisastri, Professor Srijukta Yadubar Bhaktisastri M.A. B.L., Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhaktisarbaswa Giri Maharaj, Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti-baibhava Sagar Maharaj and many highly educated, sincere persons, have been attracted to the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru by listening to the Word of Hari for the first time from the holy lips of Srila Tirtha Goswami Maharaj. Since last year His Holiness has been engaged under the direction of His Divine Grace in organising, as Head master of Thakur Bhaktivinode Institute, the real education of our boys embodying the purpose of propagating the Word of God, pioneered by Thakur Bhaktivinode. This devotional activity of His Holiness marks an epoch in the history of popular education being the first attempt in the present age of imparting real theistic education to our boys. His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhaktivilas Gavastinemi Maharaj narrated the great achievements of Srimad Bhakti Hriday Bon Maharaj during the past year. Srimad Bon Maharaj with exemplary devotion, untiring exertion and unprecedented skill organised the wonderful Theistic Exhibition that was held under the auspices of the Gaudiya Math in Calcutta during last September, which gave a visible form to the transcendental words of His Divine Grace. His Holiness was instrumental in establishing the Gaudiya Math at Delhi and installing there the Sree Vigrahas of Sree Sree Radha Govinda, in conformity with the wishes of His Divine Grace. His Holiness has accepted the editorship of the 'Bhagabat' a Hindi fortnightly instituted by His Divine Grace for propagating the Teachings of Sriman Mahaprabhu in North-west India. His Holiness has specially distinguished himself by his successful promulgation of the Teachings of Sree Chaitanya in the Madras Presidency which elicited the appreciative admiration of even the Governor of that country. His Holiness found an opportunity of conveying the message of His Divine Grace to His Excellency the Viceroy.

His Holiness's burning eloquence and fearless exposition of the Absolute Truth, have produced a profound impression on even the most sceptical persons and have amazed every body by its unthinkable beneficient results.

Sripad Atul Chandra Bandyopadhaya Bhaktisaranga Goswami Bhaktisastri, Secretary of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha and President of the Gaudiya Editorial Board, next described the glorious services of His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhaktivivek Bharati Maharaj during the last year. Srimad Bharati Maharaj performed the kirtana of the word of Srila Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Prabhupad all over Bharata with the fiery energy and enlightening power of a spiritual Sun risen in the Indian sky His words were not confined to Bengal. They resounded in Delhi, on the Himalayan heights of Darjeeling and on the banks of the Satadru in distant Bhojji in the Punjab. They thundered the mercy of the Acharyya to all parts of Bengal and specially the District of Midnapur and brought the people of all parts to the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Prakash Aranya Maharaj spoke in praise of Srimad Bhaktivilas Gavastinemi Maharaj referring to his eloquence, power of attracting he hearts of the people, his rigorous service of Srec Guru in connection with the Theistic Exhibition of the Gaudiya Math and his successful collection of funds for the circumambulation of Sridham Nabadwip. For these devotional activities His Holiness deserves the special thanks of Sridham-Pracharini-Sabha.

Sripad Sundarananda Vidyavinode was desired by His Divine Grace to speak in praise of the high qualities of Pandit Sripad Aprakrita Bhaktisaranga Goswami Prabhu, Secretary of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha and President of the Gaudiya Editorial Board. The speaker said that Srimad Bhaktisaranga Prabhu is like the main supporting column of Sree Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha. He is the most worthy leader of the Gaudiya Editorial Board and the invincible arm of the propagandist organisation of the word of Srila Prabhupad. His character is the shining embodiment of the quality of judgment without bias or prejudice which, however, never takes the form of criticism of the Guru and the Vaishnavas in imitation of the ideal of Damodar. His impartiality finds expression in his perfect judgment of what is and is not in conformity with Absolute loyalty to the Absolute. The unchangeable, unswerving, super-mundane constancy of his attachment to the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru is unrivalled. His indomitable courage and inexpressible zeal in devotional activities are not in the scale of comparison. He is more relentless than the thunderbolt in disowning all evil connections,but possesses a heart which has the tenderness of a flower in its responsiveness to association with the good. He has attracted the homage of reverence of any person not by any skill of language or display of goodness ; but he has drawn to himself the sincere hearty confidence of all persons of all grades, Sannyasins, Brahmacharins, Banaprasthas and Grihasthas by the charm of his living conduct. The moral quality has taken a living form in his character. It is, however, not godless morality but the ideal of the principle of superior devotion to Godhead. Bhaktisaranga Goswami Prabhu offers the model of conduct that knows perfectly how the principle of economic value of this world is capable of being transformed into the principle of Absolute value by being enlisted under the banner of Sree Guru. He is specially skilled in inducing, to the service of the Lord of Laksmi through the medium of gold, those persons who are possessed with the bad propensity of utilising for their own pleasure worldly wealth (the fatal gift of the deluding shadow of Laksmi) which is fit to be used for the service of the Lord of Laksmi, by freeing such persons from their evil propensity that is apt to emulate the conduct of the ten-headed Ravana. He is the foremost of those who possessed the keenest of intellect. The force of his intellect has attracted the notice of all persons in this mundane world no less than in this spiritual realm. But his intellect has never been employed in aversion to service and has always attained its full display in imparting a rich quality to the service of Godhead. The designation of Goswami (master of the senses) has verily attained its true significance in him. He wears the garb of a house-holder. He is the embodied ideal of the Vaishnava House-holder whose life is dedicated to the constant service of Hari, Guru and the Vaishnavas, to the constant companionship of Sri Guru and the Vaishnavas, constant earning of wealth on Krishna's account. He is a principal servitor of the extended fulfilment of the heart's desire of the Guru and Gauranga. During this year the serving activity full of indomitable zeal that he has displayed at Darjeeling, Allahabad, Delhi, Sree Ranga Kshetra and in Madras on the occasion of the installation of the Sree Vigrahas, in an infinite variety of ways, is not to be expected in any second individual. The Vyas of the Leela of Sree Chaitanya in describing the activities of the devotees of Godhead has in many places observed that 'they will be described in future times by Sree Veda-Vyas'. That which has been implicitly observed in regard to Srila Bhaktisaranga by Sree Chaitanya Saraswati, identical with Sree Vyasadeva, in his Vyasa Puja Response, will be made fully explicit in course of time also by his wish.

His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhaktivivek Bharati Maharaj spoke as follows in praise of the services of Professor Srijukta Nisikanta Sanyal M.A., Bhaktisudhakar Bhaktisastri, one of the Secretaries of Sree Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha. Ordinary people are apt to think that it is only the vulgar people, immoral and illiterate persons, who become Vaishnavas. But high birth, wealth, learning and handsome appearance, all of these four-fold advantages, are present in Bhaktisudhakar Prabhu. He has set an unprecedented example of carrying out the heart's desire of Sree Guru and Gauranga by his constant endeavours for the promulgation of the Word of Sree Chaitanya to Western countries through the medium of the English language. The unique ideal of submission that he exhibited in his offering for Sree Vyasa-puja on the day of the fifty seventh anniversary of the Advent of Srila Prabhupad, touched the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. Last year on listening to the address written by him in the English language which he sent to Madras on the occasion of the fifty-eighth anniversary of the Advent of Srila Prabhupad, highly cultured residents of the Presidency of Madras, occupying high positions, were surprised and profoundly impressed and declared that they did not know till they were informed by Bhaktisudhakar Prabhu's address of such extraordinary greatness of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. Bhakti-Sudhakar Prabhu is the ideal of self-dedicated renunciation (Yukta Vairagya). He set an incomparable example of renouncing the society of kindred who are averse to the service of Hari. Those relations who at first opposed him, have now accepted the refuge of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru by admitting their discomfiture to his unchanging loyalty. His single heartedness is incomparable. He has exhibited the ideal of the service of Hari by the surrender of all his possessions—life, wealth, judgment, speech, in every way, to the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. He has set the example of employing wife, son, friend, relative, all persons connected with him, in the service of Sree Guru.

The meeting was then adjourned to the next day in accordance with the wishes of the President.

THIRD DAY'S SITTING

His Holiness Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj outlined the ideal service of Acharyyatrika Sripad Kunjabehari Bhagabatratna in the following words. Bhagabatratna Prabhu, the affection incarnate of Srila Prabhupad is enshrined in the hearts of every servant of Guru and Gaudiya. He is familiar to us by his endearing name of Kunjada. He is truly the giver of their 'groves' (Kunja) of the service of Hari to all. Kunjada is at the root of everything. He is behind the building of the Holy Temple of Sree Gaudiya Math by Srestharyya Srila Jagabandhu Bhaktiranjan Prabhu, building of Bhaktivijaya Bhavana, the 'grove' of the most intimate service of Sree Gurudeva by Srijukta Sakhicharan Bhaktivijay Prabhu, and behind the opening of the Theistic Exhibition of Sri Gaudiya Math. Suffice it to say that it is Kunjada who has made manifest Srila Prabhupad Himself. Kunjada has been busily engaged at all time in employing all persons to the service of the Lotus Feet of Srila Prabhupad by forgiving all offences of every one. Kunjada's serving fortitude and unperturbed patience in bearing up against the hail-storm of every form of danger, have set an example that is impossible of attainment in this mundane world. Acharyyatrika Prabhu is the visible form of the devoted service of the voice that has been laying down the regulative principles of Bhakti.

Srijukta Sundarananda Vidyavinode, editor of the Gaudiya, spoke as follows in praise of the great qualities of Srila Ananta Vasudeva Paravidyabhusan Prabhu. I have found Sripad Ananta Vasudeva Paravidyabhusan Prabhu, who is truly a great and real Pandit, as the other heart, the other self, the second form of Bhagabatratna Prabhu, the visible form of the deepest affection of Srila Prabhupad, of whom you have just now heard from the lips of of the most revered Tridandi Goswami, Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj. Sripad Ananta Vasudeva Paravidyabhusan Prabhu is the object of my supreme homage, the supreme helper of my service of Hari and Guru, my saviour from all dangers. His Holiness Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj has said about Kunjada that Kunjada has taken the lead in promulgating the heart's desire of Srila Prabhupad by manifesting Sree Chaitanya Math, Sree Gaudiya Math, the Exhibition of Sree Gaudiya Math etc., and has brought about the manifestation of Srila Prabhupad himself to the view of the people. Srila Ananta Vasudeva Paravidyabhusan Prabhu also has been the means of making Srila Prabhupad manifest to the people by being the main support of the service of publication of many a temple of books and by installing the holy symbolic form of Srila Prabhupad's words in those imperishable temples of books. Srila Vasudeva Prabhu is the architect, possessed of unique skill in erecting the everlasting temples of books. Sree Rup Sanatan, Sree Jeeva and their colleagues have promulgated the hearts desire of Sree Chaitanya by their literary compositions and other works. In the same manner Srila Vasudeva Prabhu has made himself the embodiment of the promulgation of the heart's desire of Sree Guru-Gaudiya-Gauranga by the erection of the temples of books following in the footsteps of the successors of Sree Rupa. Srila Vasudeva Prabhu is the peerless, unflinching ideal of renunciation of all evil association without an equal or superior. It is not by mere oral profession but his every word, every thought, every activity, every step forward that he takes, every work, every endeavour, everything of him is renunciation of all association with evil and the trumpet-call to the loyal loving acceptance of all association with the good. All persons have in their hearts of hearts felt and observed it. Srila

Vasudeva Prabhu is the object of trust in every way of all Brahmacharins, all Sannyasins, all Banacharins, all Brajabasis, all house-holders, in fact of all persons. He is not merely an object of their confidence but all of them have offered to him such an exalted seat in their hearts with such complete absence of all hypocrisy that there is not the least scope for any contrary consideration. Srila Vasudeva Prabhu is the visible form of the absence of all narrow prejudice. In fact the ideal of a just impertiality is most brilliantly and clearly manifest in him. He is the foremost authority of the regulative principles of pure devotion emanating from the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. Whenever there arises any doubt or misgiving in the heart of any person if Srila Vasudeva Prabhu is pleased to offer his solution of the same, all unprejudiced hearts feel no iota of hesitation in accepting his finding as one possessing the fullest approval of Srila Prabhupad Himself and as being identical with Srila Prabhupad's cherished principles. Whenever we receive any solution from Srila Vasudeva Prabhu we believe unhesitatingly with our whole-heart that we have received it directly from the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. He is the visible form of the ideal of self-dedication and his ideal has drawn many an independent life and fickle mind to the path of self-surrender. His magnetic power replete with the soul of devotion is without a precedent. His spirit of renunciation is natural and promotive of the supreme loving appreciation of Sree Gurudeva. It is the living embodiment of the exposition offered by Sree Jeeva in his Durgamasangamani gloss of the Shloka spoken by Sree Rup. In his devotional endeavour there is to be found no-where any lurking particle of desire for popular applause. He is an adept in the fine art of conserving his own serving activities in the security of an inviolable secrecy by keeping at a long distance by his words and conduct all persons who are either hypocritical or inclined for any other thing than the exclusive service of Krishna. This peculiar trait belongs only to the living activities of the devotee who serves Krishna by all his faculties. By this method of keeping back his own personality he employs many other persons in the service of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. He possesses a heart that is wholly filled with the desire for the glorification of Guru and Krishna to the exclusion of all mundane ambition for his own fame. It happens not unfrequently that by means of an external show of service within the sphere of his genuine all-round devotional activity we snatch the garland of worldly fame and attach it to our own necks. But he cherishes the constant and sole desire for the service and the loving satisfaction of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru, although he is the root-cause of all those services, without advertising his serving activities. We are in a position to state unreservedly that if perchance any quality of our compositions or other successful activity have ever attracted the affectionate attention of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru it is the victorious ensign and inspiration of the mercy of Srila Vasudeva Prabhu that is manifest therein as the glorious support. Srila Paravidyabhusan Ananta Vasudeva Prabhu is the eternal associate of Srila Prabhupad and the worthiest writer wielding the pen for all purposes of Srila Prabhupad Who is same as Sree Vyasadeva Himself. There is no one else with the sole exception of Sree Vasudeva Prabhu who possesses the proper eligibility for recording the words of Srila Prabhupad. He is the living Chaitanya Math identical with the heart's desire of Srila Prabhupad and has assumed the guise of a Brahmacharin in order to manifest the ideal of a Brahmacharin under the protection of Sree Chaitanya Math in accordance with the heart's desire of Srila Prabhupad, although he is an object of reverence of the Sannyasins. Srila Vasudev Prabhu is the model of the Service of the Guru, without lapse. He is the visible form of the words embodying the regulative principles of devotion from the lips of Srila Prabhupad. Srila Vasudeva Prabhu is a follower of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru as his second associated self. In the Theistic Exhibition of Sree Gaudiya Math Srimad Bon Maharaj was enabled to give a visible form to the wishes of Srila Prabhupad by the inspiration and art supplied by Srila Vasudeva Prabhu.

"अनासक्तस्य विषयान् यथार्हमुपयुञ्जतः । निर्ब्बन्धः कृष्णसम्बन्धे युक्तं वैराग्यमुच्यते ॥"

Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Prakash Aranya Maharaj spoke in praise of the skilled service of Acharyya Sripad Paramananda Brahmachari Vidyaratna one of the trustees of Sree Chaitanya Math. 'Acharyya' Sree Paramananda Prabhu has performed extraordinary services for Sree Purushottam Math during the present year. The laying of the foundation stone of the Temple of Sree Purushottam Math by Srila Prabhupad during the present year was arranged by his endeavoures in co-operation with the other devotees. Acharyya Vidyaratna Prabhu has been carrying out with remarkable skill and success the service of the repairs of the Temple of Sree Alalnath and ably devising the architecture of Maths and Temples of the different places. He is the embodiment of the sweetness of affection of Srila Prabhupad.

Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Swarup Parbat Maharaj in narrating the unceasing service of Sree Guru and the Vaishnavas by Sripad Adhokshaja Sevakovid Prabhu made a reference to Acharyyatrika Sripad Kunjabehari Bhagabatratna Prabhu. From the response made by Srila Prabhupad on the occasion of Sree Vyas Puja the highest excellence and basic nature of the services of Srila Acharyyatrik Prabhu will be manifest to all impartial and attentive readers who are free from malice. Sripad Adhokshaja-Sevakovid Prabhu is the intimate and inseparable self of Acharyyatrik Prabhu. His unceasing service of Sree Guru is incomparable. The principle of utilitarian ethics has to yield to his superior ethics of the service of the Guru which is fully borne out by the standard of the disposition to serve the Absolute by all means. He has kept his family, body, mind, speech, judgment, his everything in constant readiness for the service of Sree Guru. He is always anxiously bent upon devising an infinity of methods of serving Sree Guru by the infinity of senses. It is by his whole-hearted efforts that the Hindi Religious fortnightly, the Bhagavata embodying the wishes of Srila Prabhupad has been inaugurated this year to serve as the organ of Sree Paramahansa Math of Sree Naimisharanya. During the visit of Srila Prabhupad to Lucknow he displayed extraordinary zeal for the service of Sree Guru and for the propagation of the living words of the Acharyya. He is constantly engaged in the service of Sree Paramahansa Math of Sree Naimisharanya.

Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Swarup Parbat Maharaj spoke in praise of Srimad Atindriya Bhaktigunakar Prabhu's service of "Hari." Sripad Atindriya Bhaktigunakar Prabhu is a most serene devotee of mature years. His natural humility greater than that of a blade of grass and honeyed words possessed an incomparable power of finding their way even into the hard hearts of worldlings and inducing them to the service of Hari, Guru and the Vaishnavas. By settling down as a permanent resident in Sridham Mayapur he has dedicated himself to the service of Sridham and Thakur Bhaktivinode Institute.

His Holiness then mentioned the exemplary service of Hari Guru and the Vaishnavas that is being displayed by Srijukta Shyamsundardas Adhicary, land-holder of Kesiari. Sree Vishwa Vaishnava Raj Sabha offer him their special thanks for the constancy of his attachment to the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru and for propagation of the Truth, which has proved most pleasing to Guru and Gauranga.

His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Vivek Bharati Maharaj on behalf of Sree Vishwa-

Our Policy

OURS has always been the unmodifiable good old policy, viz., to seek to offer the Transcendental Sound Who alone can enlighten us regarding our eternal spiritual relationship with the Absolute Person Sree Krishna. We have sought to do this by practising unconditional submission to the Lotus Feet of the Transcendental Spiritual Guide or the Sat Guru in the line of Preceptorial Descent from Sree Rupa Goswami Prabhu, the authorised Acharyya of the Universal Theistic Association of pure souls for the loving service of the Absolute available in the present Kali Yuga.

The enlightenment that is imparted by the Transcendental Sound is absolute and unmodifiable. It is capable of holding good through the succession of births and deaths of our adventitious physical and mental bodies. The Absolute Truth is revealed eternally by the whole body of the Spiritual Scriptures. He is served from eternity by all pure souls, with unconditional devotion. The loving service of the Absolute is the spontaneous eternal function of the soul in the state of Grace. The Absolute reveals Himself out of His causeless Mercy to all who seek His unconditional service. He is always taking the initiative to reveal Himself to us through every entity. But we deprive ourselves of the privilege of willing Service of the Absolute by the abuse of our prerogative of rational free constituents of the serving Potency. The Transcendental Sound makes His appearance in this world for helping all perverse souls.

It is always open to the individual soul to avoid being helped. This is done by simply refusing to listen to the Transcendental Sound when He actually makes His appearance to our cognisance, or by deliberately regarding Him as mere mundane sound and subject to all the defects of the mundane vocabulary. The Name 'Krishna' is held by perverse souls to be the name of a mere historical mortal personage wrongly apotheosized by persons possessed of an abnormal understanding. It is possible to explain away the unintelligible Amorous Pastimes of Krishna by such and cognate hypotheses.

But as Krishna happens to be really the Absolute Person Himself all these profane speculations are wide of the mark, being the product of a naturally negatory temperament that has a suicidal aversion to all synthetic thought on the subject of the Absolute. Impermanent activity is accepted as a duty by all schools of atheists under the delusion that they are the masters of this world by right birth. Through all these hideous abominations the Absolute is ever working for the enlightenment of the overlaid faculty of pure reason bent upon the reckless pursuit of a senseless suicidal course.

But there may, or may not at all, come the moment in our deluded lives when we are causelessly disposed to turn our listening ear to the voice of the Absolute Who happens to be so familiar and yet so utterly unknown to all of us. As soon as we turn our listening ear to the Voice of the Absolute we are automatically provided with the real knowledge of our natural function in the eternal world. We are enabled to realise, in a substantive way, that we are souls endowed with our own spiritual bodies and senses for functioning as reciprocal entities in the associated service of the Absolute Person Sree Krishna.

This enlightenment makes a radical difference in our duties and outlook in this world. We are in a position to relate our temporary activities in this world, to which we are unavoidably liable by our present incarceration in the material cases of the physical body and hypothesizing mind, to our permanent and real selves. This activity is called devotion, bhakti or spiritual service of Sree Krishna. But it is not fully spiritual. The fully spiritual activity belongs to souls who are not liable to any form of temporal activity.

But the activity of self-realised souls partake of the nature of the fully spiritual function by the inconceivable Mercy of the Name of Krishna.

The Name of Krishna is the only Transcendental Sound, being identical with His Figure, Quality, Activity and Paraphernalia. The Name of Krishna entering our listening ear enables us to participate in the perfectly harmonious working of the phenomenal world in subordination to the Absolute Realm of Whom it happens to be the perverted reflection. This world and its concerns become meaningless and unwholesome if we miss the conscious reference to the Absolute.

The empiric Sciences are wrong in supposing, quite gratuitously, that they enable us to discover the secret of Nature that has any bearing on our souls. The Absolute alone can make our souls have the spiritual function on this relative and temporal plane. The Absolute is meagrely revealed by the Scriptures which have got also their deluding exoteric meaning which alone is accessible to our limited judgment. The esoteric meaning is available only to self-realised souls. The esoteric meaning requires the fullest scope of our cognitional march. But with all this help it is never possible for us to realise the Absolute as He is. There is another agent viz., the causeless i. e., Absolute Mercy of the Absolute Himself. The Absolute reveals Himself to us in this world in the Form, the Indivisible Knowledge, Who dominates and regulates our subservient cognitive faculty, appearing as the articulated sound on the lips of devotees.

The Absolute Cognition Himself is self-revealed and universally accessible in the form of His devotee, as Sree Krishna Chaitanya. The Harmonist seeks to promulgate the Message of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the Self-manifestive Absolute, by accepting the help of all entities. The Harmonist is thus in the position to reject the rejection of anything. In this world we are in the habit of deliberately misunderstanding and rejecting everything on the plea of our own misunderstanding. The Harmonist takes note of the rejecting function as an aid for acceptance of the absolutely open immeasurable substantive truth of everything as he is. This is practicable only by submission to the Lotus Feet of Sree Krishna Chaitanya and by acting under the conscious and unconditional Guidance of His Message.

This is also the only Theism. The Harmonist seeks to indentify herself fully with the cause of Theism. The Harmonist seeks to attain the complete vision of the Truth. She rejects all narrow and erring views of the Absolute which are the fruitful preventible source of all disruptive discord. The Harmonist seeks to have the real peace of the truly altruistic conscience. She sets her face against all forms of pseudo-altruism. It is for this reason that she avoids subscribing to the forms of empiric sectarianism that are apt to pass themselves off as benevolence but are really full of every form of malice and prejudice.

The Harmonist is the unconditional humble servant of Sree Krishna Chaitanya identical with His Message delivered by Sree Rupa and his disciplic spiritual successors forming the undeviating line of the authorised Spiritual Preceptors of this Iron Age.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya is the Absolute Person Sree Krishna in His Eternal Form of the Promulgator of His Message. Sree Krishna Chaitanya is the Sankirtana-Vigraha, the Concentrated Embodiment of the Chant of Krishna. His Transcendental Career is the Absolute Source and Archetype of all living preaching of the Truth. The Harmonist, following humbly in the footsteps of Sree Rupa and his apostolic successors, does not aim at the reform (?) of the world by any misguided pseudo-altruistic empiric endeavours. She is on principle opposed to all such quackeries which only aggravate our disease of mortality. She seeks instead the reform of her own angular vision by agreeing to open her eye to have a view of the Truth under the regulative guidance of the Absolute Dominating Cognition Sree Krishna Chaitanya. This guidance has been made available to all souls in this world by the magnanimity of Sree Rupa and his spiritual successors, the great Acharyyas of the universal community of all pure souls. The mercy of Sree Guru guides every utterance of the Harmonist and enables her to find the conditions for her whole-time service of the Absolute in the enlightening help furnished unsolicited by every entity of this world.

The Conception of Salvation

THE message of Salvation represents the advanced stage in the evolution of the empiric quest of hypothetical truth. It has no reference to the Absolute Who is declared by the Scriptures, as well as by the unprejudiced rational instinct inherent in us, as wholly inaccessible to our present limited cognitive faculty. The Absolute position is logically the only natural position. From the hypothetical position we can have only a negative surmise of the Absolute. We should not advertise this negative concoction as the desirable ultimate goal. This should be recognised as an abnormal counsel by all seekers of the Truth. It is only an unbalanced judgment that can retain any interest for a quest if he is told beforehand that it is to lead to a void, after the adumbration of a long series of inconclusive hypotheses, for being convinced (?) of the utter futility of such a quest. In other words the failure of the quest should not be offered to be accepted as a positive guiding of the goal. This finding should not also be advertised as a form of inconceivable felicity (?).

No person can ever want to be delivered from his own self. All persons want to get rid of disease in order to regain the natural state of health. No person should relish the counsel of the doctor who recommends the commission of suicide for getting rid of a disease. Salvationism proposes to heal the disease of mortality by the suppression of the mortal state and recommends the state of void as this desideratum. It is not possible to create such a void, neither in the spiritual realm nor in this mundane world. The very idea of the void is a conception of the mere correlation of the complementary aspects of a hypothesis and is part and parcel of the same. It is an aspect of the disease and is never the healthy state. Where is the entity that will enjoy (?) any felicity (?) in the inconceivable position that is simply devoid of all mundane content ?

No person in his natural position ever seeks to be delivered from the same. Salvationism is a product of hypothetical thinking that is natural to the diseased state. It does not require to be classed as a Revealed Doctrine.

It is necessary to take prominent note of the fact that the natural state is not any modification of the unnatural. Abnormal thinking is categorically different from normal thinking. Hypothetical thinking is a necessary evil as long as we are not in the state of health. Absolute thinking is both inevitable and natural to the unconditioned healthy existence. Even in the diseased state it should be possible to understand that the deliberate substitution (?) of one hypothesis for another, the deliberate replacing (?) of one ailment by another, is not equivalent to restoration to the state of health. Any hypothetical state is only a changing form of the disease and should not be accepted or offered as the equivalent of the really healthy condition.

Any idea of the natural state that we may attempt to form in our conditioned state needs must be altogether misleading. This defect will not be cured by the mere weight of opinion of the diseased persons in its favour. No empiricist can consistently assert that the thoughtless or dishonest approbation of empiric thinkers will endow any doctrine with the absolute character. The attitude, that pretends that it cannot find any distinction between the absolute and the hypothetical, deserves to be described as cultivated deliberate aversion against the Truth or, in the language of Theology, as the only real Atheism. It will not do to estimate the absolute quality of a conception by counting the number of its followers in the conditioned state. As a matter of fact the Absolute requires no witness to His Existence and it is a profanation to suppose that any erring hypothesis made by the "puppy brain" of man can be a condition for the valid existence of the Absolute.

The Salvationistic idea makes its appearance in this world when the distracted human mind is prepared to entertain the principle of amelioration of the human lot as distinct from causeless love for the Truth as the basis of right conduct The sine qua non of the spiritual is that it has no genesis in any mundane condition, either directly or indirectly. Salvationism always boasts of its undoubted mundane origin and mundane purpose. It sometimes seeks to support its pretension to revelation by the manipulation or fabrication of Scriptural evidence. Salvationism has accordingly been branded by the vaishnavite schools as the consummation of hypocrisy in the domain of religious life. This is actually borne out by the form of the prayers of the salvationists. These prayers always suggest the remedy to be prescribed by the doctor whose advice they pretend to seek. Thoroughgoing empiricism, logically represented by Buddhism, discords the scriptural support and relies fully on itself. In this respect Salvationism within the Scriptural sphere is distinct from Buddhism. The hypocritical nature of salvationism that is sought to be based on the Scriptures, enabled it to pass itself off as a form of Theism with a class of neurotic empiricists.

Buddhism seeks to be relieved from all existence by its own effort. Salvationism is probably the contribution of Buddhism to Christianity. Epistemologically this is self-evident. The historical links that connect one with the other have not been traced though they are in course of recovery. All theology, that starts honestly from the pessimistic idea of this world tends logically to Buddhism. The working up from the pessimistic position has been perfected in India in Buddhism, in its explicit form ; and also, in a most cleverly masked form, in the pantheistic schools, under the lead of Sankara.

Pessimistic Salvationism stands self-condemned to utter sterility both as regards method of living and their goal of its unprincipled pre-endeavour which it seeks to target as the Reality. It degenerates into organised hypocrisy when it also pretends to rely on Scriptural sanction as in the case of Henotheistic worship backed by the liberationist philosophy of Sankara in this country and so-called rationalistic Christianity which has a family resemblance to the former. Neither form can be proved to be purely theistic although both profess to value the principle of service. Aversion to service, i.e., unconditional submission, becomes the guiding motive of all spurious rationalism divorced from spiritual enlightenment. Salvationism, which identifies itself with this spurious rationalism, prays to its impersonal concoction, which it dubs the Giver (God), as one of the agents for helping the success (?) of its sensuous gratification. Buddhism could secure a large following without this deliberate hypocritical device.

Krishna Who is not any concoction of the hypothesizing instinct of persons averse to the service of the Absolute Truth, is not the Giver of anything to His devotee He is, on the contrary, only the Receiver of the exclusive services of all His devotees. When Krishna offers to His devotee release from the ills that flesh is heir to, the latter refuses to receive such offered Divine Favour. The devotees of Krishna do not covet any amelioration from Him. They know Krishna to be the only Master and Enjoyer and they try to meet His endless demands for service. This is not pessimistic mentality. The devotee of Krishna has no wants of his own. He does not pray (?) for his daily bread. He has a spontaneous aversion to receive any service from Krishna under any pretext.

The devotee of Krishna has his real eternal position in the Constitution of the Counter-Whole Absolute. The Absolute is not an inelastic dead-Unit. The Absolute is a Living Personality. He is the Divine Male eternally associated with the Divine Female. The Divine Male is the Predominating Absolute. The Divine Female is the Predominated Absolute. These are the two Moieties of the Integer in the One. The Predominating Absolute is Sree Krishna. The Predominated Absolute is Sree Radhika. The Divinity is both One and Pair, Sree Sree Radha-Krishna is the Divinity. Sree Radhika is the Absolute Devotee. She is the Counter-whole of the Predominating Absolute Sree Krishna. All the individual souls emanate from the Serving Essence of Sree Radhika. The devotee has thus real distinctive existence in his dealings with the Dominating Absolute. The Salvationists begin by denying this world and end by denying everything under the paradoxical and hypocritical plea of admitting everything by such denial.

The individual soul is unborn and eternal. Her serving function is eternal and real. She does not require to be endowed with anything that she does not possess by her own indefeasible right. She is free to choose a function. She is free to choose to exercise her function in her natural reciprocal way. The individual soul is not by her nature the Dominating Absolute, nor is she the Dominated Counter-Whole. She can choose to go against her nature and imagine that she is the Dominating Absolute. She can imagine that she is the Counter-Whole Sree Radhika. She behaves abnormally when she chooses to imagine that she is something else than what she really is. She misbehaves when she chooses to admit the Absolute Domination of Sree Krishna. This last contains the Salvationist and Elevationist attitudes as correlated forms.

Both Elevationism and Salvationism weaken the sense of sin by effectively undermining the absolute responsibility of the offending soul, which is possible only in her subordinate reciprocal position. In this respect Salvationism belongs to the same abnormal category as Elevationism. As a matter of fact the two are always found to be present together in all forms of empiric creeds that have been concocted in this world. They are two complementary expressions of the same entity viz., constitutional aversion to the pure service of the Absolute. Salvationism is the subtler and more dangerous form of Empiricism and may be philosophically defined as the worship of the false ego by deliberate and avoidable mis-choice, for spiting Krishna in the teeth of His constant merciful warnings from within and without. *

Rai Ramananda

RAI Ramananda is alleged to have made his appearance in a Karana family in the village of Bentpur in the Puri District of Orissa. He was a contemporary of Sree Chaitanya and probably lived during the period whose limits may be taken to be from the eighth decade of the fifteenth to the fourth decade of the sixteenth century of the Christian era. We know very few details of the events of his life prior to his meeting with Sree Chaitanya in the year 1512 A. C. The few facts regarding his previous life that are available from Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita and other sources may be recapitulated as follows.

His father's name was Bhabananda Rai who had four other sons. One of his brothers Gopeenath was employed like himself, in the service of the Emperor of Orissa. Gopeenath was found guilty of having misappropriated the revenues of the State and was condemned to death by the heir-apparent to the throne after an enquiry into his conduct. He was saved by the fact of his relationship with the companion of Sree Chaitanya for Whom the Emperor had conceived the highest reverence. Sree Chaitanya did not approve the misbehaviour of Gopeenath, holding that the sentence passed on him by the prince had been a just one. Ramananda's brother Baninath was employed by the emperor to convey mahaprasada to the Supreme Lord from the Temple of Sree Jagannath.

Rai Ramananda was a scholar and the greatest poet of his time. He was a close and esteemed friend of Sarbabhauma Bhattacharyya, the most erudite authority of the Monistic School at that period. Sarbabhauma was living at Puri in retirement in his old age, deeply revered by the Emperor and all the Pandits of the country. Rai Ramananda is the author of 'Sree Jagannathballava Natakam' and a number of devotional songs in the Maithili language.

Ramananda was the most trusted of all the servants of Sree Prataparudradeva. He was employed, at the time when he met Sree Chaitanya, in charge of the southern provinces of the empire which were exposed to incessant attacks from its powerful neighbours, the kings of Vijaynagar and the Muhammadan States of the Deccan. Ramananda was successful in more than holding his own against the onslaughts of the implacable foes of the Gajapatis.

Ramananda met Sree Chaitanya in 1512 A.C. at Gospada Tirtha where he had come for a ceremonial bath in the Godavari on the occasion of the Godavari Pushkaram. Sree Chaitanya had renounced the world towards the end of 1511 A.C. He came to Puri early in 1512 and started shortly after on His pilgrimage to the South. Immediately after His arrival at Puri He had been merciful to Sarbabhauma Bhattacharyya who gave up his monistic views and surrendered himself to the Feet of the Supreme Lord. Sarbabhauma entreated the Lord to meet Rai Ramananda at Vidyanagar which was the seat of the Governor of the Province.

Rai Ramananda had a long discussion with Sree Chaitanya, at a place which is easily identifiable with Kovvur, on several successive evenings, at the house of a Vaidic Brahmana who had offered his hospitality to the Lord. This discourse has been handed down in tact in the monumental work of Sree Krishnadas Kaviraj Goswami and is the epitome of the Teachings of Sree Chaitanya.

Rai Ramananda prayed to be permitted to follow the Lord on His pilgrimage but was dissuaded from his purpose by the Lord. He was, however, commanded to give up his post under the Emperor and await at Puri the Return of the Lord from the South. Rai Ramananda now applied for being relieved of his office and was permitted by the Emperor to retire from the service of the State on pension and was given the garden of Jagannathballav for his residence at Puri where he lived during the remaining part of his life.

Rai Ramananda henceforward occupied himself in serving the girls who used to dance before Sree Jagannathdeva in the Temple during Divine Service. He helped at their toilette and taught them the art of dancing and singing. This form of service shocked Pradyumna Misra whom Sree Chaitanya sent to Rai Ramananda for listening to his enlightening talk about Krishna. Pradyumna Misra's surprise at the conduct of Ramananda was openly expressed by him to the Lord. But Shree Chaitanya commanded him to listen to Krishna-talk from Ramananda Rai. Pradyumna Misra was convinced of the unique love of Ramananda for Krishna by hearing his discourse about Krishna. Rai Ramananda and Swarup Damodar were the constant companions of the Lord in His Exclusive Devotional Performances during the concluding twelve years of His Leela. During this period no other person had permission to approach the Person of the Lord Who remained in the strictest seclusion.

Rai Ramananda and Swarup Damodar disappeared from this world

ion after the disappearance of Sree Chaitanya.

The Amorous Pastimes of Sree Krishna are not explained by Sree Ramanujacharyya. The subject has been regarded with suspicion and even disapproval by Protestant writers under the dictates of empiricism and a cultivated taste for utilitarian activities and tangible worldly values.

Sree Rai Ramananda did not invite the sense-ridden empiric pedants who are not ashamed of disclaiming all taint of sensuousness in and out of season, for their useless hypocritical assent to a proposition that is absolutely beyond the reach of comprehension of all seekers of mundane felicity. The unfortunate victim of the lust of the flesh happens to be such by his own deliberate whole-hearted consent. To be asked to part with all prospects of sensuous living is ban and anathema to such a person. In order to screen his own sensuousness he points his finger to the worse performances of those who betake themselves to the practice of the religion of loving devotion (?) by the method of indiscriminate debauchery. The empiric sensualist does not class Sree Ramananda and Sree Rupa with open debauches. But he affects to consider them as persons of unblemished morals misled by their faulty judgment.

These and similar arguments of silly and thoughtless persons have been stated and refuted by the Acharyyas of the pure worship of Sree Sree Radha-Govinda. It is not possible nor necessary to reproduce their arguments in their elaborate form at this place.

All misconception about the Absolute is traceable to the want of proper realisation of the nature of the individual soul seeking such enlightenment. The Absolute stands in a relation of reciprocity to His seeker. The sensualist seeks to find Him independently of such reciprocity. He takes it for granted that it is the function of the Absolute to seek to be reciprocated to his relative-self. This is impossible for the reason that he does not know himself. He has no right to go beyond his real experience and suppose, quite illogically and needlessly, that the Absolute is as ignorant as his apparent self and that He stands in need of meeting his ignorance half-way. But the Absolute does not budge an inch from His Eternal Position. It is, therefore, necessary for the seeker to try to find his real-self to go up to the Absolute and not merely endeavour to retain (?) his shifting position by the method of empiricism.

It is not for the Absolute to try to relieve the seeker from all possibility of wilful mis-choice. Such a procedure would make the Absolute the subservient of the non-absolute. A dependent absolute is contradiction in terms. Krishna is autocrat in the fullest sense. He does whatever He wills and everything that He does is true and full of all excellence. This absolute scope of the Activities of the Absolute is sought to be curtailed by the poverty-stricken pedants of this ignorant world

If instead of trying to limit the Absolute within the narrow scope of their faulty judgment the empiricists and their admirers had availed the plain injuctions of the Scriptures for making good their endless deficiencies by submitting to be really enlightened from the source of all enlightenment, they would have been relieved of their so-called sterile necessity of boasting about their imaginary birth-right of utter ignorance which they are pleased, inconsistently enough, to regard as the worthy achievement of the cognitive faculty.

Rai Ramananda did not trouble himself about those who did not want to be enlightened. This is the only proper conduct in the case of one who is the servant of the Absolute for no reason whatever. Ramananda did not want to pretend to please the Absolute by any contrivance of his own. Such hypocrisy is foreign to the serving soul who never plays to the gallery. He was simply acting in accordance with natural bent. On the plane of service no one can, nor need, obstruct him any way. The only way, by which any hypocritical person would be enable to understand the nature of the service of Rai Ramananda is by seeking to open out his heart to receive the Absolute Who frees from all limitations imposed by ignorant pedants for practising the abject slavery of un-truth.

The reciprocal absolute position a between the Absolute Integer and th constituents of His Power, is no les absolute than the Integer Himself The impersonalist seeks to be free from the fetters of conditional existen by being divested of all cognitiv activity. He does not know how it i possible to practise the full rationa activity in a subordinate position to on who imposes no restrictions on th absolute freedom of such activity. Th spiritual function is distortedly reflecte in the sensuous activities of conditione souls. What is necessary is to resc those activities from their state contamination and neither do indul nor to suppress them altogether whic latter is an impossible and purposeles proposition.

It is not necessary to suppress the amorous instinct either partially or wholly. There is a position for amour in the soul that is worth our realisation. By all those methods that apparently seek to avoid the issue we are only more deeply committed to the filth o mundane lust. Rai Ramananda wa absolutely free from all mundane lust by the practice of his natural spiritual function that seeks exclusively the gratification of the Senses of Krishna, the Amorous Lover of His Absolute Counter-Whole, Sree Radhika.

Ritualism and Superstition

There has been a very systematic attempt on the part of empiric scholars to find out the "origins" of the revealed Religions. Their assumption is apparently opposed to the claim of Revelation that is put forward by the great Religions as their real common source. The empiricist knows the limitations of his method. He is also aware of its strong points. He is helpless against the inherent defects of his method and thinks that his whole duty is properly performed by merely the admission of his patent defects. But after this admission he supposes himself to be competent to deal with a subject that is beyond his comprehension by his own admission.

But although no honest empiricist can claim any real knowledge of the Absolute empiric speculations regarding the "origins" of the revealed Religions are not altogether without any value towards the ascertainment of the Absolute. They are helpful in a negative way.

The movement of unalloyed devotion was given a form that is intelligible to the modern mind, by Srila Thakur Bhaktivinode within the memory of living persons. The history of the movement would, therefore, appear to be one falling within the jurisdiction of the empiric chronicler of contemporary events. Different versions of the movement are already being given to the public by persons who find nothing extraordinary or unintelligible about it. There is also no reasonable ground for doubting the bona fide of at least some of these persons. The 'Harmonist' is the authorised and, therefore reliable, exponent of the movement so far as the English-knowing public are concerned. If the voice of the Harmonist is not attended to with sufficient care the decision to which even a bona fide judge will be forced to arrive by hearing the empiric version, however honest it may really be in itself, is bound to be tainted at its very source and is sure to mislead in regard to the essence of the matter.

The 'Harmonist' is, therefore, doing a great service to the cause of religious history by trying to chronicle in its pages the authorised version of a contemporary revivalist religious movement with a revealed origin which is wholly concerned with the Absolute Who is perfectly inaccessible to the resources of the empiric historian.

It is our duty to place before our readers the concrete facts of the movement in order to demonstrate the practicability of living the life eternal now and here. It is not a speculative ideal that is sought to be placed for satisfying the idle curiosity of the reader. It is the direct spiritual experience and activity in the tangible form that are offered for the acceptance of the soul who is not inclined to continue under the sway of the mind. For the soul never completely slumbers. He only chooses to enact sleep. He may do so for two reasons. He is accustomed to do so and has also had no occasion to be seriously contradicted by mundane experience in regard to the utter impropriety of his conduct. Nay, the whole tribe of the empiric savants are always persuading him to accept the lead of his defective mind. They have the terrible effrontery of assuring him that it is his incumbent duty not to bother at all about the Absolute because he has no faculties by which he can approach Him. They also take very good care to prove that all the claims of all religious teachers are the products of palpable self-deception to which all past generations were unaccountably subject. They insinuate when they do not actually say so.

The Name of Krishna manifesting Himself on the lips of a devotee is identical with the Absolute Person Who is the Final and Sole Cause of everything. If an empiricist presents himself before one of the devotees of Sree Chaitanya Math of Sridham Mayapur he will have an actual opportunity of listening to the Divine Logos from his mouth. But he will fail to know that he actually hears the Absolute. It is entirely his fault that he cannot hear the Absolute. He adjusts his ear to the requirements of audiencing mundane sounds with which alone he is familiar. The Divine Sound refuses to manifest His Transcendental Nature to one who does not consciously want to listen to Him. The Divine Sound offers him instead His Deluding Face. Therefore, the empiricist finds no difference between the Real Name of Krishna and a name that refers to a mundane object. Such a person will offer his evidence and have a far greater chance of being believed by other empiricists than another who may bear testimony to the truth of the Scriptural declaration. But this will not prove the empiricist to be really in the right. In this particular matter it is the entire system of empiricism that is on its trial and, therefore, its evidence is much more likely to be almost deliberately prejudiced than not.

To be able to hear the Absolute would no doubt be the greatest of miracles. The fleshy ear cannot hear Him. The reason is plain. The audiencing capacity of the earthly ear is limited to certain definite mundane conditions. But who really hears even the mundane sound? Does the soul hear any mundane sound? The empiricist does not know the existence of any such entity as the soul as he is described by the Scriptures. The Scriptural soul is able to hear. The Scriptural soul hears the Divine Sound. But who is it then that hears the mundane sound? Can the mind also hear? Are there two separate cognitive entities in one and the same person? The Scriptures say that the mind cannot hear except by the energy of the soul because the mind is non-sentient whereas the soul is of the essence of cognition. The mind is not prepared to admit that it cannot hear by its own right. Its evidence is accepted by all the empiricists for the reason that it happens to be the only evidence available in a form that is verifiable by any other minds.

If we admit, against the declaration of all the Scriptures, that the mind is identical with the soul and that it can hear by its own right and that there is no entity like the soul whose evidence is available for consideration by our present faculaties, should we, merely on these grounds, arrive at the conclusion that, therefore, it is our duty to remain perpetually ignorant, for no other reasan than that we have not got the faculties by means of which we might be in a position to know? The empiric assumptions, even if they were true, might have gone unheeded for what they are worth for the reason that on those assumptions we can neither be gainers nor loser by the exercise of our mental faculties in any way we choose. The mentalist does not know, cannot know, does not care to know, where he really is. And this is dubbed by him as life worthy of being pursued by all rational beings. Is not this a most strange superstition and is it not also almost universal in this most "enlightened" Age? And can there be a more blighting superstition than the suicidal rejection of the saving testimony of the Scriptures for remaining in the state of admitted ignorance merely because it is claimed to be "enlightenment" by the misleading mind? Is unhesitating acquiescence in this form of rank non-ism the only legitimate duty of our unbiased reason?

This is pre-eminently a scientific Age. Bold experiment is the very life of scientific progress. The facts of spiritual experience certainly deserve to be at least as carefully tested as those of our temporal existence. The magnitude of the issue certainly calls for the exercise no small patience and no little circumspection on the part of the honest student. It is really to a fight without quarters against all the most cherished prejudices of utterly misguided humanity that the bona fide student of the Absolute Truth is called upon to dedicate himself heart and soul. There must necessarily be much honest searching of the heart at every stage of his progress. All this notwithstanding, or rather for this very reason, one cannot show his real love for the scientific method in a better cause than in a life-long attempt to find the service of the Absolute.

There is no doubt that it is easier to deceive oneself as well as others by the mere external show of serving the Absolute. The student of the Absolute Truth is not taught his subject in a departmental way. Neither is he expected to conform in his external conduct to any set forms of rules and observances. The mentalist is no doubt always anxious to discover a course of activity that can be communicated to others in a definite form. With the attainment of mechanical perfection in producing a definite material result the goal of the empiric scientist is considered to be successfully reached.

It is, of course, necessary to use the mundane conditions for making progress in one's spiritual endeavours. But neither the teacher nor the student of the Absolute has anything to do with material entities as such. These have only a symbolic value. This mundane world is by no means an illusion. Our physical body and limited mind belong to this world. The mind itself is also a physical body of a subtle kind. These bodies are capable of being galvanized into a manner of apparent sentiency. They are not animate by their composition. They are made of gross and subtle clay. They are matter as distinct from soul. But so long as they stick to the soul, the soul can act only through their agency. These physical cases have no locus standi on the spiritual plane. They can function only on the mundane plane. The soul can never be inactive. He has, therefore, no option in the matter of constant use of the physical cases on the material plane for the attainment of material results which, however, are of no use to the soul.

When, therefore, the empiricist sententiously declares against ritualism as mere mummery, being of no earthly use, he should have paused to consider whether his own activities are not also better than sheer mummery in regard to the requirements of the soul, if he is prepared to admit the existence of such an entity for whose benefit the ritual is alleged to be practised. The ritual is not devised for any earthly purpose whatsoever. It cannot, therefore, be condemned as unsuitable if it is found to be merely useless for earthly purposes. It would be more relevent to ask whether it can serve the spiritual purpose for which alone it is devised.

No empiricist thinks that there is any reasonable cause for surprise when it is found that fire always burns. He is no doubt also prepared with his explanations in support of such occurrence. These explanations can only consist of additional information being supplied from actual observation regarding the behaviour of the substances that are consumed by fire. No one blames Nature for behaving in the way She is found to do. The behaviour of Nature is assumed to be the standard of Truth. When we know how She behaves we are considered to be wise. But Nature never cares to inform us why She behaves in a particular manner under particular circumstances. It is certainly not expected that Nature should behave with any conscious moral propriety. She is regarded as morally irresponsible for Her acts. Nay, the so-called empiric morality is itself regarded as of secondary importance in comparison with the necessity of its adjustment to the laws of irresponsible Nature. The so-called laws of Nature are also really dead in as much as with all our life-long endeavours in trying to follow them faithfully we have not been able to make any progress whatsoever in finding out what they really mean beyond the palpable enough fact of their gross mechanicality on a par with the lower side of our own nature.

The Scriptures say that for this unavoidable ignorance of the Truth we ourselves are wholly responsible and Nature is not to blame at all. Our overweening vanity is the cause of it all. We choose to fancy that we possess in our own right dominion over Nature,—that it is the purpose of providence to place us in this world for securing this much coveted domination by the aspiring use of our defective faculties which would be improved by such endeavour. The whole body of the vast empiric literatures of this world is never weary of instilling these counsels into our hearts. But this is diametrically opposed to the fundamental teaching of all Scriptures. Mastery can belong only to Godhead. Our legitimate aspiration should, therefore, be only for His service. The prayer to Godhead for domination is contradiction in terms. It is most disloyal impudence. It, therefore, defeats its purpose, or rather obtains its secret purpose, by being deprived of the service of the Absolute.

The Name of Krishna is not any of the concoctions of the human brain for obtaining by its means a further opportunity of the wilful perpetuation of our gross ignorance regarding Godhead. The Name of Krishna is Krishna Himself. This is known only to those who are disposed to serve and have no ambition to dominate. The devotees of Sree Chaitanya Math practise this living ritual of uttering the Name of Krishna for the purpose of gaining His Mercy promised by Himself, in the form of His Eternal Service. It is not possible to take the Name of Krishna in the manner that is really free from offence except under the corrective, unconditional pupilage of His bona fide Devotee. Unless one submits to be enlightened by one who knows it is never possible for the limited intellect to suspect hypocrisy and get rid of the same.

It is the distinctive quality of the performance of the true ritual of the service of the bona fide Devotee of Godhead that the performance is rewarded by progressive enlightenment in proportion to the sincerity of the serving intention of the performer. The service of the pure devotee is attainable on this mundane plane and by means of our mundane organs and faculties. But it is categorically distinct from the ordinary activities of this world that are directed to a mundane objective and for a limited purpose. The quality of grossness and ignorance can never be eliminated from the performances of the physical body and the material mind. But it is possible to dedicate them to the service of the Absolute, because our soul is capable of awaking even in the state of bondage. It is the soul who is the real cognitive entity and, therefere, responsible for the doings of the body and mind. The Name of Krishna uttered by a novice due to his trust in the reality of the Scriptural Revelation and under the living direction of a self-realised soul, need not, therefore, be regarded as a superstition for the reason that it is opposed to the irrational, atheistic, materialistic disposition that has now-a-days secured the whole hearted (?) approval of most empiric savants.

Sree Vyasa-Puja Homage

(On the occasion of the fifty-eighth anniversary of the auspicious advent of my Divine Master Om Vishnupad Paramahansa-paribrajakacharyya Sree Sreemad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj.)

My most affectionate Divine Master,

May Thy Divine Grace permit
The humble offering of one unfit
On this most auspicious day
When Thou didst first Thy appearance display.

Messenger of the Truth Divine,
Thy advent all good doth bring ;
High and low, righteous and fallen,
Thy nativity greet with one acclaim.

My feeble voice I lift in praise
Of my Master and Saviour's Grace ;
Who gave me eyes, ears, and tongue
The Truth to find and frame His song.

Yes, God is eternally mine
In the Form of the word Divine ;
But He is no empty sound
That in this world is found.

The Scriptures sing His Name
And to mortals here proclaim ;
No skilless earthly tongue
May articulate the Same.

We are foolish and vain
To try to ascertain
The meaning of the Divine Theme
By Commentary and Lexicon.

Thou, my Master, art the Way,
The only Support, Whom all may
By submission approach and ask
To manifest Thyself in the dark.

But we are wholly blind,
And no ray of the light can find,
Till Thyself of Thy own accord
Appear and make us understand.

By Thy light alone I can see ;
Thyself Thy own light reveal'st to me ;
Thy Form is of the Essence Divine
Whom no mortal eyes have ever seen.

The Scriptures reveal the Lord ;
Sree Vyasa reveals the Word.
Thou art Sree Vyasa's own self Manifesting the Name for our help.

The Name is Krishna Himself ;
The Name is our only Help.
Thou alone can give the Name
And disposition to receive the Same.

Our ears are not ordinary clay ;
They actively obstruct the way.
By the pretence of being able to hear
The Divine Sound seeking to enter.

Sree Vyasa explained the Word
In his aphorisms and did record ;
But the worldly intellect of man
Would not receive the Name.

This is the plight of all animation ;
The Book of life to us is given,
But the perverse brain can never know
The Truth unless Himself doth show,

And so Thou hast come
To Make a gift to us of the Name,
To re-establish the religion
In this wretched Age of Iron.

The whole world is listening
To Thy utterances Divine ;
May Thou cleanse our eyes and hearts
To be enabled to act our parts.

Thou appeal'st to our reason ;
But we are mighty loth to open
Our ears, or hearts or eyes
Lest our worldliness we miss.

Political, social, racial Habits so fetter our souls
That we love the very disease
Which Thou would'st surely assuage.

Born and nursed in its gloom
The prison-cell of the body has grown
The cause for which we live
And deliberately our souls deprive.

May Thou have mercy on our souls
And free from the dungeon foul ;
May Thou make us love the Lord
By receiving from Thee the Name of God.

Hare Krishna Hare Krishna
Krishna Krishna Hare Hare
Hare Rama Hare Rama
Rama Rama Hare Hare.

This Name is the Dispensation
To the Iron Age Divinely given ;
Thou hast made available,
By the Will of God, to all.

I have known by Thy causeless grace
Sree Krishna Chaitanya alone can bless
With spontaneous love this degenerate Age
To sing Sree Krishna's Name and Praise.

For this only boon to Thee I pray,
On this most auspicious day,
Teacher Divine, may I never forget
To eternally serve Thy lotus feet.

Obeisance to the best-beloved of Krishna !
Obeisance to Nityananda, other Self of Chaitanya !
May Thou restore to us our faculty of love
Incorporating in Thy company the Lord to serve.

In all loyal obedience
YOUR DIVINE GRACE'S HUMBLE SERVANT.

Thakur Bhaktivinode

THE eighteenth anniversary of the disappearance of Thakur Sree Sachchidananda Bhaktivinode has been celebrated with all due solemnity at all the Maths of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha. It may not be out of place to note that Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha, or the Assembly of Sree Rupa Goswami, the greatest of the Vaishnavas, was established by Sree Jiva Goswami for the associated activities of the followers of Sree Rupa, of whom he is the foremost. The Sabha was renewed by Thakur Sree Sachchidananda Bhaktivinode for directing the propaganda of unalloyed devotion in the present Age pioneered by his own transcendental activities.

Thakur Sree Sachchidananda Bhaktivinode is the eternal servant of Sree Krishna to Whom the Name Sachchidananda is reserved by the Scriptures. The Brahma Samhita says, "Iswara Paramah Krishna Sachchidananda Bigrahah". "Krishna "is the Supreme Lord (Paramah Iswarah) Whose Form is the centre of Existence, Cognition and Bliss (sat, chit and ananda). Krishna's Form is identical with the Possessor of Form. Krishna's Form is Krishna Himself. In no other entity except Krishna all existence, all knowledge and all bliss are identical with their own centralised subjective nature. Thus the Personality of Krishna is the Absolute, the One without a second.

The Absolute is not devoid of Manifestation. On the other hand He is the only Subject of all manifestations. He is not Formless. In Him Form is identical with the very principle of existence and is not merely its manifestation. He is Indivisible Cognition and Bliss. His Form is the only Reality. His Form is the only Cognition and the only Bliss. He is pleased to receive the loving services of His Eternal Paraphernalia. He is Eternally Distinct from His Paraphernalia as the only Recipient of all their services

Those who imagine that the Absolute as Absolute can have no communion with His Paraphernalia, are landed into this hypothetical inconsistency by the process of measuring the relative. No mortal possesses the faculties by which the Absolute can be approached. The Absolute is the Subject-matter of the revealed Scriptures of the world. Those revelations are useless to men for the reason that men have apparently no faculties by which they can put themselves in communion with the Absolute. In this difficulty some of the most reckless intellectuals have attempted to make the Absolute submit to the scrutiny of their unreal speculations. All these conceited thinkers pretend to believe that He must necessarily be Formless, Neutral and devoid of every desire.

Such an ideal of the Nature of the Absolute is evidently due to the fear that unless the Absolute be deprived of His most characteristic organs and activities He might not be able to avoid the grossnesses to which the conditioned souls are subjected apparently by the very constitution of their nature. This groundless and illogical fear itself is due to want of faith in the Absolute. Or it may also be due to the disinclination to accept the consequences of such admission.

Thakur Bhaktivinode led the free unconventional life of the devotee of Sree Krishna. He did not want to deprive Krishna of His Enjoyments, as those who are not on the plane of the Absolute, profanely try to do. He knew, what no impersonalist can ever know, that it is possible to serve Krishna by every form of activity if one is really minded to serve Him at all. Those who are given to sensuous living, are apt to confound their sensuousness with the free service of Krishna.

The sensualist cannot avoid the inadequacies of such existence by any form of hypocritical dodges. He may put on the external dress of a sadhu and be assiduous in the performance of ritualistic practices. All this, in his case, only turns out a means of greater self-deception. We cannot avoid serving the Senses of Krishna without being punished by 'all the ills that flesh is heir to'.

It will not do to imitate the life of Thakur Bhaktivinode without the inclination to be absolutely freed from all sensuous hankering for the purpose of being permitted to serve Krishna on the highest plane which is free from all mundane sensuousness.

Thakur Bhaktivinode has recorded the secret of the service of Sree Krishna, in a sufficiently intelligible form that is bound to appeal to all really serving souls, in a series of immortal works that can be read by all who are disposed to study them with seriousness. Those works contain the advice for the actul service of Krishna as distinct from our present worldly occupations. The two cannot exist together. The angular vision is not identical with the vision characterised by the complete absence of all angularity. It will be a mistake to suppose that when the position of 180 degrees is reached we retain any angularity by extending the same. As a matter of fact there are no angular propositions at all on the plane of the transcendence.

The reciprocal serving entities of the Absolute are eternally co-present with the Absolute Himself. The disappearance of Thakur Bhaktivinode is part and parcel of his all-loving eternally enduring activities. His disappearance was exhibited to the view of the people of this world for curing their inclination for undergoing the mundane process of physical death. Those who consider the disappearance of the devotees as being on a level with the death of mortal bodies, have never devoted their serious attention to the function of the soul.

That, which seems to us to be the exact contradictory of Eternal Existence, is also accommodated in its wholesome position in the Real Existence. The sensuous worldling is naturally afraid of death. Death deprives the sensualist of all mundane acquisitions and facilities at a stroke. This is the greatest calamity that may befall a person who sets his store by those acquisitions. The false mask of religiosity is mercilessly torn to shreds, at any rate to the person undergoing the process of mundane dissolution, on the death-bed. The devotee is released, by an apparently identical process, from the pangs of loving separation apparently away from the sight of his Beloved.

It is an insufficient and fallacious view to suppose that the main purpose of the appearance of the eternal servants of the Lord in this world, is to deliver the fallen souls. That is a secondary issue which is automatically secured by the performance of the exclusive service of the Supreme Lord practised by the devotees under all circumstances. It is necessary to fix our attention on this only issue if we are to be enabled to form the true estimate of the activities of Thakur Bhaktivinode.

The secondary issue in his case is patent to the view of all persons and they are fraught with the most far-reaching consequences for this fortunate world. But the heart of Thakur Bhaktivinode is hid from the view of those people who are busy with these secondary manifestations. The gain to the world must not be estimated in terms of values capable of empiric presentation. They are the seeming aspect. The utilitarian standard requires to be laid aside in approaching the pure soul who serves the Absolute for the sake of serving him and not for any gain for himself or for the world. All forms of altruism is hateful to such a person as implying the absence of unalloyed love for the Lotus Feet of Krishna. This real nature of the eternal function can be learnt at the feet of a pure devotee.

Sankara versus Ramanuja

SREE Krishna Chaitanya, in pursuance of the eternal method or the only quest of the Absolute revealed by the Shastras, recommends the constant practice of the comparative method in attaining to the real view of the Truth. But most unfortunately there is a certain class of thoughtless persons who, although they profess to be the followers of the Teachers of the Absolute, are really opposed to any comparative treatment of the claims to our unconditional allegiance of those very Teachers. This is the favourite dodge of the pseudo-followers of those great Teachers.

It is quite easy and feasible to distinguish between the attitude of profane disrespect and one of genuine loyal inquisitiveness. No authority in the dogmatic sense must be tolerated in any serious religious discourse. The subject should be fully thrown open to be approached by all possible methods. This is permitted by Godhead Himself. It is our eternal natural spiritual right and no one has any power to infringe it under any plea whatever. We implore our readers to recognise the necessity of open discussion of all religious issues for the reason that progress in the solution of the real problem of existence is both imperative and feasible. This real freedom of spiritual communion has too long been jeopardized by the fanaticism and corrupt vested interests of the hypocrites and knaves who unfortunately always preponderate in this mundane world. Atheism can be fought only by the resources of our pure nature and not by the contrivances of ignorance and vice.

Sankara has been declared the most dangerous enemy of Vaishnavism, the Religion of pure spiritual service of the Divine Person Sree Narayana, in the most unmistakable terms, by Sree Ramanujacharyya and all his eminent followers. The Acharyyas always call a spade a spade. That is the sine qua non of the office of the Acharyya. That is also the distinguishing quality of Sankara himself as Acharyya. He has not spared any sect or opinion that had seemed to him to stand in the way of his views. Sree Ramanuja applied this method with no less thoroughness against the position of Sankara himself. Ramanuja's procedure may appear uncivil and discourteous to the hangerson of un-truth but will be appreciated as a most valuable service rendered to the Cause of Truth. For this service the personality of Sree Ramanuja is entitled to receive the spontaneous homage of all pure hearts.

We are unfortunately not in a position to accord the same honour to Sree Sankaracharyya. We admire Sankara for the subtlety of his extraordinary intellectual powers. We also owe him gratitude as having rendered a measure of indirect service to the Cause of Truth inspite of his intention to the contrary. But all these claims to our gratitude are nullified by his deliberate and implacable opposition to the Religion of service and to the personality of Godhead. It could not be pardoned by Sree Ramanujacharyya; it should not be pardoned by any real servant of Godhead.

The method of Sankara is in keeping with this object and was, indeed, devised by him for misleading those who are inclined to atheism. It is not the shrauta method. Neither is it the purely empiric method. It is an unnatural mixture of the two. It enabled him to pose as the friend of both Theists and Atheists. This pseudo-liberalism has secured the acceptance of his views by all "who, not intending to go beyond speculation," do not shrink from all sorts of absurd professions of impracticable courses. The greatest of these absurdities consists in this that it seeks to reconcile aversion to Godhead with service of Godhead. Under the ægis of Sankara this country has been saddled with a numerous sect of Atheistical bhaktas and the notion has spread that bhaktas are as plentiful as the proverbial blackberries. The Saiva bhaktas (?) make no secret of their avowed object of themselves becoming Saivas by their service of Siva.

We should, therefore, thank Sree Ramanuja for pointing out the great defects of Sankara in the most uncompromising terms. The shrauta method must not be permitted by any amount of bungling to be identified with the empiric. The service of Sree Narayana must not be permitted to be identified with the performance that seeks to transform the worshipper into the object of his worship, under the nomenclature of Sanatana (?) Dharma (Eternal Function ?). All this blasphemy has been fully exposed by the logic of Sree Ramanuja.

Sree Chaitanya and His followers do not deprecate the personality of Sankara but regard him, on Scriptural authority, to have been the portion of Siva himself carrying out the Purpose of the Supreme Lord for deluding those persons who are averse to Godhead and preventing them from having any access to the real meaning of the Scriptures. It is this negative service that has been performed by Sree Sankaracharyya by the Will of Sree Krishna Himself. Those who are deluded by the writings of Sree Sankara owe their past misdeeds. They are never disposed to value thet rue advice, which was perfectly well-known to Sankara but which he has never imparted in his writings.

Sree Ramanuja has established the Unity of the Absolute by the Scriptural evidence. It is not the Unity without any content, which is sought to be established by Sree Sankaracharyya as the Ultimate Principle. Sree Ramanuja is in search of a positive function and not the make-believe of one which leaves one free to enjoy the vanities of this world in any way one likes. The prescription of Sree Sankaracharyya seeks to deprive us of all positive function in favour of a vague hope that matters will come right at the long end in some inexplicable way. He gives us no peep into the realm of the reality but destroys the basis of the conventional regulations of organised secular society. This elasticity is no help to the spiritual ordering of the affairs of the world. It keeps everything open by the plea that any settlement would curtail our freedom of action. This is not bad so far as it is really applicable. But it becomes mischievous when it actually opposes the real settlement that is proposed by Sree Ramanuja. It is no doubt necessary to avoid all unreal settlement. But it is no less foolish to desire no real settlement on principle. It is dishonest when one professes to value real settlement but definitely accepts a conclusion that precludes all attempt at any settlement. It is this self-contradiction, which is never properly admitted by the impersonalist school under the professed authority of Sree Sankaracharyya, that has been stigmatized as hypocritical by the followers of both Ramanuja and Mahva.

Sree Ramanuja has exposed the fallacious nature of the conclusions of Sankara in regard to the Subjective Nature of Godhead by postulating the possession of Manifestive Power by the Absolute Person. The Subjective Reality does not undergo any change of substance. Manifestation of the Divine Power provides the Dynamics of the Transcendental Cosmos.

The doctrine of Maya, which is defined by Sankara, as an entity which is neither existent, nor non-existentor and as being both existent and non-existent cannot help him in explaining the relationship of the mundane phenomena to the Absolute. The Doctrine of the transformation of Power postulated by Sree Ramanuja offers a view that is both rational and in perfect agreement with the texts of the Scriptures bearing on the nature of the physical and mental worlds.

The distinctive difference between Sankara and Sree Ramanuja consists of the fact that according to the former the jiva or individual soul is identical with the Absolute Integer, whereas Sree Ramanuja affirms the Scriptural finding that the jiva is of the nature of spiritual potency of the Absolute Integer. This difference between the two has a most important bearing on the practical life of their respective followers. The followers of Sree Ramanuja consider themselves as the eternal servants of Sree Sree Lakshmi-Narayana, in their natural free spiritual condition. They accordingly place all their hopes on the grace of the Acharyya, the Representative of the Absolute for the deliverance of the fettered souls from the bondage of the Punitive Energy Maya. In the case of the followers of Sankara they ignore all difference between the disciple and the Guru in their real position and undergo a tentative discipleship on no consistent principle, because the so-called "liberated" jiva, according to Sankara, can have no function for enlightening others regarding the Absolute, as for him there is no such thing as a second entity in the shape of disciple.

The idealistic position taken up by Sankara is not admitted by his followers to be identical with that of Buddha for the reason that Sankara proved an opponent of Buddhism in his historical activities as a religious reformer and organiser of society. But philosophically speaking there is hardly any difference between the frank Atheism of Buddha and the equally thorough-going masked Atheism of Sree Sankaracharyya. Both are exclusive Monists and determined and consistent in their clear repudiation of spiritual service as the eternal function of the individual soul towards the Personal Godhead the common 'Religion' that is taught by all the revealed Scriptures of the world.

119 Rarely he drank milk some days ;
But even so he would drink only if any one gave him unasked.

120 In this manner Nityananda abode in Brindaban ;
When Gaurchandra manifested Himself in Nabadwip.

121 There was unceasing samkirtana, the supreme bliss ;
The Lord felt the agony of missing the sight of Nityananda

122 Nityananda became aware of the Self-
Manifestation of the Lord
In expectation of which, indeed, he was living in Brindaban.

123 Being thus apprised he forthwith came to the town of Nabadwipa
And arrived there, he put up at the house of Nandana Acharya.

124 Nandana Acharya saw the best of the highest devotees ;
He saw a vast assemblage of mighty energies like unto the Sun,

125 A towering Form in the garb of a great super-ascetic ;
In whom there was to be found a constant profundity and high fortitude.

126 His mouth uttered the Name of Hari night and day,—
Without a second in all the three worlds,
He the, Effulgence of Chaitanya.

127 Ever and anon He was wont to give forth deep ejaculations, for Self joy.
Most intoxicated, the embodiment as it were of Balarama.

128 His face was charmingly beautiful surpassing crores of moons ;
His smile was the life of the world, his lips most beautiful

129 The sheen of his beautiful teeth scorned
the lustre of pearls ;
His twin reddish expanded eyes shone with a charming light.

130 His arms reached to the knees, his bosom swelled high ;
His two most tender feet were highly skilled in gait.

131 He accosts all with a supreme mercy ;
The hearing of the word of his holy mouth destroys the fetters of worldly acts.

132 Unto the town of Nadia came Nityananda-rai ,
All the worlds burst forth into the pæans of his glory.

133 Who is there so stubborn can tell his greatness ?—
Of the Lord who broke the staff of Gaursundar ?—

134 Who delivered the trader, the base-born, the illiterate ?—
By the utterance of whose Name the whole world is sanctified ?

135 On finding him Nandanacharya, filled with great joy,
Made him stay in his house after providing the alms of food.

136 The advent of Nityanandachandra to Nabadwip
Who ever listens to, obtains the treasure of love.

137 Biswambhar was aware of the coming of Nityananda,
The Lord was gladdened in His Heart beyond measure.

138 Already on some plea, to all the Vaishnavas
He had thrown out the hint—but no one understood its significance.

139 "Lo, brethren, in course of two or three days
There will come to this place a great personage."

140 Providentially on that very day, after worshipping Vishnu, Gaurchandra came early to where the Vaishnavas had assembled.

141 The Lord Himself told to all present,—
"I have had today a most marvellous dream

142 "A chariot with the insignia of the palmyra tree, the quintessence of the world, Came on till it reached the gate of My House ; and there it stopped.

143 "Inside the same I beheld a towering Form
He carried a great column on his shoulder and moved restlessly.

144 "He had in his left hand a kamandalu strapped with cane ;
He was clad in blue and wore a blue head-dress.

145 "A most beautiful ornament depended from the base of his left ear ;
I thought his disposition to be like that of the Wielder of the Plough.

146 "Is this Nimai Pandit's House ? Is it His ?"
He repeated these words ten or twenty times ;

147 'Clad in the garb of a great super-ascetic, supremely non chalant ;—
Never have I seen one so boisterous.

148 "On beholding him I experienced a great reverence.
I asked, "What great person art thou ?"

149 "He laughed as he said to me, 'I am Thy brother ;
We will meet and know each other tomorrow'.

150 "My joy waxed strong on hearing his words ;
I felt Myself to be identical with Him."

The Icon

THE world is so much under the semitic idea of an undefinable Godhead that the term idolatry has come to acquire a connotation which is perhaps more hateful to the world than even open hostility to Divinity. Buddhism has been enabled to capture the imagination of the West by reason of its opposition to all worship in a tangible form. The traditional Muhammadan attitude to idolatry and rituals is well known. There is family resemblance in this respect between Buddhism, Protestantism and Islam. All of them are implacable foes of tangible worship.

Sree Krishna is Swayamrupa or the Absolute Personal Form. Godhead has an infinity of Personal and Impersonal Forms. His Own Form is Personal. The Personal Form of Sree Krishna is the embodied concentrated essence of the principles of Absolute Existence, Cognition and Bliss. The Form in Godhead is not an adjunct. The Form is Godhead Himself. The Impersonal Form is an attribute of the Personal and is not the substantive Entity. The Impersonal Form is of the nature of the Halo of the Person of the Divinity. Those, who do not admit the form of Godhead as being Godhead Himself or who suppose His Form to be only a passing manifestation of His Essence, are 'pashandas i.e., atheists and fit to be punished by the god of death.' In other words one who denies the Form of the Absolute commits the gravest of all offences against Godhead. The offender is punished by being incarcerated in the twin material bodies viz., the gross physical form and the subtle material body which he is deluded into supposing to be his own body. This is in accordance with the dictum of the Scriptures that an offence against Godhead recoils on the offender. The adventitious material bodies, in which the offending soul is incarcerated, effectively obliterate all consciousness of his own real spiritual form as well as that of the Divine Form Who can be served only by the reciprocal spiritual form of His worship.

Godhead is Form. He is not formless. The formless is a view of the Effulgence radiated by the Form. This effulgence acts as a blinding zone of pure blissful light encircling the form. This radiated Divine Effulgence has the quality of obscuring the vision of spiritual form of the individual soul bound on the quest of the Absolute. Arrived in this zone of light the seeker is apt to receive the overpowering impression that he has no individual form of his own and that he is one with the vast undifferentiated Effulgence. He is so fully satisfied on making this discovery that he has no mind to question the legitimacy of his overwhelming satisfaction.

True, the light emitted by the Divine drives away all worldly ignorance and misery and draws the purified soul unto itself. It is as if a great light draws to itself one of its own rays gone astray. What happens to the individual ray after it is merged in the great light, is left undescribed. No vocabulary, it is urged, can carry us into the mystic depths of existence inside the great light. This is the semitic psychology represented by the idea of the undefinable Personality of Godhead.

Persons under the influence of such mentality are apt to be disinclined to accept any concrete description of the form and doings of Godhead. They prefer to make their obeisances to the Zone of light and do not consider it their duty to be over-curious or to peer into its hidden secrets. But the realm of light, according to both the Koran and the Bible, is inhabited by an infinite host of angels with bodies of light who eternally serve Godhead and have an uninterrupted view of Him in His Divine Realm. But beyond this admission no clue is supplied to the details of the actual Divine Form or of those of His servitors. The very attempt to form any conception of the Divine Form or to describe or represent Him or His angels to mortal ear or mortal eyes is condemned as an idolatrous activity.

It is also considered an offence to describe the Form and Activities of Godhead even analogously in terms of mortal experience.

This caution is salutory only within its proper limits. If it tantamounts to the denial of the Divine Form or to the assertion that Godhead is formless it strikes at the very root of all real spiritual activity. The worship practised by avowed or covert impersonalists and abstractionists is in principle indistinguishable from opposition to worship itself under a hypocritical concern for the preservation of its purity. The fury against idolatry often masks this sentiment of inveterate hostility to the very principle of worship.

An offence that is attempted against Godhead recoils on the offender with ten-fold severity. If Godhead is denied His Form the offender is punished by addiction to the gross conception that the physical body and mind are his own real form and this conception leads its victim to the vicious round of his worldly activities. Every item of such worldly activity is the punishment for the denial of the corresponding activity to the Lord. This is verily the hypocrites' Hell. The prayers of impersonalists offend the Lord more than the denunciations of His avowed enemies.

It should be our only object to act up to the real nature of our own true selves and not to adopt the concerns of the non-self as our own. Self-realisation is the concomitant of our realisation of the true Nature of Godhead. The one is necessarily connected with the other. If we are disposed to stop short of the full realisation of the nature of our own selves we are also denied the sight of Godhead as He really is. Or the point may be better put in the other way. Godhead is to be fully served. Any service short of the real function lands us on the plane of the unreality. The speculations regarding the Nature of the Absolute, of persons who do not serve Him with all their faculties, are no true conceptions of the Divinity as He really is. On the contrary they only represent His deluding faces. These deluding faces must not be confused with the infinity of His Real faces. These two spheres lie completely apart from one another.

We have no business with the impersonalists and idealists who deny the necessity of tangible worship, any more than with the grosser sect of idolators who worship the objects of this world to gratify the cravings of their sensuous natures.

But it is our business to seek to find the Divine Form. There is no other worthy function for the faculty of our vision. It is true that the Divine Form is not open to the view of our mortal eyes. The activity of our fleshy eyes is, however, the perverted form of the corresponding wholesome activity of our spiritual eyes. It will not do to refuse to see at all. Nor will it improve matters if we choose to imagine that what we see with our fleshy eyes or by our subtle mental eyes is Godhead. If we adopt either worldly realism or worldly idealism as our goal we would be equally liable to the charge of being opposed to the real service of the Divinity. It is necessary to find the real, positive function of the soul. The soul is neither body nor mind. The soul is categorically different from either. The function of the soul can, therefore, be no function of the body and mind.

In this world the function of the mind is superior to but not independent of that of the body in certain respects of scope and quality. But they are essentially one as well as complementary. The one is the subtler continuation of the other. The mental form is nevertheless, comparatively speaking, freer from gross unwholesomeness that is palpable in the bodily function. This grossness of the more tangible entity is reversed in the Absolute. Divine form is superior to any real spiritual conception.

Sree Krishna possesses the fullest initiative. He comes to us across all the barriers of the cosmic arrangements. He is Autocrat. No rules, not even the principles of moral living which we value so much for widening the scope of our worldly activities, can enable our tiny souls to be elevated to His Plane. If we put our faith in any rules that are necessary for the freer working of our bodies and minds, for obtaining the sight of Krishna we would be debarred from His sight by those very reservations. It is necessary to seek for the sight of Krishna. That should be our first and only endeavour. We can have no real function for our souls till we are face to face with the Divinity.

Sree Krishna shows Himself to those who prefer His Service to any other occupation. The Divine Form worshipped by the theists is not any concoction of the human brain. The worship of the Divine Form by the resources of our bodily and mental existence is the only real worship. If we do not worship the Divine Form by all our bodily and mental organs those organs are compelled to perform worldly activities that lead to ignorance and misery by depriving us of the sight of the Divinity, all inclination for His service and the consciousness of our real selves.

The Paravidya-peetha

IT is well known to the reader of these pages that an institution bearing the name of Paravidya-peetha has been established at Sridham Mayapur under the auspices of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha and has been in actual working for a number of years. It has an exoteric aspect which comes before the public occasionally in connection with the Goverment Sanskrit Examinations to which it regularly sends up several batches of pupils.

But the Paravidya-peetha does not really concern itself, except in a secondary and external way, with education as imparted by the institutions set up for the diffusion of Empiric knowledge. Those critics, who confine their observations to the aspect of empiric academics offered by the Institution, appreciate the good work implied by the apparent effort for keeping alive the traditions of a wonderful culture which is a source of legitimate national pride. It is not the purpose of the present article to deal with the Institution as viewed by an empiricist.

The Paravidya-peetha seeks to impart the knowledge of the Absolute, by the Shastric method, to those students who are found to seek for Him. The actual number of such students is not very large. It is of course the object of the Institution to attract all persons to the endeavour for spiritual culture from a tender age when they are yet uncontaminated by the current empiric sophistries of their surroundings.

The guardians of the boys ordinarily send their wards to the Institution for the purpose of picking up empiric knowledge at a cheap price. Sanskrit study is at a low ebb now-a-days as it is not economically a paying concern. It is only the most unpromising cadets of the poorest Brahmana families who are sent for Sanskrit education from an early age. The boys know that they are in high request by the Academies in an Age when nobody is willing to receive such education. They accordingly prove truant and ungovernable. This temperament of the boys is in keeping with the policy of their guardians in this country who oppose the employment of their wards in any way that is not intended for the mere passing of the University Examinations.

This is the nature of the material and the conditions under which the Paravidya-peetha has set itself to build up a system of education upon unconditional submission of the pupil to the bona fide spiritual preceptor for realising the causeless service of the Absolute.

Most students of the Paravidya-peetha are employed in a variety of duties for diffusing spiritual culture all over the world. All of them are not masters of the Sanskrit culture in its worldly sense. The highest degree of any University of this world can only testify to the presumed possession of a measurable knowledge of particular branches of empiric studies. The diplomas of Vedic studies conferred by these Universities are no exception to this rule. An empiric scholar of the Veda does not realise the Nature of the Absolute any more than one who is altogether innocent of such scholarship.

Para Vidya has been carefully distinguished from A-Para Vidya. The Vedic Samhitas have been classed, along with all other branches of the Sanskrit literature, under the category of A-Para Vidya. It is true that the Vedas are the record of revealed transcendental knowledge. This knowledge is not available to scholars who are equipped with information that enables them to pass an empiric examination on the subject. The so-called knowledge of the Vedic scholar is not any knowledge of the Absolute.

Had it been necessary to study the Vedas in the empiric sense for acquisition of the knowledge of the Absolute then such knowledge would be an indispensable condition for the attainment of the service of the Absolute. Such a proposition is, however, in flat contradiction to the teaching of the Vedas themselves.

The Vedas are not dead writings. The Absolute Knowledge is identical with Godhead Himself. The Absolute Knowledge is identical with the Transcendental Sound appearing on the lips of the bona fide devotee. The Absolute Knowledge alone can impart Himself. No mundane agency can confer any knowledge of the Absolute. The Absolute reveals Himself to all persons who submit unconditionally to receive Him from the lips of the Guru who is the authorised agent of the Absolute.

These conditions of real Vedic study are complied with in the process of education that is imparted to the Brahmacharins and Vanaprasthas, i.e. to those persons who have surrendered themselves completely at the feet of the Preceptor. The Chaitanya Math with its affiliated branches are seminaries of spiritual culture imparted to their inmates by the really pure devotees of the Absolute. It is not money that can build up the Paravidya-peetha. Souls are wanted to avail themselves of the mercy of the suddha bhaktas by the method of unconditional submission for receiving the knowledge of the Absolute. On this condition real enlightenment is open to all persons irrespective of caste, creed or colour.

The life, that has to be led by the inmates of these Maths, is what is enjoined by the Shastras. The cardinal point is that the student must have no connection with the outside world including his parents, relations and friends. This strict residential condition is not imposed by the provision of any penal regulations. It is voluntary agreement on both sides and terminable without notice. Unless the student is a consenting party the Maths do not permit his residence. The desire of guardians for the admission of their wards is, for the spiritual purpose, only a formality. The guardians may share the spiritual process by adopting the residential regulations of the Maths for their own domestic and social living. The student may pick up the taste for the conditions of residential living by their actual experience of such living and by the force of association with the inmates of the Maths.

These Maths are organised on the plan of an ideal household of which all activities are directed exclusively to the worship of Shree Shree Radha-Govinda and which consists of members who have no other tie in the world except that of subordination to the spiritual Guide. The members are all males. They are to do whatever they are asked. There are no definite duties for any inmate. The Maths have definite aims. They seek to spread the true worship of Godhead by sharing their own worship with all the people of their neighbourhoods. The worship consists of several functions. The Holy Bigrahas are worshipped daily by the method of rituals to the accompaniment of the Chant which is the principal element. There is also exposition of the Career of Shree Chaitanya as the Concrete and Intelligible Embodiment of the highest teaching of the Bhagavátam. There are also discourses and lectures. All these functions are performed to the accompaniment of the Chant which consists of famous songs of devotees sung in chorus with music and dance. The funds are supplied by sympathisers on the voluntary basis and by regular begging by the inmates this last being a most important part of their training. No meat, fish, onion or other food, not conducive to swatvika living and not prescribed as fit offering for Vishnu, are allowed. All food is offered to Godhead and the remains of the Lord's Meal are honoured by all as His Mahaprasadam (i. e., the Great Favour). All other arrangements are in accordance with this central plan and a part of it.

No women is allowed to live in the Maths. The plan in regard to the spiritual training of women is that they may attend the exposition-classes in the company of their guardians and also participate in an external way in the services of the Maths, to an extent, on the special occasions of Festivals when such help is capable of being utilised under proper safeguards. In other words the policy is to keep the sexes segregated from one another as much as possible. It is inculcated that a woman should serve Godhead by trying to introduce the ideal of the Math-life into her own household.

The inmates of the Math are not the only associations for spiritual training. There are organised preaching parties who regularly tour all parts of the country under the lead of the Sannyasi Maharajas of the Mission. The students are put under the Sannyasi Teachers to serve their terms in acquiring experience of outside conditions in such service.

The conditions of life in the Maths and preaching parties do not degenerate into the routine performance of mechanical rituals on the one hand or into sophistical pedantry and hypocritical immorality or nauseating neurotics on the other by these provisions suiting every type of temperament. The life in the Maths is lifted to the higher plane by incorporation into the spiritual service of the Divine Couple by the accepted members of the Mission exercising authority over these Institutions.

The intellectual exterior of these devotional activities is provided for on an adequate scale. The Mission is a most active publishing body of original books and periodicals in different languages, including a Daily Paper in Bengali, all of which are devoted exclusively to the subject of Religion. The superb editions of the older Shastric works, that have been produced by the Gaudiya Mission, show a depth of erudition and grasp of the subject that are unique in every respect.

The Paravidya-peetha is the only Institution in the whole world that can rationally claim to be free from all sectarian and pedantic self-sufficiency. The absence of all rigid conventionalism, observable in the perfectly pure lives of the inmates of these Households of Krishna, has a sanctifying effect on all open-minded persons who come in personal contact with these Maths and is recognisable on closer acquaintance as a Force that is equal to the task of reclaiming all fallen souls from the evils of ignorance and misery.

Sree Pundarik Vidyanidhi

THE externality of an activity, consisting of its exoteric or physical and esoteric or mental faces, is to be carefully distinguished from the function of the soul. Godhead can be approached and served only by the faculties of the soul. The soul has his spiritual body and mind. The pure soul is also capable of disclosing his eternal form and activity to the view of mortals. But as the faculties of the conditioned soul are in a dormant condition he cannot approach the pure soul on the spiritual plane. When he is favoured with the view of Godhead and His angels he is apt to suppose that Godhead and His messengers have bodies and minds resembling his own. This conception is dissipated only by the awakening of his soul when his spiritual faculties come into play and are rewarded by the vision of the devotee as he really is. Thereafter he no longer supposes Godhead or His devotee to have bodies and minds like those of mortals.

It is also an offence to suppose that the angels incarnate in the mortal vestures in order to appear among men as man and share in their sufferings. The angels of Godhead appear among men without putting on the mortal vesture. They appear in their own eternally pure forms notwithstanding the unaminous testimony of all their worldly spectators to the contrary. It is by the appearance of the servitors of Godhead, as they are, in the very midst of mortals and apparently within reach of their worldly vision that they reveal the service of Godhead in the form that is capable of being accepted and practised by mortals while they are enveloped in their double physical cases of the material body and mind. But inspite of this almost direct communion between angels and men, made possible by grace, the two really belong to quite distinct categories and it is an offence against the eternal servants of the Lord to suppose that they are subject to the frailties of the human nature and have to undergo the processes of mortal birth and death as the punishment of their previous godless activities as happens to be the case with mortal beings.

Sree Pundarik Vidyanidhi, the subject of this short narrative, was one of the principal associates of Sree Chaitanya. Pundarik belongs to the category of the 'superiors' of Sree Chaitanya. He was the disciple of Sree Madhabendra Puri, the Guru of Sree Iswar Puri from whom Sree Chaitanya exhibited the pastime of receiving initiation in the mantra.

Sree Pundarik Vidyanidhi has been identified with Sree Brishabhanu, father of Sree Radhika, of the Braja Leela. He made his appearance in this world in the village of Mekhala two miles East of Hat-hazari thana which is situated twelve miles to the north of Chittagong. His father's name is Baneswar Brahmachari. The name of his mother is Gangadevi. Baneswar is a descendant of Sibaram Gangopadhyaya. Pundarik's consort's name is Ratnavati. The Supreme Lord addressed Pundarik as 'father' and gave him the title of 'Premanidhi'. Pundarik is the Guru of Srila Gadadhar Pandit Goswami and the intimate friend of Sree Damodar Swarup.

The following particulars regarding Sree Pundarik Vidyanidhi are found in the Chaitanya Bhagabat and Chaitanya Charitamrita. He is called by several alternative names e.g., Vidyanidhi, Acharyyanidhi, Bhakti-Vidyanidhi, Premanidhi. He had a residence in Sree Mayapur quarter of Sree Nabadwip for the purpose of academic activities in the metropolis of learning and for residing in the neighbourhood of the Ganges. Premanidhi had a great regard for the Ganges. Unlike the followers of fruitive work (Smartas) who are indefatigable in bathing in the Ganges for being freed from their sins, Premanidhi abstained altogether from such bathing for the reason that it would be a great offence to touch the holy water with his feet. He paid his homage to the Ganges by visiting the holy stream during night. He never saw the Ganges during day-time in order to avoid the sight of persons who washed their dirty limbs in her stream which issues from the Feet of Krishna.

Vidyanidhi was a scholar and had opened an academy at Sree Mayapur in which he used to teach his pupils. With the exception of two persons, viz., Mukunda and Vasudeb Dutta, no one knew that Vidyanidhi was a devotee of Krishna. The external conduct of Vidyanidhi was the exact opposite of that of the devotees who follow the rules of the Shastras.

Gadadhar Pandit was of the same age with Sree Chaitanya. He was spontaneously averse to all worldly attachments from his very infancy. He had never any taste for anything else except the service of Krishna by all the faculties of his pure soul. Mukunda had a great regard for Gadadhar. Vidyanidhi resided in Chittagong and occasionaly came to Nabadwip. When Vidyanidhi came to Nabadwip on one of his visits Mukunda informed Gadadhar of the arrival of a great devotee and proposed that he would take Gadadhar to him as Gadadhar was always eager to have a sight of pure devotees.

Gadadhar found Vidyanidhi to be so unlike a devotee in his external conduct that he thought that he could not be a Vaishnava at all. Gadadhar found Vidyanidhi comfortably seated on a beautifully made couch on which was spread a great quantity of the most costly cushions and the best silks. There was a great number of the softest pillows of different sizes draped in silk. The fine bed had a triple canopy with an exquisite curtain. Rich caskets full of carefully prepared betels were placed within his reach and also goodly mirrors. The room was most sumptuously fitted up. There were serval costly jharis and a richly decorated dola was kept ready as conveyance. Vidyanidhi had a most beautiful person which was attended to with great assiduity. His hair was exquisitely combed. His dress was of the finest quality. He resembled a great prince rolling in luxury. He was constantly chewing the betel and looked into the mirrors and appreciated with a smiling face the redness of his lips.

Gadadhar misunderstood the real nature of Vidyanidhi. Mukunda noticed the thought in the mind of Gadadhar. In order to dispel his doubt Mukunda began to sing the shlokas in the Bhagabatam about Putana. "How can a person be without love for Krishna Who was grateful for the motherly affection of Putana for Himself and rewarded her by conferring the position of a mother although she had made Him suck the poison which had been applied to the nipples of her breasts which she offered to the Divine Infant by feigning the affection of a mother ?"

This went to the heart of Vidyanidhi. He was so struck with the sense of his guilt for having no love for Krishna that he could not avoid giving vent to his remorse which made him forget every other consideration. The coverlets, pillows, canopies, caskets were all kicked away. His costly apparel was torn to shreds. Vidyanidhi lost his senses and rolled disconsolate on the bare ground and was not calmed till full six hours of the day had passed.

Gadadhar expressed to Vidyanidhi his sorrow for doubting his devotion and Mukunda interceded for pardon for his offence. Vidyanidhi clasped Gadadhar in his arms drenching his body with his copious tears. Gadadhar then prayed through Mukunda for the favour of initiation from Vidyanidhi who was pleased to accede to the request. Gadadhar, the most intimate associate of Sree Chaitanya from His Infancy, is identified with Sree Radhika of the pastimes of Sree Krishna.

Ramblings

HAVING been born in a Kulin Brahmin family I learnt from my very early life to look down upon Vaishnavas and only a short time ago I held the view that the present degenerate condition of Bengal was due in no small measure to the religious Teachings of Sree Chaitanya. Thank God, I have lived to change my ideas, having been fortunate enough to come in contact with true Vaishnavas. A short sketch of the circumstances through which I had to pass before I could submit myself to the Gaudiya Vaishnavas is of the nature of a duty that I owe to myself, to the pure Vaishnavas and to the public at large.

Sometime in July 1928 I saw an ascetic of the Gaudiya Math for the first time at Dhanbad. One evening a meeting was held in the Dhanbad Town Hall where all the gentry of the town were present and Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Padip Tirtha Maharaj was delivering a lecture on 'Duties of souls'. In the midst of his lecture when the Swamiji was saying, "Vaishnavas should be simple and free from hypocrisy etc." I had the audacity to stand up with a view to put certain questions; but I was made to sit down as it was not thought proper to disturb the speaker in the midst of speech. The Swamiji, however, agreed to listen to me at the close of the meeting. As the meeting continued a little late in the night I had not the patience then to wait so long and the Swamiji thus found me absent when the meeting was over.

The next morning, however, a gentleman came to my residence at H— and informed me that the Swamiji who was putting up near the railway station, had sent him for taking me to him. I told the young graduate, a brother of a friend of mine, that I had no time to see any Swamiji then as I was busy in writing up my office report. My attitude towards this young man at the time was anything but friendly for the reason that he was found counting beads with his body marked with tilaks. I often passed uncharitable remarks against him to his brother for his Vaishnavism. I got an opportunity of delivering a religious sermon to him by saying that I was following the religion more by earning money and maintaining my family than he by counting beads and marking his body with tilaks. I now understand how people may sometimes commit offence by pronouncing opinions on matters about which they have no specific knowledge. The present system of education is also responsible for this distrust of symbolism in religion. I, however, expressed my desire to see the Swamiji in the afternoon if possible.

In the afternoon I went to the quarters of Babu N—who happened to be a neighbour of mine. Here I met N—Babu and A—Babu. As the Swamiji was absent at Jheria, A—Babu wanted to know my questions which were :—
(1) How can ordinary people like ourselves distinguish between real and false Sadhus ?

(2) What would be the result if a really good man falls into the hands of a psendo-guru and what if the reverse ?

(3) What, if both are good or both are bad.

I had already thought out the reply for myself and when I found that they were corroborated by A—Babu I came to have some regard for him and was just going to leave the place, when the Swamiji came in. I found them all uttering shouts of greeting, singing praise to somebody. I thought the Swamiji was singing his own praise. I now know that they were all singing glory to Sree Guru Deva. From what little I could hear from the lips of the Swamiji, I considered him to be a most haughty and insolent person whose only business was to find fault with other religious sects. Besides when I heard that he was busy in collecting money, I could not take him to be a Sadhu at all. While leaving the place I was asked to purchase some of the publications of the Math but I did not think it prudent to waste my money in that way. After this I did not hear anything more about the Gaudiya math for about three years.

Soon after this I went to P—on transfer where the Kirtan of a renowned singer (Kirtanya) was being held in many places. One morning I went to the Bankipur Hari Sabha where the Bhagabata was being read and explained. The subject matter was the birth of Sree Krishna and I enjoyed it most, shedding profuse tears. The reason for my shedding of tears was that my eyes are naturally effusive. I cannot go through a sentimental portion in a novel without shedding copious tears. One day the Kirtan was being held at Gobghar just near my residence and I with my family went to hear it. The subject this day was 'Kunja Bhanga'. I was sitting beside Professor S—who was a friend of mine. After sometime I was telling him that it was impossible for me to stay on and I must go away. The words uttered by the speaker could not have any but the vilest meaning for me and perhaps also for the majority of the audience although the speaker was trying every time to impress on the mind of his hearers that the words had a spiritual meaning. I was thinking in my mind that if I had the power I would have stopped the Kirtan then and there and inflicted exemplary punishment on the speaker for undermining the morals of the people in that way. Besides what would people, belonging to another religion, think of the Hindu religion after hearing such Kirtan ? I then left the place in the midst of the performance.

Shortly after this I met with a bad Railway accident at S—in May 1929 when two Inter class compartments were blown off the line and fell over the high bank and I was a passenger in one of them. My scapula was fractured and it took me three months to recover from the effects of the injury. It was after the accident that I came to have some sort of a real faith in God when I felt that in my helpless condition after the accident my life had been saved in a most miraculous way by the direct interposition of Providence.

I was reciting the Gita from my early life but now I felt that the following of the teachings of the Gita in life and not only reading it, was imperatively necessary. I think I turned over a new leaf from that time.

After my recovery I came to B—. Here I came across a copy of James Allen's "The Life Triumphant". Before this also I had read some of the works of Mr. Allen and now I became his admirer. Then I purchased the following books :—

1. Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita, Basumati Edition.
2. From Poverty to Power By James Allen.
3. Life's Inspiration By Lily Allen. (Mrs. James Allen)
4. वाणी By Rajani Sen
5. कल्याणी Do
6. Gitanjali By Dr. Rabindra Nath Tagore.

These books with the Geeta and some of the Sanskrit slokas which are recited at Sabarmati Ashram of Mahatma M. K. Gandhi, I used to read every morning. I became such an admirer of Mr. Allen that I thought that I had found out a Guru in him and that I was going to share in his "The Life Triumphant". I was now self-sufficient and was anxious to help others.

It was at a time like this that in Feb. 31, I was transferred to C—. I once went to the Satchidananda Math and met Prof. N—who asked me to come to the Math in the evening to hear Kirtan but I could not do this as my residence was at some distance from the Math.

In April, 31, I was transferred to P—and remained there till the end of July 1931. A day or two before the Ratha Jatra, while leaving my office, I met Rai Bahadur S—who had come to P— to see the festival. In the course of our conversation he referred to the Gaudiya Math saying that their main Math was at Mayapur (Navadwip) and that the Sadhus of the Math were really good persons having no connection with females etc. I was interested to hear this. He then wanted me to accompany him to the Purushottam Math, a branch of the Gaudiya Math that evening to hear the recitation of the Bhagabata. I readily agreed and in the evening I with the Rai Bahadur went to the Math where the chapter dealing with the stealing of thickend milk (क्षीर) by Gopinath in Sree Charitamrita was read and explained by Tridandi Swami Srimad Bhakti Vivek Bharati Maharaj. We were both very much impressed by hearing the recitation.

Shortly after this I came back to C—and this time it so happened that my residence was just attached to the Satchidananda Math. The annual anniversary ceremony of the Math also commenced at this time and four of the Tridandi Sannyasins of the Gaudiya Math including Bharati Maharaj were present. I had the opportunity to hear Kirtan and recital of the Bhagabat from the lips of Bharati Maharaj for a number of days. I also used to see Prof. N—in the Math and discuss religious matters with him at times. I was gradually being attracted towards Vaishnavism as preached by the Gaudiya Math which appeared to me to be so very different from what I had known Vaishnavism to be so long and against which I had all along cherished such a strong prejudice.

After the annual ceremony was over all the Sannyasi Maharajas left C—except Srimad Bhakti Srirup Puri Maharaj. In the beginning I took him to be the juniormost among the Sannyasins, as he appeared to be so simple and unostentatious. I, however, found him easy of approach at all times and used to put to him all sorts of questions about religion. I was gradually attracted towards him by being satisfied to find that his replies could remove my doubts in all cases. What struck me most was that he was never annoyed with me at my repeated questioning. I used to pass the major portion of my time in his company hearing Harikatha from his lips. As a true Vaishnava Swamiji often used to tell me that he was not at all learned and wished me to hear Harikatha from the other more learned Swamijis at Calcutta and from his Guru Maharaj.

At this time the religious exhibition of the Gaudiya Math was being held at Calcutta and it was by the advice of Puri Maharaj that I went to Calcutta to see the exhibition on one day's leave. It was on this occasion that I first saw His Divine Grace Paramahansa Srila Srimad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj and listened to Harikatha from his lips from 4-30 P. M. to 9-30 P. M. on 20. 9. 31. I left the Math with the impression that after all I had found out a real Sadhu. Among those present that day was Lt. Col. Dr. D. P. Goil, I. M. S. Principal of the Calcutta Medical College. Next morning I came to the Gaudiya Math and remained there the whole day.

On my return to C—I missed the company of Srila Puri Maharaj who had in the meantime left for Calcutta. His absence was felt by me most keenly and I wrote a letter to him that very day to which he also very kindly sent a reply.

The Puja holidays came and I had a mind to spend it in good company. I saw N—at his residence who also advised me to go to the Gaudiya Math and then to his Guru Maharaj who was in the up-country at the time. He preceded me by a day or two. On arriving in Calcutta I could not, however, go to the Math but started for my home.

I met some of the Bramacharins of the Gaudiya Math on my way on board the steamer who gave me to understand that Tridandi Swami Aranya Maharaj was also going in the same steamer with them to L—, which was only 2 miles off from my native village. I was very happy to hear this and met Swamiji Maharaj who very kindly recited Harikatha for some time and advised me to see him at L—the next day. I arrived home the next morning and immediately started in a boat for L—. I met Srila Aranya Maharaj there who also expecting me. We then went to the house of Dr. N—where Swamiji explained to us the first few slokas of Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita. He also made a nice distinction between the worship of Durga or Mahamaya and Joga Maya or the Spiritual Power of Godhead. I returned home in the evening and felt that the day was well spent.

It now became necessary for me to go on a month's leave. I thought of spending the leave in the company of Sadhus, consulted Prof. N—and was advised by him to see Tirtha Maharaj in Calcutta and to act according to his advice. I was reminded of my hostility towards him at Dhanbad and welcomed the idea of making amends. Arriving in Calcutta I enquired from the Gaudiya Math on the phone if Tirtha Maharaj was there but was informed that he had gone to Sreedham Mayapur. I then went home.

On the expiry of my leave I joined my work at P—in the middle of December, 1931. This time I used to go to the Purushottam Math almost daily and had the opportunity of hearing Harikatha from Sadhus there. I now became very anxious to have my Diksha (initiation) from Srila Prabhupad.

An opportunity presented itself when I was informed that His Divine Grace was proceeding to Madras. On the 8th January, 1932. I accompanied Nadiananda Brahmachary Prabhu of Purushottam Math to C—by the Puri Express and there at 1 A. M when the Madras Mail arrived from Calcutta we could have a sight of His Divine Grace. On this occasion I was supremely favoured by His Divine Grace who was pleased to impart to me the Sree Nama and was also pleased to explain to me the ten offences against Sri Nama. I now know that His Divine Grace showered His causeless mercy on an unworthy and fallen creature. The next morning I returned to P—from Khurda Road. At P—we were expecting to have a sight of His Divine Grace once again but he did not come. I then left for Ch—on transfer. From here with one week's leave I went to the Gaudiya Math in Calcutta and thence to Sridham Mayapur (Nabadwip). I returned to Calcutta on the Vyas Puja day and witnessed the grand ceremony there. His Divine Grace however, was absent in Madras on the occasion for the first time and so I had to come back disappointed. From Ch—I came to B—on the 17th March, 1932, and on the 19th I started for Sreedham Mayapur where I intended to witness the celebration of the Birth Day Anniversary of Sriman Mahaprabhu on the 22nd and also to see if I could receive the favour of initiation from His Divine Grace. Halting for a day or two in Calcutta I reached Sreedham Mayapur in the evening on the 21st March. The next morning while I was passing by Bhakti Bijoy Bhaban, Acharyyatrika Sripad Kunjabehary Vidyabhushan addressed me and said, "M—Babu, I have spoken to His Divine Grace and He has agreed to give you initiation".

The joy in my mind on hearing these words knew no bounds. For a moment I could hardly believe what I had heard. I at once ran to Sri Chaitanya Math and returned to the Bhakti Bijoy Bhaban. His Divine Grace was pleased to impart to me the holy Mantras and my heart's desire was fulfilled.

I now have no other desire than to hope for advancing in my life of Divine Service through the causeless mercy of His Divine Grace by having unflinching faith to the Lotus Feet of Sri Gurudev and by being able to serve Hari, Guru and the Vaishnavas through the power of Service bestowed on me by His Divine Grace.

The Mystery of Creation

GODHEAD, is inferred by the rationalising faculty of conditioned souls as the final cause of this manifest world. This inference also seeks to incorporate Godhead with mundane phenomena by assigning Him a mundane nature. This objectionable process is sought to be set forth in a plausible form by means of all the poetry and philosophy of our worldly outlook. Persons, who are unduly addicted to the things of this world, require a justification of this worldly course. They accordingly approach problem of creation of this mundane world with this foregone conclusion. The so-callod argument from design illustrates this prejudiced attitude towards the all-important problem. It assumes that this world is ideally good place and, therefore, its maker is also full of all goodness. It also imagines a source of evil that necessarily exists independently of Godhead and supposes that this second entity is responsible for all the miseries that afflict us here. It further infers the nature of Godhead Himself from our experience of the good i.e. enjoyable side of this world and in a fit of causeless gratitude, exempts Him from all responsibility for the evils the prevalence of which can not be denied. The hardened worldlings are inclined to think that the world is an all-round good place and there is no evil and no Satan in it. These persons are the rank worshippers of everything mundane for its own sake and are also not at all disposed to question the propriety of such a course. This is the real materialistic attitude. These unreserved lovers of phenomenal Nature include some of the greatest of our poets, philosophers and thinkers. They are never weary of singing the glories of Mother Nature and hope to receive their all from Her Bountry.

But there are dissentients who hold a differet opinion on the subject. The Hebraic thought is not optimistic. The generality of the old Indian sages are also pessimistic in their estimate of these benevolent gifts of 'Mother' Nature. They, indeed, brand her as a witch and demoness. The conception of a Satan by the semitics is due to the consciousness of the real existence of evil. Hebraic thought does not declare the mundane world to be wholly bad in itself but as corrupted by Satan. They cherish the hope that the world will one day be cleansed of its evil and thereby become identical with Heaven or Paradise ensuring the uninterrupted felicity of all its residents. This world is really loved. It is also regarded as being on the whole a really lovely place. But its enjoyability is checked and thwarted by the preventible prevalence of evil. This world is an unnatural mixture of both evil and good principles. Its good principles require to be established in their pristine purity by the elemination of all evil. Freed from the barren of evil the innate goodness of this mundane creation will proclaim the glory of its creator in the befitting manner. This much-desired consummation is supposed as being thwarted at present by one of the quondam servants of Godhead Himself, viz., Satan who is doing all this mischief for gratifying his causeless hostility to Godhead and to this perfect world. Satan is allowed by Godhead to practise his villanies against the otherwise innocent but inherently helpless inhabitants of this ideal realm.

The Hebraic conception of the nature of the phenomenal world falls in with the theory of its creation by Godhead at a certain definite period of time. It is held to have been created originally as an ideal place of residence for all His creatures. But this Great Purpose of the Creator was not destined to be fulfilled. The tragedy has been due to the invasion of Satan, the embodiment of all evil. But Godhead will triumph over Satan in the long run and re-establish His Absolute Rule over this world as it actually prevails in Heaven.

The point, that calls for notice in regard to the above theories advocating or denying a so-called creation, is that the world is admitted to contain certain positive principles of goodness. Those, who disbelieve the theory of a creation, assert that the material world is perfect as it is and that there is no incongruity to be got rid of. This perfect nature of the world, according to these thinkers, is gradually unfolding itself to our cultured minds by the triumphant progress of scientific knowledge and the day is not very distant when Science will eliminate all contrary misapprehensions regarding this world and make it the consciously realisable, tangible Paradise that it really is and deserves to be if only we agree to be happy. There is no Godhead apart from this world. Or rather the Principle known as Godhead is no other than the world itself. There is no occasion for pessimism. The evil is subjective, apparent and temporary. The good is real, innate and permanent. Our business is to love this world with the fullest unhesitating ardour and everything will come right through such love.

The Bhagabatam does not endorse the semitic view of creation but for a very different reason from that of the materialist. It puts before us a very complicated positive proposition. This world is not Godhead, nor is it all a good place in itself. There is a personal Godhead. Godhead is present in this world without being of it. Godhead is comparable to the Sun, this world is like darkness. This world consists of the principles of real apparent good and real apparent evil. None of these principles can furnish any clue to the Transcendental Absolute Nature of Godhead. On the contrary both of them act as obstacles to prevent the sight of Godhead as He really is.

The difference is not one of degree. It is one of categories. Is this world really a good place fit to be our permanent abode ? The Bhagabatam says emphatically, 'No'. Materialists and Anthropomorphists say, 'yes'. The latter who pose as religionists assert that they are able to find out the beneficent purpose of Godhead Who intends this world for our permanent residence, and are convinced that they are fully justified in cherishing such optimism. These religionists propose to prove the validity of their contention with the help of the empiric Sciences on which they also depend for making available the true interpretation of the revealed Scriptures. In other words both the materialists and anthropomorphic religionists want to localise the Absolute to this phenomenal world and within the supposed expanding scope of their limited vision. They put the cart before the horse by insisting that they have a foretaste of the Truth even while their vision actually continues to be angular and shifting, and that they have it by the very means of such defective vision.

The Bhagabatam wants us to discard the guidance of our defective vision for finding the Truth. It is only to the perfect vision that the Absolute Truth reveals Himself. This perfect vision itself is necessarily a corrollary of an absolute position. This phenomenal world and our present defective vision are correlated to one another and both of them subsist together by their very constitution. They are the inseparably conjoined co-effects of a common cause. They can be also only a certain included aspect of the absolute position. But it is a denying aspect. The process of denial contains a tempting and assuring face which is no less deluding than the positively discouraging face. The so called good and the so-called evil of this world are equally devoid of any relevancy to the Absolute Who alone can have any abiding value of His Own.

The activities of the physical body and the mental sheaf now dominate and cause our clouded vision. They are ineffectual for supplying our real want.

That want may be defined as the longing for the sight of the Absolute. The physical body and the mental sheaf together with their inseparable correlative of this phenomenal world are depriving our soul all access to the Absolute plane by dangling the prospects of the limited and transitory. The soul finds himself compelled to avail the suicidal help of these entities for all his activities in this world. But this cannot be his own natural position. He finds himself temporarily out of his element in an uncongenial surrounding by means of the physical body and the quasimaterial mind. If he could find his corresponding body and mind he might, thereby, regain his natural position in the Realm of the Absolute.

The mystery of the phenomenal creation, therefore, appeals to a soul, who is disposed to question the necessity or desirability of prolonging his residence in this world, as being relative to the process of his own incarceration in his physical body and mind. The two things go together. Why has he been deprived of his spiritual body and mind? Who made this phenomenal world for providing apparently infinite scope for the operations of his physical body and mind to which he is condemned to devote himself by his conditioned existence?

Message of Shree Krishna Chaitanya

(Abstract of a speech delivered by Editor in the Town Hall at Mysore on 21-6-32)

SHREE Krishna Chaitanya, though He came four hundred years ago, is Present among us when His Words are explained anywhere in this world. His Message has little connection with our ordinary ideas. It is something supernatural. It refers to the transcendence. There are times to peep into the transcendence by many of us; but most messages have got contaminated ideas of our worldly talk. Shree Krishna Chaitanya had no ambition to speak anything that would facilitate sensuous activites. Ordinary religionists spoke much about things which we grasp by our senses. But Shree Krishna Chaitanya has told us some, transcendental words which, although they have affinity to ordinary ideas and things, should not be confused with the mundane plane.

It is necessary first of all to know His standpoint. (He spoke on the devotional lines. Devotion is not a mental exploitation when such words are talked of a region which is beyond our sensuous scope.) But we are to see things in that line in as much as we are adaptible to hear things which we often meet in this world. But we must not, therefore, confound the words meant for transcedence by taking them in the same category with those meant for mundane things.

In the first place He has not departed from the ideas and hymns of the Veda, the Sruti, the Upanishads. He had no ambition to talk anything not supported by the revealed Scriptures. He said that the Transcendental Sound is to come and regulate the senses at present working to get some fruit by our actions; but whatever result may come out of our onward acts will be for our individual purpose, our friends are not profitted thereby. So some jealous activities are found among our friends even when we talk of fruitive results. The Transcendental Sound regulates the senses which are always troubling ourselves to secure some riches for our own which is not shared by others and so we expect some hostility from friends and foes as well. But He says that the Transcendental Sound will bring love, an aptitude of love, uniting us with the Absolute. Though we are shaky we should not be disturbed rupturous performances. He says that love is the principal subject to be roused up, now lying in a dormant condition. We have affinity for and are deluded by outside features of things which tempt us more or less and captivate our senses. Such things seem to trouble us in the long run. But we require perfect peace and real severence from painful sensation. So our predilection is found to welcome what is pleasing to our senses. There are deluding aspects which often deprive us from the sight of the inner face. We should be cautious not to accept what is presented by the senses. The senses require regulation. Everything is shifting. We can trace nothing here that is permanent. Time will change everything. The Absolute is never changed.

We should hear everything about the Absolute; otherwise we will confuse Him with ordinary things, with perishable things. Our empiric activities will not allow us a permanent standing ground which will not be changed. Our standpoint of the thirtieth year proves false in our fiftieth year. Our growing experience adds more knowledge to our stored up conceptions. These are sometimes changed. This convinces us that what we consider as Truth is shaky and meant for the time being and will not serve us all along.

We should be ready to receive the Transcendental Sounds instead of the mundane sounds that are found in the Lexicons. Ordinary sound is examined by the others senses. We reserve the right of examining every mundane sound that enters our ear by the four other senses. If the latter do not admit its validity it is summarily rejected. These senses are not fit to scrutinise the validity of Transcendental Sounds. Our previous experience will show which sounds should be examined. If they target anything of this world we should have every opportunity of examining them by our other senses. Our previous experience will decide whether they are to be welcomed.

But when the Transcendental Sound makes His appearance we must not be troubling with the challenging mood and suppose there is any other face. The two sounds are quite distinct from one another. The mundane sound is meant for entities which have figure, odour, taste, etc. Heat, for example, can be perceived by the targetted sound. But it is the seeming feature which need not tally with the actual substratum. So there is a distinct reference between the two sounds.

All Transcendental Sounds go to show One Object, the Absolute. Wherever there is any deviation that is liable to be perished. Absolute Sound has got His peculiar face and should be welcomed at all costs. We are vitally interested in that thing. The very description of Transcendental Sound will tell us that the Sound is identical with the Object, Qualities, Activities and has got a complete distinction from mundane sounds and that the Transcendental Sound is equipped with all cogent potencies that will regulate all other senses.

Mundane sound is invigorating us to come in contact with the world. When our attempt is for the Absolute we run no risk. When we want the sound to come to us we deprive the Absolute, we do not receive the Transcendental Sound. The Transcendental Sound is strictly restricted to the Thing. So the Absolute is to be determined when we determine our self. Any distorted view will not allow us to approach the Absolute.

First of all we should examine our self. If we think we are mind and the external body the Transcendental Sound would have no effect on us. It would be mundane sound. The sound himself would tell us that the external body is a garment of the inner astral body and both of them are the two wrappers of the soul who, in his dormant condition, incorporates these two and misses to determine his own real nature. The external body is perishable, the internal body is transformable. Our mind in the morning is different from our mind at noon and so on. It is changed with the rolling of time.

We cannot rely on the mind and our mental speculation. All of us are busy in making our mind control everything relating to ourselves. This does not admit the conception of the Absolute. The mental conceptions are all changed. The property must not be confounded with the proprietor. Our external body is our property. It is perishable and there is no certainty of its retention. In Egypt the body was preserved. The process was thought necessary for the reawaking of the soul. The materialists see the externality of things. They observe that the combination of material particles produces animation. So the external is scrutinised by the materialistic sciences.

But the idea cultured by the intellectual people is that knowledge is eclipsed obscured by interception of ignorance (vivartavada) i.e. wrong conception of things which deludes us in regard to the Truth. The back-ground of time and space intercepts our visual range. Chinmatra or perfect knowledge is required to know what we are. This view is different from that of the materialists who want to establish all knowledge as identical with the back-ground of our conceptions. One party thinks that the spirit comes out of these things by a process analogous to that of effervescence. The other party holds that knowledge is impeded by the material molecules that form the opaque mass which disturbs and prevents us from examining the entity. This gives rise to the conception of Immanence. There is an inner face in regard to which we are liable to be deluded by the operation of the external face.

In the first place we should undertake to determine the nature of the self. We should know that we are eternal. If we had been for a few days it would be very dark, indeed. It is the idea of the semites that this is the only life we have. According to them the conception of metempsychosis is a hallucination to dissuade us from the immediate necessity of learning the Absolute Truth.

The empiric truth is to be carefully distinguished from the Absolute. It is analogous to the distinction between the glow-worm and fire or between the mirage and water. The outward feature is not to be trusted. Lime-water outwardly resembles milk. The apparent face is not identical with the Immanence, the soul or the substratum. In determining the self we require to find our real position. Are we products of material things ? Are we the Oversoul ? This problem requires to be solved as we shall leave the external body after a time. These incorporations are likely to deprive us by their associations in time.

When the question of 'Time' is brought forward we find that, we are eternal. When we attend to the problem of 'knowledge' we find that our mixed ignorance cannot give us any relief. The soul should be blissful. We do not require unpleasant things. The external body and astral body do not serve our purpose. If they were so life would be troublesome and we would necessarily be pessimist. There is an optimistic view to oppose pessimism. If both are discarded we would know what we are It would result in our considering that we are part and parcel of the Absolute liable to foreign invasion. Incorporations require to be severed for the realisation of our permanent situation.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya has told us that we are part and parcel of the Tatastha Shakti (Marginal Potency) of the Absolute Who has got numerous potencies. These potencies are classifiable into three departments. The human soul is situated in an intermediate position as distinct from the Bahiranga Shakti (External Potency) which is perishable and the Antaranga Shakti (Internal Potency) Who is eternal. The external potency offers the reflected intercepted view of the Activities of the Absolute. This supplements the system of Vishistadvaita (Distinctive Monism) or rather that system is given some additional knowledge by the introduction of the Tatastha Shakti (Marginal Potency).

We are not substratum. Had we been part and parcel of Godhead there would be no misery. As we are realists we cannot think that we should turn idealist, that we should suppose every thing to be simply a deluding feature and that observed objects are nothing but delusions and that we should consider ourselves to be the Oversoul. But it is not so. We are not the substance. We are potency. The position of the jiva is a part of the Tatastha Shakti (Marginal Potency) that can enjoy, cease to enjoy and go back to his original position. In the devotional mood he can offer his services to the Absolute instead of picking up servants from this world which is the plight of the deceptive brain. These are but baits and traps and will not lead us to the Absolute. We are not part and parcel of the substantive Entity Godhead but of His Tatastha Shakti to serve the Absolute. The determination of the self will lead us to that very Thing.

Impersonal Sectarianism

ENGLISH philosophical thought from Bacon onwards has been rightly opposed to the contentless speculation of Mædival Scholasticism that led to no useful result except the multiplication of endless controversies. The Monistic philosophy propounded by the ancient sages of India represented by the systems of Buddha and Sankara is the bequest to this country of a suicidal taste for a barren theology which failed to really target the Absolute but was and has since been dishonestly dangled before the perplexed judgment of its victims as offering the substantive termination of the quest of the Absolute.

But although it may sound a little paradoxical it is none the less the fact that the Monistic Theology of Sankara is not the bequest of Scholasticism but of the School of Inductive Science represented by the Baconian system. If one starts with the assumption that the Absolute is to be found by the process of induction from the observation of the phenomena of Nature he can arrive logically only at the alternative of the two solutions that are associated respectively with the names of Buddha and Sankara. Buddhism and Monistic interpretation of the Vedanta have accordingly found universal acceptance in the materialistic West dominated by the Baconian Inductive empiric thought. The observations, on which the Monistic system in India has been built up, are supplied by the Materialistic system of the Samkhya philosophy. The analysis of phenomenal Nature offered by Samkhya has remained unassailable and has been accepted by all philosophical Schools in India. It is much more thoroughgoing than any naturalistic system as yet propounded in the Western countries.

The idealistic Monistic system has consolidated the sectarian opposition of all shades of atheistical thought against the realistic methods and findings of the seekers of the Absolute. To the people of this world the idealistic Monistic opposition to the Truth has necessarily appeared in the light of a defensive operation for the vindication of the freedom and legitimacy of human thought. The point cannot be properly elucidated unless one is taken a little beyond the scope of empiric thinking.

The process of empiric induction may be defined as an effort to increase and co-ordinate our experience of this world for the purpose of knowing how to behave towards Nature for attaining any desired result. Nature is supposed to be the provider of all our requirements. She is found not to offer her gifts to those who are not prepared to take the trouble of wooing her in the way that is dictated by herself. This loyal and submissive wooing is represented by the Inductive systems.

Applied to the quest of the Absolute the most careful observation of the process of Nature has brought to light the fact that Nature is the negation of the Absolute. The Inductive philosopher cannot go beyond his major and minor premises both of which he receives from his direct observation of Nature. He is, therefore, reduced by his own logic to the necessity of disallowing the very existence of the Absolute. He is, however, confident of attaining the final solution of all worldly difficulties and wants by the process of observing and classifying the phenomena of Nature under the two correlated divisions of physical and mental occurrences.

In regard to the mental phenomena the inductive philosopher has not neglected to acquaint himself with the nature and process of the working of the senses and the mind by the instrumentality of his physical body and limited mind. The mind is found to be differentiated from the inner senses which are externally served by their respective physical organs of sense. The mind is considered to be both observer and observed of itself. The mind is observed to consist of a cognitive principle and thoughts which are the objects of its apprehension. The thoughts are the connecting link between the mind and the physical world. The thoughts do not think. The mind as the cognitive principle is the unity that synthesises and employs the thoughts for obtaining from Nature, by their means, the necessaries and amenities of bodily and mental living. This is observed to be a limited process bounded by the conditions of time and space. The inductive scientist knows nothing that is not so limited. He practically denies, at any rate as far as his mental explorations warrant, the existence of a soul who is independent of the conditions of the mental and bodily processes.

The substance of the mind is not capable of improvement into an entity that is altogether different from itself. It can only be improved within itself. The process has been given the name of "evolution". The qualities and powers of the mind tend to be extended by practice. The mind is nevertheless subject to decay in the same manner as the physical body. It is not, however, considered to be altogether unthinkable to be able to avoid such decay with the progress of scientific knowledge. It has been possible to achieve a measure of apparent success in this respect.

But the mental and physical worlds, which are indissolubly bound together for the observing individual, are not Absolute, but are, by their very constitutions, subject to the conditions of time and space. The Absolute Who reserves to Himself the right of not being exposed to the physico-mental observer of this world, is the eternal substratum transcending all limitations. If this only logical nature of the Absolute is ignored it necessarily condemns such an assertive individual to the hallucinations of impersonal sectarianism.

The Baconian system rightly neglects the validity of all conclusions that are sought to be reached in regard to the operations of physical Nature from the starting-point of insufficient observation. Such defective procedure leads to sterile scholasticism but the inductive scientist has no mis-giving regarding the absolute validity of his own findings verified by the testimony of the senses of a really cautious observer of Nature. He never suspects that the testimony of the senses is itself undependable. It can yield only hypothetical conclusions which necessarily fall short of the Absolute Truth. One who lives in glass houses must not throw stones. The empiricist has no legs to stand upon when he undertakes to indulge in his talks about the Absolute.

But this radical defect of procedure and point of view does not always exercise the expected sobering influence on his otherwise cautious temperament. The Protestant movement in Europe is also not always free from such inconsistency. It is not our purpose to under-estimate in any way the value of individual judgment even in the quest of the Absolute. But the individual judgment that can properly be exercised towards the Absolute must be consistent in itself. If the physico-mental process is relied upon for finding the Absolute the individual judgment is baulked of its legitimate due. Neither does the quest of the Absolute involve the want of any necessity for accurate observation by persons who are alive to the limitations of the senses, all facts and occurrences that have a direct or an indirect bearing on the problem

Revealed Scriptures and the writings and pronouncements and careers of self-realised souls have provided the world with a great assemblage of such spiritual facts and occurrences. The inductive method has to be applied to this great body of accumulated evidence. But this has to be done without any previously formed empiric prepossessions based upon the observation of the phenomena of Nature by our defective senses. The Scriptures assure us that if we perform this task with humility that does not ignore the inadequacy of our present equipments we would be enabled by the process itself to be delivered from tyranny of our adventitious physico-mental casings.

It is necessary for all of us to be able to realise the Truth. But a bundle of hypotheses that alone can be presented by the Baconian system exclusively directed to physical Nature and which, in the hands of pedants, has been only too willing, both in this country and elsewhere, to ignore the paramount claims of spiritual facts to our best submissive attention, can never be accepted as anything but a delusion if it is claimed to be at all true in the absolute sense. It is necessary to expunge once for all such speculations from the theological literatures of the world in order to relieve humanity from the deliberate offence of confounding the mundane with the spiritual which has been the parent of all disruptive differences on the subject of Religion. It is only when the religious differences are composed that the world can have a real function and a real objective which will unite without suppressing the fullest play of the individual judgment. The mis-application of the Baconian system has been the cause of the colossal failure of Protestant theologians in their task of producing real conviction in their opponents and is responsible for imparting to theological investigations its ugly character of impersonal sectarianism which passes for Religion in the fashionable circles of the modern Philistines.

Impersonal sectarianism has given birth to its concomitance of a pseudo-liberalism The impersonal sectarian affects to possess equal tolerance for all opinions and practices. Is this consistent with the actual findings of the Baconian system in the fields of the Natural sciences ? Does Mathematics, the most liberal of all the empiric sciences, tolerate all opinions ? Impersonal sectarianism seeks to avoid all responsibility for its theological opinions by extending its seemingly uncritical approval to heterogeneous opinions on the subject of Religion. It has been responsible for the prevailing loose thinking on the subject of Religion that is the greatest stumbling-block in the way of obtaining a real hearing for any consistent treatment of the subject.

151 While thus He spake all externality of the Lord departed
And the Lord stormed greatly in the Mood of the Weilder of the Plough.

152 The Lord loudly demanded "Fetch Me wine, do fetch Me wine";
The ears all but split to hear His thundering sound.

153 Said Sribas Pandit, "Hearken, my Lord,
The wine Thou ask for is with Thyself;

154 "He to whom Thou give'st alone may have it".
The trembling devotees looked on from afar.

155 All that company of the Vaishnavas thought in their minds,
"Verily there is some good reason for this".

156 The Lord, His Eyes red with passion, spoke in broken improvised verse;
He laughed and swung His Body like Sankarsana.

157 Presently as the Lord became His Own proper Self,
The Friend of Rama explained to all the meaning of the dream;

158 "I understand, indeed, My Mind runs on to this,—
A certain great personage has come to this place.

159 "I have told you all before this,
'I shall have a meeting with some great person'.

160 "Make haste Haridas, hasten Sribas Pandit!
Go ye out and look about you to find if any one comes from any direction".

161 By command of the Lord the two great Bhagabatas
Roamed joyfully over all Nabadwip, watching in all directions.

162 As they did so they spoke to each other,
'May be it is Lord Sankarsana Himself Who has come even now'.

163 Both of them were mad with joy as they went about searching;
But they could never get the least trace of any clue.

164 Having looked into all Nadia for three quarters of the day
They returned to the Lord having found none.

165 Both of them made their submission to the Feet of the Lord,
"There could be found no new-comer by any external evidence.

166 "The abodes of the Vaishnavas, sannyasins house-holders,
The homes of even the pashandis, we have searched all places;

167 "We have looked up all the tract that bears the name of Nabadwip.
We have not been, O Lord, only to those villages that are out-side.

168 Gaurachandra laughed on hearing the words of both;
By this trick He taught that Nityananda is very hard to find;—

169 Some who sing Gaurachandra and accept His Divine Appearance
Take to their heels if they but hear the name of Nityananda.

170 One worships Govinda but does not recognise Sankara!
For this offence many will hie to the abode of the god of death.

171 In this Appearance of the Lord,
Nityananda is very much hidden;
He alone may find who is shown by Chaitanya.

172 Who through ignorance maligns his nature, which is profound beyond measure.
Loses the disposition to serve Vishnu even after receiving the same.

173 Sribas and the other Vaishnavas fully knew his nature ;
They did not find him ; this was only to serve the end of the fun.

174 The Lord after a while said laughing.
'Let all of you come with Me and find him out'.

175 Flushed with joy, all the devotees in the company of the Lord
Set out on the quest, saying, 'Glory be to Krishna'.

176 Taking all the devotees with Him Lord Sree Gaursundar made His way
To the house of Nandana. being aware of everything.

177 The jewel of a great personage was sitting there.
They all saw, equalling the resplendance of crores of Suns.

178 Divine-possession without objective is impossible to describe ;
Full of the bliss of Divine meditation he laughs constantly.

179 On realising the activity of his supreme devotion
Lord Viswambhara bowed to him with all His associates.

180 All the companions of the Lord remained standing in the attitude of reverence ;
No one spoke any word but all of them looked on in silence.

181 The Supreme Lord Viswambhar stood in front of him ;
And Nityananda recognised—the Lord of his life.

Song (In Kedara raga)

182 The Form Biswambhar equals the God of Love,
With His Divine Perfume, Divine Garlands, Divine Apparel

183 What is the sheen of gold by the side of that Form ;
The Moon longs for the sight of that Face ;

Burden

184 Stealers of all minds Sree Gauranga and Lord Nityananda Roam the city in the company of the devotees.

185 What are stringed pearls to have a look of those Teeth ;
To have a glance of the arrangement of that Hair deprives all faculty of consciousness.

186 Looking upon those twin expanded reddish Eyes
One seems to be aware that there are no other lotuses.

187 Those two Hands extending to the Knee, that Bosom exquisitely high
On which shines the sacrificial thread so delicately fine.

188 His Forehead bears the beautiful upward tilaka
And all His Limbs, bare of ornaments, captivate all minds.

189 What are crores of gems to the sight of His Finger-Nail ;
What does the nectar avail to the sight of that Laughter !

190 Sree Krishna-Chaitanya is the Life of Nityanandachand
At Whose Twin Feet sings Briudabandas.

Here ends the third chapter entitled 'Meeting with Nityananda' in the Middle Part of Sree Chaitanya Bhagabat.

Ourselves

Mysore :—Editor started from Ootacamund on June 17, on an invitation from H. H. the Maharaja Bahadur of Mysore arriving at Mysore town the same afternoon. On the 20th. the Maharaja Bahadur was pleased to listen to the Message of Sree Chaitanya from his lips and made sympathetic enquiries about the activities of Shree Viswa-Vaishnava-Raj Sabha. On the 21st. the Editor lectured in English on the Message of Sree Chaitanya at the Mysore Town Hall. On the 18th he paid a visit to the temple of Chamundeswari. He visited the Mysore Oriental Library where he was shown the famous collection of manuscripts by Dr. Shyam Shastri, and also the Maharaja's Sanskrit College where he was most cordially received by all members of the teaching-staff and students. All the leading persons of Mysore met the Editor in an enquiring spirit throughout his short stay there. The Theistic Exhibition at Dacca

THE Exhibitor's address in Bengali, which was delivered at the opening of the Theistic Exhibition at Dacca on January 6, is available to the public in the form of a nicely printed pamphlet. The address, of which the English version appears as a separate article, deals with several important aspects of this particular mode of service and it is well worth the while of all persons irrespective of caste, creed or colour to ponder over the nature of the congregational worship Divinely ordained for the Present Age.

The worship of Sree Krishna in the visible form is not idolatry or, what is the same thing, a speculative affair of our blundering mind. The visible Archa (worshipped) is the actual Descent (Avatara) of the Absolute to the plane of mortal vision. The Holy Name in this analogous manner descends to the plane of the recipient aural faculty of the conditioned soul. But the Holy Name is Krishna and not any mundane Sound. The Holy Name, as articulated sound heard by the conditioned soul, is thus the Archa or manifestation of the worshipped Himself to the mundane aural faculty. The hearing and chanting of the Holy Name are also archana or worship of Descended Divinity, as practised by the novice. But as the Name alone is available as Archa for worship by the ear and tongue in the conditioned state all other forms of worship necessarily become secondary and auxilliary, specially in the present Age. Kirtana or vocalisation is the only substantive and sufficient mode of worship of the Kali Yuga. The hearing of the Name is necessary for obtaining eligibility for the performance of the chant.

The Archa as Icon cannot be served independently of the Name in the present Age. In no Age is the Icon really and fully served by any other faculty independently of the aural. In all Ages the Divine Descent is always the Transcendental Sound or the Name. In the other Ages it is Sound Who is approached by the specific modes of service ordained for each Age. In Kali Yuga this subsidiary method is superseded by the goal itself being ordained as method. This is not opposed to the methods prescribed for the other Ages. It is possible in the Kali Yuga to directly grasp the truth that there can be no archana unless and until the process merges into the significance of the chant of the Holy Name.

Sree Gaursundar has given us His Assurance that He descends in the Kali Yuga in Three Distinct Forms viz., (i) in His Human Form, (ii) as the Icon, (iii) as the Divine Sound or the Name. This may seem at first sight to be in apparent contradiction to the declaration of the Scriptures that the chant of the Holy Name is the only Dispensation of the Kali Yuga.

The service of the Holy Name is available only to the unconditioned or liberated soul. The service of the Holy Name is performed by all the faculties of the soul. The Holy Name is heard, seen, smelt, touched and uttered by the soul in the state of Grace. There is no other function for the faculties of the soul except the service of the Holy Name.

During novitiate this is not possible. The novice cannot see, smell or touch the Name. What is he then to do with these faculties ? The Dispensations of all Ages require that the novice is to serve those who serve the Name with all their faculties. This is true also of the Kali Yuga. But it is not possible for the novice to have complete faith in the sadhu. He is liable to suppose that the service rendered to the sadhu is more or less different from service rendered to Sree Krishna. The sadhu, who is capable of serving Krishna independently of any Dispensation, is in a position to prescribe the specific form of archana to the novice in accordance with the requirements of each individual case.

The Dispensation of the Age is not to be interpreted by the resources of empiricism. As a matter of fact Empiricism can offer no interpretation of any Dispensation that would be either real or consistent. The worship of the Icon and vocalisation of the Name becomes alike a part and parcel of the congregational chant only by their employment by the sadhu for the purpose of the promulgation of the real tidings of the Scriptures. But lest this self-evident proposition be opposed by the consistent mentality of empiric controversialists, Sree Gaursundar, the Original Promulgator of the congregational chant, has definitely declared that He will appear, subsequent to His Disappearance, in the Two Forms of the Icon and the Name. This also does not mean that the sadhu is to confine himself to any mundane form for prescribing the service of Krishna to the novice.

The idolatrous instinct is natural to the conditioned state. There is no wonder, therefore, that attempts should be made to offer the idolatrous interpretation of the Dispensation of the present Age. This is done by persons who are unfit for the due performance of archana. Those who are not eligible for novitiate should not presume to take upon themselves the self-imposed task of dictating the duty to the sadhu. Those empiricists, who set up as authorities of the interpretation of the Scriptures, are divided into the two groups of Iconographers and Iconoclasts. The sadhu is able to bring about the Descent of Krishna in the visible form of the Holy Icon for correcting the aberrations of the mundane aural, ocular and dermal functions of the conditioned state.

The worship of the Icon is known as archana. But as a matter of fact archana is not available till the worshipper has had some dim realisation of the Nature of Transcendence. It is this realisation that supplies the substantive basis of the real faith of the novice, without which it is not possible to understand at all one's connection with the worshipped. Archana cannot be performed by the resources of empiricism. Any attempt to perform archana by the mere force of traditional habit or empiric argument would amount to the practice of the very worst form of offence against the Divinity, viz., 'Idolatry'. Says the Shastra, 'There cannot be a worse blasphemy against Vishnu than to think that His Form is mundane'. Empiric conceptions regarding Godhead are as much mundane as the forms of clay that are worshipped by the idolatrous worshipper of mundane images. The worshipper of an idea is no less idolatrous than the worshipper of stocks and stones. Neither of them are eligible for the archana of the Holy Icon.

The mercy of the sadhu can alone inspire the right faith in the transcendental nature of the worship of the Archa. The mercy of the sadhu produces such faith by effecting the abrogation of all ideas and principles of conduct that are manufactured by the ignorant mind for the worship of Godhead, but which are really tissues of delusions. The sight of the transcendental personality of the sadhu produces intuitive faith in the transcendence of his activities. A person who is favoured by the real sight of the Vaishnava is automatically relieved from the necessity of idolatrous speculations and performances that are practised in the name of worship of Godhead all over the world by persons who are disposed to rely on the resources of their mundane faculties.

But archana is not to be confounded with bhajana. Kirtana that is performed by the sadhu is bhajana. All the activities of the Paramahansa are on the level of the kirtana of the Name. But the conditioned soul has no faculty by which he can realise the nature of the kirtana of the Name that is practised by the Paramahansa. Neither is the performer of archana in a position to understand the ways of the Paramahansa. But the performer of archana understands the necessity of worshipping the Icon under the absolute direction of the Paramahansa. He is in a position to do so because he knows truly that transcendence is located beyond the scope of his faculties. It is not till the performer of archana is fully liberated from the domination of the deluding function of the mundane faculties of the conditioned state by the continuing mercy of the sadhu that he is enabled by the same agency to obtain access to bhajana or transcendental service on the fully cognisable plane of the Absolute.

Sree Gaursundar did not teach nor practise the archana of the Name. The performance of the archana of the Name is not available till Sree Krishna is pleased to manifest His Descent as the Name in the form that is audible to the mundane faculty. This Descent of the Name as Archa has been brought about by the mercy of the Acharyyas and in an elaborate manner by the organisers of the Theistic Exhibition at Dacca in pursuance of those activities of the Acharyyas. Sree Gaursundar by His word and career made the service of the Name available to the aural faculty of all persons without exception. Those who received His mercy were most fortunate and were in a position to pass it on to others.

After His Disappearance the Archa and Name appeared on the mundane plane. The Name could now be taken by any and every person. The Archa was equally available to the worshipper. This Divine Sanction does not abrogate the function of the sadhu as the unconditional guide of all spiritual activities. It only points to the incomprehensible direction of his transcendental activities. The Exhibition is, therefore, explained and thereby fulfilled by the vocal activity of the sadhu. It is calculated to lead up to faith in the transcendental nature of the devotee of Krishna. It is not a hypothetical performance like the exposition of the teaching of the shastras by those who are not on the plane of bhajana. It is part and parcel of the bhajana of the bona fide sadhu who is in direct touch with the Divinity through the unbroken line of the Acharyyas.

Kirtana incorporates the process of archana. Archana, leading up to kirtana on its plane of bhajana, expands itself into the provisions for the teaching of the novice that are made by the sadhu, as his subsidiary function, by the Will of Krishna. The deliverance of conditioned souls is not the only, nor, the primary, significance of the activities of the sadhu. It is auxilliary and secondary. The sadhu is constantly engaged in performing the kirtana of Krishna on the transcendental plane of bhajana. Why he chooses to incorporate conditioned souls as ingredients of his bhajana, is a proposition that admits of no answer except the assurance of the Scriptures. Its real significance is open only to the view of persons who are placed on the transcendental level of the sadhu. The dimmest reflection of the truth reveals itself to the loyal servants of the sadhu. This is the reward of those conditioned souls who join in these performances by their innate tendency for the unconditional service of the Absolute.

Kirtana, on the plane of bhajana, has been made available by the causeless Mercy of the Supreme Lord Himself to the wrangling atheists of this controversial Age. Kirtana should not be supposed to be identical with any limited mundane performance, although it mercifully manifests itself to the aural faculty of the conditioned state. The real nature of the function is to be approached by carefully pondering over the transcendental meaning of the actual utterances of the sadhu. It is imperatively necessary to do this as the kirtana of Krishna is alone capable of reconciling and explaining the apparent differences of the modes of worship enjoined by the revealed Scriptures of the world. The attainment of the function of kirtana on the level of bhajana will then be realised as being both the fulfilment as well as the method of all spiritual endeavour laid down in the Scriptures.

The Editor delivered His address on the occasion of the opening of the Theistic Exhibition at Dacca in order to put himself and His audience into the line of succession of the Acharyyas by the invocation of the Divine Transcendental Sound, in his office of the servant of the Acharyyas. It is necessary to direct the attention of all to the words spoken on that occasion in the hope that by such co-operation the Truth might be induced to reveal His Transcendental Form by clearing up all current misconceptions.

Address by the Exhibitor

(At the opening of the Dacca Exhibition on Jan. 6, 1933)

(THE FOLLOWING IS THE ENGLISH RENDERING OF THE SPEECH DELIVERED BY THE EDITOR IN BENGALI ON THE OCCASION OF THE OPENING OF THE THEISTIC EXHIBITION AT DACCA ON JANUARY 6, 1933).

THE Exhibitor is required to carry out a mandate in His office as organiser of the show. This is imperative for representing any and every detail of the activities of those who serve Sree Krishna by employing their days in unlimited activities on Krishna's account. For this purpose we pray for the Mercy of the Lord of the Gaudiyas, Who is the singular Object of meditation of all seekers of the summum bonum. Let the language by which His facsimile Srila Swarup Damodar attracted His Mercy do duty in our case as the opening prayer of the function.

'May Thy overflooding non-evil-producing Mercy, Thou Ocean of Mercy Sree Chaitanya, be aroused towards me, by dint of its qualities that easily blow off all the dust particles of sorrow, are completely transparent, in which is manifest the all-encompassing supreme bliss, on whose appearance all wranglings over the Scriptures are concluded, which promote the madness of the heart by showering the tasty quality of mellowness, whose function of promoting the perennial natural flow of devotion ever ensures the balance of temperament and which mark the limit of the most exquisite deliciosness.

We are unable to understand what is beneficial or harmful by our own unaided judgment. This is so because we have a very distorted impression of the knowledge of our duty by the Reality, due to the want of all knowledge of the Entity Himself and because of our uncertainty as regards what we really desire. These defects make us quite helpless in choosing the right course of our activities. At such a crisis we have no other duty but to follow the adviser who sets by his own ideal conduct the example to be followed, for getting rid of all our wants and dangers.

This world is full of good and evil. In our quest of the desideratum we, therefore, seek to find the best, to discard the worst, to follow the really desirable course, to eschew the undesirable path, to pray for our well-being, to give up what is harmful, etc. The evidence of the existence of such mentality is observable at times even in lower animals who are possessed of judgment of a crude type. As beggars for gifts from their giver we pray for the good, the best, the higher state, or well-being. We cannot regard as miserly or wanting in unstinted liberality and magnanimity the giver of mercy that does not produce our eternal harm. Realising him to be endowed with the nature of the veritable 'ocean of mercy' we abstain from praying to him for any gift that is productive of undesirable consequences. We know that by our success in obtaining the gift of our prayer from any pseudo-preceptor we are inevitably liable to be overtaken by dangers due to the ignorance of the giver of such gift. It is this conviction that leads us to pray for the primary gift of the Cognisant Autocratic Entity, the Form of the Truth, instead of His secondary alms overlaid with delusion.

Anything obtained as alms by begging is termed 'bhaikshya'. We may procure 'bhaikshya' in one of five different ways. The 'bhaikshya' of the nature of honey gathered by the bee madhukara is the highest of all forms of alms, (madhukara bhaikshya). In the order of precedence, in immediate succession to madhukarabhaikshya, we have to consider the forms of 'asamklipta', 'prakpranita', 'ayachita', and tatkalikopapanna' bhaikshyas respectively.

'Asamklipta' bhaikshya may be defined as alms that is altogether uncertain. Prapkranita is alms obtained in fulfilment of precedent definite hopes. Ayachita alms is obtained without begging and tatkalikopapanna bhaikshya is alms which is forthcoming at the moment when its want is actually experienced. Although all these five modes of procuring alms by begging are open to us, may our begging function have only the supreme excellence of madhukara bhaikshya.

At present our position is enriched by the process of obtaining supplies of three kinds of alms. We stand in need of enrichment of our mental faculty, for supplying our want of knowledge and experience. But we are also in a position to understand the necessity of procuring bodily and vocal alms.

In our present state of existence the aggregate of the begging endeavours of the five cognitive sense-organs procures

the supply of our mental alms. The gross and subtle forms of both bodily and vocal alms require to be approved by the mental supply. Our supply of mental alms in exercise of the office of such controller takes into its consideration the respective claims of good and pleasant. For this end it becomes the one thing needful to pray for the non-evil-producing Mercy from the Ocean of Mercy. The heart of man subject to the triple misery is weighed down with sorrow. This sorrow is like the accumulated heap of dust. The Grace of that Ocean of Mercy Whose non-evil-producing kindness dissipates with ease the accumulated refuse heap of the triple misery, like the wind blowing away the dust heap, should be the only object of our prayers. After the dust heap is blown away the sky of the heart becomes perfectly clear. Thereafter the breeze, carrying on its wings the choicest odours, accomplishes the primary purpose of our activities. Although we can but pray for the abrogation of the absence of joy, the self-delight of the soul promotes the state of positive supreme bliss.

Even when our uncultured stock is augmented by the agency of knowledge born of the senses, mutually antagonistic modes of culture tend to increase our troubles. We are compelled to consider what propositions of our opponents are to be accepted and which are to be rejected. But the very attempt to solve this difficulty adds to our distraction. May the Ocean of Mercy bless us by His dispensation of that non-evil-producing Mercy which promotes loving relationship among the contending principles of the differing modes of teaching of the diverse schools of our teachers.

There is no element of hostile contentiousness in the Unitary Knowledge. It gives us constant attachment to Godhead and brings about the manifestation of the Real Truth. By this means it does not merely ensure the peace of our troubled heart but floods it with the supreme bliss. We are apt to adopt as wholesome and perfect certain principles in lieu of real existence, cognition and bliss, due to the prevalence of the element of mutual hostile rivalry among the triple qualities of rajas (mundane active principle), sattva (mundane manifestive principle) and tamas (mundane nihilistic principle). The principles thus adopted give rise to the desire for what is not proper in the act of combating the operation of the other principles born of the senses. This results in the state of greater restlessness of the heart by our activities being given different directions by our unbridled wishes. Some times inertia, making its appearance as the opposing principle of sensuous activity, offers itself under the deceptive garb of the peace that is sought.

It is impatience that is detected in such temporary oscillating mood. It is the unbridled passion of the ineligible for the usurpation of a superior status. The line of thought that seeks to consolidate one's foot-hold in such position or to utilize it in any other way, degenerates into the endeavour for effecting the merging into one of the specifications of knowledge, knowable and knower. It is under the lead of such impression that we welcome the line of undifferential thought in order by its means to get rid of the pressure of the sensuous urge, for good. As soon as we are liable to welcome failure in the shape of the proposal to eliminate all specification as between the subjective nature of the entity and its relation of affinity to or alienation from other entities, being tempted by the ambition of the attainment of an imaginary superior status, the judgment that seeks to serve the real Truth is engulfed in the strong current of the aptitude for the worship of one's own false ego. At times the irrespressible, violent, sensuous desire builds magnificent edifices in the mental realms of fancy and runs at headlong speed after the will-o-wisps. Some times infatuated by the tempting odours of the 'sky-flowers' in the shape of Hatha-Yoga and Raja Yoga, etc., that pertain to the adulterated condition, we learn to neglect devotion to Godhead which is the eternal aptitude of the soul.

In order to be enabled to get rid of these three kinds of misjudgment it is necessary to walk in the path of the perfect good by seeking a real footing in the eternal aptitude of the soul. The very moment that our intelligence is rendered inert by considerations of desirability we place ourselves more or less in the hands of our false self by getting dissociated from the eternal aptitude of the soul i. e. from the real knowledge of the self, as the result of improperly mixing up the eternal aptitude of the soul with non-eternal considerations. It is true that we necessarily discard the fruits of our labours when we happen to be relieved of the aptitude of enjoyment of the fruits of our activities. But the same abnegation of the fruits of our works in its turn hurls us once more to the bottom from the high summit. Left without support we welcome self-conceit by cherishing the desire for mastery. This deprives us of the Mercy of the Real Truth and causes the mentality that fancies the mundane entities of this perishable world as our saviours.

When we discover that these entities are powerless to fulfil our eternal desires we are at once attracted by the chance of adopting some other courses. As soon as the different eclipsing factors, viz., thirst for evil, good works and empiric knowledge and permutations and combinations of these, breed in us despair by the operation of the faculty that distinguishes between the eternal and the temporary, we make the attempt in right earnest for obtaining the help of the supporting entity (Ashraya). As soon as our desire for the attainment of the desideratum is able to find the satisfactory solution of our innate sense of rational and non-rational, eternal and non-eternal, bliss and non-bliss, it reaches the unitary position by joining hands with the desire for well-being. This is the state of unadultered devotion (bhakti), or serving aptitude. When this aptitude of the soul, free from all evil desire and uneclipsed by empiric knowledge, utilitarian work, etc, engages itself in the submissive service of the Substantive Entity Who is the Prime Attractor, replete with the eternal full knowledge and continuous bliss, the triple mundane quality of this world, characterised by the relationship of mutual repulsion, is rendered incapable of lording it over us. It is only then that the eternal serving aptitude of our souls, or our worship, is properly offered so as to be fit for the acceptance of the worshipped. We are then in a position to be disinterested spectators of the performances of differing mentalities. We no longer feel attracted towards the worship of Brahma, the tutelary deity of the realm of mundane initiative, by those who are employed in the utilitarian activities of this work-a-day world for earning the profits of their labours. Neither do we experience any identity of interest with the worship of Rudradeva, the object of adoration of those desirous of relief from the sensuous urge, calculated to bring about the cessation of the state of misery by inertia generated by the eternal indifferential materialistic mood that manifests itself after the demolition of the twin gross and subtle material constructions by the abolition of all passing desires effected by such worship. The careful consideration of the extent of success in the attainment of the desideratum by those modes of worship, which now becomes possible, makes us change the course of our expedition from these directions and also dissipates the conditional aptitude on which they rely for their continuance, which makes its appearance along with the proposal of uprooting the triple eternal function embodying the principles of existence, cognition and bliss, based upon the groundless assumption that an entity devoid of power is the substantive Reality.

Gandhiji's Ten Questions

Questions :—

1. Define untouchability according to the Shastras.

2. Can the definition of the untouchables given in the Shastras be applied to the so-called untouchables of the present day ?

3. What are the restrictions imposed by the Shastras on the untouchables ?

4. Can an individual be free from untouchability in his own life time ?

5. What are the injunctions of the Shastras regarding the behaviour of the touchables towards the untouchables ?

6. Under what circumstances will the Shastras permit temple entry by untouchables ?

7. What are the Shastras ?

8. How is the authoritativeness of the Shastras to be proved ?

9. How are the differences arising over the definitions or interpretations of the Shastras to be decided ?.

10. What are your conclusions ?

The answer :—

(1) In various texts of the spiritual Smritis, which contain the regulations that apply to the external conduct of persons desirous of attaining the life of service of Godhead, all intimate association with persons, who are openly hostile to the Scriptures or who neglect to obey the injunctions of the Shastras commanding all persons to lead the pure (svattika) life prescribed for the Brahmanas and their dependants, is categorically forbidden. This prohibition does not include association that is strictly necessary for secular purposes in conformity with the spiritual end. Nor does it imply that any person is to be looked down upon or disrespected. Intimate association is defined as consisting of giving and taking presents, eating and feeding, hearing and telling secrets. Gandhiji has consciously or unconsciously borrowed the idea of non-violent non-co-operation from these very texts of the Shastras but with this all-important difference that the Shastras reserve its application solely to the spiritual purpose. There are also Smritis for the regulation of purely secular affairs which also contain taboos and restrictions which are the outcome of racial, cultural or historical causes. But the spiritual Smritis subordinate all such interests to the spiritual purpose.

In regard to the performance of archana or ritualistic worship the spiritual Smritis also prescribe sundry restrictions. The Archa (Icon) must not be worshipped by a non-Brahmana i.e., by any one who has no real knowledge of Godhead. Such knowledge is available to all persons who are prepared to submit to the necessary training enjoined by the spiritual Smritis upon the novice under the unconditional direction of the bonafide spiritual guide (sat guru). For the same reason those who have no real faith in the spiritual nature of the worshippers or the Archa are forbidden to have a sight of the Icon. The worshipper may permit any one to have a sight of the Archa who has any real faith or, at any rate, who is not deliberately opposed to the Archa, the authority of the Scriptures and of the Brahmanas. This has its bearing on the issue of temple entry by untouchables and touchables alike, although not in the sense in which the question now-a-days presents itself to the mercenary priests on the one hand and the demos, empiricists and social and political reformers on the other. But the reform of the present abnormal state of affairs in the temples is not likely to be expedited by the practical abolition of the Shastric institution by the acceptance of any proposal in the form in which it is likely to emanate from the leaders of the demos. The saner course would be to allow sufficient time for the people to ponder over the real meaning of the mode of worship of Godhead by the method of archana revealed by the Shastras by trying to enlist for the cause all the resources of dispassionate judgment of the best minds. The Harmonist has been trying to place the issue before the whole world through the medium of the English language in a rationalistic form within the narrow limits that the method is at all applicable to the Absolute.

(2) The so-called untouchables of the present day are groups of people who lie on the fringe of the orthodox Hindu society as the result of cultural and historical causes. It is a matter for the consideration of the nation whether it is time to admit them on a footing of social equality on the ground that the causes of keeping aloof from them have ceased to exist. It is a mistake to confound the regulations of the secular smiritis for religious sanction. The so-called Hindu religion that is current at the present day is a purely secular affair with a plausible spiritual background improvised by the unscrupulous ingenuity of the propounders of the main philosophical systems of this country which were primarily intended for bringing the secular arrangement under the sanction of the shastric regulations. But the gulf between secular and spiritual is never bridged over by overlooking or explaining away its existence as has been attempted by the empiric philosophers in this country and elsewhere. The point of view of the Indian Philosophers is so far admissible that no secular arrangement should be acceptable to the race that is opposed to its spiritual requirements. The theistic interpreters of the Vedanta from Sree Ramanuja onwards have provided the real philosophical background of the ritualistic worship enjoined by the spiritual Shastras. The Career and Teaching of Lord Chaitanya complete the arch of transcendental philosophy that spans the otherwise impassable gulf separating this world from the realm of the Absolute.

(3) The nature of the restrictions, which are imposed by the Shastras on one's intercourse with the opponents of the Shastras, may be described as non-violent spiritual non-co-operation in every affair. All intimate mixing with such people for any purpose whatever must be avoided on principle. But this is to be done in such a way as not to hurt the worldly susceptibilities of any person or group. All worldly honour is to be paid where it is due by the standard of conduct established by general usage and legislation or is approved by the political guardians of secular society, unless it is found to be actually opposed to practices enjoined by the Shastras. In case there is actual Shastric ground for non-compliance the method of strictly non-violent non-co-operation should be followed by those who desire to obey the spirit of the Shastras. It may not be superfluous to add that spiritual living is impossible unless one is prepared to conduct oneself as the inferior of all other entities. Those alone who are exclusive servants of the Absolute Truth, are really in a position to pay full honour to all entities. Non-co-operation with the vagaries of the mind and body is due to the most profound respect for and faith in the superiority of every entity to oneself. The mind and body are the external casings and the cause of all disruptive differences. It is their nature to lead the soul away from the path of service to that of unnatural domination. It is necessary to steer clear of the dangers of imperialism on the one hand as well as of neutrality or equality on the other, the last term denoting approximately the modern democratic ideal. The real principle to be adopted is one of unconditional reverence for all entities by the realisation and exclusive practice of the whole-time service of the Absolute Truth. All entities are properly and fully served by the exclusive service of the Absolute. Any secular institution that is opposed to the realisation of this true end must be non-co-operated with in the spirit of perfect loyalty to the eternal interests of all entities. These genuine attitude of unreserved service of all entities is implied in the whole-time spiritual service of the Absolute in the form of archana. There can be no 'untouchables' in this method.

(4) Every one is free to serve the Absolute. The body and mind counsel the soul, who is inclined to be disloyal, to try to be master in his own right. The Absolute is the only Master and all souls are His eternal servants. The servants of one's Master are also one's masters in as much as they represent and carry out the wishes of the Master. It is possible for every person to attain to the eligibility of the Transcendental Service of the Absolute by candid and unreserved submissive listening to the words of the bona fide teacher of the Truth. Insincerity of disposition can alone prevent a person from recognising the bona fide agent of the Absolute who is the only proper teacher of the Truth.

(5) The injunctions of the spiritual smritis regarding proper conduct towards the opponents of the Shastras have been codified in Sree Haribhaktivilas by Sree Gopalbhatta Goswami by command of Lord Sree Chaitanya. But they cannot be properly understood or practised except by submitting to be enlightened regarding the nature of one's own self by a course of spiritual pupilage under the bona fide teacher of the Absolute. The ordinary restrictions to be observed towards atheists are in regard to the six kinds of intimate relationship viz., giving and taking presents, eating with and feeding another person and hearing and telling the secrets to one another. These together with the specific restrictions that relate to performance of the ritualistic worship of the Archa (Icon) are observed by the Vaishnavas in their behaviour towards all declared atheists.

(6) Entry into the Temple of Vishnu is allowable only to the worshippers of Vishnu. Vishnu is not a name concocted by the imagination of men. The Transcendental Name of Vishnu is identical with Himself. Vishnu is the only Godhead, the Absolute Person. The worshippers of the Name, Form, Quality, Activity and Servitors of Vishnu are the only worshippers of Godhead. The spontaneous service of Vishnu is eternally open to all souls by the Grace of the Absolute. Those who do not wish to worship Vishnu are automatically expelled from the transcendental plane of His worship and find their congenial occupations on this mundane plane. They are able to practise these occupations by means of their physical bodies and minds which are given them for this purpose by the Deluding Potency of Vishnu. The worldly occupations consist of the endeavour for supplying the wants of the body and mind by the method of open and concealed hostility to the similar bodies and minds of other entities. It is this pre-occupation with the malicious activities of the mundane plane that prevents the conditioned soul from entertaining any effective desire for attaining to the knowledge of the real state of things. The Temple of Vishnu is no entity of the mundane plane and is inaccessible to the conditioned soul whether touchable or untouchable. The Archa of Vishnu, the Temple of Vishnu, the worshipper of Vishnu, the worship of Vishnu are all transcendental entities. Vishnu alone can admit the soul to the presence of these entities. The method by which the service of Vishnu is attainable by conditioned souls is made known to the people of this world by the transcendental agents of Vishnu who are the only real teachers of the eternal function of all souls revealed by the spiritual Scriptures. Those who are disposed to listen to the words of the bona fide teachers of the Absolute with faith and submission may be led thereby to submit to be enlightened by actually undergoing the necessary course of spiritual pupilage under the unconditional direction of the bonafide spiritual guide (Sat Guru). Only those persons, who are imparted diksha i. e., spiritual enlightenment by the bona fide spiritual guide, become thereby eligible under his continuing direction to entry into the Temple of Vishnu for the purpose of worship. His worship is open to all persons on the above conditions. The Scriptures forbid the separate worship of the other gods, who are servants of Vishnu, as being derogatory to the dignity of the worship of Vishnu, the sole Object of all worship. The other gods should be honoured as servants of Vishnu, but must not be worshipped as Godhead.

(7) The Shastras are of various kinds. The spiritual Shastras are the only revealed Scriptures. They are-Rig, Yajur, Sama and Atharva Vedas, the Mahabharata, the original Ramayana, the Pancharatra and all works that follow them. All other books are not only not Shastras but constitute the positive wrong track. The Shastra is so-called because He cannot be challenged, being the revealed Word of Godhead. He can be understood only by the method of obeying the real meaning of the injunctions to be learnt from the bona fide teacher by the method that is laid down in the Shastra. The empiric study and teaching of the spiritual Shastras by those who suppose them to be on a par with books written by empiricists, are strictly forbidden by the Shastras.

(8) The authoritativeness of the Shastras cannot be proved by the empiric method in which the consensus of the testimony of the senses is assumed to establish the truth of a proposition regarding any mundane occurrence. The Absolute is located beyond the scope of the human senses and so the testimony of the senses, on which the empiricists rely, is not available for finding the Absolute. The Absolute reveals Himself to the senses of the soul by counteracting the opposition of the superimposed preventing apparatus of the physical senses. The Transcendental Sound appearing on the lips of His devotee has power of making Himself heard by the ear of the soul. Those persons who are privileged to hear the Transcendental Sound alone possess the knowledge of the Reality which is the only true knowledge. These persons are able to convey the Truth to conditioned souls by the process of oral communication. The Shastras, which are symbolised records of the Transcendental Sound, are not intelligible till the contents are heard in the form of articulated sound from the lips of self-realised souls. This is the one process of the Descent of the Absolute to this mundane plane. This process is part of the Vedic Revelation. There is no other method for approaching the Absolute. This negative testimony to the authoritative character of the Scriptural Records is in keeping with the requirements of empiric judgment. To this is to be added the positive testimony of a long series of self-realised souls who have attained spiritual enlightenment by following the Scriptural method. The more one devotes his unbiased attention to the arguments and recorded experience of this large number of pure souls the balance of probability is discovered to lie towards convinced faith in the authoritative character of the Scriptures and their being identical with the Word Who is God. It is only by submissive enquiry for the purpose of offering one's unconditional and exclusive service to the Absolute and to nothing else that the Mercy of the Absolute requires to be solicited. Empiric arrogance is akin to the ridiculous, immoral, ungrateful, irrational attitude of the grain of sand on the sea-shore aspiring to carry in its pores the great ocean whose tiny constituent it is. It is lack of humility before the Absolute that is responsible for our being saddled with the paraphernalia of the conditioned state for the elaborate display of our self-elected folly. The Shastras are identical with the Master and reserve the right of being not exposed to the limited mentality of man if He is approached by the challenging empiric mood. Godhead is Autocrat and His Authority is above all challenge. His Own Word is His sole testimony. Spiritual enlightenment is a matter of Grace, not of right. To realise that this must be so is the only proof of the possession of real sincerity of disposition. But such disposition towards the Absolute is also the gift of the causeless Mercy of the Absolute Himself.

(9) There are no disruptive differences on the spiritual plane where the Absolute is eternally self-manifest to the uneclipsed cognition of the infinity of His servitors. Those interpretations that deviate from the line of vision of the Absolute produce discord and multiply differences only among those who are wanting in real sincerity of the unconditional serving disposition. The only way in which the doubts and difficulties of a conditioned soul may be removed is patient and loyal solicitation of the causeless Mercy of the Absolute for removing one's duplicity and irrational arrogance. The Word of the teacher of the Absolute Truth is truer than the Earth and the Heavens and has to be received as such if His true meaning is to be realised. This is the teaching of all the revealed Scriptures. Worldly knowledge is not a help but is often a positive hindrance in the quest of the Absolute. Neither is the Absolute to be found by discarding the right use of one's cognitive faculty. No referendum to any number of unenlightened souls can help a person or community to obtain the sight of Godhead.

(10) The Absolute cannot be known by any methods of aspiring endeavour that are familiar to philosophers and scientists who meddle with physical Nature. The only method is to wait for the Agent of the Absolute to take the initiative and to pray to be able to recognise him when he actually does appear on this mundane plane. The Agent of the Absolute can alone remove our ignorance of the Truth Who is eternally revealed to this world by the spiritual Shastras in the Form of the Transcendental Word. The Agent of the Absolute will announce himself to whom-so-ever the Absolute is pleased causelessly to manifest Himself. Those who do not obtain His Mercy are the only unfortunate persons. But those who are prepared to hope and wait for the Pleasure of the Absolute are well-advised and will one day obtain His causeless Mercy as promised by the Shastras. External appearances are always deceptive and the Agent of the Absolute is likely to appear in the form that is least likely to appeal to the judgment of conditioned souls. It is necessary to keep the mind fully open to be enabled to recognise the Agent of the Absolute under whatever external form he may choose to manifest his appearance to our erring vision. Till one has been actually favoured by the Mercy of the Absolute one must abstain from setting up as a preacher of the Truth.

Sree Prataparudradeva

(KING PRATAPARUDRADEVA ACC.1497—d.1540. INHERITED FROM HIS FATHER SREE PURUSOTTAMDEVA, AN EMPIRE EXTENDING FROM THE HUGHLY AND MIDNAPUR DISTRICTS OF BENGAL TO THE GUNTUR DISTRICT IN MADRAS PRESIDENCY. HE WAS THE CONTEMPORARY OF KRISHNADEVARAI, THE GREATEST KING OF VIJAYANAGAR, AND OF SULTAN ALAUDDIN HUSSEN SHAH, THE GREATEST OF THE INDEPENDENT SULTANS OF BENGAL, AGAINST THE FIERCE ASSAULTS OF BOTH OF WHOM HE WAS ABLE TO PRESERVE HIS EXTENSIVE EMPIRE IN TACT)

SREE Prataparudradeva was reigning in Orissa at the time when, in 1510 A.D., Sree Krishna Chaitanya, then in His twenty-fifth year came to Puri immediately after His acceptance of Sannyas (renunciation). On His arrival at Puri Sree Chaitanya met Vasudeva Sarbabhauma, the greatest Vedantic scholar of that time, to whom He was pleased to reveal His Divine Personality. Sree Chaitanya then set out on His pilgrimage to South India.

These wonderful tidings soon reached the ears of King Prataparudra who thereupon summoned Vasudeva Sarbabhauma to the royal presence at Cuttack in order to receive from him definite and authentic information regarding Sree Chaitanya.

The meeting of King Prataparudra with Vasudeva Sarbabhauma is thus described in Sree Chaitanya-charitamrita. "The King after making his obesience to Sarbabhauma offered him a seat as his respected guest. He then questioned him about Mahaprabhu. "I hear that a great person has come to your house from Gauda, who is very merciful. All persons say that he has been very merciful to you. Be so kind as to enable me to have a sight of him". Bhatta said, "All that you have heard is true. But it is not possible for you to see him. He is a sannyasin living in seclusion. He never sees a king even in his dream. Yet I might have made you see him by some means or other. But He has recently gone to the South". The King said, "Why did he go away from Jagannath" ? Bhatta replied, "This is one kind of the transcendental activity practised by the saints. They journey to the tirthas in order to sanctify them and to deliver worldly persons under such pretext. So says Sreemad Bhagavatam, "The highest devotees like yourself are themselves the real tirthas. They sanctify the tirthas polluted by the sins of worldly people, by the purifying power of Godhead Who ever dwells in their hearts". Such is the invariable nature of the Vaishnavas. But Sree Chaitanya is not a jiva (individual soul), but Absolute Godhead Himself" The King said, "How could you then agree to let him go ? Why did you not try to make him stay by falling at His Feet ?" Bhattacharyya said, "He is Godhead Himself and His Own Master, the Same as Sree Krishna. He is not to be controlled by any other person. But yet I tried my best to make Him stay. I did not succeed, as Godhead is His own Master". The King said, "Bhatta, you are the greatest among the learned. I believe it to be true that He is Krishna, as you say so. If He happens to come to this side again I would like to see Him once to bless my eyes". Bhattacharyya said, "He will come back before long. We shall have to provide a place for His residence which must be a secluded one. Could you let me have for this purpose a suitable place close to Jagannath and yet solitary ?" The King said, "Exactly such is the house of Kashi Misra. It is close to Jagannath and is extremely secluded"

After this conversation King Prataparudra waited for the return of Sree Chaitanya from the South in a state of great suspense. Sree Chaitanya met Rai Ramananda on the bank of the Godavari. Rai Ramananda was the Governor of King Prataparudra in charge of the Godavari Province. Rai Ramananda received the Mercy of the Lord and was very anxious to accompany Him. But Sree Chaitanya bade him wait for His return from the South. On His return journey the Lord again met Rai Ramananda and commanded him to join Him at Puri, giving up the service of the King. Rai Ramananda accordingly came up to Cuttack for obtaining the necessary permission of the King for laying down his office.

Meanwhile the Lord returned to Puri by way of Alalnath. At the very first opportunity Sarbabhauma laid the case of the King before the Lord. Let me quote again the words of Sree Chaitanya-charitamrita. "One day Sarbabhauma said to the Lord, I wish to make submission touching a certain matter, if the Lord says that I may do so without fear". The Lord said, "Speak on and have no fear. I shall do as you say if it is proper, but not if it is otherwise". Sarbabhauma said, "King Prataparudra is in a state of great anxiety. He wishes to meet Yourself". The Lord puts His hand to His ears and recited the Name of Narayan, "How, indeed, could Sarbabhauma make such an improper proposal ? I am a recluse Sannyasin. For Me to see the King is like seeing a woman, that is like swallowing poison. 'For a person, who has set his face towards the service of Godhead being desirous of having nothing on his own account and hoping to get across the Ocean of this mundane world, to meet a worldly person or a woman is far, far worse alas! than even the swallowing of poison". Sarbabhauma said, "What You say is true. But the King is servant of Jagannath and a devotee of the highest order". The lord said, yet the King has the form of the deadly serpent. One's mind is polluted by the touch of a female form made of wood. 'Just at the sight of the serpent or its form causes mental perturbation the very sight of the form of the female or of the worldly person is a cause for alarm.' Let not such a proposal come out of your lips again. If you say so again you will see Me no more at this place". Sarbabhauma was struck with a great fear and returned home in a state of great anxiety."

Meanwhile Rai Ramanauda had returned to Cuttack and from there he now came to Puri in the train of King Prataparudra. Rai at once made his way to the Lord. The meeting is thus described in Sree Chaitanya charitamrita. "The Rai made his obeisance and the Lord at once clasped him in His Embrace. Both began to cry under the influence of love. On beholding such affectionate conduct of the Lord towards Rai the minds of all the devotees were filled with exquisite wonder. Rai said, "I told the King of Your Command. By reason of Your Command the King at once freed me from the concerns of this world. I said, I am unable to perform any worldly work. If you are pleased to order I would like to stay at the Feet of Chaitanya. On hearing Your Name the King was very much pleased. He at once rose from his seat and embraced me. At the very Sound of Your Name he was overpowered with great love and, taking me by the hand, gave expression to his extra-ordinary affection. "The salary that you receive remains yours. Serve the Feet of Chaitanya, being free from all anxiety. I indeed, am most vile, unfit to have the Sight of Him. He who serves Him attains the only object of life. He is Supremely Merciful. He is the Son of the Chief of Braja. He will surely show Himself to me in some other birth". Indeed, I have not a particle of the intense longing of love for You that I found in the King". The Lord said, "You are the premier devotee of Krishna. He, indeed, is most fortunate who loves you. Krishna will accept the King for his goodness in loving you. 'O Partha, those are not My devotees who are devoted to Me. Those are My best devotees who are attached to My devotees'. Esteeming My service, prostrations to Me with all limbs, to worship My devotee with greater honour than Myself, to realise the quality of My devotee in every entity, to employ all limbs for Myself, to speak My Praise with the voice, to surrender the mind to Me and to give up all lust, these are the characteristics of My devotee'. 'Devi the worship of Vishnu is superior to that of all entities. The worship of His devotees is superior to His worship'. 'The service of those servants of Krishna walking in the path of the Absolute on which the God of gods Janardana is sung eternally is not attainable to persons who have not practised sufficient self-denying activities".

On his arrival at Puri the King immediately sent for Sarbabhauma. After making his obeisance to Sarbabhauma he put the question, 'Did you make the submission on my behalf at the Feet of the Lord ?' Sarbabhauma replied, I tried my best. Yet He refused to see the King. He will leave Puri if I make the request again. On hearing this the mind of the King was filled with the deepest dejection as he spoke to this effect. "He has appeared in this world for the purpose of delivering the vile sinner. He has saved Jagai and Madhai. He has come to save the whole world, with the exception of Prataparudra. 'He will cast His Glance of Mercy on those belonging to the lowest castes who are unseeable and yet, alas ! will not see me. Did He then appear with the resolve of showing His Mercy by leaving out only myself ?' It is His Resolve that He will never see me. It is my determination to give up life deprived of His Mercy. What is the worth of kingdom and body if I do not obtain the treasure of the Mercy of the Supreme Lord ? These are all in vain".

On hearing the words of the King Sarbabhauma reflected within himself. He was astonished to find the vehement attachment of the King for the Lord. Bhattacharyya said, "Honoured one, cherish no sorrow. The Lord will certainly be merciful to you. He submits to love. Your love is profound. He will certainly have mercy on you. I suggest this method. This will enable you to obtain the sight of the Lord. On the Car-festival day the Lord in the Company of all His devotees will dance in front of the Car, all absorbed in love for Jagannath. He will then proceed to the flower garden, being still under the influence of love. At the moment the Lord enters the garden divesting yourself of the royal dress, unattended by any one, you should go there alone, and reciting aloud the section of the five chapters of the Bhagabatam treating of the circular amorous dance of Krishna in the company of the milk-maids, and going forward in that manner, take hold of the Feet of the Supreme Lord. Being without external consciousness at the time, on hearing the Name of Krishna, He will embrace you, supposing you to be a Vaishnava. The Lord's attitude to you has undergone a change today due to Ramananda Rai who related to the Lord your loving quality".

On hearing these words, 'the Lord of elephants' experienced great happiness in his mind and made up his mind to meet the Lord in the manner suggested by Sarbabhauma. He asked Bhatta when the festival of the Snanayatra was to take place. Bhatta replied that the festival would come off after three days. Bhatta then consoled the King bidding him to have no anxiety and left the royal presence after the King had been a little composed.

Then the festival of Snanayatra duly arrived. The Lord evinced great delight on witnessing the function. He was very much saddened on missing the sight of Jagannath during the period of Anabasar. Feeling the weight of His sorrow in the mood of the milk-maids of Braja the Lord betook himself to the seclusion of Alalnath, giving up for the nonce the society of all His companions. The devotees subsequently followed the Lord to Alalnath and communicated to Him the information that the devotees from Gauda were on their way to Puri to meet Him. Sarbabhauma accompanied the Lord on His return journey to Puri from Alalnath.

Sarbabhauma at once hurried to the King to inform him of the return of the Lord. While he was still in the royal presence Gopinathacharyya came to him and after blessing in the customary form, said, "I have come to you Bhattacharyya, to inform you that two hundred Vaishnavas are coming to Puri from Gauda. They are all of them devotees of the Supreme Lord and great Bhagavatas. They have already arrived at the Narendra Tank. We have to arrange for their residence and prasadam." Gopinathacharyya was the brother-in-law of Sarbabhauma Bhattacharyya.

The King said, "I will order the Padichha (the officer in charge). He will provide residence and all other necessaries. Bhattacharyya, do me the favour of showing me one by one all the devotees of Mahaprabhu, who are coming from Gauda". Bhattacharyya proposed that the King might for the purpose ascend the terrace of the Palace. 'Gopinath knows them all. He will point them out. I do not myself know any of them. I have a great mind to know them. Gopinathacharyya will acquaint us with all of them'.

After the above conversation all three mounted the terrace of the King's Palace. Just then the party of the Vaishnavas came within sight. Damodar Swarup and Govinda were carrying the prasadi garlands towards the party which was now coming towards the palace. Mahaprabhu had sent forward these two for meeting the Vaishnavas. The King asked, "Tell me, who are these two ?" Bhattacharyya said, "This one is Swarup Damodar. He is the second body of Mahaprabhu. The second person is Mahaprabhu's attendant Govinda. The Lord has sent the garlands in token of His regard for the Vaishnavas, by the hands of these two".

Swarup was the first to place the garlands round the neck of Advaita. Govinda then offered him his garlands also. Then Govinda made prostrated obeisance to Acharyya. Acharyya did not know him and enquired of Swarup. Damodar said, "His name is Govinda. He is the servant of Iswara Puri and full of every good quality. Puri commanded him to serve the Lord. For that reason the Lord keeps him with Himself". The King asked, "Who is the person to whom the two offerd the garlands ? He is a person possessing extraordinary force of commanding energy, a great saint". Acharyya replied, "His name is Advaita Acharyya. He is a person who is respected by Mahaprabhu and by all. That other person is Sribas Pandit. That is Pandit Bakreswar. Vidyanidhi Acharyya. Pandit Gadadhar. Chandrasekhar Acharyya. Pandit Purandar. Gangadas Pandit. Pandit Sankar. Murari Gupta. Pandit Narayan. Thakur Haridas, saviour of the world. Hari Bhatta. Sree Nrisimhananda. Vasudeb Datta. Sivananda Sen. Govinda Ghosh, Madhab Ghosh, Basu Ghosh, three brothers whose Kirtana pleases the Lord. Raghab Pandit. Nandan Acharyya. Sriman Pandit. Srikanta. Narayana. Suklambar. Sridhar. Bijya. Ballabha Sen. Purusottam. Sanjaya. This is Satyaraj Khan of Kulingram. Kamananda. Mukunda Das. Narahari, Sree Raghunandan. Chiranjib of Khanda. Sulochan. It is not practicable to point out every one. All whom you behold are the associates of Chaitanya. Their Life is Chaitanya'.

The King said, "I am filled with a sense of inexpressible wonder by the sight of them. I have never before beheld such an exhibition of the power and glory of Vaishnavas. All of them are of a hue as bright as that of crores of Suns. I have never before seen this exquisitely mellow Kirtana, such love, such dance, such sound of the Name of Hari. Nothing at all like this I have ever seen before; nor have ever heard of it from anybody". Said Bhattacharya, "This sweet vocal performance is the creation of Chaitanya,—this loving congregational chant of Hari. Manifest-His Appearance in this world Chaitanya has promulgated this universal function of all souls. The Religion of Kali Age is the congregational chant of the Name of Krishna. He who worships

Him by the sacrifice of the Name is alone possessed of goodness of judgment, all others are the misguided victims of Kali." (In the Kali Age) all persons possessed of good judgment worship by the method of sacrifice of the congregational chant the Great One in whose mouth they dwerel constantly the two letters 'Kri and Shna', Whose hue is non-Krishna (or yellow) and who is encompassed with His Limbs, Ornaments, Weapons and Associates'.

The King observed, "Chaitanya is Krishna by the testimony of the Shastras. But why are the Pandits averse to Him ?" Said Bhatta, "One who receives the least particle of His Mercy, can alone accept Him as Krishna. One who does not recive His Mercy, though he is well-versed in the Shastras, does not recognise Him as Godhead even by actually seeing and hearing Him. 'Yet, O Bhagavan, one who is graced by the least particle of the Mercy of Thy twin Lotus Feet becomes cognisant of the truth of the Glory of Godhead, and none other can know even if he is engaged on the quest for eternity"

The Theistic Exhibition

(at Dacca, January, 1933)

THE Theistic Exhibition is identical with the method of ritualistic worship of the Holy Icon. It is possible in the Kali Yuga to perform the archana only as the auxiliary of Kirtana. The pompous rituals are meaningless in this Age if they are not enlivened by the method of the vocal exposition. That which we see, hear, smell, taste, touch with our physical senses, is not Vishnu nor the worship of Vishnu. Vishnu is never worshipped by the physical senses nor by the mind that is dependent for all its store of offerings on our sensuous experience. The real worship of Vishnu is neither the concrete nor the abstract mundane performances of the phyiscal body or the materialised mind. Those, therefore, who suppose that they have been able to get rid of idolatry by the substitution of mental in place of phyiscal worship, are also under the spell of the Deluding Energy of Vishnu. The Holy Icon is to be recogised. The idol is to be got rid of. It is only on the appearance of the Holy Icon to the unobscured spiritual vision of the emancipated soul that the sight of the idol can really be got rid of. Darkness is dispelled by Sun-rise. It is not necessary to make any separate attempt for getting rid of darkness.

The iconoclast and the iconographer are alike deluded if they imagine that the Appearance of Krishna or the disappearance of non-Krishna is capable of being brought about by the making or breaking of idols by any mundane process. The mundane breaking of idol is the monistic form of idolatry. God-head is not the creature of our imaginations. It is necessary to seek to be acquainted with the Real Divine Personality instead of employing ourselves in the making and breaking of the mundane idols.

The Theistic Exhibition which has been organised by Sree Viswa-Vaishnava Raj Sabha at Dacca seeks to offer the true method of escape from the dilemma of the misguided idolaters of the gross and subtle camps. The reader will be in a position to gather the general idea of the function from the brief exposition of the subject-matter of each stall that is given below.

The Exhibition is not to be understood as a rough method of presenting the Truth, suited to the requirements of the unlettered masses. On the contrary it should be regarded as being analogous to the application of the principles of the Mathematical Science for the solution of the actual needs of man. The Mathematician does not suppose that it is the goal of Mathematics to remain a subject of abstract speculation inaccessible to the unlettered masses.

Ritualistic worship offers the only chance of the real escape from the necessity of mental and physical performances. But it is not necessary to practise idolatry in the name of ritualistic worship. It is the purpose of the Exhibition to demonstrate the real method of archana in order to discourage abstract speculations in the name of Kirtana.

A synopsis of the Theistic Exhibition at Dacca, January, 1933.

The 'Descents' or Appearances of Vishnu (All pervading Divinity) to this world correspond to the stages of gradual progress of the Theistic disposition among His eternally associated servants. They discourage all attempts of describing in terms of the stages and their corresponding physical forms of evolution, on the mundane plane, of the physical organism.

They represent the Appearances of Vishnu with Forms and Functions corresponding to the graduated stages of evolution of the devotional dispositions of the animated kingdom.

The Ten Avataras are in the following chronological order of their Appearances.—

(1) The Divine Fish (Sree Matsya), (2) the Divine Tortoise (Sree Koorma) (3) the Divine Boar (Sree Varaha), (4) the Divine Man-Lion (Sree Narasimha), (5) the Divine Dwarf (Sree Vamana), (6) Rama with the Axe (Sree Parashurama), (7) Rama, the son of Dasaratha (Sree Dasarathi Rama), (8) Rama, the son of Rohini (Sree Balarama), (9) Sree Buddha, (10) Sree Kalki.

These "Descents" of Vishnu to the mundane plane were manifested for discouraging Anthropomorphism, Zoomorphism and all other "isms". The Absolute reserves the right of manifesting His Divine Forms according to the degree of unalloyed serving aptitude and admits of no challenge.

Attempt is being made here in the night to see the Sun with the help of lantern lights. It is impossible to see the Sun in the dark night with as many millions of lights however powerful, as we can avail ourselves of; but it is easy to see the Sun through our retina when the latter, self-effulgent as he is, emanates his rays.

Similarly, the empiric methods of the worldly Scientists, Idealists, or Henotheists are all vain attempts to reach, by means of their empiric attainments and predilections, the Absolute Truth Who eternally manifests Himself out of Grace to His submissive and unalloyed devotees.

Stairs built by Ravana, the type of the aggressive empiricist, for reaching the Absolute.

Ravana (King of Lanka) was building stairs to reach the realms of the Absolute, but they collapsed in the mid air for want of any kind of support. The empiric attainments of the ten-headed Ravana could not proceed further.

This shows the plight and worthlessness of the ascending empiric or inductive method.

In a sacrificial ceremony King Bali (the grand-son of Prahlad Maharaj) made a vow to make a gift to every one of whatever he desires. The Godhead Vishnu in the form of Dwarf Brahmin came to him and begged of him as much space as could be covered by Three of His Footsteps.

Sukracharyya, the pseudo-preceptor of the King, with his shrewd intelligence could see through the prayer of the Dwarf Brahmin, intervened and told the King that the Brahmin was no other than Vishnu in Person and that He would take away everything he possessed. But the King ignored his Guru's advice and surrendered his all to the Dwarf Absolute.

A Sat-Guru (Spiritual Preceptor)

is he who wishes for the eternal good of his disciple, without being actuated by any personal selfish motive. The King surrendered his all, knowing Vishnu to be his only Protector and Maintainer.

Family spiritual (?) guides (gurus) opposed to unalloyed service of the Absolute should be discarded.

(5)

Opponents of the aural reception of the Transcendental Message are classed by the Srimat Bhagabatam into 4 heads and are compared to 4 classes of animals viz., (1) dogs, (2) asses, (3) pigs, and (4) camels.

Like the dogs which make unnecessary noises, follow bitches for gratification of senses, although neglected by them, there are people who make blasphemies of the devotees without cause and take pleasure in unwholesome talks and activities.

Like the pigs which wallow in filth, there are people who enjoy in the mire of worldly fame and ambition.

Like camels which relish prickly thorns, there are people who cling to mundane things inspite of their constant sufferings from association thereof.

Asses carry loads of sugar on their back, without having had a taste thereof. Likewise, there are people who read volumes of Scriptures, without getting any clue to the spirit thereof—viz., knowledge of the Absolute.

Churning of the Ocean by the gods and the demons. Ambrosia—the summum bonum of human existence—the Transcendental Love, obtained therefrom was distributed to the gods alone by Vishnu in the form of Mohini, depriving the demons of the same.

(7)

Predilection and temperaments of the people on the eve of the Advent of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya have been shown.

Being in affluent circumstances, the people busied themselves in the marriage of their sons, daughters, put animals in the worship of gods and goddesses, spending lots of money thereon ; but they totally ignored the Highest Service of Sree Krishna. These facts give the lie direct to the supposition of those who think that the service of the Godhead is possible only under affluent circumstances, when one is not to struggle for his daily bread.

In order to be a true house-holder one should, under all circumstances, devote his all to the Service of the Absolute.

(8)

The pandits of the day delighted in mere controversial disputes, arising from the misinterpretation of Scriptures, their greatest ambition being to defeat their rival in open controversy ; but none cared seriously for the Absolute Truth, the supreme excellence of the Transcendental Service of Whom is the aim and object of all theistic Scriptures.

Pedantic wranglings of empiric scholars obstruct all enquiry about the Absolute. Empiric study of the Scriptures is specially harmful.

(9)

An abstract meditationist seated on the bank of a river, practising his yoga (meditation); but the appearance of a young beautiful lady on the bank makes him stare at her with lustful eyes.

Artificial concentration of mind practised by pseudo-yogins or abstract meditationists is fruitless and ineffective.

(10)

People resorting to many bodily and mental austerities for future happiness before the Advent of Sree Chaitanya Deva, e.g., an ascetic practising austerities by standing on one leg for years together, men of that ilk are shown here. These bodily manœuvres, like those in a circus, may invite public applause, but are of no benefit to the doers, and are mere waste of time.

(11)

Sreedhar, a poor devotee of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, lived on the sale of plantain, plantain-barks, radishes etc., having no thatches on his hut, with rugged wearing clothes on his person. But by chanting the Name of Hari day and night, he surrendered his all at the feet of the Lord. The Lord was moved by his service and oftentimes forcibly snatched away his plantains etc.

A non-devotee may view His conduct as if interfering with the life-bread of Sreedhar. But Sreedhar most gladly submitted to His apparent violence.

Worldly prosperities are not the results of the Service of Godhead. By His service, Sreedhar obtained what the multi-millionaires cannot expect to get in the infinite space of time.

Sree Vyasa Puja

AN immemorial tradition connects the name of Sree Vyasa with the classification of the four Vedic Samhitas, the authorship of the Brahmasutra and of the Puranas including the Mahabharata. Sree Vyasa is the authorised transmitter of the Vedic revelation by the methods of classification and exposition.

It is, however, necessary to get rid of the empiric idea that aphorism is subsequent to detailed exposition. Empiric aphorisms undoubtedly are of the nature of compressed statements of topics that have already been fully presented in the elaborate form. The empiric aphorism is, therefore, of the nature of a hint. Empiric generalisation is necessitated for the convenience of presenting the growing body of worldly experience in a connected and handy form.

The Vedic mantra does not belong to the class of aphorisms in the empiric sense. The Vedic mantra does not convey any sense whatever to the uninitiated nor to those who are not prepared to attain to the realisation of its meaning by the unconditional service of the spiritual guide. It is never possible, by the very nature of the subject, to master the contents of the Veda either in their aphoristic or elaborate form by the exercise of one's memory and intelligence. The subject is located beyond the scope of all such endeavour.

That is the real problem. Transcendentalism is not mysticism. The mantra is not a mystic formula which is to be blindly recited for obtaining some conceivable result. It is not a mundane performance at all. Those who offer only mundane argument in explanation of the meaning of the process only recommend an irrational course which is utterly suicidal in every sense. There is no reason why by mechanically repeating a string of set formulae the plane of transcendence is to be reached. Why should we make a distinction between the mantra and any other ordinary combination of words? The Scriptures themselves supply the convincing argument. It is everybody's business to be fully acquainted with the same before taking to a habit which should be otherwise both harmful and ridiculous.

All aphorisms are not mantras. The mantra has a definite and particular form. This disposes of the supposition that the mantra is the general statement of a number of particulars intended for helping the memory at a time when writing was unknown. The aphorisms of the Brahmasutra are not mantra although they gather up and present in a severely condensed and systematic form the teaching of the revealed Scriptures. The mantra is, therefore, not a symbol for recalling something else.

The whole of the Veda was originally revealed by Sree Narayana to the heart of Brahma in the form of the four metrical stanzas that have been preserved in the Bhagabatam. By meditating on the same Brahma attained the power of creation of all mundane entities. No scientific man of this Age or of any Age has ever presumed to be able to create any entity.

The Veda means Knowledge. The Veda does not mean empiric knowledge. The Veda is the real knowledge. The attainment of the real knowledge of creation is identical with the acquisition of the power to create and with actual creation. On the transcendental plane these processes are identical without losing their distinctive natures.

The four slokas revealed to Brahma are available to all of us. But not every reader of the Bhagabatam prone to empiricism is enabled to attain the vision of Brahma even with the help of the most elaborate presentation of the subject by Sree Vyasa in the Bhagabatam. There are elaborate commentaries of the Bhagabatam and of all the important Puranas.

There are huge commentaries and commentaries of commentaries of the Brahmasutra. The Vedic Samhitas have each of them a huge auxiliary literature of its own. But with all this help no sane man has been able to attain the knowledge of the Absolute. No commentator has opined that it is possible to understand the Veda by scholastic exertions on the one hand or by mechanical recital of the mantra on the other.

The dazzling empiric achievements of modern times have filled mankind with the confidence, that once prompted Ravana, to undertake the building of empiric steps for scaling the Heavens. Modern empiric scholars are not quite as ambitious as Ravana in every case. But very few empiric scholars would be prepared to admit that it is worth anybody's while to try to understand the meaning of the Veda by following the method laid down in a clear manner in the Vedic literature, viz., by reciting the mantra after submitting to the unconditional guidance of the teacher of the Absolute Truth.

The books are not the revelation. The exponents of the books are part and parcel of the revelation. In other words the articulated Sound is the Absolute. The books preserve the spoken words but cannot tell Him to us. He is Sound and requires to be heard. This is the meaning of the term 'Sruti' which is accordingly applied to the Vedic literature. The heard sound is not the sound as written and read in the books but as spoken by self-realised souls to the attending ear of the soul disposed to offer his unconditional service to the speaker.

The personal factor supplies the essential connecting link between the eclipsed cognition and the Absolute. The Absolute takes the initiative by means of persons to dispel the gloom of ne-science that enshrouds the soul in the conditioned state. The Absolute appears on the serving lips of His devotee and reserves the right of not being exposed to the mundane senses to which He presents His deluding face. Those, who are prepared not to confound the words spoken by the devotee with words vainly uttered by worldly people who put their trust in empiric wisdom and human contrivance, are alone eligible to hear the Transcendental Sound. Personal submission to the pure devotee is the key to the situation. This is not admitted by those empiricists who desire to know before they submit.

Why are empiricists so unreasonably afraid of submitting to the pure devotee of Godhead? Pure devotees are not quite as plentiful as they seem to think. Even after one has made up his mind to offer his unconditional submission to the self-realised soul he may have to wait for years and for generations before his chance actually arrives. But such waiting is not useless. 'In this case alone they also serve who stand and wait.' It is not necessary nor advisable to make one's hasty submission to the first passer-by in the garb of a sadhu and afterwards blame the Scriptures for the resulting misfortune. There is also a stage of knowledge that precedes the recognition of the devotee. It is absolutely necessary, nay the only duty of all conditioned souls, to wait with a perfectly open mind for the real chance. It is necessary to strive to reform one's ways of living for this purpose. This should be the preliminary goal of all human endeavour. This is the underlying principle of the varnashrama organisation. It was not the Purpose of Sree Chaitanya, nor of any of the self-realised preachers of the Truth, to belittle or abolish the teaching of the whole body of the Vedic literature. There is no empiric road to Heaven. By the manipulation of worldly living and worldly prospects the plane of spiritual service of the Divinity can never be attained. No Ravana has access to the plane of Vibhishana whose nature is categorically different from that of his brother.

The worship of Sree Vyasadeva is not the worship of any empiric guru. No empiric teacher must be worshipped. The empiric teacher is the unconscious enemy of our souls. He teaches us to use everything for our own gratification. He has no purpose of supplying the all important connection between our wordly needs and the service of Godhead. This constitutes the bane of all empiric teaching which is directed either to Elevationism or Liberationism, materialistic Optimism or materialistic Pessimism, or to both. It is never directed to the Absolute. Such a teacher is also apt to be regarded as his servant by his pupil. He is paid a remuneration by his pupil in accordance with his usefulness to himself. If the pupil is enabled to gain his wolrdly purpose with the help of his teacher the latter is considered to be a good servant and worthy of being honoured by a crumb from the piled heap on the table of his pupil master. This is the real nature of the honour that is shown to the empiric teacher by his hypocritical pupil. The latter pays back the former in his own coin. The empiric teacher is not an advocate of activity directed solely to the service of the One Master. As the fitting reward of such teaching he is provided with a countless host of masters in the shape of his atheistical pupils.

The transcendental teacher is categorically different from the purveyor of empiric wisdom. The transcendental teacher wields the delegated power of Sree Vyasadeva. Sree Vyasadava is no other than Narayana Himself. This was revealed to the world by Sree Chaitanya on the occasion of the worship of Sree Vyasa by Sree Nityananda at the house of Sribas Pandit. On that famous occasion Sree Gaursundar accepted the worship of Sree Nityananda in the Form of Narayana-Baladeva identical with Sree Nityananda Himself.

There is no doubt that Sree Nityananda is the same Entity as Sree Gaursundar. But Sree Nityananda is Manifesting Godhead and Sree Gaursundar is the Manifesting Manifested. Sree Nityananda is Worshipping Godhead and Sree Gaursundar is Worshipped Godhead. This eternal distinction must not be overlooked. Sree Gaursundar accordingly did not accept the worship of Sree Vyasa as Sree Krishna. By His Conduct the Supreme Lord revealed to the world the necessity of worshipping the Guru's own distinctive Personality not by the method of reference to Sree Krishna. Unless Sree Baladeva is worshipped on His Own account Sree Krishna refuses to accept any service offered to Himself by such hypocritical offender. In other words if any one thinks that he can attain to the service of Sree Krishna without the full and abiding help of His Manifesting Personality such a person does not admit the Autocracy of Godhead and is not really prepared to offer his unconditional service. Unconditional service of the Absolute implies as preliminary the unconditional service of the Agent of the Absolute. The Agent is no other but the Absolute Himself in His specifically Manifesting Role.

Any worship offered to the spiritual Guru is worship offered to Krishna. Any worship offered to the empiric guru is worship withheld from Krishna. The Scriptures, therefore, command us to offer our unconditional service to the pure devotees of Godhead and forbid us to learn anything from atheistical teachers or to show such teachers any respect. All honour is due only to Krishna and His devotees. The honour that is pretended to be shown to the empiric teacher by his pupils is only the arrogant condescension that is exhibited towards a useful servant by his conceited worldly master. The external form of respect is a conventional device for softening the keen edge of patronising condescension that is nevertheless only too apparent. It is the geatest offence to carry this hypocritical aptitude to the teacher of the Absolute.

The Theistic Exhibition

(12)

The Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya in the Role of the Gardener by His Own Example and Teachings, practises tending the Tree of Love of Sree Krishna by protecting it from all damaging influences, and when the Fruit of Love ripens, makes a free gift of the Blissful Fruit to all persons without distinction, in order to induce them to plant and grow the Tree of Love of Sree Krishna on their own account after learning the art from Him. He poses Himself as the Tree of Love as well as the Gardener Himself.

(13)

Prakashananda, a Vedantist Sannyasin, blasphemed the Supreme Lord in his teachings at Benares, by denying the distinctive Form of Godhead. Punishment with leprosy on his person did not bring him to his senses. For this conduct of Prakashananda, Sree Krishna Chaitanya Deva expressed His great anger before His devotee Murari Gupta.

Impersonality of Godhead should be discarded and His distinctive Transcendental Form should be accepted.

(14)

The thought-currents of Idealists and Pantheists, are shown here. All objects of this world are mixed up with the Deluding Potency of Godhead and everything of this world is non-eternal. Erring in that line they think the Name, Form, Attribute, Pastimes etc., of Godhead to be non-eternal and destructible. In doing so they try to cut into pieces the Transcendental Body of Godhead.

Prakashananda assailing the person of the Absolute attempts to refute Theism by misinterpretation of the Scriptures.

Jharikhanda is a forest-place often called Garjat. The Supreme Lord, during His travel from Puri to Brindaban, by chanting loudly the Name of Hari, made the infuriated tigers, lions, alarmed deers and elephants of the forest dance together.

Transcendental Sound appearing on the lips of His pure devotees accepts the harmonious service of the soul of every entity.

Before Sultan Hossain Shah became the King of Gauda, he served under one Subuddhi Roy, who once whipped him for negligence of duty. But when the Sultan became King the table turned and Subuddhi Roy came under his service. The Sultan retaliated by making Subuddhi Roy drink the desecrated water. To expiate his condition, Subuddhi Roy went to Pandits at Benares for advice who advised him to commit suicide by drinking boiled ghee. Not satisfied with the advice, he came before the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya Who happened to be there at the time. The Lord advised him to go to Brindaban and constantly chant the Name of Hari, the mere dawning of Whom expiates all sins. A mere Dawning of the Name of Hari drives away all sins.

An elephant may be cleansed any number of times, but immediately he makes himself dirty and filthy. So the expiation of sins by the elevationists is fruitless and ineffective. Appearance or the Dawning of the Name is like the rays of the rising Sun dispelling all darkness.

Kala Krishnadas, an attendant of Sree Krishna Chaitanya during His tour in the Deccan, was seduced by the Bhattatharins, a class of "tantric" sannyasins of Malabar, who used to capture people with the help of immoral women kept in their custody. The Supreme Lord, however, rescued him from their clutch, but on His return to Puri He dismissed him for his immoral association with women.

Even direct personal service apparently accepted by the Lord did not cure the carnality of His attendant who abused his own free will.

(18)

Junior Haridas, a vairagi who used to sing kirtan to the Supreme Lord, once had an occasion to beg fine rice from one Madhavi Devi, an aged saintly lady of Puri, who might have had, in her house, a beautiful young lady. As a vairagi Haridas talked illicitly with the young lady with a mala-fide motive. Hence he was found guilty by the Supreme Lord of indulging his carnal appetites under the garb of a vairagi (ascetic). Artificial show of service to the Lord is easily detected and positively anti-service.

(19)

For this solemn offence, the junior Haridas was renounced by the Supreme Lord, notwithstanding the importunities of all His dearest associates.

No vairagi must associate illicitly with women, is the severe Injuction of the Supreme Lord.

Junior Haridas was not pardoned by the Lord and he drowned himself in the Tribeni (confluence of the Ganges and the Jamuna). This course was approved by Sree Krishna Chaitanya as the only fitting expiation of his gravest offence.

(21)

Like a husband with six co-wives each of whom vies with the other to dominate and pull their lord, a non-devotee empiricist is pulled and guided by the six sensuous impulses and appetites viz., (1) lust, (2) ire, (3) avarice or gluttony, (4) inebriation, (5) pride, (6) malice.

The six sensuous impulses mercilessly assail their victim, this is the plight of all worldly persons.

By his total surrender to and the causeless Mercy of the Absolute all the six sensuous impulses are automatically overcome and brought under control, although they have revolted so much formerly.

A Goswamin is not confined to any lineage or heridity; but he, who can engage all his senses in the service of the Absolute, is a 'Goswamin'. Goswamins are masters of their senses.

Once Vishnu bewitched the asuras (demons) in the form of Mohini the most fascinating female. Rudra was so fascinated by Her charms that he ran mad and wild after Her, wooing Her to be his consort, utterly forgetful of his proper consort Parbatee who failed to dissuade him from such astounding behaviour.

The apparent plight of Rudra, the destroyer of the phenomenal world, not to talk of any other conditioned souls, shows that anybody desiring to look upon the Godhead as an enjoyer in a predominating mood is sure to be deluded by His deluding energy Maya.

Thakur Haridas though of Mahommedan parentage, used to live in a solitary cell at Benapole and daily recited 3 lacs of Transcendental Names of Hari. As a devotee his fame spread far and wide, which exasperated the patience of Ramchandra Khan, the landlord of the place, and led him to engage a most exquisitely beautiful courtesan to bring about the ruin of Haridas. The courtesan came at night-fall, made to Thakur Haridas illicit proposals and displayed "the works of the flesh", by continuing to show her bodily gestures and postures in order to bewitch him. Thakur Haridas told her to wait and hear his chanting and promised to fulfil her prayer when his own vow of counting ten millions of Transcendental Names of Krishna in the course of a month would be complete. At day-break she left the place disheartened.

(25)

On the second night the courtesan appeared again to Thakur Haridas with the same proposal and received the same reply. She, therefore, waited at the door expecting the completion of his vow of counting the full number of the Names of Krishna. Night passed, and she went away baffled.

(26)

The harlot came before Thakur Haridas for the third time, waited at the door and listened with rapt attention to the genuine and sincere chanting of the Transcendental Names of Krishna. This time, however, in the early hours of the morning the chanting of the Transcendental Names had His effect. "The fruits of the Spirit" operated upon her mind which, cleansed of all sinful propensities, brought about a complete change in her life. She at once fell at the feet of Thakur, confessed to him the machinations of Ramchandra Khan which brought her there and implored his causeless mercy.

The harlot was saved and delivered and was blessed with the initiation of the Transcendental Name by Thakur Haridas.

The Thakur, finding her sincerely repentant, bade her give away all her properties, immorally earned, to the Brahmins (desirious of fruitive actions), live in his own cottage and utter the Name incessantly. Thus instructing her he left the place.

The harlot, thereafter, led a most saintly life and became "the cynosure of the neighbouring eyes." "The works of the flesh" were undone by "the fruits of the Spirit," viz., by an initiation into spiritual life.

There lived in the town of Avanti (Ujjain) a Brahmin who amassed a great fortune, but was extremely miserly and did not spend a farthing on any account.

Those who do not serve Vishnu the Absolute with all their properties are alone misers in the true sense of the term and those who serve the world, the flesh and the devil are worse than a miser.

But as ill luck would have it, the prosperity of this miser had a sudden and catastrophic end. All his properties were robbed by brigands and he was thrown into a state of utter poverty.

This incident in the case of the Avanti Brahmin was, however, a favour of the All-merciful Vishnu, in disguise.

(30)

His worldly misfortunes made the miser a gainer. He realised the utter worthlessness and transitoriness of all earthly possessions, as well as, the necessity of the whole-time service of Vishnu. Accordingly, he renounced the world and became a Tridandi Sannyasin (a holder of the Triple-staff) as enjoined by the Vedas on the spontaneous cessation of all attachments for the world.

(31)

The miser was mocked at and insulted by the mob for his belated attempt to save himself spiritually.

(32)

Tortures and persecutions on his body knew no bounds ; his food was desecrated, his Triple-staff was snatched away ; he was spat at and what not ; but he now learnt how to control his passions.

(33)

As a Tridandi Bhikshu, he now performed the whole-time unalloyed service of Vishnu, totally oblivious of all thirsts after both enjoying and avoiding the worldly things with a dominating mood.

(34)

Embracing of Sannyasa of the Triple-staff order is recommended and sanctioned by the Vedas, Srimat Bhagabatam, as well as, by Sree Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, the Supreme Lord.

(35)

Holding of the Triple-staff of renunciation is sanctioned and approved by the six famous Goswamins, the great Apostolic followers of Sree Chaitanya viz.,—(1) Srila Rupa, (2) Srila Sanatana, (3) Srila Raghunath Das, (4) Srila Raghunath Bhatta, (5) Srila Gopala Bhatta and (6) Srila Jiva.

Tridandi Goswamins are those who with their body, mind and words, engage themselves 100 p. c. fully in the unalloyed service of Vishnu. The one-staff Sannyasa was a later innovation by Sree Sankaracharyya in imitation of the former Vedic institution.

'Diksha' or initation meaus the process which frees the conditioned soul from sinfulness and at the same time confer on him the Knowledge of the Transcendental Truth. The three processes of 'diksha' are (1) Vedic, (2) Pauranic, (3) Pancharatrik.

(1) In the Vedic process, the purity of blood or seminal birth from twice-born lineage was insisted upon ; but in the case of Satyakama Javala of doubtful lineage as mentioned in the Chhandogya Upanishad, the sincerity of disposition was considered sufficient to make Satyakama eligible for initiation.

(2) The Pauranic process was slightly deviated from the Vedic one ; in this case, the Acharyya Narada initiated Dhruva (born of Kshatriya parents) whom he considered to be eligible for the same.

(3) In the Pancharatrik process, any candidate, irrespective of high or pure birth with an actual possession of Theistic propensities, may be considered fit for initiation (spiritual enlightenment) by the Acharyya who invests him with sacred thread after-wards. This Pancharatrik diksha alone and no other is recommended for this Kali-yuga.

The Vedas and the Srimat Bhagabatam and the Mahabharatam declare that Vishnu is the Absolute Personal Godhead. By worshipping the Transcendental Integer Vishnu, all entities forming His fractional potencies are automatically worshipped, just as by watering at the root of a tree, all the branches, twigs and leaves are fed and nourished.

(38)

It is positively foolish to apply water to the branches and the leaves of a tree avoiding the root. So separate Archana or worship of gods other than Vishnu i. e.. Polytheism is strictly forbidden.

(39)

The Sun, Ganesha, Shakti, Rudra, and others are the gods who are the objects of worship of henotheists. According to Holy Scriptures all these gods are delegated energies of and do their respective functions under the direction of the Absolute Vishnu.

Here the Sun's revolving course is shown as being guided by Vishnu.

Enlightening and Deluding Potencies of Vishnu help and obscure respectively the vision of the jeevas. The Enlightening Potency is inseparable from Vishnu and is the original one and the Deluding Potency Maya is the perverted reflection thereof.

(41)

The god Ganapati is the bestower of all earthly successes and is worshipped by henotheists. But Sree Narasimhadeva (Vishnu) is the Master of Ganapati to whom the Former delegates His partial power of awarding success to business.

(42)

Shiva is the transformed and perverted Aspect of the Absolute Vishnu adulterated with the mundane quality of inertia (tamas). Analogy may be drawn from the curd which is the transformed aspect of milk with acid added.

(43)

Brahma is the Reflected Aspect of the Absolute Vishnu adulterated with the mundane quality of material activity (rajas). By itself, a glass lens can not burn a straw ; but when the sun's rays are reflected through it, it aquires the power of burning a straw. So Brahma, the Progenitor, has no independent power of his own, but when his power is so delegated and he is empowered by Vishnu, he gets the power of creation.

(44)

The Absolute Lord Sree Krishna, instructed Arjuna, as his Charioteer in the field of Kurukshetra. Abandonment of all predominating physical and mental speculations and complete unconditional surrender at the Feet of the Absolute Person Krishna is the cream of the Teachings of the Geeta.

(45)

A boat in a rough Ocean is sure to be tossed and to sink ultimately unless it is propelled by an expert helmsman. Similarly the rough Ocean of this mundane world can be easily and safely crossed only under the sure guidance of the Sat Guru (bona fide spiritual guide or the transcendental Messiah of the Absolute.)

(46)

Panoramic view of the circumambulation of the Circle of Braja, that was performed under the direction of the Editor the Acharyya of the Gaudiya Vaishnavas during last October and November (1932), is shown here. Different functions held, places circumambulated and shrines visited are demonstrated in the relief-map.

(47)

The service of the Absolute Truth n the Highest Form was taught to Sree Rupa Goswami by the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya at Prayaga (Allahabad.)

The globes present, in a visible form, the different successive phases and spheres through which the conditioned soul passes in his progressive march from this world towards the Transcendence till he reaches Goloka or the Highest Plane of the purest and most intimate service of the Transcendental Absolute Person Sree Krishna. The seed of the creeper of unalloyed devotion first appears in the heart of a 'jiva' (soul) after his full surrender at the feet of the Sat-Guru. She then passes in her progressive march through the different planes till she reaches the Final Goal or Highest Transcendental Plane Goloka where the Supreme Predominating Absolute Sree Krishna with His eternal Associates in five rasas (moods of service) reigns and sports eternally supreme as the One Autrocrat or Despot without a second.

The locations of the 'Nine Islands' of Nabadwipa Dhama are the spheres of the nine kinds of unalloyed devotion narrated in the Bhagabatam. These nine modes of unalloyed devotion are represented by the careers of nine great devotees and have their specific location in Sree Nabadwipa Dhama.

(a) Antardwipa (Sreedham Maya pur)—the seat of surrendering one's all to Him—represented by King Bali's surrender to the Absolute Vamana.

(b) Simantadwipa—the seat of submissive listening to the Transcendental words from the lips of the bona fide Guru or unconditioned Devotee—represented by King Parikshit and Sree Shukadeva.

(c) Godrumadwipa—the seat of the continuous exposition of the Transcendental words represented by Shree Shukadeva and King Parikshit.

(d) Madhyadwipa—the seat of meditation of the Supreme Lord—represented by Sree Prahlada recollecting Sree Nrisimha.

(e) Koladwipa—the seat of tending the Lotus Feet of the Absolute Vishnu—represented by Lakshmi Devi His Divine Spouse.

(f) Ritudwipa—the seat of worshipping Sree Narayana by rituals—represented by the Emperer Prithu.

(g) Jahnudwipa—the seat of making obeisances to the Supreme Lord—represented by Sree Akrura bowing low to Sree Krishna.

(h) Modadrumadwipa—the seat of doing all menial services of the Supreme Lord—represented by the great monkey-dovotee Hanuman serving Sree Rama.

(i) Rudradwipa—the seat of friendly service—represented by Arjuna serving Sree Krishna.

The publications of the Gaudiya Math on the subject of the Eternal Religion of the Transcendental Love as taught and practised by the Supreme Lord, Sree Krishna Chaitanya-Deva.

(50)

The appearance and the disappearance of the Supreme Absolute Sree Krishna and His Associated Counter-Whole with Their Paraphernalia to and from the view of unconditioned souls, are eternal and not temporary mundane phenomena, although They may appear otherwise to conditioned and empiric souls.

(51)

Sacred water and dusts of different tirthas (holy places of pilgrimage.)

(52)

Pootana, the demoness sent by king Kansa who out-heroded even Herod, appeared roaming under the garb of a loving mother and wanted to kill the Absolute Baby-Krishna with the poisoned milk of her breast; but she was slain by the Latter.

Pootana was duplicity personified. False teachers of Religion cannot deceive a sincere devotee by their duplicity on the Appearance of the Absolute Krishna to his uneclipsed cognition in the earliest stage of his enlightenment.

(53)

The demon Shakata, sent by Kansa, appeared in the form of a laden cart to Krishna with a view to crush him. Baby Krishna, however, kicked him to pieces. The crushing load of empiric learning is overturned by the Absolute Might of Baby-Krishna, at the earliest stage of the devotee's enlightenment.

(54)

Baby-Krishna pulled down the Arjuna-trees that were no other than the two sons of Kuvera, the god of wealth. They had been puffed up with vanity and arrogance due to their sinful habit of intoxication and illicit dalliance, born of abuses of wealth. They once disregarded and insulted the great devotee of Godhead, Sree Narada, for which offence they were cursed by the great sage and turned into Arjuna-trees, the curse being, however, tempered with this assurance that their deliverance lay only in a slight touch of the Lotus-Feet of the Supreme Absolute Krishna in the Dwapara Yuga.

The demon Baka the crane (hypocrisy incarnate), sent by King Kansa to kill the Absolute Boy-Krishna, was slain by the Latter.

(56)

The demon Agha (sin and vice incarnate) too, like the above, was slain by the Absolute Boy-Krishna.

(57)

The serpent Kaliya (ferocity and cruelty incarnate) poisoned the water of the lake Kaliyadaha which was his resort, to the imminent peril of Krishna's cows and play-mates, the cow-herd boys ; but was quelled by the Absolute Boy-Krishna. Ferocity and cruelty of disposition are completely eliminated at an early stage of unalloyed devotion by the causeless Grace of the Absolute.

(58)

Boy-Krishna having stopped the worship of Indra, the king of gods, and having advised His father Nanda and denizens of Braja to worship, instead, the Gobardhana Hill, His most favourite Resort, the people of Braja incurred the displeasure of Indra who sent down copious rains with thunder and lightning in order to destroy Braja. But Boy-Krishna gave shelter to the denizens of Braja, by holding aloft on His Little Finger the Gobardhana Hill, and thus protected them from the wrath of Indra, who was the type of high power and pedigree with an aggrandising imperialistic ambitious mood, was curbed and humbled by the Absolute Boy-Krishna Who eliminates all such mood at an early stage of unalloyed devotion.

(59)

Brahma, the progenitor of mundane entities, taking the Boy-Krishna to be a mere mundane cow-herd, had stolen His play-mates cowherd-boys, cow-calves, and concealed them in a cave near by. But Krishna brought forth a second and separate set of cowherd-boys and calves and went on with His Transcendental Pastimes as usual. When Brahma came to know this after a year, his pride was humbled and he was brought to his senses.

(60)

Once upon a time Nanda Maharaj went to bathe in the Yamuna, and was seized by an agent of Varuna, the god of the water. On his appeal and prayer to Boy-Krishna, the Latter ordered Varuna to release His father. Boy-Krishna delivers His intimate servitor from the clutches of Varuni (intoxicating habits).

(61)

When Sree Krishna and Balarama were just crossing the street of Muttra, on their way to Kansa's royal palace, a washerman of king Kansa was carrying washed cloths to the palace. Krishna asked for some washed cloths from the fellow who, in reply, insulted Him for His arrogance in demanding the king's cloth. But Krishna, the One Unrivalled Proprietor of all entities, killed him on the spot with a slap on his face.

Krishna is the Sole Undisputed Owner of every entity. His Supreme Right should not be challenged. His Autocratic and Despotic Action here exploded the irreligious atheistic ethics.

(62)

Boy Prahlada was a devotee and his father Hiranya-kashipu was the most tyrannical empiricist. As such, the Arch-fiend, disgusted with his son, asked the latter to give up worshipping Vishnu, his only Enemy. Prahlada, having turned a deaf ear to his father's advice, was first hurled down to the earth from the peak of a hill. But he came out unhurt through the Grace of Vishnu, the All-mercifull Protector of sincere devotees.

(63)

Boy Prahlada was then thrown into the fire-pit, but was saved by Vishnu as before. It was his second trial.

(64)

Boy Prahlada was hurled headlong into the rough Ocean but was saved. This was his third ordeal.

(65)

Boy Prahlada was thrown under the feet of a wild elephant to be trampled to death, but was saved as before. This was his fourth trial.

(66)

Boy Prahlada was cast into a dark dungeon and administered poison. But Lo ! Vishnu appeared, touched the poisoned food, and it was turned into veritable ambrosia ! Prahlad's life was saved. This was his fifth ordeal.

(67)

The Arch-Empiricist Hiranyakashipu challenged Prahlada to know whether his Protector Vishnu was within the yonder marble column of his palace. Prahlad replying in the affirmative, Hiranyakashipu defied Vishnu, and smashed the marble column with his fist, when behold ! the Absolute All-pervading appeared forthwith in His Eternal Divine Man-Lion Form (Sree Nrisimhadeva).

(68)

Hiranyakashipu was slain by Sree Nrisimhadeva. Though the Supreme Absolute Vishnu upholds the pure essence of all entities, yet He kills and destroys all dominating moods of challenge, viz, all phases of anti-theism or empiricism.

(69)

Just as all animals, except the cub, are afraid of coming before a terrible roaring lion, so no god except Prahlada dared approach the Terrible Sree Nrisimhadeva. The Absolute Truth is the Terror of terrors in empiricists' eyes. But Prahlada, His dearest servant, was not in the least afraid of coming before Him. Sree Nrisimhadeva displayed His Benign and Loving Aspect to Prahlada.

(70)

Portraits of the Acharyyas are shown in the line of unalloyed devotion to the Predominating All-Love Sree Krishna coupled with His Predominated Counter-Whole, as preached and practised by the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya in the role of the World-Teacher.

(71)

A bride-groom's party, in their trip in a boat to reach the destination fails in spite of their utmost strenuous efforts to tow it, because the boatmen have forgotten to raise the anchor. So, no real progress towards the Transcendental Realm of unalloyed devotion is possible by persistence in and addiction to non-devotional habits, associations or activites.

(72)

A boatman, while towing the boat in a river and tugging at the rope, suffers pains and hardships; his feet being pinched by the prickly thorns on the track along the bank of the river. But he is dreaming of prosperous days when he would spread cotton cushions and quilts on the bank of the river and then tow the boat and proceed on the bank merrily and easily, tugging at the rope unhurt.

Such is the ideal of empiric speculationists. This show exposes hollowness and the sheer stupidity and offence of Anthropomorphists i. e., of those who persist in sensuous mental speculations in spite of their unprecedented fortune of having association with the Supreme Lord or His Beloved Associates.

The pseudo-yogin or vain meditationist, like a wood-cutter slain by the tiger in his attempt to arm himself with a log of wood for his defence against the mauling of the brute, is overwhelmed by his own sensuous impulses, before he can control them. But the tiger (here sensuous impulse or mental speculation) is automatically subdued when the man follows the path of unalloyed devotion to the Supreme Absolute Sree Krishna.

There is no qualitative difference between means and end in all endeavours in the devotional line.

(74)

Two opium-smokers (one compared to an elevationist and the other to a liberationist), standing on one bank of a river, are trying to ignite a piece of wood with the fire burning on the opposite bank, fully ignoring the existence of the intervening river.

The foolish plight of elevationists and liberationists in their attempts to reach the Transcendental Absolute is shown here.

Once Indra in his sensuous enjoyments with the apsaras (celestial nymph) invited the curse of his guru, Brihaspati who happened to come to his palace ; but he was utterly neglected by Indra. For this grave offence he was converted into a pig.

(76)

Indra, born as a pig, forgot his real self, fondled the sow whom he supposed to be his dear spouse. This is the sad plight of self-forgotten fallen mankind.

(77)

Indra, in the form of the pig, refused to listen to Brahma, his real guide and well-wisher who tried to remind him that he was Indra really, and not a pig.

A conditioned soul does not wish to listen to the words of a Vaishnava, his true preceptor and real well-wisher.

(78)

Brahma killed the sow and his little ones for curing Indra's infatuation, but he (still in the form of the pig) began bemoaning the loss of his spouse and offsprings.

(79)

Forlorn of all worldly attachments, Indra at last recollected his own proper self, and by Brahma's constant sermons and mercy retired to his own real kingdom of heaven.

A conditioned 'jiva', constantly hearing the Transcendental sermons from the lips of a real Vaishnava, determines his proper self and recognises that individual souls both conditioned and unconditioned, are essentially eternal servants of the Supreme Absolute Sree Krishna.

The bees are fruitlessly trying to get at the honey inside a stoppered phial.

Empiricists or pseudo-devotees attempt to get at the Truth by dint of their mental speculative experience (observation and experiment) i. e., by the inductive process and pretend to know or reach the Absolute vainly and apparently, and not substantially.

(81)

The surgeon going to operate upon a boy suffering from a gangrenous sore is awfully mistaken by the boy as his dire enemy ; but after his successful operation and the patient's full recovery, the boy becomes apprised of his former mistake and injustice to the surgeon, his real benefactor.

Sree Gaudiya Math's mode of treatment of the diseases i. e., non-devotional or anti-devotional dispositions of fallen and conditioned souls, appears revolting and hostile just like that of the surgeon to a stupid patient at the first sight, while really beneficial and efficacious to a scrutinising eye in the long run.

(82)

The real Vaishnavas are always for rendering eternal good to fallen and conditioned souls, though their sermons may seem distasteful at the outset.

(83)

Hanuman, the great monkey devotee of Sree Rama, burnt down Lanka, the capital of Ravana, the arch-fiend or anti-theist of the Treta-Yuga. A sincere devotee of Godhead always opposes and fights, by every means possible within his power, the activities of anti-theists (the enemies of Vishnu). The apparent violence of Hanuman, in burning down the capital of Ravana, the arch-enemy of Godhead and His devotees, was fully justified by and quite in accordance with the spirit of the Scriptures and of real humility inculcated therein.

Satee, the constant devotee of Siva sacrificed herself in expiation of her sin of having had to listen, most unwillingly and under the greatest protest, to the blasphemies uttered by Daksha, her worldly father aginst Siva, her Eternal Guide and Master, Vishnu's greatest favourite devotee. As she could not actively oppose her father, she had no other alternative but to sacrifice her own life, by divesting herself of the corporal body she received from her father.

Amongst the alternate actions or procedures enjoined by the Scriptures which a sincere devotee of the Absolute Vishnu should resort to, in order to save himself from the most solemn and gravest sin accrued from hearing and seeing activities of blaspheming Vishnu, the Supreme Absolute and Vaishnavas, Satee had recourse to one of these by sacrificing her own life on the spot.

All Glory to the Divine Master
and
The Supreme Lord Sree Gauranga.

Sree Vyasa-Puja Humble Homage

Our most affectionate Divine Master,

WE hail with great delight the Govinda-Panchami, the pupil of the Falgooni-Purnima, the Sanctum Sanctorum of the Purushottam Kshetra, where the Lord of the universe reigns supreme with all His Majesty, and above all, Thakur Bhakti Vinode of hallowed memory. the Pioneer of the gennine Vaishnavism at the present age—the Transcendental Trinity Who witnessed, six decades ago, the Advent of the most faithful and best beloved Devotee of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the Living Manifestation of Sree Chaitanya-Vani Who is no other than our Divine Master Om Vishnupad Sree Srimad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj.

Most merciful Divine Master Who is Sree Vyasa appearing to us in the apostolic order,

Let us make our prostrated obeisances at Your Divine Lotus Feet and solicit Your kind permission to offer this humble homage of our loyal hearts on this auspicious moment of Your Advent when all things animate and inanimate are united in the universal pæan of Your Divine Love and Praise in this Abidyaharan Natyamandir, the Chief-Emporium of expounding unalloyed devotion.

Divine Courier of the Absolute Truth,

Steeped in the gloom of 'Aneesha' or non-devotion, we are oscillating between optimism and pessimism sometimes leaning towards Dharma, Artha, and Kama, the fruitive ultimata of Elevationists or sometimes seeking after Moksha, the final goal of Salvationists. But these are "Preyah Panthas" (specious means) beset with grief, inebriety and fear. Optimism and pessimism, good and evil, on the mundane plane are our mental concoctions and are, therefore, wholly erroneous. So long as we cherish a desire for Bhukti (elevation) or Mukti (salvation) the twin sirens of Octopus Maya, we are enslaved by our afferent and efferent senses and are, therefore, debarred from the beneficial influence of unalloyed devotion (Suddha Bhakti) which is the only "Shreyah Pantha" (eternal path of well-being) consisting in the eternal loving service of the Supreme Lord under the Divine guidance of the true Preceptor. Devotion is not a mental exploitation. Unlike Karma, Jnana, Yoga and other mental speculations, devotion is the eternal function of our unalloyed soul which consists in the confidential service of the Son of the Lord of Braja in its five-fold aspects.

Mind is the prince of all senses and is always wont to meddle with worldly affairs. It thinks it is the enjoyer the sole proprietor and the senses are its properties, its instruments to enjoy the pleasures of the world. Like an unbridled horse it runs amuck in pursuit of pleasures and pains. Restless it finds no peace in its enjoying mood. In order to lord it over phenomena, it becomes the slave of passions nolens volens. Entangled in the thraldom of bogy delusion it finds it very difficult for it to extricate itself. Mind thus fettered in mundane relativity is redeemed only by Mantras or Vedic Hymns in praise of the Supreme Lord. These Mantras Who alone can liberate the mind from its bondage are not mere sounds of the mundane plane found in the lexicons of mortals but are Transcendental Words identical with the Name, Form, Attributes and Pastimes of the Absolute. These Transcendental Words emanating from the Holy Lips of the Absolute-realising souls regulate our four other senses as well as mind which are always troubling ourselves by their aptitudes to enjoy wealth, woman, worldly name and fame for their own gratification at the cost of others giving every opportunity of some hostility from worldly friends and foes. But the Transcendental Words emanating from Your Divine Lips awaken our aptitude of love for the Transcendence progressively augmenting our innate serving temperament towards the Absolute. Although we are placed in a shaky treacherous soil we need not be disturbed by the ruptures of this world.

Our soul is the principal thing to be roused up now lying in a dormant state. The Transcendental Words identical with Godhead entering into our ears awaken the soul from his mundane stupor and torpor.

We have affinity for and are deluded by the outside features of things which tempt us more or less and captivate our senses. Such things lead us to the vortex of endless sufferings.

Our predilections are found to welcome what are pleasing to our senses. These are deluding aspects which often prevent us from positive sight of the Immanence as well as Transcendence. We should always be on our guard not to be deluded by these treacherous allurements. Our senses require sound regulation and it is Transcendental Sounds that can regulate our senses through our aural reception. In this material world everything is shifting. We can trace here nothing that is permanent. Time will change everything. But the Absolute is never changed nor can be challenged. First of all, we should hear everything about the Absolute from an Absolute-realising soul ; otherwise we are sure to confuse Transcendence with ordinary mundane things which are always perishable. Our empiric activities will not allow us a permanent stand on this dubious soil Our thirty years' experience proves false in the fiftieth year and so forth. Experience adds knowledge to our empiric thesaurus which is ever changing. This convinces us that what we consider to be true in this mundane plane is shaky, mutable and ephemeral and cannot serve us all along. We should, therefore, be ready to receive the Transcendental Sounds with submissive spirit, sincere enquiry after the Truth and with serving disposition. Temporal sounds are always open to be examined by the other four senses. If they do not allow the validity of sounds they are summarily rejected. But as the Transcendental Sounds are identical with the Name, Form, Attributes and Actions of the Supreme Lord, we must not be troubling ourselves with challenging mood and suppose there is another phase of the Absolute.

But the pessimists take a cynical view of things. They abhor nibbling at the bait like the optimists. They accept the negation of the Absolute by their inductive reasoning and reject by presupposing the want of His Omnipotence, the Personality of Godhead. This is like carrying burnt coal to New castle. They invite the Impersonal phase of the Absolute by eliminating all the Divine Attributes of the Absolute-Person. This is Nirbishesha-vada as opposed to Chidbilash-vada, the Truth realised by the devotees of the Absolute Whose Name, Form, Attributes and Pastimes are identical with Himself. Thus the Impersonalists fall back to Anthropomorphism, Apotheosis, Zoo-morphism, Scepticism, Agonsticism, Pantheism, Monism, Henotheism and such sorts of "isms" which are the offspring of Impersonal Empiricism or Atheism.

So long as we cherish no apathy towards fruitive action or egotistic salvation, we have no sympathy for and reliance upon Harikatha. The true devotees of the Supreme Lord are neither elevationists, nor salvationists, neither archæologists nor allegorists, neither icon-clasts nor iconographers, neither empiricists nor mental speculationists. They are pure theists and believe in the Eternal Personality of Godhead Who is All-being, All-intelligence and All-bliss. He is the Sole Enjoyer of things animate and inanimate. He is the Sole Proprietor and we are His properties. He is the Absolute Infinitive and we are Absolute infinitesimals and hence liable to be enthralled by His Delusive Energy. He is endowed with His three Potencies, viz., (i) Chit-Potency or Internal All-Intelligent Energy from whom emanates the Spiritual world of the fourth dimension and upwards with its Name, Form, Attribute and Paraphernalia, all identical with Godhead. (ii) His Achit-Potency or External Nescient Energy, the perverted reflection of His Chit-Potency, from which emanates the fourteen worlds on the mundane plane of three dimensions. (iii) the Jiva-Potency or Bordering energy lying midway between Chit and Achit-Potency from which emanates the Jiva world. Like rays of the Sun these potencies are simultaneously distinct and non-distinct from the Absolute. All Jivas being the atomic part and parcel of the Supreme Lord Vishnu, the All-pervading Oversoul, are, therefore, Vaishnavas in essence. They are therefore, endowed with free-will. Placed on the marginal point, when they abuse this free will and wish to lord it over Maya, they are at once hurled down to this region of limitation, conflict and dissolution. Such is the condition of the fallen souls doubly tabernacled in this prison house of three fold Gunas to undergo penal servitude. But when they come in contact with a Sadhu or Absolute-realising soul they regain their former position and are engaged in the constant service of the Supreme Lord through His Divine Transcendental Agent Who is always in touch with Him.

Most Formidab'e Champion of the Absolute Truth,

Your Divine Grace has swept clean the cobwebs of Impersonal metaphysics and Psilanthropic Pedagogies spin out of the clash and din of empty words of this mundane ether.

Great Apostle of Nama Sankirtan,

You are the accredited Namacharyya of the Modern Age. You have denounced the efficacy of conventional rites and ceremonies as mere mummery of words. You have also denounced Prakrita Sahajiya Vada such as Khlystism etc., and established the super-excellent Autocracy of the Nama, the Absolute Person and have distinguished the fully unalloyed chanting of the Divine Name from the dawning of the Name (Namavasa) and the ten offences that obscure the Nama (Namaparadha) which the Khlysts (pseudo-devotees) cannot distinguish by their empiric knowledge just as the bees fruitlessly toil hard to get at the honey inside a stoppered phial. The obscurity vanishes as soon as the Aurora appears in the eastern horizon and the Aurora disappears as soon as the Sun of the Holy Name reveals Himself and becomes visible to our unobstructing enlightened serving retina. The Nama is Adhokshaja

i. e., He reserves the absolute right of not being exposed to human senses. But He manifests Himself in the pure unalloyed serving soul. Such Adhokshaja realisation can be achieved by aural reception of the Nama Whom only the unfettered souls can chant.

Your Divine Grace is the Greatest Advocate of Yukta Vairagya which consists in the strict adherence to the proper and Godly use of everything mundane, viz., rupa, rasha, sabda, sparsa and gandha in the spirit of artless but non-addicted temperament, and is at the same time the Greatest Denouncer of Falgu Vairagya (Pseudo-asceticism) and of altruism of the modern age seeking after physical amelioration. Your Divine Grace is one of the Greatest Exponents of Sreemad Bhagabatam, the only Divine Satwata Sanhita for which Your Dinive Grace will ever remain enshrined with all Your Glory and Melodious Sweetness in the hearts of all unfettered souls even when all the works of the speculative mortals are destroyed. The mental speculations of the Benares School have sustained a crushing blow at the Hands of Your Divine Grace by Your establishment of the true principles of Naimisharanya or Bhagabat School.

Awakener of Sree Krishna in the hearts of men.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya is the Absolute Person i. e., Swayam Rupa Bhagawan. Your Divine Grace is non-distinct from the Swayam Aspect of the Same and hence is Swayam Prakash i. e., His Eternal Manifestation in the habit of His servitor. Your Transcendental Words awaken devotional aptitude in our hearts through our submissive aural reception. You are the Embodiment of Sree Chaitanya-Vani or Gospel of the Absolute Truth. Sree Chaitanya-Vani is identical with the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya Himself. Your Vani, therefore, awakens Sree Chaitanya in the heart of sleeping souls. Mundane words or sounds are not identical with the things conveyed by them. Therefore, when they enter into our ears they require the four other senses, viz., eye, nose, tongue, touch as examiners to prove the validity of the idea expressed by them, whereas the Transcendental Sound does not require any such corroboration because the Sound Himself is the Absolute. To attain to the Absolute the first thing necessary is the sincere aural reception of the Transcendental Sound emanating from the Lips of the Absolute-realising Saints, Who are always in touch with the Absolute. Constant chanting of the Transcendental Name after aural reception is, therefore, not only the only means for the liberation of the conditioned soul from the bondage of Maya but also the only goal as well of all Jiva-souls. The soull is at present tabernacled in human body and mind which are now meddling with Nature. The conditioned souls must go back to their original and natural position the ever-Blissful Abode and must transcend, i. e., go beyond the four walls of three dimensions. The only means is constant Sravana and Kirtana, i. e., hearing and chanting of the Name in the company of Satsanga of Absolute-realising souls.

Your Divine Grace has, by Your ennobling and edifying influences of ambrosial Sree Krishna Kirtan, denounced the Monistic teachings of the Impersonalists which form the background of the current popular Hinduism in all its forms.

The material stairs built by the Arch-Empiricist Ravana for scaling the Absolute collapsed in the empty air showing thereby the sad plight of the ascending empiric method. The Light of Love that beams through Your eyes, the unalloyed devotion that burns in Your heart and the spontaneous welling out of Inspired Truths from Your Holy Lips have dispelled the agelong doubts and prejudices from the minds of many a critic and brought them to Your Holy Feet in humiliation and contrition and they have meekly submitted to the tie of Transcendental Love. Thousands are attracted by the Divine wisdom that falls from Your Divine Lips and are immersed in the profound ocean of Transcendental Love accruing from the constant chanting of the Holy Name. Even the most obdurate, captious, unsympathetic and aggressive pedant was seen to be transformed into a tender-hearted, loving, sympathetic, humble and serving devotee of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya. Your Divine Grace has, therefore, stood the acid-test of being the living Encyclopædia of Transcendental Learning, and to compare great things with small Your Divine Grace is the uncrowned King of true Vedantists not only in the whole of Bengal but also in the whole world. Your all-embracing doctrines of unalloyed love as preached and promulgated by Lord Chaitanya have opened the gateway of Spiritual Heaven, Abiding Peace, Harmony and Love. Your religious discourses have evoked instantaneous Bhakti in the hearts of Your audience and inqui-itive hearers and what no books could do in a score of years the worderful, soul-stirring influence of Your Gospel of Truth was able to effect in the flash of a moment. The publication of scriptural texts and periodicals in different languages, the establishment of preaching-centres and Divine Foot-Prints of Lord Chaitanya and Archa Vigrahas in various Shrines of the country, the founding of a Para-Vidya-Peetha and a High English school at the Birth site of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya on ethical and theistic basis, the Installation of Theistic Exhibitions to popularise the theistic principles in different places, the propagation of the principle of Bhakti through Your numerous preachers and disciples, the holding of periodical Mahotsabs or celebrations of the Supreme Lord and His Associates at different sanctified places, the establishment of Printing Works (living Mridangas) in different centres for the cheap publication of Satwata Shastras, the Circumambulations of Nabadwip, Gauda Mandal and Braja Mandal, the practical application of Daiva-Varnashrama Dharma, long in a moribund state on the basis of pure theistic principles as depicted in the Geeta and the Bhagabatam—all these are proofs positive and conclusive that Your Divine Grace is not only the Greatest accredited Acharyya but also the Greatest Benefactor of mankind in the modern age.

In the words of the Satwata Samhita may we say that the ambrosia of Your Transcendental Words give life and spirit to Your listeners, destroy all sorts of evils, concomitants of births and rebirths, produce instantaneous good and vouchsafe the greatest gift—the love of God—the summum bonum of human life to Your submissive hearers and hence those who chant Them ever and anon are the greatest benefactors of mankind. Who but the soul-killing offenders or slaughterers of animation desist from chanting the Name of the Supreme Lord Who is the only Panacea of all worldly diseases, is a source of perennial entheasm to our hearts and ears and is sung only by the souls free from all mundane desires. Let our tongue be constantly engaged in singing the glory of Your super-sensuous deeds, our ears patiently hear Your Transcendental Attributes, hands be engaged in doing deeds of Your heart's desire, mind be purified in recollecting incessantly the Transcendental Activities of Your Divine Grace, head be bent low in making prostrated obeisances to those places sanctified by the dust of Your Holy Feet and eyes be engaged in visualising the Holy Spiritual forms of Your associated counterparts who live, move and have their being in Your Divine Grace.

The sands on the sea-beach, the stars on the galaxy, and ripples of the Ocean can even be counted but the Divine Attribute of Your Divine Nature can hardly be estimated by the limited knowledge of poor souls like ourselves. Nobody can know Your Divinity unless Your Divinity reveals and manifests Himself to Him. Nobody can chant anything in praise of Your Divinity unless Your Divinity gives him power to do so. Like dwarfs aspiring after the moon we are trying to give vent to our feelings of artless love and reverence for Your Divine Grace and know not whether they are eligible to touch Your Holy Lotus Feet. May Your Divine Grace be graciously pleased to accept this humble homage of Your unworthy servants. Bless us that we may serve Your Divine Grace and Your loving devotees with all humility, sincerity and selflessness. Again we make prostrated obeisances to Your Holy Feet Who have been graciously pleased to open our eyes, long sealed in the gloom of Nescience, by the spike of the eyesalve of Transcendental Knowledge.

Sreedham Mayapur,
Sree Chaitanya Math.
The 15th February, 1933.

In loyal obedience and submissiveness
Your Divine Grace's most humble servants.,
THE UNWORTHY DEVOTEES OF
SREE CHAITANYA MATH

All Glory to Sree Guru and Gauranga

Sree Vyasa-Puja

WITH humility, respect and charity to all really religious and devout souls of every creed I, on behalf of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha hail this opportunity to accord our cordial welcome to you all present here on this happy auspicious occasion in this chief centre of pilgrimage the Sanctum Sanctorium of Old Nabadwip Dham.

We greatly appreciate your kindness for favour of your coming over to this place with so much trouble to encourage us by your presence and I feel strongly impelled to thank you for your goodness and generosity.

Who is Vyasa and What is he—will necessarily be the two questions of my respected audience at the outset.

Shrutee reveals Herself through Vyasa, the Divine Transparent Agent to purified souls, and Vyasa is the most beloved Divine Mediator between the Absolute Transcendental Personality and the fallen souls.

Vyasa is the channel of the Transcendental Word "Shrauta-Vanee or Gaura-Vanee". The Divine Saraswati flowing through sacred souls and in disciplic order is our Mahanta Guru His Divine Grace Paramahansa Sree Srimad Bhakti-Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Thakur.

The sacred function you witness today is, therefore, of great importance and will be of immense benefit towards the advancement of the cause of Theism and I humbly pray that you will kindly give me a patient hearing for some time.

My affectionate Divine Master, my

Supreme Lord, my revered Vaishnavas, Ladies and Gentlemen,

My heart leaps with joy to be in this Holy Place, Sree-Mayapur, on this happy auspicious occasion before you, and I consider it a proud privilege to open my lips at the advent ceremony of my Divine Master Who first saw the light at the chief centre of pilgrimage (Purusottam Dham) on Govinda Panchami day 59 years ago in front of the North Gate of Jagannath Temple, Puri, to lustrate the world suffering from the utter dearth of the chant of the Divine Name, to find out the fallen souls like me and to pick them up along with His Eternal comrades in accordance with Krishna's Desire.

Blessed is the day that dawned with my infant Baby Master in her lap, the Sun who first saw the Divine Lustre of the self-effulgent Holy Feet of my Divine Master, the air my Master first inhaled, the earth which first took the tender Holy Feet in her arms to rest and the mother who fed from her gentle breast.

Blessed are the fire, water, ether and nature and 33 crores of deities who have since got the chance of serving my Divine Master and blessed are the creepers, plants and trees which have since supplied fruits and vegetables for my Master's use.

Blessed are the cows, bullocks, buffallows, horses and elephants which have had the least opportunity of serving my Divine Master and blessed are the cobblers, carpenters, potters, engineers and doctors who have made, repaired and prescribed things for the use of my Divine Master.

Especially blessed are they who have come within the range of His Divine Vision, have heard of Him or thought of Him and more especially blessed are they who have sat by His Divine Holy Feet and listened to the Transcendental Word from His Divine Holy lips, I mean His Sermons, and the most blessed are they who are acting up to His Mandates.

The most fortunate is this insignificant person who is standing before you with his head erect, putting on the crown set with the gems of the most precious particles of His Divine Feet-Dust, and who is attempting by His causeless mercy to talk of that Transcendental Being like the dwarf stretching out his hand to catch the moon but not like Ravana who wanted to build a masonry stair to scale that Transcendental Realm, which collapsed in mid-air for want of sheer support on the other side. So I must pray for support from the other side.

Ravana might think that he caught hold of "Seeta Devi"; but he actually got only the deluding reflection of Seeta. A fly sitting on the surface of a phial of honey might think that it has polluted the honey, but there is the glass between its sting and the honey. I claim as His accepted disciple to have touched His Holy Feet. There is no longer a great dividing gulf between His Divine Holy Feet and my humble self. Will my Divine Master be graciously pleased out of His compassion for this poor soul to give me power to sing the glory of His Divine Holy Feet in keeping with the dignity of the servant of the Transcendent (Aprakritadas), the holy name so graciously and kindly conferred upon me.

Some of my audience will now put a question to me "Why are you speaking so highly of your Divine Master ?" What is He ? Why are you exalting Him to the rank of a Deity ? Is He proud of His Birth like Brahma or, of His Majesty Like Vishnu or, of His wisdom or abnegation like Mahadeva ? I must at the outset honestly reply in the negative for the benefit of empiricists or ordinary run of men. Let Indra, Kuvera, Brihaspati and the fairies of Heaven hanker after, aspire for or pant after lineage, majesty, erudition and beauty, of the great Divine Beings; let Raghunandan Bhattacharyya boast in vain of his high lineage ; let Sankaracharyya boast in vain of his conceited and pedantic wranglings ; let the King boast of his Majesty and let the tender sex boast in vain of their beauty ; My Divine Master is not prepared to stoop so low as to brag of these insignificant mundane attributions. I say He is not merely possessed of these earthly fames but also transcends them. His person and personal attachments are all spiritual and have no relation to the material world.

1. He is possessed of only One Thing, that Transcendental Truth, that One without a second.

11. My Divine Master is possessed of only One Thing "Bhagaban" with all His Majesty, Might, Glory, Beauty, Wisdom and Supremacy. There is none to vie with Him.

III. He is possessed of That Sri Krishna Chaitanya of Whom it is justly said by Srila Probodhananda Saraswati Thakur, "Merging with the Absolute is realised as Hell ; celestial enjoyments appear as 'will-o-the-wisps' ; the array of the most deadly vipers in the shape of the most formidable senses are extracted of their poisonous fangs ; the dignities of Brahma, Indra and other gods appear as insignificant as the condition of worms ; the world appears the abode of the fullest bliss, by the power of the Glory of the Merciful Glance of Sree Gaursundar to Whom I offer my song of Praise."

But some of my audience must now pass a remark that I am trying to warble and wriggle the point at issue. My Master must be lacking in respect of lineage, majesty, erudition and beauty. If you poke me like that I must speak out more honest truth for the intelligent few who can feel it in their soul as an intuitive truth.

Brahma came out of the Naval Pit of Vishnu but my Master came from the Mouth Pit, Holy Lips, the Higher Part of Vishnu.

Vishnu again with all His Majesty is overpowered by the Beauty of my Gurupadpadma, the Lotus Feet of my Sree Gurudeva, at the very sight of Whom the Conch, Disc, Club and Lotus the Transcendental Weapons of Narayana must drop down and take shelter under the cool shade of the Divine Holy Feet of Nandanandana, the Beautiful Personage to Whom Vishnu must turn concealing His Majestic Two Hands within Him, being the Ocean of the liquid of unhampered mellowness (Akhilarasa-mritasindhu).

Please do not talk of Mahadeva who did not hear of true abnegation (Yukta-Vairagya) and the developed effulgent tasteful principle (unnata-ujjala-rasa) till he took his birth as Rudradeva and heard from Sree Gaursundar and my Divine Master eternally associated with Him.

And I pity Lakshmidevi who dares not enter into Brindabana where my Divine Master is living eternally in company with His Beautiful Lord Sree Krishna of Whom He is the Counter-whole (manifest in this world for me).

Reason, not spiritualized dares not meddle with this matter.

In fine I must do myself justice and say that the only wretched persons to be found in this world are those who pride themselves to be formidable warriors and regard my Divine Master as having declared a pitiless war against them although he is mercifully trying to cleanse their demoniac desires and affinity, like Brahma who undertook a somewhat similar task for Indra when the latter was born as a hog on the bank of Manas-sarobar as recorded in our Puranas.

This incessant civil war has left very little time for those wretches to enjoy, but I must add that just as Ravana used to wipe off the sweat of his brows by the string of his bow fitted with arrows showering incessantly against Rama, they also, with equal tactics, look back from time to time even after they are vanquished to enjoy even when they are being drawn to the jaws of death.

Will my Divine Master be graciously pleased to cut off the ten heads of those persons facing the ten different directions for enjoyment and lay them flat, straight, prostrated on the ground, removing all their angular vision and sit tight on their breast? Theism is there when we will lay prostrate, submitting fully to His Divine Feet for our much-needed relief from which platform the Supreme position of Transcendental Vishnu can be seen.

Gentlemen, you are aware that when one straight line stands upon another line, like Kali upon Siva, it creates angles, either an acute angle, right angle or obtuse angle; but when the conceited line, standing with its head erect, is made to lay flat on the base or foundation line, there is no angularity at 180°. Straightness is there, simplicity and sincerity are there. I am defeated here with my predominating Lord in my breast. The Supreme Position of Vishnu can then be seen through the enlightened power of vision which is available on this platform. Hiranyakhsa was thus made straight by Sree Varaha Deva.

But my revered Vaishnavas, I am very much afraid of any destiny similar to theirs and I humbly pray to you all that they also may be enabled to make an honourable retreat from this disastrous war and go back to Godhead and to home in your company in compliance with the message of my Divine Master.

With this I beg to conclude my babbles today.

The Theistic Exhibition—

A grand Theistic Exhibition, unique of its kind, is being held in the Purana Paltan ground of Dacca from the 6th of January up to the 27th instant. Exhibitions pertaining to mundane matters are not only not rare but are often times held here and there even during the course of a year, but Exhibition of a Theistic nature, not conceived before, has been brought into vogue in these days of materialism by Paramahansa Paribrajakacharyya Sri Srimad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Prabhupad, the Organiser-in-chief of Gaudiya Mission and the present Acharyya of the Viswa-Vaishnav-Raj-Sabha of Nabadwip, Bengal, Who has recently come to Dacca to open this Exhibition.

The aims and objects of this Exhibition are to educate the people in purely Theistic principles inculcated by the Scriptures Srimad Bhagabatam, Sri Chaitanya Charitamritam etc, by means of symbolical representations in the shape of dolls etc. The message of the Absolute Truth as well as the Absolute Realm which can be brought home to the submissive disciple through aural activities has also been attempted to be inculcated through the occular instrument by means of such symbolical representations.

About a hundred stalls have been set up for visualising in a concrete and easilly intelligible form, many of the most fundamental principles of the Revealed Religion. The nature of the Exhibition is such that it can be taken advantage of with benefit by all religiously minded people, irrespective of age, sex, caste, creed or colour.

A brief account of a few stalls describing the subject matters demonstrated therein will give the reader a rough idea of the nature of this Theistic Exhibition,

The ten Avatars (Descents) of Vishnu (All-pervading Divinity) to the mundane plane are manifested for discouraging Anthropomorphism, Zoomorphism and all other "isms", Stairs of Ravana are constructed to show the ascending empiric method. The material stairs built by Ravana (Empiricism) for scaling the Absolute collapse in empty air.

Sukracharyya and king Bali—to show that family spiritual guides (gurus) opposed to unalloyed service of the Absolute should be discarded.

Dogs, Asses, Pigs and Camels saluting worldly heroes—opponents of the aural reception of the Transcendental Message are comparable to four classes of animals. Dogs follow bitches under every discouragement ; Asses are contended beasts of burden Pigs wallow in filth ; Camels relish prickly thorns.

Pedantic wranglings of empiric scholars obstruct all enquiry about the Absolute.

Artificial concentration of mind practised by Pseudo Yogis is ineffective in checking carnal appetites.

The Gardener—Sri Sri Krishna Chaitanya in the role of the Devotee gives away the ripe Fruits of the Love for Krishna to all persons.

Monistic teaching of the Vedanta by Sankara which form the background of the current popular Hinduism in all its forms, are denounced by the Supreme Lord Sri Chaitanya.

Junior Haridas was found guilty by the Supreme Lord in indulging his carnal appetites under the grab of a Bairagi,

He was renounced by the Lord for his offence and not pardoned which led him to drown himself in the Triveni—a course approved by Sree Krishna Chaitanya as the only fitting expiation of his mortal offence.

The six sensuous impulses, represented by six women, are mercilessly assailing their victim—the plight of all worldly person ; but they are fully controlled in the person of a Goswami.

The harlot trying to seduce Thakur Haridas ; listening to the chant of the Nama by Thakur Haridas then deliverd from carnality , received the Nama from him and thereafter led a saintly life

Archana or ritualistic worship of Vishnu is obligatory on all. By worshipping Vishnu all gods are worshipped just as by watering at the root of the tree all the branches and leaves are really nourished.

Infant Prahlad is hurled from the summit of ahill, thrown into the fire pit, cast into the ocean , thrown under the feet of a wild elephant ; cast into a dungeon and administered poison. These are not any mundane trials and are nonexistent on the plane of Prahlad.

The surgeon and the sick boy. The surgeon is mistaken as his enemy by the boy suffering from gangrenous sore.

The joy of the boy after cure.

The above and many others of their type are all highly instructive to those who care a little for their religious uplift.

["Amritabazar' Patrika 19th January (1933)

The Theistic Exhibition or Sat-Siksha Pradarsani as it has been termed in Bengali which was opened in Dacca on 6th January last has been able to attract a large number of visitors every day. The interest of the people in this unique Exhibition has been greatly enhanced by a number of learned 'Sannyasins' and 'Brahmacharins' of the Gaudiya Math who have been explaining to the visitors the significance of various attractive exhibits. The educated people of all denominations both males and females, are the foremost among visitors and they see the exhibits very inquisitively and listen to the interesting explanations. The unique character of the Exhibition, its novel method of teaching and its educative value are being highly appreciated by all, especially by the educated and thinking people. Apart from its educative value the beautiful Krishnagar dolls which have formed the principal parts of the exhibits are by themselves very attractive and are worth seeing from the artistic point of view.

Vol. XXX | MARCH 1933, Chaitanya-Era 446-447 | NO. 9

Sree Krishna Chaitanya

THE Most Auspicious Anniversary of the Advent of the Supreme Lord was celebrated by fasting and congregational chant of the Name, Form, Quality, Activity and Servitors of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, identical with Sree Krishna, at the Holy Shrine of His Nativity, the Abode of Sree Jagannath Misra and Sree Sachi Devi in Sridham Mayapur, on the 12th of March, under the ex-officio direction of the Editor.

The Name Sree Krishna Chaitanya is identical with the Absolute Personality or Sree Krishna Himself. This Name was first manifested to the world in the 24th year of the Career of the Supreme Lord on the occasion of His Renunciation of the world. The Name was revealed by the Lord Himself to Sree Keshab Bharati who formally announced the same.

This should not be supposed to imply that the Name Sree Krishna Chaitanya is not fully identical with His Own Personality. What it really means is that the Distinctive Personality of Sree Krishna Chaitanya remained hide from the people of this world till He announced Himself by the Act of the assumption of His Own Name along with the garb of renunciation. Till then Sree Jagannath Misra alone, immediately before his departure from this world, had had the real vision of His Son as Sannyasin.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya is the Supreme Object of worship of all pure souls. But He never accepts any service that is rendered to Himself on His Own Account. This is His Distinctive Nature. He accepted no service on His Own Account during the whole of His Career. All His Activities are for the deliverance of the world by the method of serving, and making others serve, Sree Krishna.

Not that He is not entitled to our worship by exactly the same unconditional submission as we offer to Sree Krishna. The Two are the same. But it is the Distinctive Nature of Sree Krishna Chaitanya not to accept any worship on His Own Account. His followers also act in the same way. They accept all honour for Sree Krishna. Whereas it is the Distinctive Nature of Sree Krishna to be the Recipient of all worship.

This involved a great practical difficulty in the case of Sree Krishna Chaitanya in as much as the people of this world desire nothing else but superiority over others. Sree Krishna Chaitanya accordingly assumed the triple staff in order to reveal to the world the true significance of the Scriptural institution of renunciation as the indispensable pre-condition for the service of Krishna. The sannyasin is enjoined not to bow to any person but to accept on behalf of Krishna the prostrations of every entity. All persons of this world are enjoined to prostrate themselves to the sannyasin of the triple staff. This is the ancient Vedic dispensation for curing the sin of wilful rebellion against the Absolute by the method of unconditional submission to His devotee.

But no one is really a sannyasin who does not serve Sree Krishna by the method of abstaining from employing his body, mind and speech for any worldly purpose. The sannyasin is not entitled to serve anybody except Sree Krishna. He is entitled to receive the service of other people without making any return, on this condition.

This is not paradoxical. The sannyasin alone is entitled to receive our service as he accepts no service on his own personal account. The people of this world are accustomed to receive all services on their own account. So they are enjoined to submit to be controlled by the tridandi sannyasin. By doing so they are gradually relieved from the aptitude of receiving the service of others on their own account. The service that is offered to the servant of Krishna is the only service that reaches Krishna. The offerer and the bearer of service complete the circuit of the redemptive process.

The institution of tridanda sannyas is no doubt liable to be exploited by designing worldly people for their worldly ends. But such abuse does not abolish the institution itself. All souls who have really attained the service of Krishna have been enabled to do so by putting themselves under the unconditional guidance of the beloved servants of the Supreme Lord. This is the central teaching of all the revealed religions.

The worship that is rendered to the servant of Sree Krishna is rendered to Himself as it is accepted and demanded solely on His account. If the tridandi sannyasin condescends to accept my service it is a proof that Krishna is so willing. It is an atheistical blunder to suppose that my service can reach the Lotus Feet of Krishna in any other way.

But the sannyasins themselves had forgot their proper function and were accepting the worship of the people, that is solely due to Krishna, on their own personal accounts. The Early Career of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya places before us the function of the regulated householder, that is, of one who leads the quasi-spiritual life under Scriptural regulation prior to the attainment of the sight of the transcendental servant of Krishna and subsequent to initiation under the direction of the Guru, for being relieved of all worldly affinities.

The Supreme Lord did not stand in the actual need of undergoing any tutelege. But as the spiritual training ordained by Him is identical with His Personality He chose to reveal Himself in this way. Let no one suppose that the Scriptural institutions have not been ordained by Godhead or that any of those ordained institutions is less deserving of one's unconditional homage than the Supreme Lord Himself. These Divinely ordained institutions constitute the Transcendental Body of the One Divine Person.

The assumption of the triple staff of renunciation made the House-holder Nimai Pandit the revered Teacher of all worldly people. The renunciation of the world is effected by the dedication of oneself externally as well as internally to the service of Krishna. The institution of the triple staff sannyas expresses this complete spiritual change. No conditional soul is entitled to the direct service of Krishna except after assumption of tridanda sannyas. The Paramahansa is not a conditioned soul. He is the eternally free servant of Krishna. The tridandi sannyasin is a regulated direct servant of Krishna. The tridandi sannyasin is subject to the control of the Paramahansa.

All worldly people are subject to the control of the tridandi sannyasin.

It is incumbent on every conditioned soul, if he is to obtain redemption, to seek the unconditional guidance of the bona fide tridandi sannyasin. The conditioned soul is also in a position to accept rationally only the guidance of one who serves Krishna by the method of renunciation of the world in as much as he is in such case least likely to misunderstand any seeming sacrifices of his worldly interests which he may be called upon by such a person to make for the service of Krishna. The teacher of religion is enjoined to act always up to his own teaching. The teacher of the service of Krishna can never countenance conduct that is not directed to the service of Krishna. Any worldly person who accepts the guidance of such a teacher thereby tacitly admits the purely unworldly character of the service of Krishna. This is the very first step on the path of the transcendental service of Krishna.

The Name Sree Krishna Chaitanya is the Name of the Divine Tridandi Sannyasin. The Tridandi Sannyasin is the ordained teacher of all worldly persons. Sree Krishna Chaitanya is thus in the specific sense the Only Supreme Teacher of all worldly people.

Does it mean that all conditioned souls who desire to follow the Teaching of Sree Krishna Chaitan ya have to renounce the world in the long run ? It is this which is dreaded by the worldly people who prefer to believe in the feasibility of serving Krishna without renouncing the world.

There are also texts of the Scriptures which declare that the service of Krishna is attainable in all conditions and without the necessity of changing one's worldly occupation. Had it not been so there would be no meaning in the Scriptural regulations for householders. Renunciation of the world is dreaded only by those who are unduly attached to the things of this world. But renunciation is enjoined by the Scriptures only on persons who have actually lost all taste for the worldly life. In the case of such persons it is both natural and obligatory to renounce the world and accept the whole-time service of Krishna by the assumption of the garb of sannyas under the direction of the Paramahansa. The triple staff of renunciation has to be received at the hands of one who has renounced the world. It is necessary to be guided by the advice of the bona fide devotee of Krishna in the matter of renunciation. Renunciation not authorised by the devotee is not accepted by Krishna and would be an offence against the world.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya is the Divine Embodiment of the Renunciation of the world as of every other Scriptural institution. But the Act of Renunciation is His Distinctive Characteristic. He represents the whole-time Service of Krishna by the assumption of the garb of renunciation. He demands that the exoteric face of the conduct of His devotee should also be such that it might not be misunderstood by worldly persons. This is the Highest Magnanimity. The Sacrifice that such conduct entails on the servants of Krishna will be understood if we bear in mind the fact that Krishna Himself does not require formalism in lieu of service. On the contrary Krishna is most gratified by service that has an external face which hides the inner sterling aspect. The Sacrifice of this distinctive characteristic of the service of Krishna is the greatest possible sacrifice that can be demanded from the bona fide servant of Krishna.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya told Sarbabhauma Bhattacharyya that He was not a Sannyasin at heart, but had left His Home through grief at separation from Krishna. This is the Highest Aspect of the Exoteric Conduct of the Supreme Lord.

Sree Vyasa-Puja Response

[By Editor on His fiftyninth birthday, delivered at Avidyaharan Natyamandir, Sridham Mayapur, on February, 15]

THE word 'jai' (victory) is uttered for expressing the conviction of excellence. We are enabled to realise the nature of the subject-matter of the worship of Sree Vyasa if we apply ourselves to the consideration of the excellence of Sree Vyasadeva.

Srila Vyasa enjoins on us 'to meditate upon the Absolute Truth Who always dispels all delusion by His Own Potent Effulgence'. When we follow in the footsteps of Sree Vyasadeva we attain the sight of the Divine Entity. The word 'dhama' means 'light' or 'receptacle'. By the help of light, darkness is dissipated ; or if the proper receptacle is realised we are endowed with the eligibility for the performance of meditation. Our faculty of recollection is resuscitated—that recollection which has passed out of our memory.

"Non-forgetfulness of the Twin Lotus Feet of Sree Krishna reduces non-good and augments positive well-being, by promoting purification of the entity, devotion to the Supreme Soul, and Knowledge endowed with apprehension of the reality and non-hankering for the mundane". It is only if we are in a position to render that Entity of the Supreme Soul constantly remembered in the heart that well-being would ensue. Hearing is rendered possible by the agency of chanting (kirtan) ; and if hearing is maintained in the best manner real well-being makes its appearance. In the absence of hearing and chanting (sraban and kirtana) the substantive manifestation is not possible.

Take for instance the following contentions of the atheists. They think that the Divine Entity has no Body, no Beauty ; that He is not Transcendental ; that it is necessary to avail Knowledge derived through the senses, like Ravana, for reaching His Presence ; etc. But Sruti (heard transcendence) does not say so.

He alone is the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru in the order of the spiritual successors of Sree Vyasa, by listening to whose chanting our recollection of the Divinity has been actually awakened. All of us are his servants. The desire to chant has been aroused by the practice of listening. By the agency of kirtana, or singing, the conditioned aptitude is dispelled. If the word of that country, that unlimited Realm (Vaikuntha), the region that transcends the sphere of the measuring aptitude, reaches our ears, where word is song, on listening to that song our eternal well-being manifests itself by the elimination of all evil.

'Vaikuntha, or Aprakrita sabda' may be rendered as 'transcendental sound'. The word 'transcend' signifies 'ascent', 'ascent' from the conditioned aptitude. To remain here is equivalent to be confined to the mundane experience, to practise one's masculine egotism or one's vanity of being the master. But there can be no real well-being if one remains entangled in such dominating egotism, for the reason that it is only those persons who are infatuated by the sense of their own superiority that are apt to be entrapped in the fetters of such dominating egotism. "The person whose soul is infatuated by dominating egotism regards himself as his own master". This is the testimony of the Geeta and all Sruti. "The individual soul perching on the same tree (as the Divinity) undergoes miseries due to his non-Divinity and infatuation. When in the act of serving he perceives his Companion to be the Divinity he realises His Glory being delivered from sorrow". "When the perceiving entity has sight of the Master, the Supreme Lord, the Person Who is the Cause of the Brahman, of Golden Hue, he is completely cleansed of his virtues and vices, and freed from the obstruction of mundanity and obtaining real enlightenment, attains to the condition of supreme equipoise".

In the Sloka just quoted there is mention of the supreme equipoise which is altogether different from the position of equality that is postulated by our sense-ridden judgment. The equality that relates itself to limited entities is not absolute. The equipoise relatively to the Great One is a different entity.

There is mention of one's meeting with the Person with the Golden Hue and of sin and righteousness. But it is only when we are relieved from all these conditions that we are in a position to know that we are not non-spiritual entities, nor it is the function of our real nature to remain engrossed in the non-spiritual entity. So long as we remain entangled in our perverted self, by going off the track of our soul, it is not possible for us to meditate on the true Object of our meditations. The practice of meditation on limited entities has reduced us to the condition of the frog in the well.

I happen to be an entity dominated by the knowledge of the five mundane categories. I am entrapped in the functions of littleness by abstaining from the thoughts of the Great One. And it is for the reason that I have preferred to remain confined to the functions of my littleness that the egotistic sentiment, that I am the master of myself and of all entities, has appeared in me. It has become necessary to get rid of this desire for domination. Nothing is easier than to assert that the little should aim at being identified with the Great. If one allows himself to be mastered by such senseless ambition and tries to realise his 'oneness' with the Divinity, such egotistic vanity effectively blocks the course of all real well-being.

When we are cast into the state of evil by harbouring the hallucination that we are the equals of the Divinity, there appear simultaneously,—(1) a condition which is experienced as one of griefs, (2) the state of infatuation due to 'forgetfulness' of our real nature and (3) fear. In other words we lament on account of supposing ourselves to be identical with our gross and subtle bodies, being enchanted by the Limiting Energy (Maya) of Godhead. The mischief makes its appearance when I begin dishonestly to think that Godhead, His devotee (Vaishnava), the spiritual guide and I myself are on a footing of equality, and that I am superior to them. From the wicked thought that I am the equal of the spiritual guide and the Vaishnavas, or that they are less than myself, the dreadful offence in the shape of the contempt for one's superiors gathers strength. This is the real culpable arrogance. The text of the Bhagavatam, "One who, while worshipping Govinda, abstains on principle from worshipping His devotees, is called 'arrogant'," speaks of this arrogance which manifests itself in one who neglects the worship of the devotees of Godhead. When the conviction that all entities connected with Godhead are objects of my worship as much as Godhead Himself, dawns upon our souls, we are freed from the clutches of grief, infatuation and fear. The only method by which this desideratum is realisable is the service of Godhead.

It is this very principle that has been sung by Sree Vyasadeva in Srimad Bhagavatam, "By listening to the Narrative of the Bhagavatam with submission the aptitude of the service of the Supreme Divine Person Sree Krishna is aroused in such hearer. This serving disposition dissipates all sorrow, infatuation and fear". It is solely because we have lost the service of the Lotus Feet of Krishna that we are subject to sorrow, infatuation and fear. In the verse, "The 'Knowing' one wrote this thesaurus of the principles of devotion of which mankind is so ignorant", Sree Vyasadeva has been styled as the 'knowing' one. In other words all the rest except Vyasa have been declared to be ignorant. I am ignorant. Why did I offer myself to the temptation of wielding domination? I am by no means the master. On the contrary I am, indeed, the slave of sorrow, infatuation and fear.

I am eligible for reading merely the Mahabharat. "Let these worship the Sruti, those the Smriti, others the Mahabharata, through fear of the sorrows of this mundane existence. Hear am I engaged in the act of worshipping Nanda in whose corridors the Supreme Lord sports as his darling Son". Here is the error. I never thought that Nanda Maharaj is the Lotus Feet of my Sree Guru, because I am so busy in contriving the destruction of Krishna. Had it not been for this why am I in my present plight? All through the period, during which we continue to be anti-devotees, we are overtaken by a good many calamities. The only way for being relieved of those evils is 'bhakti' or to serve Godhead by the natural aptitude of the soul. It is this which the 'wise' Vyasadeva was enabled to know. "In the mind rendered perfectly pure and concentrated by the cementing process of transcendental service he experienced the vision of the Full Divine Personality and also of the limiting deluding potency, occupying a condemned position of dependance on Him, by whom completely infatuated the individual soul regards his essence as made up of the triple mundane qualities although his nature is really transcendental, and is saddled with all those unnecessary and harmful requirements that are the products of the mundane energy. He had also a vision of the nature of the direct service of the Transcendent by means of which these needless difficulties cease automatically."

We shall be enabled to realise our lasting good if only we place ourselves wholly under the protecting guidance of Sree Vyasadeva. Note particularly the verse of the Upanishad that tells of the vision of the Divine Master "Of Golden Hue" (Yada pashya pashyate rukmavarnam etc.) It will rebound to our lasting good if we learn to view That Entity by the joining process of transcendental service, to employ our thoughts on Him and seek to attain the Knowledge of That Unlimited Entity, in loyal pursuance of the teaching of Sree Vyasa. In the act of listening to the discourse of the Transcendental Entity the faculty of hearing will expand.

The Transcendental Word chanted by Devarshi Narada made his way into the cavity of the ear of Sree Vyasadeva. This is the cause by which he was enabled to have the vision of the Full Personality. Under the influence of the domineering aptitude that prevails in this mundane world we adopt the cults of Hero-worship and Apotheosis on the one hand or turn into Anthropomorphists, Zoomorphists, etc., on the other, by being infected with those respective modes of thought. Godhead will appear to us in the ways in which we shall choose to embellish Him.

If we abuse the prerogative of our human life,—if we choose to think ourselves to be on a footing of equality with Krishna,—we shall thereby fall into the snares of delusion and be conducted to perdition. The sequel of the vanity of supposing oneself to be master in one's own right has been analysed by Sree Vyasadeva in the verses. "Yehnyehrabindaksha" "Jnaneprayasam," "shreya sriting," etc., we are truly benefitted by listening attentively to these discourses of Sree Vyasadeva.

"Godhead in no long time enters the heart of the person who constantly listens with faith and chants His Deeds," Our real good is assured if we have the good fortune of listening to the Word of Godhead from the Lotus Feet of the Transcendental Master. The Lotus Feet of the Divine Master constantly chants the Word of Godhead. He has no other function. It is imperatively necessary to listen to and accept the word chanted by Him. We cannot retain the word issuing from the Lotus Lips of Sree Guru even after we have been enabled to receive Him. The word tends to be eclipsed if

He is not chanted to others. If we busy ourselves in any other unnecessary pursuit by abstaining from chanting the Word received from the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru, we lose our eternal entity and become assiduous for welcoming sorrow.

"That person is entitled to the attainment of the service of the Feet of Godhead, the Redeemer from the worldly bondage, who lives by submitting to Him with heart, speech and body, realising by his good vision His Mercy in the sufferings entailed by his own deeds." This sloka occurs in the Bhagavatam. May all of you be pleased to come to the Samadhi of the Lotus Feet of my Sree Guru on the bank of Sree Radhakunda for listening to the meaning of this shloka.

(The Editor followed by the audience made his way to the Samadhi and after circumambulating and prostrating himself before the same three times proceeded with his discourse as follows.)

There is no other way of being delivered from this world. Whatever Godhead does is for our good. We can be redeemed if we behold His Mercy in every event and in every activity. But if we notice any defect in His works or realise any cruelty therein, it is sure to result in evil and difficulty.

All my difficulty is due to the fact that I happen to be engrossd in activities other than the service of Krishna. If my taste for the service of Krishna really increases day by day I shall be blessed indeed. He who employs us in activities of this nature is the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru. The order of the Gurus are all persons who are loyal followers of Sree Vyasadeva. For this reason may all of you, who constitute the order of my Gurus, have Mercy upon me that I may have unflinching devotion to the Lotus Feet of my Sree Gurudeva.

To-day is the day for the worship of the Lotus Feet of my Sree Gurudeva. I am a most vile person, but he, indeed accepted me. During the period that he was manifest in this world I did not assume the garb of renunciation ; I wore the usual garb of the people of this world. I do not make any one my disciple. All of you are the order of my Gurus. I have accepted you as my Gurus. On receiving a jerk of the Lotus Feet of my Sree Gurudeva I lost all sense of this external world for the space of one year. I do not know whether any Transcendental Agent equal to Him in Greatness has ever appeared in this world. How may those, who are busy with the lust, anger, etc., of the world, ever know him ?

May you accept the perfect meaning of the slokas "Anasaktasya..." and "Prapanchikataya...". May you also consider well these words of a great person, "Empiric knowledge and fruitive work are both cheats. They entice and plunge me into the deep waters of the sea in the end". May you ponder on the verses 'Karmabalambaka kechit...' and 'Neha yat karmra...'.

Address to Preachers of the Mission going to England

Their Holinesses Tridandi-Swami Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj and Tridandi-Swami Bhakti Hridoy Bon Maharaj,

May it please your Holinesses,

WE, the members of the Gaudiya Math, beg to offer this humble tribute of our loving homage at the feet of your Holinesses on the eve of your departure to the west on the holy mission of preparing the minds of the peoples of those parts for accepting the words of His Divine Grace in unchallenging mood.

The Divine Personality and the Mission of the Acharyya are not unknown to the Occident. The West is also aware to an extent of the fact that the Message of the Absolute may neither be delivered nor received by the the imperfect apparatus at the disposal of the soul in the conditioned state. These Truths are found in an undeveloped form in the Biblical literatures. It will be the preliminary part of your activities to deliver the complete spiritual epistemology to all seekers of the Truth.

The natural direction of true enlightenment has always been from the East towards the West. The wonderful progress of material civilization of modern times has been mainly due to the labours of the thinkers and workers of the West. It is the purpose of His Divine Grace to enable humanity to consecrate its increased material resources to the service of the Absolute. The misdirection of those resources constitutes the most dreadful menace to the real peace and well-being of the world.

Sree Gaudiya Math in Calcutta, the principal branch of Sree Chaitanya Math, is instituted by His Divine Grace for affording the second city of the Empire the opportunity of studying the Career and Teachings of the Supreme Lord in the lives and activities of its members. It is not a speculative system that your Holinesses are carrying to the peoples of Europe and America but the spiritual life itself.

'e have no doubt that this will be alised in the activities of your Holi- sses by all sincere souls of those ountries.

We have no doubt that a branch of ree Chaitanya Math will be established the metropolis of the Empire at no stant date to be the head quarters our propaganda in the West. We ve every hope that the highly cul- ired people of England to whom you e going just now will give your olinesses a patient and unprejudiced earing and will be enabled by close d attentive personal association with ou by means of such institution to scover the real nature of the service Godhead.

Material science has been able to ercome the bounds of race and untry and to become a universal and nitary concern. It is the cherished eam of all sincerely devout persons at the complete Revelation will one day rely break down the barriers of sectarian isunderstanding and triumphantly augurate the Church Universal.

It is the mission of your Holinesses persuade the peoples of the West to fer their lending ears to the living ords of His Divine Grace for realising e complete nature of the Vedic Reve- tion. Your Holinesses are constantly gaged in the service of His Divine race and this is sure to impart to e Words and activities of your Holinesses that living spiritual persua- sive force which is sure to win the most rebellious hearts.

His Divine Grace has been preaching the Absolute Truth to the people of this country on a public scale during the last decade or so. During this comparatively short space of time thousands of persons irrespective of caste, creed, colour, age or sex have been enabled to recognise the undiluted genuineness of His Divine Mission. His Divine Grace has revealed the Career and Teachings of the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya to the modern mind in its widest sense. The rapid and phenomenal expansion of the activities of the Gaudiya Math during these years of the world-wide tumult of the greatest war and its after- math fills us with the hope that the Teachings of Sree Chaitanya will be wel- comed with the most profound joy and relief by the peoples of the Occident who are in a better position after their late terrible experiences to appreciate the necessity of a living faith which is able to fully satisfy the actual requirements of this scientific age. The acceptance of the Teachings of the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya by the peoples of the West will in its turn afford the people of this country the opportunity of trying to understand the real nature of their priceless heritage in the light of the enlightened verdict of the best minds of the West.

With hearts big with these high hopes for mankind on the eve of their actual realisation by the mercy of His Divine Grace we beg to offer this humble tribute of our respectful Homage at the feet of your Holinesses as an imperfect expression of our feelings on this auspicious occasion.

Your Holinesses' humble Servants,
Members of the Gaudiya Math.

Replies of the Preachers

MY most revered and affectionate Divine Master, His associated counterparts, President, Sisters and Brothers,

Sree Gurudeva has been graciously pleased to impose upon my most unworthy self His commands involving a great responsibility. Power and ability I have none. I put my hope in the causeless mercy of Sree Gurudeva and Vaishnavas. I make my obeisances to the Lotus Feet of Sree Gurudeva whose mercy gives the dumb the power of delivering the Words of God with the highest eloquence and the lame the power to surmount Sumerian obstacles. We offer our heart-felt thanks for the many kind words of blessing, affection, praise, sympathy and encouragement for ourselves personally and in regard to the purpose of our journey to Europe that have found expression in the farewell addresses presented to us by His Divine Grace, members of the Mission, friends and well-wishers on the eve of our departure to the West.

The present occasion recalls to my mind the similar event when the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya was pleased to send Sree Rupa and Sanatana to preach His word to the people of the West. The people of those lands had been devoid of real knowledge of devotion and spiritual living. Sree Rupa and Sanatana were commissioned to persuade those people to spiritual living.

The Supreme Lord employed the two brothers to lead the army of His devotees who were despatched to the West. We resemble them in as much as we are being sent to announce the coming of Srila Prabhupad and in respect of following in their footsteps as their humble servants.

In that far off west there is possibly to be found an equal or even greater volume of inattention of all-time devotional aptitude but more sympathy for worldly amelioration. We are unacquainted with those countries. We have no first-hand knowledge of the characteristics of those people but their culture is incomparable though their speech is different from ours.

This is our first attempt to carry the Message of Sree Chaitanya to those rational peoples. Our purpose is nothing less than the preaching in such strange environments of the real Truth in His Fullness. This is surely a task that is worthy of the infinite causeless mercy of Sree Sree Guru and Gauranga.

Srila Prabhupad had declared war against those of the world who are averse to the service of the Absolute. Our only weapon is the revealed Transcendental Sound. Our only armour is the Mercy of the Divine Master and the Vaishnavas with the sincere co-operation of the lending ears.

Of the two commanders selected by Srila Prabhupad for this great enterprise one happens to be a veteran and the other, his companion, possesses the freshness of youth. The veteran is proceeding to the field invigorated by the energy of his youthful companion. His only capital consists of the attitude of constantly praying for the gift of affection of Hari, Guru and the Vaishnavas with the generous willing temperament of the audience. May this little lamp be constantly fed with the unctuous liquid of your affection. May the light of the lamp spread its effulgence to those countries in the act of being waved in worship of you.

Srila Prabhupad is the living form of the Word of Sree Chaitanya identical with uneclipsed cognition. My humble self and my companion are proceeding to the distant lands in the office of the bearers of the Word of Sree Chaitanya. Srila Prabhupad is the Master Musician. We are the musical instruments made of clay in His hands. The earthly quality of this drum of clay (Mridanga) transformed into a living instrument by the touch of the hands of the Master will proclaim the Word that enlightens. The force of the Word from the living source will automatically overcome all obstructions offered by the opaque entities of this world.

My Divine Master and Vaishnavas, may You be pleased to bless us that our minds may always remain attached to the Lotus-Feet of our Master. If the mind is constantly and lovingly directed to the Lotus-Feet of Sree Gurudeva the cognitive faculty is enabled to be in touch with the Absolute. By the exercise of such cognition one is enabled to succeed in promulgating the inner purpose of the Master. By the strength of this relationship we would be able to invoke sympathy by degrees from the hearts of the peoples of all countries. We are confident that all persons will then enroll themselves, heart and soul, to join the chorus of the melodious Word of Sree Chaitanya. After we have tuned all harps to harmony, peace will flourish in all parts of the world.

We firmly cherish the hope that this inner purpose of Sreela Prabhupad will be realised by our successful preaching.

Many great warriors and commanders were employed in the enterprise of building the bridge across the Ocean by Sree Ram Chandra. There was a tiny squirrel among those mighty personages. Srila Prabhupad has employed a squirrel, no other than my humble self, in the building of the bridge of Transcendental Love between the East and the West. There is certainly no end of my happiness at this. My Divine Master and Vaishnavas, if I am enabled, by being annointed with Your Feet-dust to carry thither by the process of Kirtanam, the glory of the Transcendental Message, an atmosphere may soon be created where you will naturally be most cordially welcome in the near future. This is the prayer of my humble self who has no other desire.

The Sun in the form of the Word of Sree Chaitanya has arisen in the Eastern horizon in Sree Gaudapura. May all of you bless me that I, as a tiny ray of that Sun, may be enabled, on our arrival in the Occident, to serve properly the Lotus-Feet of Sree Gurudeva Who can dispel the accumulated darkness of ignorance of the long series of one's previous mundane lives. I pray at your feet for your mercy that I may constantly chant the Word of Sree Chaitanya That has power to impart spiritual enlightenment, and in doing so may I be humbler than the blade of grass, covet no honour for myself and be disposed to offer due honour to all entities. In the chant of the Word of Sree Chaitanya is to be found the unique harmonious meeting-ground of self-interest, disinterestedness and interests of all other entities.

The Holy Name and Divine Love by Whose means Sree Chaitanya Deva had won the world is no other entity than the Chant of Sree Krishna by many persons in company. If it be, indeed, one's purpose to obtain mastery over one's own mind as well as the minds of others, there is no other surer means than the congregational chant of Krishna, the life of all real learning. Aversion to Hari Who relieves from all worldliness is the normal condition of the people of this world. The war that is being waged by Sreela Parbhupad against ungodly people of this world is nothing but a fight for winning the hearts of all entities. The Chant of the Word of Sree Chaitanya is the only weapon for subduing the heart, that never fails.

The preaching of the revealed Transcendental Word in every part of the world will bring about the lustration in opening up of the ear of the listeners. "When the Word has entered the orifice of the ear, it does not take very long for the mind and the five sense-organs to be fully regulated. Then from the heart the Word forces His way to the tip of the tongue and dances incessantly in the form of the Transcendental Sound. The Name Krishna is Omnipotent". These Words have been penned by Sreela Thakur Bhakti Vinode. His Words will then attain the Eternal Plane of their self-manifestation. Revered Vaishnavas who possess a most sympathetic heart, may you bless us. The Words of Thakur Bhakti Vinode will manifest their truth when the whole world realises the attraction of the Goodness of Sree Chaitanya and Nityananda.

The Message of the Vedanta that has been made known to the Occident by preachers from the East up till now, is not the genuine Vedanta. They have carried to the West speculation concocted by their erring minds which is opposed to the Vedanta. It is the view opposed to the Vedas in its alternative forms of veiled and professed atheism. Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita has recorded the Words of the Supreme Lord Sree Chaitanya on the issue. "Atheistical speculation under the pretence of the authority of the Vedas is even more heinous than sensationalistic Buddhism". All the practising teachers of pure theism and the Supreme Lord Himself have stated Sreemad Bhagabatam to be the genuine exposition of the Vedanta. In Sreemad Bhagabatam fruitive work, empiric knowledge, the practice of austerities, the method of controlling the breath (Yoga), and every other method not directed to the gratification of the Absolute Person have been declared unspiritual being without any value for the Soul. In the same work the causeless endeavour to gratify the Divine Senses of the Supreme Person Who is Absolute Autocrat and full of Transcendental Blissful Activities has been established as the only universal and eternal function of all souls.

The real spiritual constructive solution of all controversies is effected by the Word of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya. Extended altruism in the real sense as well as the final scientific settlement of all the difficulties of this world—the offspring of the atheistic attitude—will be substantially realised by the promulgation of the religion of the Bhagabatam manifested to this world by the Career and Teachings of Sree Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu.

We are not proceeding to the West as self-elected religious preachers puffed up by the vanity of their empiric wisdom professing sectarian and non-sectarian views, who have always claimed, now as formerly, the attention of mankind in favour of their patent inconclusive speculations. Neither are we undertaking the journey to Europe and America as preachers of any particular branch of the so-called Hindu religion. We are going to the Occident by the command of the Lotus-Feet of Sree Gurudeva carrying with us the priceless commodity of the Eternal Supreme Religion of the soul that is the nature of all unconditioned spiritual entities at all times and at all places. Neither have we assumed the garb of religious preachers by accepting our liveries at the hands of ungodly public opinion. In lieu of these we have received our liveries from the Protector of Sanatan Dharma, Sree Krishna Chaitanya Himself, through the Word of Sree Gurudeva. The Divine sanction has been announced in such texts as the following, "Deliver this country by being Guru by My Command". "Let every person who has been born a man in the land of Bharata do Eternal Good to others by living up to the import of such birth". "My Name shall be preached to every village and town of the World".

Our journey to the West is not undertaken for the worldly benefit or otherwise of any entity, in which case conflict of interest is inevitable. But in the religion of the soul there is no possibility of conflict born of the desire for sensuous gratification of individuals or aggregates, in as much as, on that plane, it is the purpose of every entity to offer himself for the gratification of the Spiritual Senses of the Absolute Autocrat. In such function there flows the perennial stream of the real Eternal Love.

We are not proceeding to the Occident for securing any profit, honour or fame on our own individual account. Neither are we going there for making a present to those peoples of any form of profit or worship based upon the ulterior purpose of the attainment of piety, wealth, sensuous gratification and liberation which tend to our individual comforts depriving thereby our eternal function towards the Absolute.

We are impelled by the one unswerving desire for the consecration of that glory which is nothing short of the service of the manifestation of the Glory of the Absolute Autocrat. This is found in the Words of the Supreme Lord, "My sacred Fame will overspread the world. Mankind will sing My Glory in their joy."

There is no other way for any sentient entity to escape from the clutches of the turbulent puffed-up Siren of self aggrandisement than the means of cherishing the absorbing desire for the glorification of the Absolute Autocrat. To serve the Manifestation of the Eternal Glory of the Absolute Autocrat is kindness to all entities. It is the relishing desire for the Transcendental Name and the Service of Vaishnavas. It is this which alone is Transcendental Love.

We are going to the West for the sole purpose of serving the Manifestation of the Glory of Sreedham Mayapur, the plane of self-dedication, which is the real inner purpose of Sreela Thakur Bhakti Vinode and Sreela Prabhupad, Divinely commissioned to carry out the Desire of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya that is in other words, to serve the Manifestation of the Personality of Divine Manifestations, enshrined in Sree Chaitanya Math, all over this mundane world which is ordinarily devoid of all real cognition.

We pray at the Lotus Feet of Sree Gurudeva, Gaudiya and Gauranga the mercy of this only blessing that we may be enabled to chant with an unhesitating voice the living enlightening Message of Sree Vishwa Vaishnava Raj Sabha to the assembly of the whole world by following the method of preaching inculcated by the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya thus stated by the crest-jewel of the order of Tridandi Sannyasins Srila Prabodhananda Saraswatipad, "By holding the straw between the teeth, falling at your feet uttering by hundreds of ways my humble supplications, I make this submission, may all ye pure souls, practise loving devotion to the Lotus Feet of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the Supreme Lord, leaving every other things at a distance."

Exhibitor's Address

BUT the attracting Indivisible Knowledge is the only Substantive Entity. The Eternal Bliss becoming fully manifest brings about the Appearance of the Swayang-Rupa (the Beauty of Form Himself). These manifestations neutralise the potency of the atmosphere that is devoid of bliss and knowledge of the plane of variegated pastime and enable the individual soul to have the vision of the Realm of the Absolute comprising the highest hemisphere of transcendental space overflowing with uninterrupted bliss through all eternity. Acting as the connecting link between the Accommodating and Accommodated Existence, Cognition and Bliss, there is realised to intervene the Woodlands of Vrindavana in the form of the assemblage of the eternal instrumentals of the Concentrated Embodiment of Existence, Cognition and Bliss. This is characterized by the quality of simultaneous manifest-cum-non-manifest quality of the inconceivable-distinct and non-different Expression. The realisation of this assorted variegatedness has power to convey the individual soul from the tracks of non-antecedence postulated by the material Sciences to the plane of the Unitary Cognition replete with the crisp mellowness of All-knowledge. And the distinctive characteristic of the highest aptitude of the eternal serving disposition endows us with the power of discernment that quickens our reverential knowledge to bring forth the higher, more whole-some and more ample realisation of the mellow quality.

It is then that we begin to sing the Song of Sree Krishna. "To those who constantly serve Me with love I give that relationship of the higher discernment by means of which they attain unto Me".

The aptitude for the exercise of relationship (?) with Godhead by those who are really unconnected with Him (a-yogi) is an ephemeral function. And the aptitude for the exercise of unnatural relationship that is attempted by those who are improperly connected with Him (ku-yogi) is both transitory as well as opposed to the Scriptural regulation. "Those who serve other gods with faith, indeed, also serve Me, but by method that are forbidden by Me". After this particular Song of Krishna has been heard by us may our imaginations be not again entrapped by the argument of our eligibility for the practices of Raja-yoga and Hatha-yoga. On the resuscitation of the eternal aptitude of the soul, the mind, intelligence and the mundane ego, and solid, liquid, etherial, gaseous and material space with their corresponding sensuous functions and sensations comprised within the scope of the material atmosphere and appearing during the state of profound sleep of the soul, cannot obstruct the process. So long as the relationship represented by non-spiritual hankering, fruitive activity enjoined by the Scriptures and pursuit of empiric knowledge and the eligibility for such relationship are not prepared to banish the factor of the consideration of one's sensuous gratification, we cannot obtain respite from the clutches of the diverse Scriptural controversies, nor be delivered from the spurious judgment pertaining to the plane of mundane activity that is productive of the triple misery. Non-spiritual hankering on its appearance is engaged in the attempt of destroying the very basis of our eternal cognitive and blissful position and prevents us from realising the fact that our false ego is the perversion of our real personality.

The activity of bringing about the manifestation of the supreme well-being of the individual soul is the only non-evil-producing form of Mercy. So long as we are not in a position to take into our consideration the real nature of unalloyed devotion we are not repelled by the bitter experience of empiric wisdom. Neither do the considerations embodied in the following sloka spoken by Tridandi-Saraswatipad manifest themselves in our hearts. "So long as there is no occasion for obtaining the sight of the personality of the inner servant clinging to the honey of the Lotus Feet of Sree Chaitanya, arguments pertaining to the non-differentiated Brahman and the paths of Liberation represented by the conceptions of merging with Ishwara, etc., do not taste bitter, the fruitive works enjoined by the Veda and by custom retain their firm hold on the mind and hostile controversies among the so-called savants, versed in the different Scriptures and walking on the mental plane away from the proper track, are inevitable". Till then we are apt to welcome as the Goddess of good fortune nothing short of undiluted calamity. The evil that overtakes fishes and other aquatic animals has its origin in the hallucination that leads them to mistake as their legitimate food the bait attached to the fishing-hook. After one has succeeded in avoiding this deadly snare, if he still continues to show any remissness for the search of the Real Truth, one is liable to be swallowed up by the tiger of the hankering for merging in the One by his entry into the realm of utter darkness. Unless one is enabled to be delivered from the jaws of the self-same tiger of Liberation one is liable to experience the fear that the All-Attracting Real Entity has been slain by the demons Agha, Baka, etc.

It is only by the power of the principle of devotion to the Divinity that speculations born of the malice of non-devotion are rendered incapable of destroying our nascent cognitive aptitude. In as much as the free distribution of the Mercy of Sree Krishna Chaitanya in the form of the promulgation of the Holy Name, and His Heart's Desire in the form of the practice of the intimate service of the Name, are the objects of our worship, we have been led thereby to the attempt for opening this Theistic Exhibition for propagating the supreme desideratum for our real education. The purpose of human life is realised and true well-being is attained by the promulgation of the best mode of judgment that is hid from the view of mankind. The great practising teacher of the service of the Absolute, Sree Rupa Goswami Who is in every way foremost in the active propaganda of the Heart's Desire of Sree Chaitanyadeva through the medium of language, in pursuance of the mode of Teaching of his Most Magnanimous Lord, has propagated the shining rays of the Effulgent Blue Gem (Ujjvala-Nilamani) for all those who thirst for the tiny drop of the liquid of the ocean of nectarine mellowness. In performance of the function of the soul, which, in the case of the eternal followers of Sree Rupa, consists of the service of Sree Rupa and, along with the same, the service of the Swayang-Rupa (the Beautiful Divine Form Himself), the service of Swayang-Prakash (the Divine Manifestation Himself), the service of the eternal spiritual Bliss of Divine Quality, the service of His Divine Servitorial Individualities, the service of His Divine Spiritual Activities, —the employment of the tongue and quivering lips is one kind of such activity. Another kind of the activity consists in the finding of the visible Object of worship in the form of the removal of the cataract or bondage of the material eye by the spike, surcharged with the mercy of Sree Guru, or the transcendental Knowledge declared by the Pancharatra, which is the sure path of the attainment of the summum bonum. The Most Magnanimous Sree Gaursundar, Bestower of the Love of Krishna, for the purpose of revealing the Highest Manifestation of the Divinity, has confirmed and elucidated the inconceivable nature of the spiritual realisation in the form of the simultaneously distinctive and non-different manifestation enunciated by the Pancharatra and the Bhagavat. That realisation is attainable only by the aptitude of the soul. It is never attainable by the continued practice of attachment to entities that are realisable as conceptions of the mind adulterated with the material engrafting.

For the above reason it is our humble prayer that is incumbent on ourselves to accept only the analogy with the perverted world offered by these discourses regarding the Transcendental Sound and spiritual atoms and spiritual diversity obtaining in the Realm of the Absolute (Vaikuntha), Who is but a Distinctive Face of the Divine Form Himself, only after we have given our closest attention to the introductory statements catered by the spiritual Gaudiya. In regard to this mundane world the conception of manifestation proceeds on the assumption of the dividing distinction obtaining between the form and its possessor. The Realm of the Absolute being immune from any such characteristic it is one's duty to refrain from any attempt to include the realisations of the unconditioned state within the scope of conditioned thought. In other words it is our duty to view these manifestations with a mind fully alive to the necessity of not allowing the current of thought evolved within the narrow limits of the mundane outlook of conditioned souls to antagonise or destory the activities of the servants of the Real Truth in pursuance of His service. If one views the subject from the standpoint of the realisation of such service and the scientific interpretation of the revealed Scriptures, one would not be in a hurry to suppose that the Name, From, Quality, Individuality of servitorship and Activities of the Absolute are on a level with the experience of the conditioned state or are adulterated with the ignorance of speculations made up of the elements of cognition and non-cognition accomodated within the limits of material space of three dimensions.

The reason for the opening of this Exhibition has been specified in the following words in Bilapakusumanjali, the famous work from the pen of Sree Raghunathdas Goswami, the eternal servant of Sree Chaitanyadeva. Accept the refuge of the Eternal Master (Sanatana), the ocean of mercy, who feels for the sorrows of others and who with great care makes me, who am unwilling and ignorant, drink of the mellow liquid of devotion marked by complete want of attachment for the things of this world. The endeavour for the manifestation of the Exhibition is due to the faith of the openers of the Theistic Exhibition and of the congregation, who associate themselves with them, in the eternal and absolute truth of the line of succession of the servants of the self-same Sree Raghunathdas Goswami Prabhu. There is hardly to be found in this ephemeral world any person who would be disposed to join issue with the postulations of the theory of cause and effect. The desire for enlightenment arises naturally in one's heart in the process of seeking for the causes of all occurrences.

(To be continued)

Sree Vyas-Puja Homage

At the Lotus-Feet of my Divine Master :—

This most humble offering of devotion is made with innumerable prostrated obeisances, on this most auspicious occasion of the fifty-ninth anniversary of the Advent of His Divine Grace Paramahansa- paribrajakacharyya Sree Srimad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj my most revered Sree Gurudeva.

My most Affectionate and Revered Divine Master,—

My humble submission on this most auspicious occasion is that Your Divine Grace may be pleased to accept my personal homage as of one who is an object of His causeless and most wonderful mercy. May Your Divine Grace be pleased to permit this most inadequate testimony stand despite its utter shortcoming. I pray to be also privileged in Your Divine Grace's response to this poor submission to be enabled to hear the language of the Divine Master to His wayward, constitutionally ignorant, most insignificant and unworthy protege. May I be ever enabled by Your Divine Grace's causeless Mercy to find in the Voice of my Divine Master my only solace and my supreme cheering guidance.

I crave for the Mercy of Your Divine Grace for no other purpose than for receiving the same itself. This is also the testimony of my reason when it surrenders itself to Your Divine Grace's unconditional guidance. I lose my reason when it strays from the shelter of Your Divine Grace's Lotus Feet and, against all the insinuations of my reason gone astray, I appeal to Your Divine Grace's saving Mercy to preserve me from the perils of the killing hallucination of the graceless rational existence.

I believe in the testimony of the revealed Scriptures which lend its unconditional support to whatever Your Divine Grace is pleased to speak out. Its value for us is derived from its coincidence with the words of Your Divine Grace. I do not believe in those so-called Scriptures that differ from the words of Your Divine Grace.

Your Divine Grace is the Absolute Master of all entities. May I have the privilege of spontaneously desiring to realise myself as the humblest of Your Divine Grace's eternal willing subservients. I pray for Your Divine Grace's causeless assurance in this behalf on this most auspicious occasion.

I desire nothing else save palpable personal subserviency to Your Divine Grace's Lotus Feet. The Advent of Your Divine Grace has made the realisation of this relationship almost possible. The Advent of Your Divine Grace holds out the hope of the perpetuation of the tie. All entities and my humble self have thus every cause to cherish this most auspicious occasion with the most absorbing love and gratitude.

Unless Your Divine Grace chooses to manifest Your Own Divine Personality to the pure serving disposition of the unalloyed soul, it is never possible for the fettered soul to know that You are really everything to him. You do not require any external testimony for Your recognition. You always announce Yourself to the soul by imparting to him the power of recognising Your Real Nature in terms of his eternal subserviency to You. It is this renovated serving self-consciousness that is the testimony of Your Appearance to the awakened soul.

I laugh to scorn the contention of those sophists, devoid of an iota of love for the Truth, who require any lesser testimony for their admission of the Truth than His Own Actual Appearance. Those who have no love for Your Own Sake, require the separate testimony of their fallible judgment for professing their hypocritical attachment to the creature of their disloyal imaginations. The testimony of the Scriptures is of no avail to the person who is not anxious to love You more than the Scriptures, who does not desire to love the Scriptures for Your Sake or who pretends to love You because of the testimony of the Scriptures. People who are disposed to prefer their interpretation of the Scriptures to You cannot know that the only purpose of all Scriptures is to express the necessity of unconditional surrender to Your Lotus Feet.

The Guru is greater than the Scriptures. He is greater than everything. He is identical with Krishna. Your Divine Grace was pleased to throw out a hint of this very thing in Your most gracious response of last year. But I am accustomed to look for Krishna in directions away from You. It is for this reason that I cannot understand that Your Divine Grace is Krishna, that Your Divine Grace is, indeed, the Divinity revealing Himself. I am disposed to doubt as I do not accept the plain meaning of the Scriptures. The greatest, and in fact the only, Truth that the Scriptures have to tell us is that the Guru is everything. The Guru is at once the Support and Object of unalloyed love. To leave out Sree Nityananda from the Scriptures is to leave out Krishna. The Scriptures are absolutely meaningless without Your mercy.

I hail with all the rational and loving fervour of my own proper nature this occasion of the Merciful Advent of Your Divine Grace fraught with every beneficent consequence for myself. I can but speak for myself. I have no ambition of persuading others to the realisation of what is fully known to themselves. I am speaking falteringly because it is on behalf of myself.

Everybody has his own business with Your Divine Grace. Let him by all means approach You by some language more suited to his purpose. I shall never quarrel with him. I know by Your Grace that he should not serve anything but Yourself. It is only when one's serving disposition suffers total eclipse that one wants to dominate over this mundane world. You offer such a person seeming domination over the mundane world for the cure of his malady, lest he continues to offend knowingly. The pseudo-guru who preaches the doctrine of domination over the mundane world, is categorically distinct from You. The teaching of pseudo-gurus is denounced by all the Scriptures in the most unambiguous manner. "Beware of false prophets."

I find no reason to subscribe to the doctrine that there can be many and differing gurus. This is the same thing as to say that there can be many and differing divinities. The Guru is only One. One who differs from the Guru is the false prophet. There cannot be a greater calamity than to allow oneself to fall into the clutches of the false prophet. By falling into the clutches of the false prophet one desires to dominate over the entities of this mundane world. The dominion of this world promised by the false prophets is the only lie. Let everyone seek within himself for this criterion for distinguishing the false from the True.

All the ways of this world are really deluding. The Guru alone can save us from the lure of the flesh. But Your Divine Grace does not propose to save us by the negative or destructive method. You do not kill by professing to save. You confer the substantive service of Yourself which dissipates by substituting itself for all our hankerings for the objects of the flesh and for projects based thereon. There are an infinity of ways of serving the Guru, but all those methods are in perfect agreement among themselves. This is so because the servant of the Guru wants to serve the One and not to dominate over the many. He does not seek for power. All domination belongs to the Guru. The loyal servant has no taste for acquiring any power on his own account. He wants and likes to be guided by the Guru at every step. All guidance belongs only to You. And, therefore, I cannot be also guided by any other person whatever, unless You tell me to be so guided.

You have told me that those who serve You have to be obeyed. By Your Mercy I may know that they are Your inseparable counterparts. If any one seeks to serve You without serving Your accepted servants, he disobeys Yourself by such service. The only way of serving You is by the identical process of serving Your humblest servants. I believe that I can have a chance of obtaining Your service by Your Mercy which alone enables one to obtain the service of Your servants.

But in every case it is personal and unconditional service that is acceptable to You and to Your servants on Your behalf. May I never learn to distinguish grossly between person and principle in the sphere of spiritual service as one does in mundane affairs. Spiritual distinction is not a dividing differance. The personal is infinitely more absolute, if such a term is permissible, than the abstract, on the plane of unalloyed service. Abstract loyalty to an impersonal principle has no locus standi on the plane of service. It is on the contrary the most dangerous of all forms of wilful self-deception.

This most auspicious anniversary of the Advent of Your Divine Grace is cherished by Your servants, because on this occasion You are pleased to reveal Yourself to them in the unambiguous manner as their Eternal Master. You are pleased to accept their services in Your Ôwn Right as recipient of service on this occasion. This Mercy is vouchsafed to Your servants for revealing the Truth declared by the Scriptures that the Guru is Krishna Himself. He is also the Best-beloved of Krishna. This gives Him, if possible, the Higher Position. The Guru is the Predominated Moiety of the Absolute. He is the selfmanifesting Krishna and, therefore, more merciful even than Krishna. This appears to be the meaning of the words of Your Divine Grace's Response of last year that the Guru is not opaque but transparent.

SREEDHAM MAYAPUR
The 15th February, 1933.

It is this privileged occasion that has emboldened me to give expression to the thoughts of my heart. May Your Divine Grace be pleased to accept the imperfect expressions of service of an unworthy aspirant of the service of Your Divine Grace's servants, by pardoning the offence of thus trying to express the inexpressible.

With innumerable prostrated obeisances to the Holy Lotus Feet of Your Divine Grace I pray for the Mercy of being permitted to remain for ever.

Your Divine Grace's humble and obedient servant,
NARAYANDAS ADHIKARI.

Circumambulation of Sree Nabadwipdham

THE annual function of the circumambulation of Sree Nabadwipdham takes place this year from March 2 to 10. There can be no doubt that the function will be joined with increased zeal by a very large number of servants of the Supreme Lord who are always prepared to give it preference over the most pressing demands of so-called worldly duties.

The topography and route of circumambulation of Sree Nabadwipdham have been described in different issuses of this journal. The purpose of this short article is not to repeat those matters over again. Each of the sites to be visited embodies a rich store of tradition of transcendental occurrences. Those occurrences manifest their eternal existence to the uncovered pure vision of those fortunate persons who choose to perform the journey in the manner laid down in the Scriptures.

The spiritual realm is not a mundane country-side displaying a very limited number of objects of curiosity which grow stale after the first sight. Neither does the interest of these scenes require to be maintained by their association with past events of this world or by means of fictitious romance and poetry. Those who try to keep up their interest in the realm of the Absolute with such extraneous help naturally find it difficult to maintain their preference against the opposing claims of the deluding charms of other worldly entities.

The intending circumambulator is accordingly cautioned against adopting the expectations and attitude of the worldly tourist in undertaking this journey through the Home-land of Godhead. All mundane thoughts and expectations have to be laid aside for being enabled to enter the Transcendental Realm. The attainment of this attitude is the method as well as the goal of the journey.

The first of the Nine Islands constituting Sree Nabadwipdham, which has to be circumambulated by the pilgrim, is Sree Antardwip or 'the Beautiful Inner Island.' This is the starting-point and also the journey's end. The central part of this 'Inner Island' of self-dedication is occupied by Sridham Mayapur, the village of the Nativity of the Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya.

All this may sound very poetical and also reasonable. But is it really obligatory for all persons to actually go round these to all intents and purposes mundane localities for realising the nature of the Absolute Realm?

The traditions tell us that the very highest devotees had to come to Nabadwip for the complete fulfilment of their respective spiritual purposes, in the shape of obtaining the sight of Sree Gaursundar. No spiritual purpose can be fulfilled till one obtains the sight of the Fully Benign Divine Person. In Sree Krishna Divine Beauty and Sweetness predominate over Divine Power and Majesty. In Sree Gaursundar Divine Magnanimity and Mercy predominate over even Divine Beauty and Sweetness. Sree Gaursundar is Sree Krishna concealed behind the Supreme Grace of His Premier Devotee and Divine Counterwhole, His own Predominated Moiety, Sree Radhika.

Those, who aspire to equality with or merging in the Divinity, commit the worst of offence against their own true nature. The conditioned state, identifying itself with the worldly situation seeks its fulfilment by the acquisition of more and more worldly felicity for oneself. This really tantamounts to an endeavour for the commission of spiritual suicide.

No worldly enjoyment or abnegation can bring the expected satisfaction of the desire for enjoyment innate to the conditioned state. Every act of enjoyment or abnegation only serves to increase the intensity of the feeling of want and privation. The rich man of this world is not less miserable than the poor man. The desire for enjoyment and disillusionment on its attainment are the causes of misery. On the other hand a person who has no desire for felicity is an abnormality. The civilized man has got a much greater variety of wants than the savage. No rational person seriously contends that the civilized man is for this reason worse than the savage. But the civilized man is realy much more dissatisfied with his condition than the savage is with his.

What is the reason of this universal incurable discontent? The civilized man possesses much better contrivances than the savage for the amelioration of sorrows and wants incidental to the human life. He also possesses a much greater variety of objects and processes of worldly enjoyment. But all this notwithstanding why is he also much more dissatisfied with his condition? Neither is it altogether of the nature of divine discontent. The civilized man is not less selfish or less cruel than the savage and is no less prepared to kill and be killed for the sake of base lucre. The hunger for woman and gold is decidedly stronger in him than even in the savage. These wicked passions are not ennobled by assuming subtler forms in his case. Scratch the surface of the average civilized man and you will find the unreclaimed and unrepentant brute.

The civilized state is an idea bequeathed by the Greeks who regarded the polished inhabitants of a city as being necessarily superior as a type of humanity to the rural population. The city is the point of concentration of activities for the enrichment and amelioration of the physical and mental life. But is the possession of a powerful and resourceful mind the state of the highest good? Is such state good at all?

Why does a person seek for the improvement of this body and mind? In order to be able to procure more enjoyment? In order to be able to lord it over Nature and all entities? Will it satisfy the needs of our soul if we are able to do these things? Is worldly riches better than poverty? Is a strong man better than a weak one? Is a moral man decidedly different from one who is immoral? A moral person is only a type within the species. The moral man is not categorically different from the immoral person. There is no gulf, but only a certain distribution of emphasis, in the formation of a type, that is all.

This sameness and continuity of the worldly life, through all its grades and types, should enable us to be cautious in pronouncing decidedly upon the desirability of any one particular form in preference to another. They are all of the same stuff. They are all of them neither desirable, nor wholly undesirable, or rather of a mixed nature in which the undesirability predominates. The proportion of desirable to the undesirable elements is the same at every stage. It is this unwholesome mixed character of the mundane life that is unsatisfactory. It is never possible by means of human contrivance to attain to a state that is really proportionately more free from the preponderating undesirable elements. If this analysis is correct it disposes of the contentions of those who aspire to effect any radical improvement of the race by the development of the powers of the body and mind.

What is then the nature of the real summum bonum? The revealed Religions have one common answer to give to this question viz., that it is located beyond the mundane plane of the physical and mental life. The present physico-mental plane is by its very nature unwholesome both in its contents and instruments. The initiative in animation is neither with the body nor with the mind, nor with their combination. The body and mind are of the nature of foreign incorporations and environments. The soul, who is different from either, alone possesses the initiative. He is in a position to refuse to make use of the physical body and mind. But he wants to be convinced that by abstaining from such bodily and mental activity he would be provided with a better environment and instrumentals.

The spiritual mind and body are the reciprocals of the Absolute Environment in the same way as the physical mind and body are the reciprocals of the mundane. The mundane birth ushers the conditioned soul into the mundane environment by equipping him with the physical mind and body. The physical body and mind are employed by the conditioned soul as instrumentals for obtaining domination over the mundane environment. This is both natural and inevitable in the conditioned state.

But it is the nature of the soul to serve Godhead by means of his spiritual mind and body in his eternal spiritual environment of the Realm of the Absolute. This service is rendered spontaneously and willingly. The soul is, however, free to refuse to serve Godhead willingly. He is free to desire to be master in his own right. But as by his constitution he is a spiritual entity, an infinitesimal and detachable particle of the Full Cognitive Power of Godhead, it is an offence against his own nature to aspire after domination. When, therefore, in abuse of his freedom of choice he desires domination in lieu of service he has also to seek the help of the deluding power of Godhead for the realisation of his unnatural ambition. In response to his solicitation the deluding power is pleased to endow the soul, bent upon discarding the path of willing service, with the objects coveted by him in the shape of the physical body and mind for practising his aversion to Godhead by enslaving himself to the forces of physical Nature.

As soon as the soul is really awakened to the desirability of the service of Godhead he becomes willing to abjure the ambition for domination (really abject thraldom) by means of his physical body and mind, and seeks the mercy of the Enlightening Power of Godhead for endowing him with the proper instrumentals and environment for the service of the Divinity.

The Benign Spiritual Power tests the sincerity of Her votary before She grants his prayer and accordingly She appears to him in a form to whom it is possible for him to render worship, his present physical equipments notwithstanding. It is no doubt a hard task for one to have to perform such a function which is against the perverse grain of one's secondary nature. But one is helped by the Benign Power in the due performance of this otherwise uncongenial task, by the reawakening of his spiritual nature.

The circumambulation of the Spiritual Realm of Sree Nabadwipdham offers the conditioned soul the opportunity of the service of the Benign Realm of the Divinity for kindling in the pilgrim real love for the Absolute Realm and thereby eliminating his consuming hunger for the sojourn in this mundane world. Love for this world is the irrepressible natural tendency of the conditioned state. Love of the country of one's mundane birth is the intense form of this kind of aversion to the Absolute. The circumambulation of Sridham Nabadwip enables one to realise the nature of the Absolute Realm as the Hand-maid of the Benign Divine Personality.

These realisations of the denizens of the spiritual world become available to all conditioned souls on condition of their seeking the knowledge of the Absolute by the method of submissive enquiry at the feet of the bona fide servant of Godhead and by the practice of his service.

Sridham Nabadwip is replete with the spiritual traditions of the realisations of all great souls who appeared in this world for manifesting the true method of the quest of the Absolute. There is no other way for attaning to the Transcendental Realm than the performance of the circumambulation of the Manifest Transcendence. The Path is One, because the Path is the Goal.

CHAPTER IV

52 They said, Krishna has gone to the country of Gauda ;
A few days ago He has been back from His pilgrimage to Gaya".

53 I heard of the great activity of samkirtana of Hari in Nadia ;
Some said Narayana has been born here.

54 On hearing a great rumour that all sinners are being saved in Nadia,
I, who am a sinner, have come to this place".

55 The Lord said, "We are all fortunate
That a great devotee like thyself is among us.

56 "We feel that all our activities have their fulfilment today,
In as much as we have seen the flow of thy tears of joy".

57 Murari laughed as he said. "You understand yourselves ;
All of us, indeed, understand nothing of it"

58 Sribas said, "How can we understand it ?
It seems like Madhava and Sankara worshipping each other".

59 Gadadhara said, "Pandit, thou say'st well ;
It is evidently the doings of Rama and Lakshmana".

60 Some said, "The Two seem to be two gods of love".
Some said, "These Two are likest Krishna and Rama".

Lord Chaitanya Teaches Sree Rupa

(ii)

"The realisation of coveted powers and excellences or of the equable state overflowing with the bliss of the Brahman on the complete withdrawal of the mind from all external efforts as the result of practices enjoined by the Scriptures, can dazzle the imagination of man by their glaring features only till the least trace of the fragrance of the sure medicine of love, that subdues the Subduer of Demon Madhu, does not yet appear on the pathways of the heart."

Love for Godhead is the fruit of pure service. It is, therefore, necessary to describe the characteristics of unalloyed devotion. The nature of pure service may be indicated negatively as follows. It is absolutely free from hankerings that are contrary to the instructions of the Scriptures. That is to say it does not covet promiscuous sexual relationship with the other sex. It has no taste for any other form of irreligious and immoral activity. The perfectly serving disposition is not overlaid with any hankering for mundane fruitive activity or knowledge tending to a negative result. The positive nature of unalloyed devotion consists of this that it always seeks to serve Krishna in the manner that is in conscious pursuance of His Desire.

The negative aspect of unalloyed devotion requires that a person seeking its attainment must desist from the ordinary forms of worldly activity viz., (1) immoral and irreligious living, (2) worship of non-God, (3) pursuit of speculative knowledge regarding the Absolute, (4) all work for worldly utility. In lieu of the above the seeker is to serve Krishna by all his faculties in the manner that is pleasing to Him. Such is unalloyed devotion. From such devotion alone love for Krishna is engendered. The Pancharatra and Bhagabata tell us so. The texts are as follows

"Bhakti (devotion) is declared to be the service of the Lord of the senses by means of the senses. It is free from all physical and mental element. It is absolutely free from all mundane dirt by reason of its being entirely directed to Godhead" (Narada-Pancharatra).

"As soon the tidings of My Excellences enter the listening ear of a person his mind exhibits a constant inseparability from Me which is comparable to the state of the body of pure water of the Ganges on its entry into the Ocean. This is the only sure characteristic of devotion which is free all mundane quality. This devotion to Me, Who am the Acme of Personality by My proper Nature, is causeless and undivided."

"The devotees never accepts the gifts of residence in Vaikuntha (the unlimited Realm), opulence and honour or from resembling My Majestic Self, or proximity to My Presence, or complete merging in Me, all of which prospects are offered them by Me. This is so because there is nothing that is covetable by them save and except My Transcendental Service."

"It is such devotion that is perfect. It is by means of such devotion that the individual soul attains to unalloyed love for Me by transcending the limiting potency that is characterised by mundane quality." (Bhagabatam)

"If the mind harbours the least desire for mundane enjoyment or liberation from the same love for Godhead is not aroused even by the most diligent pursuit of the service of Godhead enjoined by the Scriptures."

"So long as the ugly spectre of the desire for mundane enjoyment or mundane emancipation continues to haunt the chambers of the heart how may the bliss of devotion arise therein ?"

This form of Bhakti (devotion) is fit to be cultured (sadhan-bhakti). Being duly cultured it gives rise to rati (the natural tendency of the soul towards Krishna, or the basic principle of love). Concentrated rati is prema. By the process of gradual augmentation prema becomes sneha, mana, pranaya, raga, anuraga, bhaba, and mahabhaba.

A good analogy is furnished by the series of raw juice of sugarcane, molasses (gur), unrefined crystallised sugar (khanda), residual sugar, refined sugar (sarkara), sita michhari (white crystallised sugar), best crystallised sugar. These are varieties of the basic, i. e., permanent, principle (sthayibhaba) in the operations of the mellow liquid (Rasa) of the Service of Krishna. If the basic principle is conjoined with bibhaba, anubhaba, sattvika and byabhichari the operations of the mellow liquid of the Service of Krishna exhibit the most exquisite nectarine taste. Just as the treatment of curd with sugar, ghee, pepper and camphor produces a most tasty composition.

There are five varieties of rati corresponding to the different types of devotees. The five varieties of rati are shanta, dasya, sakhya, batsalya and madhura. The mellow liquid of the Service of Krishna also exhibits in actual operation corresponding differences. There are seven secondary rasas in addition to these principal five varieties. The secondary rasas are hasya, adbhuta, beera, karuna, raudra, bhayanaka and bibhatsa. The five principal rasas are permanent and constantly permeate the mind of the devotee. The seven secondary rasas are adventitious and make their appearance if there is cause.

Shanta bhaba is exemplied by the conduct of the nine Yogendras and also of Sanaka etc. Dasya bhaba is met with everywhere in numberless devotees. Among Sakhya bhaktas are Sreedam etc., and Bhima, Arjuna etc., at the royal court. The batsalya bhaktas include the parents and all superior relatives. In madhura rasa the principal bhaktas are the milk-maids in Braja and also the orders of the royal consorts and the Lakshmis whose great number baffle all calculation.

Then again Krishna-rati is two-fold viz., (1) adulterated with the perception of His Majesty and (2) unalloyed. In Gokula rati for Krishna is unalloyed being devoid of the consciousness of His Divine Majesty. In the two royal cities and in the Vaikunthas Divine Majesty predominates. Love exhibits shyness if the sense of Majesty becomes prominent. It is the distinctive characteristic of unalloyed rati that she does not mind the Majesty of Godhead, even if the same is manifested to her. In shanta and dasya rasas the realisation of Divine Majesty on rare occasions serves as a helpful excitant. In sakhya batsalya and madhura rasas it always acts as a deterrent. Krishna greeted the feet of Vasudeva and Devaki. The realisation of His Divine Majesty filled the minds of both with fear. Arjuna was terrified on beholding the Cosmic Form of Krishna. He craved His forgiveness for his arrogance in behaving as His chum. Rukmini was overwhelmed with fear when Krishna told her jocosely that He would leave her.

But unalloyed love knows nothing of Divine Majesty. If she meets with any exhibition of Majesty she simply ignores all relationship on her part with such Entity.

In shanta rasa there is found exclusive attachment to Krishna due to the realisation of one's spiritual nature. Krishna Himself says, 'Equanimity (sama) results from the inclination of constant and exclusive attachment to Me'. The specific effect of shanta rasa is noticeable in this that the shanta devotee discards every other longing except for Krishna. Hence no one can have real equanimity of disposition except the devotee of Krishna. The devotee of Krishna regards Paradise and Liberation as Hell. The two characteristics of the shanta bhakta is constant attachment to Krishna and renunciation of all other longing. These two characteristics permeate all the devotees of Krishna just as the quality of accommodating sound permeates all mundane elements.

It is the nature of the shanta bhakta to be devoid of any personal tie of love with Krishna. In him the realisation of Krishna as the Supremely Great (Param-Brahma) and the Supreme Soul (Param-Atman) is strong. In shanta bhkta there is only realisation of the spiritual nature of one's relationship with Krishna ; whereas in dasya rasa there is greater realisation of the Nature of Krishna as the Master possessing Full Divine Majesty. In dasya (service of master possessed of superior status) there is exuberance of the sense of Divinity as Possessor of controlling power and great dignity. The servitor by his humble ministration gives constant pleasure to Krishna. In dasya there are the two characteristics of shanta with the further addition of the specific activity of servitude. Therefore, dasya possesses this two-fold quality. In sakhya (friendship) there are the qualities of both shanta and dasya. But whereas in dasya the servitude is full of the sense of inferiority and high respect for Krishna, in sakhya it is characterised by full confidence. The chums of Krishna climb to His Shoulders, make Him climb theirs, engage in the sport of fighting with Him, serve Krishna and make Krishna serve them in His turn. Sakhya is marked by the preponderance of confidential relationship devoid of the sense of respect and of one's inferiority to Krishna. Hence sakhya rasa possesses the three-fold quality. There is a greater measure of the personal sentiment, a sense of regarding Krishna as one's own. It is this last trait that makes Godhead submit to sakhya rasa.

In batsalya there are found the quality of shanta, ministration of dasya, these activities bearing the designation of 'tending' (palana) in batsalya, the quality of sakhya consisting of the absence of restraint and sense of respect which are marked by the features of punishing and scolding due to further increase of the sentiment of kinship and the quality of regarding oneself as the guarding and Krishna as Ward. By this fourfold chracteristic batsalya rasa is as delicious as nectar. Krishna Himself is immersed in that nectarine bliss in the company of His devotee. The jnanins who are aware of the Nature of Krishna as Divinity possessed of controlling Power, declare that Krishna also possesses the Quality of subservience to His devotee.

In madhura rasa there are constant attachment to Krishna, extreme servitude, the absence of diffidence of the chum, the increased sentiment of Krishna as in tending one's child and finally serving Krishna by means of one's own body as Consort. Hence madhura rasa exhibits five distinct qualities. An analogy is supplied by the case of the five mundane elements. The quality of each element commencing with space (akasha) is carried to the next in the order of the series and added to its own distinctive quality till the last of the elements viz., the earth is found to possess five qualities i. e., the four distinctive qualities of the preceding four elements in addition to its own specific quality. In the same manner all the (bhavas) combine in in madhura. It is for this reason that its greater tastefulness makes it so exquisitely delicious.

The Lord said to Sree Rupa that He had given him the mere outline of bhakti rasa. He advised him to ponder over the amplification of the same in his mind. It is by the practice of constant meditation that Krishna manifests Himself to the heart. By the Grace of Krishna an ignorant person is enabled to realise the nature of the Ocean of rasa.

These principles have been elaborated by Sree Rupa in his immortal works.

Religious Propaganda among the Masses

THE question is closely connected with that of untouchability. The genesis of untouchability is to be sought in those texts of the Scriptures which categorically forbid certain definite courses of conduct and authoritatively enjoin an equally definite course. Those who do not choose to accept the better path by such conduct withdraw themselves from the society of those who accept the course of life enjoined by the Scriptures. There can be no love between those who agree to serve and those who refuse to serve Godhead.

The point requires to be elaborated in order to clear up misconceptions. There is such a thing as real aversion to Godhead. This aversion is identical with worldliness. Those who are averse to the service of Godhead try to dominate over their fellow beings. The words 'freedom', 'liberty', etc., as used in Political Science, mean extended scope for such domination. Every person wants to act as he himself likes. This is supposed to be the free state. But as a matter of fact no person can really have any desire except by the will of Godhead. Those who like to serve Godhead want to act in the way that is pleasing to Godhead. Those who do not like to serve Godhead want to act for pleasing themselves. This latter course is, however, opposed to the spiritual nature of the individual soul who is by constitution a component part of the Indivisible Divine Power and not the Integer Herself. It is also by such unnatural hankering that the individual is cast into this ignorant world where he is deluded into supposing that it is practicable for him to acquire domination over the mundane entities. Such attempt is, however, categorically forbiddeen by the Scripture as calculated to perpetuate the miseries of the conditioned state.

But the people of this world are really averse to the service of Godhead. They are also bound to remain so, as long as they choose to retain any hankering for the things of this world. For such a state of affairs the individual himself is responsible. It is not possible to free him from the bondage of the world till he is prepared of his own free choice to submit to the Rule of Godhead. He has alaways the option of a free choice between the two alternations of service of Godhead and slavery of his senses. The latter is the degraded and unnatural state. He can never be really Master in his own right.

By the unanimous vote of the people

ple of this world it is of course possible to pass a resolution against the above declarations of the Scriptures. But this will not, therefore, abolish the abject thraldom of the senses which is the lot of the people of this world and which is the root cause of all our unhappiness. The muchi can not be freed from the clutches of his senses by being made the President of the United States of America. It is not in the gift of the united people of the whole world to effect the deliverance of a single individual by the exercise of all so-called power which they imagine they possess.

Such being the real state of affairs it behoves all rational persons to command enough coolness of judgment not to be carried off their legs by the hollow blusterings of worldly people on the subject of religion. Demagogues have never been recognised as a particularly respectable specimen of humanity. But this opinion held by all thoughtful persons has not abolished the species. They will continue to thrive as long as there are ignorant people in this world who are unwilling to admit their own known ignorance. The demagogue plays on the hypocritical weakness of such people and make a cat's paw of the masses for securing name and fame for himself. Till the masses are sufficiently honest to be willing to do without the services of such demagogues the world will not be an ideal place for democracy.

The absolute Truth is not approachable by the resources of the conditioned state. The demagogue is never tired of proclaiming the infallibility of the mob. He knows full well, as every sane man does, that the mob is no more infallible than he himself. But being a slave of his passions he finds it convenient to forget this wholesome truth whenever it seems to stand between him and the object of his nefarious purposes. He sometimes pretends to be a violent admirer of the muchis as muchis in order to indulge his spite against those people who do not admit the elegibility or desire of any worldly person for the transcendental service of the Divinity.

In his sober movements he should know better and should try to make *amends by discovering the gross un*truths that he is led to utter in the moment of passion. If he does not do so he is proved to be only a confirmed hypocritical knave whose company should be shunned in sheer self-defence by all God-fearing persons.

The problem of untouchability will not be properly solved by any denial of the necessity and binding nature of Scriptural regulation in settling the true practices of the revealed Religions. Those who disbelieve in Revelation are free to follow any course they like so far as they themselves are concerned. They have no right to compel any God-fearing person to follow such a course to which he has very good objection. Persuasion is the only process to be followed in such matter. Godhead does not interfere with the free choice of single individual. Law made by man should not be allowed to encroach upon the domain of the spiritual concerns of the individual. Such an attempt would be the worst possible tyranny,

Those who follow the revealed Scriptures have a very good reason for their acceptance of such a course. Any person who is prepared to take the trouble of making himself acquainted with the contents of the theistic literatures of the world is bound to admit that their method is at least as rational as that of the atheists themselves. The door to the service of Godhead has been mercifully kept open to all sincere persons. All honest thinkers will be impressed with the sincerity of those who are prepared to differ in their opinion and conduct on principle from those who choose to violate the commands of the Scriptures.

Those who seek to establish universal harmony may experience real difficulty of conscience being unable to understand how it is to be practically accomplished if the differing Dispensations are not harmonised by some fuller revelation. This point is all-important and need not be overlooked. But such a view only seeks to invite a greater degree of attention to the subject of Religion than has hitherto been given to it by the thoughtful men of this world. The admission of the extremely complex nature of an issue is not equivalent to refusal to think about it or to an undervaluation of such thinking. Untouchability is capable of being abolished without encroaching upon the religious susceptibility of a single honest person. This is the course that should be followed by the Legislature if it has in view the real solution of the difficulty and not the widening of an avoidable split in the ranks of the professed followers of the eternal Religion.

The Varnasrama organisationis the basis of the Sanatan Dharma. This has been proved by the Acharyyas. It is not denied by any of the Scriptures of this country. The Varnasrama is the voluntary social organisation of those persons who realise the necessity of submitting to Scriptural regulation. There is undoubtedly difference of views in regard to the true principles oft he Varnasrama organisation. But that is not a very important point when it is a question of having or not having the institution at all. It is necessary to educate public opinion on the subject. The Harmonist has been trying to do so by offering the Teachings of Lord Chaitanya and His associates. They present a comprehensive synthesis of the whole position and also offer the possibility of the establishment of a real understanding with the creeds that are professed by the so-called non-Hindus. Such an understanding is of inestimable value if it is possible of attainment without giving up our loyalty to the Scriptures of this country. The career and Teachings of Lord Chaitanya offer the truly comprehensive and consequently enabling interpretation of revealed Religion in a definite and concrete form.

But the anti-untouchability propaganda among the masses need not be led by persons who do not possess the proper knowledge of the Religion. The followers of Lord Chaitanya are enjoined to act on the dictum that no one is fit to be a preacher of the eternal Religion who does not fully act up to the principles of the Scriptures. The Religion of the soul is not comprehensible to those who try to understand the same with the resources of their limited minds. But at the same time all who approach the practising teachers of the Religion in the spirit of submissive enquiry find themselves eligible to understand the same without any other qualification whatever.

If any individual is inclined to offer his submissive hearing to the words spoken by the sadhu he will be gradually enabled thereby to realise the necessity of making the unconditional surrender of himself to the feet of the bona fide spiritual guide for attaining the service of Godhead. The mercy of the Guru will then open his sealed eyes and he will know himself and his true relationship to Godhead and all entities. He will no longer be under the thraldom of his senses. In other words he will be really a free person. He will be the servant of Vishnu and the object of reverence of all persons.

It is immaterial as to whether a muchi (cobbler) after attainment of spiritual enlightenment continues his occupation. The worldly occupation is only improper when it is performed for one's own account. But when an occupation is performed for the sake of Krishna it loses all its impurity and becomes a spiritual affair. So long as the mortal coil persists it is necessary for every individual to have a worldly occupation which is provided for him by Krishna. The engagement of such a person in such occupation will not cause any harm either to himself or to others. on the contrary such activities of the bona fide devotee are not only pure in themselves but they purify all who chance to come in contact with them in a friendly way. The devotee is alone eligible for the worship of Godhead and no Temple should be shut against him. But a Brahmana born has no access to the Temple of Godhead if he has no inclination for His unconditional service. It is the Divinely authorised task of the Acharyya to restore purity of worship by putting the worship of the Temples in the hands of the pure devotees of Godhead. There is no worldly method for accomplishing this crying reform. It is not possible to accomplish it by the universal suffrage of benighted humanity, even if it happens to be their purpose at all.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya Vol 1

(in English)

By Prof. N. K. Sanyal, M. A. Royal Octavo pp. 800.

THE Career of Sree Krishna Chaitanya has been revealed by His associates and bona fide followers as that of the Divine Instructor in His Eternal Absolute Position. This should dispose of the worst fears of those who are justly apprehensive of an apotheotic endeavour for heaving up a mortal to the position of the Divinity.

The key to the Distinctive Personality of the Instructor is supplied by the Motive that leads the Object of all service to assume eternally the Role of His prime servitor in the Realm of the Absolute. Sree Krishna, the Predominating Absolute Person, did not know three things. He was unaware of the beauty of the offer of love made by His predominated counter-Whole, His premier serving mistress, Sree Radhika. He did not know the process by which Sree Radhika could experience the taste of His Mellowness. He was also unacquainted with His Own Mellow Quality as realised by Sree Radhika. All this was the distinctive nature of His position as the Predominating Absolute, the Autocratic Recipient of all service.

This supplies the Divine Motive for the Role of His Own premier sweetheart that is eternally filled by Sree Krishna in the appropriate sphere of the Realm of the Absolute. Sree Radhika is the premier servitor of Sree Krishna. She is the sole mistress of all His servitors by the unequalled beauty of her service. She allots the respective services of the milk-maids in her Realm of Goloka.

Sree Krishna in the Role of Sree Radhika requires a corresponding adjustment in the nature of the relationships of His servitors in keeping with the Servitorial Role of their Master. This does not duplicate either Himself or His servitors. The position of the Instructor does not make the Divine Autocrat any other than what He is. Only the Divine Instructor is not the Recipient but the Offerer of love. Who, therefore, offers love and to Whom in this case ? Does the same person both offer love and also accept His own love ? When Sree Krishna puts Himself in the position of His servitor His Personality as Master is not manifest ; but instead the observer sees a most Beautiful Figure similar to that of Sree Radhika engaged in seeking the service of Sree Krishna. The Beautiful Figure is the Outer Face of the Personality, Whose Inner Face is Sree Krishna Himself.

The associates and followers of Sree Krishna Chaitanya have been at infinite pains to establish by the conversing testimony of all the revealed Scriptures and the resources of reasoning, as far as the principle of limited human reasoning is at all applicable to the case, that the Divine Instructor is Distinct yet Identical with the Divine Master. The Two eternally co exist in the Realm of the Absolute which has two co-ordinate spheres.

This is in accordance with the Scriptural doctrine that the events of this mundane world are the perverted reflection of those of the Realm of the Absolute. The Appearance of Sree Krishna Chaitanya in this world is the Descent to the mundane plane of the Divine Instructor and His own sphere of the Absolute Realm and not the upheaval of any entity of this mundane atmosphere by the apotheotising process to the Position of Sree Krishna.

It is not merely for the purpose of relieving the distress of conditioned souls that Sree Krishna made His Appearance in this world in the Role of His Premier Devotee. The Real Significance of the Personality and Career of Sree Krishna Chaitanya is to be sought in their Eternal Position in the Absolute Realm. The Appearance of Sree Krishna Chaitanya in this world is an Episode flowing from the Eternal Divine Motive and fully incorporated in the same.

It is no doubt an important aspect of the function of the servitors of Sree Krishna Chaitanya to express the Distinctive Personality of the Etenal Divine Instructor to the enlightened cognition of conditioned souls in the process of their activities on the mundane plane.

The Career of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, which can be understood by means of those of His servitors, places before all conditioned souls the highest service of Sree Krishna in its substantive spiritual form. The Magnanimity of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the Divine Instructor can alone provide the people of this world with such visible manifestation of His Own Eternal Activities for the automatic realisation of their own eternal functions in the same in their highest perfection by the elucidatory conduct and relationships of His servitors.

The apotheotist would no doubt be only too willing to welcome any dogmatic assertion of transcendence in regard to the Career of the Supreme Instructor as lending some support to the justly condemned apotheotic attitude. The anti-apotheotists on the other hand would be as hastily disposed to reject the transcendental account as the undesirable revival of a bygone attempt for the deification of a national hero. The writer of the volume clearly dissociates himself from these two schools located at the opposite poles of empiric mentality.

The impersonalist school is right in its refusal to being convinced of the Divine character of any person merely by his miraculous performances. The apotheotists on the other hand rely solely on miracles for proving the so-called Divinity (?) of their deified heroes. The writer of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, in pursuance of the method of the transcendental narrators of the Career of the Divine Instructor, puts before his readers the realisations of the bona fide servitors of the Supreme Lord. This is the only proper application of the historical method to the transcendental subject.

We, therefore, invite all persons, who are not sectarians in the narrow sense, to give a little of their time to the serious consideration of the position taken up by narrators possessed of the spiritual vision of the Career of Sree Krishna Chaitanya which is set forth in this volume. The introductory chapters contain a comparative exposition of pure theism as the greatest bequest of history but whose full significance has remained practically unexploited by the historians both in this country as well as in Europe and America on account of their empiric bias. The transcendental epistemology enunciated in the Introductory Chapters has its source as well as application in the Narrative that follows.

The practical need for the careful perusal of the work by all persons lies in the fact that the attainment of the unalloyed service of the Absolute Person can alone effect the lasting cure of the evils of the conditioned state. The crying need of human life is not permanently satisfied by the achievements of politics or commerce. Human life offers every individual the most highly privileged position on this mundane plane only for the reason that it alone is capable of being utilized for the realisation of transcendental existence by such entity. This is also the only worthy goal of all humana ctivities.

The volume does not offer the idealistic speculations of any empiric scholar in the solitude of his study. It expounds the underlying principles of the present world-wide activities of a highly organised proselytising spiritual association run by the unpaid devoted services of hundreds of self-dedicated souls. The work presents the world with the actual experience of the writer as member of the society. This invests the volume with its truly living interest. The servitors of the Divine Instructor appear in this world in the likeness of ordinary mortals. The esoteric significance of their activities is never open to the view of those who choose to approach them by the resources of their short-sighted challenging dogmatism.

An idea of the nature and range of the topics dealt with in the volume will be obtained from the list of contents reproduced below.

Popular appreciation of the Scholarship of the Lord.

Chapter XVIII : Significance of Scholastic Triumphs pp. 542-563

The text of the Sloka of Keshab Bhatta impeached by Sree Chaitanya. The goddess of worldly learning always misleads her votaries. Sree Jiva Goswami not an empiric controversialist. Plight of Keshab Bhatta. Real remedy of real miseries. Cause and nature of the deliverance of Keshab Bhatta. Empiric knowledge does not give possession of power. Empiric knowledge superfluous on attainment of spiritual enlightenment. It is possible to know the truth. Non-transcendental knowledge subordinate to transcendental. The want to know identical with the want to serve the Absolute. How inclination to serve the Truth is produced. The shock of spiritual awakening. Sight of the Lord. Function of empiric learning. Submission to the Divine Person. Personality and Truth. Transcendental personality of the devotee. Keshab Bhatta not to be confounded with Keshab Kashmiri. 'Krama-deepika'. The distinctive characteristic of the servants of Sree Gaursundar. Why the achievements of this world pass away. Abuse of empiric knowledge aggravates aversion to Truth. Arrogance of the devotee of the Lord the perfection of humility.

Chapter XIX : Thakur Haridas before His meeting with Sree Gaursundar pp. 564-592

Thakur Haridas is the authorised Divine Agent for the promulgation of the chant of the Holy Name, the New Dispensation of the Age. Born in a Muhammadan family. Conversion of the harlot. Process of reclamation of sinners by the chant of the Name explained. It is not blind faith. Sensuousness obstructs faith. Conventional and real morality. 'Reformers' often misunderstand the Scriptures. The teaching of the Shastras is the function of Brahmanas. Novelty of the new worship resented by Hindus. Empiricism can not consistently object to the chant of the Name. The only function of the soul. Thakur Haridas is real Brahmana. Raghunath Das Goswami, then a boy, meets Thakur Haridas and receives his mercy. Thakur Haridas' exposition of the chant of the Name opposed by Gopal Chakravertty as contravening the principles of monistic interpretation of the Vedanta. Devotion, work and knowledge. Pessimism and optimism versus Absolutism. Truth is not impersonal which is the limiting point of all rational discussion. Submission to non-God. The Transcendental Sound. Grossness of the ideal of Liberationism. Enjoyment versus love. Children benefit by association with Sadhûs.

Chapter XX : Thakur Haridas before his meeting with Sree Gaursundar (Continued) pp. 593-622

Thakur Haridas shifts to Fulia and meets Advaita Acharyya. Chanting of the Name identical with the amorous loving devotion of Braja. The ten offences against the Name. Thakur Haridas' life at Fulia is altogether different from the practices of Prakrita Sahajias (Psilanthrophists). Does Thakur Haridas' creed provide for the needs of our worldly life, or should it be admired from a distance like Monism ? The real meaning of the Life of Sree Chaitanya can be realised by following the teachings of Thakur Haridas. Thakur Haridas same as Brahma. Chanting of the Name suits modern conditions. Realisation is progressive. How to avoid the clutches of the pseudo-Sadhu. The Kazi sets the Moslem Governor against Thakur Haridas. Thakur Haridas' advice to the prisoners. Does the chanter of the Name require the so-called 'necessaries' of life ? Thakur Haridas ordered by the Governor to be beaten to death. The form of the dialogue, used in transcendental narratives, should not be misunderstood. Principle of religious toleration liable to be misunderstood. Why the persecution of Thakur Haridas can not be defended. Immunity of Thakur Haridas from bodily pain and injury.

Chapter XXI : Thakur Haridas (Continued) pp. 623-642

Exhibition of Power by Thakur Haridas impresses his persecutors and secures him against further molestation. Thakur Haridas dances at the show of the snake-charmer. The Judgelling of the hypocrite Brahmana by the snake-charmer. Spiritual perturbation. The standing grievances of atheists. A Brahmana of Harinadi opposes the chanting of the Name with a loud voice. Name and Mantra.

Chapter XXII : Pilgrimage to Gaya and Initiation pp 643-666

Brahmana as sole custodian of the education of the people. The life, enjoined by the Scriptures on a Brahmana, is the probationary stage of spiritual enlightenment. The Lord sets out on pilgrimage to Gaya ostensibly for the purpose of performing the funeral rites of His departed father. The Lord visits Sree Madhusudan at Mandara. He drinks the feet-wash of Brahmanas. The Lord is the Servant of His servants. At Poonpoon. The sight of the foot-prints of Sree Gadadhar produces in the Lord all the perturbations of loving devotion and is the turning point of His Career. The sight of Hari's Feet produces the serving disposition irrespective of fitness. The ethical problem. Ethical necessity of Divine Grace. The real presence of the Feet of Sree Gadadhar at Gaya as Archa. The Lord meets Sree Isvara Puri on the Temple of the Holy Feet of Gadadhar. Meeting with Sree Guru. The Lord obtains the favour of Initiation (Diksha) from Sree Isvara Puri. The nature of unconditional surrender to the Guru.

CHAPTER XXIII :—His Initiation (Continued) pp. 667-688

The spiritual principle underlying ritualistic worship. Mentalist objections to ritual. Quest for the substantive spiritual function rendered possible by the grace of the bona fide teacher of the Truth. Objectionable form of association with evil. Funeral rituals. Misunderstandings regarding the ritual of diksha. Readiness to appreciate the transcendental point of view in India, a valuable asset for humanity. The relation of the Guru to his disciple. Mantra admits to the spiritual communion which is necessary for its fruition. Connection of the New Dispensation with the older communions. Speedy effects of the Mantra on Nimai Pandit. Nimai Pandit's changed Conduct. Miracles and transcendental events. Human Form of the Divinity.

CHAPTER XXIV :—His Initiation and After PP. 689-709

Method of service analogous to that of the mood of separation, alone available on the material plane. Mood of separation different from asceticism. Infinity of functions towards the Absolute. Cause of the Sorrowful Mood of Nimai Pandit. His search for Krishna as Sannyasin not to be mistaken for Salvationism. Sight of Krishna the fulfilment of the probationary stage and beginning of the real search. Archana and symbolical worship. Place of Mantra in Archana. Archana sanctioned by Godhead is fulfilled by the vision of the Divinity as He is. Quasi-spiritual activities involve neither attachment nor aversion to mundane entities but are full of spiritual interest. Archana and Vajana. Conduct prompted by the higher form of worship can not be understood by those who are not spiritually advanced. The Religion of the chant of the Name is supremely simple and profound. The personality of a Sadhu. Every one is naturally sincere. Insincerity a suicidal folly. The Absolute does not deceive any body. Physical cases obstruct spiritual living. Persistence of spiritual memory possible by the grace of the Sadhu. Service of the Sadhu possible only on the transcendental plane. Perfect openness of mind is necessary for not grossly misunderstanding the Activity of Sree Chaitanya after His Initiation, which is the subject of the next volume.

My Advice

(Editor's speech at the farewell-meeting held at Sree Gaudiya Math, Calcutta, on March 18, 1933, in honour of the preachers going out to England.)

Mr. President of the farewell-meeting,

You are a great well-wisher of Sree Gaudiya Math,—of this institution for the promulgation of the words of Sree Chaitanya. You have earned the grateful thanks of this Institution for accepting the chair at today's farewell-meeting which is an eloquent testimony of your great sympathy for the cause.

This day our minds are experiencing also the high prerogative of complete immersion in the ocean of gratitude by being reminded of the kindnesses of other well-wishers of our undertakings. I am unable not to offer first of all the very best praises, in lieu of their magnanimity full of goodness, to my very great friends Rai Sakhi Charan Bhaktivijaya and the landowner of Baliati, Srijukta Manomohan Rai Choudhury. Their kind help may be mentioned as being at the root of our present undertaking. Various arrangements have been promoted by Bhaktivijaya Prabhu in fostering the expansion and glory of Sree Chaitanya Math, the institution which is the source of our propaganda.

The full-blown flower of that bud of spiritual service may be said to constitute the first offering to this extension of the propaganda to countries outside India. I also consider it a timely performance to conceive and intimate in anticipation my thanks to those who may in the future follow in the footsteps of these first helpers of the world-wide promulgation of the Message of Sree Gaursundar.

The back-bone of our Maths, Mahamahopadeshaka Acharyyatrika Srimad Kunjabehari Vidyabhusan, Bhaktisastri and those numerous servitors of the Maths who are the propagators and helpers of his cementing methods with a single-hearted devotion to the cause, are the Body, Secondary Limbs, Weapons and Associates of Sree Gaursundar, being the bed-rock basis of the propaganda to all parts of the world. The Words of instruction of Sree Gaursundar are verily His Beautiful Body; the preachers of His Word through the Ages are His Secondary Limbs; the Teaching of Sree Gaursundar is His Weapon; and Sree Hari's own, established in the Word of Sree Chaitanya, are His Associates. Therefore, for the purpose of worshipping Sree Gaursundar by the only method viz., by worshipping the Gaudiyas of alloyed and unalloyed natures and their All, the Lord of the Gaudiyas, that I am submitting these few words of mine to the preachers who are about to proceed to countries beyond India.

We find the following great precepts (mahavakya) in the body of the Teaching that has been vouchsafed to us by the Supreme Master of our Masters. 'To chant constantly the discourse of Hari by being (1) extremely more humble than the blade of grass, (2) by being as forbearing as the tree, (3) by seeking no honour for oneself and (4) by offering due honour to all entities, is the highest natural function of the unalloyed individual soul (jeeva), The lotus feet of my Sree Guru attracted me to his service by his manifestation as the living embodiment of these four great precepts My friends will be in a position to attract all souls of the world to the foot-stool of the Real Truth by pursuing the same unfailing method.

The crest-jewel of the order of the sannyasins of the triple-staff, Srila Prabodhananda Saraswati Goswamipad, has taught the same process to those who assume the triple-staff of renunciation, in the following words. 'I say this by holding the straw between my teeth, by falling at your feet and uttering hundreds of the humblest entreaties, 'All ye good souls, by discarding everything from a distance, practise love to the Feet of Sree Chaitanya Who is so surpassingly Beautiful.' In pursuance of the foot-steps of all the former devotees I am making my submission to my friends for following the identical method of propaganda.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya Deva is the Supreme Teacher of all teachers of this world and the Ideal Possessor of Intelligence that is the highest of all. It should be our only duty to constantly chant those words regarding the cleansing of the mirror of the heart of which He speaks in His Eight Precepts (Shikshastakam), by following in His Foot-steps. We are only the bearers of the Transcendental Word. There is no scope for any arrogance or vanity of our own. We should always bear this in mind.

We shall never in any way hesitate to offer every honour and facility, for which they are eligible, to all persons of this world. We must pray to all for the boon of aptitude for the service of Krishna. We shall come across many persons in this world, possessing the endless variety of characters, disposed or hostile to the service of Krishna. But we should not slacken in our loving service of the Lord of our hearts by offering due honour to all persons. The instruction that is constantly recited to their own selves by the highest order of the denizens of Braja, and one which we should study closely, is this,—'Katyayani, Mahamaya, Great Yogini, Great Divine Power, Goddess, may thou be pleased to make the the Son of Nanda, the milk-man, my Husband. I make my prostrations to thee'.

'All glory to Soma, crescented with the Moon, lord of the Realm of Vrindavana, worshipped of Sanandana, Sanatana and Narada, ruler of the milkmen (of Braja), may thou be pleased to bestow on me unceasing, transcendental Love for the Lotus Feet of the Divine Amorous Couple of Braja'.

It will be our opportunity as we approach different persons in all parts of the world with the vendor's bag of the discourse of Hari, to see a good many sights, to hear much and to seek to derive much benefit from our experience. May we never forget that all entities of this world are condemned proteges of the Lotus Feet of Sree Guru for helping the expansion of His service. May we always remember that the experience of this world and all the highest excellences of mundane culture attain their true significance only if they are prepared to wait with the utmost eagerness on the particle of dust of the lotus feet of my Sree Guru and that otherwise they are merely the the mirage devised by the deluding potency for our ruin.

I wish to remind those friends of mine who are proceeding to the west for preaching the Words of Sree Chaitanya, the two precepts of my Master Sree Rupa that are written on the crown of the head of the Gaudiya.

'The constant endeavour for cultivating relationship with Krishna of a person who, being free from all mundane affinity, enjoys the entities of this world, having due regard to the propriety of each case, in pursuance of his purpose, is called the proper kind of renunciation.'

'The abnegation, by persons desirous of liberation, of entities that have an affinity with Hari, in consideration of their mundane nature, is termed renunciation possessing little real value.'

It is my request to my friends by giving due honour to all persons to follow in their preaching the ideal of Sree Sanatan Goswami Prabhu in his exposition of the aphorism of the Vedanta viz., 'cessation of mundane birth from (the transcendental) sound, cessation of further birth from sound,' under the section of 'result to be achieved,' to be found in such slokas as 'All glory to the Bliss of the Name of Murari...,' etc.

Those nations to whom you are going for the propagation of the chant of Hari are mounted on the summit of proficiency in all affairs of this world. They are practised in the exercise of of their rational judgment, are endowed with the quality of good manners and are superior and glorious in many respects. Therefore, we should maintain our hope unshaken that they will prove to be the worthiest recipients of the heard transcendental voice if we unlock to them the gates of the natural exhibition of abiding argument and enduring judgment. If we unpack our baggage of the genuine discourse of Hari by relying on the quality of forbearance it will cartainly receive the garland of welcome of the hearts of nations gifted with keen intelligence.

We have not been actuated by any attempt of rivalry or hostility in undertaking this propaganda. This should always be borne in mind. We should call at the door of each and every seeker of the Truth, conveying on our heads the baggage of the Real Truth. It is no business of ours to be elated or discouraged by the praise or neglect of any person. We must be constantly alive to the duty of enhancing the Pleasure of our Master by serving Him with perfect sincerity.

We must not look at the world by being weighed down with the mentality that is oppressed with the sense of deficiency or otherwise by the poverty or otherwise of the display of wordly erudition, rank, etc. by any particular person. This is the state of forgetfulness of our real selves. All persons of this world are really superior to us in every way as far as this world is concerned. All those matters are not any commodities that are fit to be coveted by us. We are merely beggars with the triple-staff of renunciation devoted to the chanting of the words of Sree Chaitanya. We have no more nor any higher desirable object than the pleasure of serving Sree Hari, Guru and the Vaishnavas.

We are not the operators of the instrument, but only the instruments. We must always bear this in mind. The triple-staff Bhikshus are the living mridangas (clay drums) of Sree Chaitanya. We must constantly give forth our music beneath the lotus feet of Sree Guru. We should practise the function of the peripatetic preacher (paribrajaka) of carrying aloft the victorious banner of the Commands of Divine Sree Gaursundar by constant submission to Sree Guru and the Vaishnavas, fixing our eye on the polar star of the heard transcendental voice.

We must always bear in mind that we have been initiated in the vow of the peripatetic preacher for the sole purpose of promulgating the Heart's Desire of Sree Guru and Gauranga. If we are constantly inspired with the vow of discoursing the Truth under the guidance of the lotus feet of Sree Guru, no vain hankering for travelling, nor any veiled form of desire other than the chanting of Hari will, ever strike their terrors into our hearts.

The vowed service of the Name, the Transcendental Abode and the Desire of Sree Gaursundar, is our only eternal function. We are bhikshus of the triple-staff. The in-gathering of the smallest alms, even such asare gathered by the bees, is our only means for serving the manifestation of the Manifestive Divine Form of Sree Chaitanya Math all over the world. We are neither enjoyers nor abnegators of mundane entities. We recognise as our highest desideratum the desire for carrying the shoes of the transcendental order of the Paramahansas.

It will be our only duty by being infinitely humbler than the humble blade of grass to proclaim to all the people that complete reliance on the Transcendental Absolute Truth is by far the highest form of freedom and one that is infinitely superior to the partial independent mastery over the distorted reflected entity in the shape of this mundane world. By holding the straw between our teeth in supplication we shall carry aloft the banner of that real freedom to all persons. We should be constantly engaged in the chanting of Sree Hari by adopting as our fundamental enlightening formula the voice of the path of submission endorsed by Sree Rupa which tells us to cherish the faith that He will protect us.

In conclusion let me tell you, Sriman Sambidananda, who are an object of our affection, that from the very first appearance of your faculty of knowledge, by virtue of being brought up by your most worthy elder brother, you have had the opportunity of listening to the tidings of the highest good all the time that you have been receiving your secular education. Recently, having felt the necessity for having still greater education, you are following the preachers of the Math for helping them in their activities. May you acquire your secular education by leading a life that is conducive to the highest good and may you always have your mind fixed on the thought that you might be in a position in the future to employ your learning in serving the Teaching of Sree Chaitanya Deva.

The Anniversary of the Advent of the Supreme Lord, March 12 :—The Celebrations included as their principal features religious discourses by the sannyasi Maharajas and the Editor all through the day ; observance of fast by all the assembled pilgrims ; the adjourned meeting of Sree Nabadwipdham Pracharini Sabha in the Home of the Lord, Sree Yogapeetha ; exposition of the narrative of the Advent in the evening ; holding of the different examinations of Sree Paravidyapeetha. The shrines were visited all through the day and night by very large crowds of the people who came for the purpose from considerable distances. There was no untoward accident. The number of persons who received the Name from the Editor was unusually large this year. A great interest was evinced by all persons in the impending departure of some of the preachers of the Mission to England.

Preachers of the Mission proceeding to England :—A very largely attended public meeting was held in the spacious Lecture Hall of Sree Gaudiya Math on March 18 under the presidency of Srijut Jatindra Nath Basu M. A., M. L. C., for according a hearty send-off to the preachers of the Mission proceeding to England for propagating the Message of the Supreme Lord.

Mahopadesaka Srimad Aprakrita Bhaktisaranga Goswami in welcoming the President on behalf of Sree Viswa-Vaishnava-Raj Sabha referred to the words spoken by the President on a former occasion that a day might come when the people of the West would appreciate the Message of Sree Chaitanya. Srijukta Haripada Vidyaratna M. A., B. L. sang the opening song composed by Srimad Bharati Maharaj for the occasion.

The Editor explained in a short speech the purpose that prompted him to sanction the extension of the propaganda to Europe. The English translation of the speech, which was in Bengali and which was circulated as a printed pamphlet, is given in another page.

Mahamahopadesaka Sripad Sundarananda Vidyavinode read the farewell-address in Bengali on behalf of the devotees of the Gaudiya Math and Pandit Yadunandan Das Adhikari B. A , read the address in English presented by the Gaudiya Math. Several other addresses were also read. The English address has been published in the March issue of this Journal.

The unique character of the function moved some of the gentlemen present to expressions of sympathy. Dr. Panchanan Neogi, Professor of the Calcutta University, said that it was for the first time that the pure Vaishnava thought was going to be placed before the peoples of the West by a proper agency. The opinion of Sankara has hitherto been preached by Indians in Europe and America as the religion of India. Srijukta Kshitish Chandra Chakravarty thought that it was a very happy idea to send out a party of preachers of unalloyed Theism for confronting the rising tide of materialism, that threatens to engulf the whole of Europe, with the spiritual resources of this country.

Their Holinesses Tridandi Swamis Srimad Teertha and Bon Maharajas and Sriman Sambidananda, who is accompanying Their Highnesses, replied suitably to the addresses. The speech of Srimad Teertha Maharaj has been published in the previous issue of the Journal. His Holiness Srimad Bon Maharaj referred to the extended Theism of Srimad Bhagabatam which took cognisance of the loving service of the Absolute by the methods of the closest intimacy, as Chums, Parents and Consorts, and prayed for the blessing of Sree Guru and the Vaishnavas for strength to deliver the Message of the Supreme Lord embodying the highest form of spiritual Service

The President in his address dwelt on his personal experience of the temper of the western people to whom the mentality of this country was a standing puzzle. But although it was a very difficult thing to persuade them to an appreciation of the point of view of the Scriptures, he had no doubt that the blessing of the Acharyya will enable the preachers to achieve a reasonable measure of success and gain the ears of the responsible leaders of thought of those countries. He concluded His interesting speech by offering a number of practical suggestions for avoiding being misunderstood by the people of those countries.

Mahamahopadesaka Sripad Ananta Vesudeva Paravidyabhusan B. A. sang the concluding song which brought the historic function to a successful conclusion.

Gaudiya Mission to the West

THE word 'atman' is not properly rendered by the term 'soul,' its current English equivalent. The word 'soul' denotes an indewelling entity. 'Atman' means 'the entity who naturally tends to expand.' The so-called expansive activities of the physical body and mind serve only to forge shackles for the 'atman' who eternally craves for unlimited progressive expansion. Material progress effected by physical and mental processes is a great misnomer. It multiplies the checks to individual and group initiative with the rapidity of geometrical progression. It offers the Tantalus' cup to the parched lips of the conditioned soul in order to mock his malady by constantly making and breaking its promise for quenching his unnatural and unappeasable thirst.

One who realises the true nature of his self or 'atman' is automatically freed from the otherwise unquenchable hankerings of the physical body and mind. The temptations to which the mind and flesh are prone are verily the wil-o-the-wisps that lead their infatuated victim to increasing degradation and endless misery. The 'atman' is perfectly free from the wants of the physical body and mind and possesses the free initiative for the progressive realisation of the ever-expanding service of the Absolute.

The enjoying mood seeks to dominate over the entities of this world. The serving mood seeks to be dominated by the entities of the spiritual plane. If the entities of this world are dominated by one of them it is possible for them to practise concerted activities. The offer of service by the many thus requires a single recipient for its fulfilment and progressive exercise. This condition is sought to be attained in this world by setting up one of the entities as master over the rest of a number of them. A kind of a peace is established by unconditional submission to this improvised single supreme authority. But the world's arrangement is radically unsatisfactory in as much as no entity of this world possesses the requisite subjective nature of the true master. The irrepressible desire for domination that is found to actuate all persons in this world cannot welcome the prospect of unconditional submission even as a counsel of expediency. Such artificial arrangements are accordingly foredoomed to failure and have proved a source of even greater and deeper troubles than what they seek to prevent.

It is never possible to achieve internal harmony by an individual or a group in opposition to the nature of the entities themselves. The hankering for domination that impels the conditioned soul on the course of his worldly activities is not conducive to the interests of the 'atman' representing the principle of unhampered expansion. Such hankering is the perverted seeming substitute of the true instinct. The superimposition of this abnormal aptitude on the 'atman' is effected by his incarceration in the double prison of the physical and mental bodies. These outer cases produce and keep up the delusion that they are a help and not the hindrances to the imprisoned soul's free and expanding activities. The wicked desire for domination over the entities of this world is the concomitance of this harmful subserviency of the soul to the dictates of his physical and mental envelopes.

The West is proud of its civilization. It is anxious for conferring the boon of its advanced civilization on the nations of the world. But it is not yet altogether confident of the success of such laudable mission. It has been always distrustful of the capacity of the nations for assimilating the best of the proffered civilization. But is western civilization itself a source of unmixed satisfaction to those nations who are its proud original possessors ? They, indeed, possess superior material force. They are disposed to think that their superiority in brute force is evidence of their superior spiritual condition. The only answer to this terrible self-deception is being supplied by the recent never-ending crises of the affairs of the world that have been the outcome of their short-sightedness handling by the self-conceited dominating temperament engendered in all modern peoples by their utter neglect of the spiritual issue.

Modern civilization, despite its physical and mental achievements, must appear to be terribly shallow and unsatisfactory in the estimation of those thoughtful persons who are not prepared to be contented with a record of showy results that do not contribute in any way towards the proper solution of the fundamental problems of human life. It is not sufficient to be able to decorate the physical body or to be able to manipulate the forces of physical Nature for the purposes of the physical body. Nor is it yet the perfection of human activity to be able to train the mind for the exclusive purpose of achieving these ephemeral results that have no reference to the needs of our supermental position.

Sree Krishna Chaitanya, acting the role of a truly rational person, refused to be infatuated by the achievements of the body and mind which have a reference only to limited and temporary interests. He taught that we would be automatically relieved of all troubles if we apply our minds and bodies to the achievement of really permanent interests. These interests cannot be the interests either of the body, or of the mind. The body and mind have a limited nature. They have very great affinity for this mundane plane. They have also a potential affinity for the soul. It should be the business of the soul to employ the body and mind in such a way that they might not lead him into limited concerns by their naturally strong affinity for the limited. The soul has to be on his guard against being betrayed by the mundane affinities of his twin casings. He can avoid being so deceived if he chooses to act for himself. Physical and mental efforts require to be directed, in the interests of the soul, on the lines of their latent spiritual affinity. The civilization of this world would be thereby provided with its proper scope for the unhampered expansion.

But for this purpose it would be necessary for individuals and groups to attain the definite spiritual vision. In other words, the soul must be roused to take an active interest in the affairs of the body and mind. The relation of the 'atman' to the mind and body in his present conditioned state will have to be reversed. The soul must be made conscious of his true nature. Philosophers and scientists have not hesitated, in theory at any rate, to deny the very existence of the 'atman' as the entity possessing natural authority over the body and mind. As the soul is naturally interested for putting the higher and permanent interests above all temporary concerns he should pay more attention to those teachers who are in a position to enlighten him in regard to them, by ignoring the reactionary opposition of confirmed votaries of our lower nature.

Sree Viswa-Vaishnava-Raj Sabha is sending out to the West a party of preachers for carrying the Message of Sree Krishna Chaitanya to those civilised peoples. The Message tells us that the Scriptures offer the definite and detailed information about the nature and function of our inner selves and also how our 'atman' may attain the condition of his functional activity. The preachers that are being sent to carry this Message to the Western peoples are devoid of all worldly ambition. They have offered themselves voluntarily for lifelong practical schooling under the unconditional direction of those whom they recognise as being possessed of dispositions similar to their own. They are going to the West for seeking such persons as part and parcel of their schooling.

Those who are habituated to set all stores by the limited concerns of this world might hesitate to appreciate the motive that has led the Sabha to extend their preaching activities to the peoples of the West who are admittedly superior to the inhabitants of this country in every respect. They may contend that the people of this country have everything to learn from and nothing to teach those more civilized peoples. The preachers who have been selected for carrying the Message of Sree Krishna Chaitanya to the civilized peoples of the West, are well-known to the theistically inclined public of this country as representing by their words and conduct the standard required of the bona fide preacher by the scriptures. Any person who fully offers himself to the service of the Absolute is fit to carry His Message irrespective of his worldly merits or demerits. This is so because no bona fide servant of the Absolute can have any ambition of setting up as an instructor on his own account. He is simply the bearer of the Message of His Divine Master. He is fully aware that the Master has the Power of making His Own Message heard through His unworthy agent if He is so willing and that nothing else can enable the proper delivery and sympathetic reception of the Divine Message.

The call to send out the preachers to the West is justifiable by every higher consideration. There can be no limiting conditions to the activities of the real servant of Krishna. The accepted servant of Krishna is not accountable to any other authority save and except the authority of the bona fide servants of the Supreme Master. The bona fide preachers of the Word of God are guided by the Word Himself Whom they are permitted to serve. The Word is identical with Krishna, the Absolute Autocrat, and He brooks no rival.

Public opinion or any other limited mundane interest is not the source of the mandate of the preachers of the Word of God. The Word is the only Master to be served by all entities including public opinion. The service of the Word is attainable by the Causeless Grace of the Word Himself. Those, therefore, who are unduly diffident of the success of the Gaudiya Mission to the West, may take heart from the thought that the preachers are going out on the service of the Most High for delivering the Message of their Master to His servants. They are going to the West for serving the servants of Krishna. They never pose as masters and instructors. They are tried servants of the Absolute in word and deed and they will be enabled to discharge their high duty by the Grace of their Master Whom they are accustomed to serve with a sigleness of purpose by abstaining from all activities on their own account.

Sree Vyasa Puja Response

(ii)

(Substance of the speech of Editor in reply to printed addresses presented to him on 19-2-1933)

'OBEISANCE to Sree Guru Who opened my eyes sealed with the gloom of ignorance by means of the spike of the collyrium of knowledge'.

I have nothing to say of my own. The lotus feet of my Guru have employed me for the purpose of conveying to the world those words whom he has revealed to me in his office of bearer of the Message of the Absolute. But I am altogether unworthy. I have no linguistic attainment. The absence of capacity for all matters is my possession. The Mercy of Godhead alone may protect such an unworthy person.

If I had any previously acquired possessions in the shape of good works I might have advanced my legitimate claims to the same. But as a matter of fact I am wothless in every way. Sree Krishna Chaitanya Deva has instructed me to be humbler than the blade of grass which is trodden by cows, asses, and other animals. He has told me to be lower than the most insignificant blade of grass. But I have not succeeded in being so.

Although as a matter of fact I am really less than the grass, although I have had the further privilege of hearing from the lips of my former Guru that I am more impious than Jagai and Madhai, lower than the lowest worms bred in offal, am the cause of lessening the virtues of those who chance to hear my name and of making one who takes my name commit an act of impiety; yet an over-weening vanity has taken possession of me. I fail to find that the whole world is engaged in the service of Vishnu. Many a person of this world, on noticing my aggressive wickedness, strive to put down the same. On many occasions I misappropriate a good deal of their useful time. I have so little command over the languages of mankind that it takes me a long time to make them understand a single topic of mine. Thus I have to talk constantly and a good deal.

At times the thought strikes me that all persons are serving Hari, only I myself am left out. At other times I wonder whether the world abounds with extremely cruel persons who refuse to emply me in the service of Hari by noticing my weaknesses. Perchance there be many persons for tending my diseased body and mind. But there are very few persons who are prepared to help me in serving Hari. Fiftynine years of my life have passed away. Numberless persons have blessed me, desiring that I may live my full sixty summers in this world. But I have not been able to serve Hari. If I would have served Hari many persons of this world would have been in a position to reciprocate and might have thereby helped me to be happy. I have failed to be humbler than the blade of grass and more forbearing than the tree. I am not able to chant the name of Hari twentyfour hours out of the twentyfour. I have to waste a good deal of time for resting myself. I often try to practise the service of Hari, but in lieu of the service of Hari the active desire for the enjoyment of the things of this world engrosses me. I am busied with the thought that the world is missing the service of Hari. But I have no attention to devote to the fact that I myself have missed altogether the service of Hari. It is just like the needle finding fault with the sieve. This is the result of my being engrossed with entities other than Hari. My sad condition has accrued from the fact that I do not exercise my mind in every way on the subject of the service of Hari. May you take warning from my sad lot never to swerve from your devotion to discourses of the service of Hari.

Many lines of thought are current in this world. Sreemat Bhagabat declares that the Substantive Reality, Who is Indivisible Knowledge, is designated by the terms Brahman (the Great Nourishing Principle), Paramatma (the Supreme Soul) and Bhagaban (Possessor of all poteney). The Entity Himself is Unitary Knowledge. In Indivisible Knowledge there are no dividing differences, but there is variegatedness. The Substantive Principle is One, but is being realised from three different points of view. The Entity of Non-bifurcate Knowledge does not produce different impressions of Himself. If any one imagines the Entity of the Brahman as being different from the Possessor of all potency, or as a limited entity, such speculation will prevent the realisation of the Entity of Indivisible Knowledge. There are many persons who are busy to reduce the Entity of Brahman to a principle devoid of all distinctive features. They are anxious to saddle the Brahman with restrictive speculations having their reference to the unwholesomeness of the limited concrete.

The Geeta has the following, 'Solid, liquid, fire, air, space, mind, intelligence, ego,—these are My eight-fold mundane Potency. Know that there is My Transcendental Potency Who is quite different from these. The individual soul is of the essence of the Transcendental Potency Who upholds this mundane world'.

Here on this mundane plane we are attending to speculations regarding animate and inanimate entities. We designate inanimate entities as non-sentient or material. The thought, that in this world we are eligible for lording it over an entity that is void of animation, having a strong hold on us, an innate perverse speculative tendency to the effect that the word Brahman also is capable of being reduced to the same category, engulfs us in the depths of sure annihilation with the fell virulence of the tubercular disease. It is only when we are in the clutches of such deadly speculation that we are goaded thereby to postulate a Brahman independently of any reference of identity with Bhagaban and Paramatma. But the Brahman is such by His greatness and Nourishing Function. 'The Entity Who is Greatest of all' on a comparative estimation is denoted by the conception represented by the word Brahman. The term Brahman involves the elimination of all erroneous impressions regarding the Entity. The thought that what is left out by the conception of the Brahman is to be retained in the conception of the Paramatma leads to the postulation of All-pervasiveness (Bhuma). The line of thought of those who conclude the world to be unreal by depending on realistic speculation derived from the gross external environment, has in view only the consideration of the outcome of our present limited perceptual experiences.

We are debarred from the view of the Substantive Entity. We are spectators of the transformation of the Potency of the Substantive Entity. We are receiving the opposite impression, due to the functioning of time. One particular thought suffers transformation by the operation of other speculative currents. Whatever is sought to be circumscribed within the limits of conception, tends to lose its entity. The process of incarceration within the four-walls of limited speculation has engendered numerous diverse mentalities in man. The following episode having reference to the perverted mentality that has manifested itself by reason of the continued prevalence of the complementary desires for enjoyment and abnegation of material entities, is to be found in Srimat Bhagabatam,—"(Sree Vyasadeva) found in his pure mind, completely concentrated by the process of devotion, the Plenary Person and also Maya (the deluding Potency), the latter in a position of condemned dependance on Him, by whom (Maya) completely infatuated the individual soul, although transcendental, imagines himself to be constituted of the triple mundane quality and undergoes the unwholesome consequences of mundane activities in the state of such delusion. He saw that complete subsidence of all these evils is brought about by the realised spiritual service of the Transcendent. The great sage, thereupon, penned Srimat Bhagabatam in which he recorded his realisations of pure theism which had been unknown to man before and by listening to which with submissive attention the hearer is sure to experience the awakening of the aptitude of the service of the Supreme Person Sree Krishna resulting in the cessation of all sorrow, infatuation and fear.

Those who are averse to the service of Sree Krishna are liable to be overpowered with sorrow which is caused by one's addiction to entities other than Krishna. We are victimised by sorrow, delusion and fear. Godhead is not an entity to be enjoyed. So long as this fact is not perceived there is no realisation of the nature of transcendental service (bhakti). Every form of the so-called service of this mundane world is contemptible. If we engage in the service of the entities of this material world we shall be spat upon by the abnegators of worldly enjoyment. If we serve dogs we are dubbed 'bhangis'. Those who serve horses are called 'grooms' by way of contempt. Those who give their services to skins are 'chamars'. By serving in this manner the particular mundane entities, we incur the disapprobation of others. This misfortune has befallen us by reason of being adepts in the knowledge of little entities in default of the knowledge of the Brahman. But Godhead is supremely Merciful. For our sake He is pleased to cause the descent of the tidings of the realms of the fourth to infinite dimensions even to this poor world of three dimensions.

By adopting the thought of Bodhayana Rishi, Acharyya Lakshmandesika applied himself to the promulgation of his teachings regarding the spiritual and material worlds and their Divine Regulator (Iswara). But the Lord of the spiritual is also Lord of the inanimate. One of His potencies displays the characteristic of eternally uneclipsed cognition. Another potency offers the face of eclipsed cognition. It is this latter which prevents us from attaining the proper, i. e., undivided, view of the Entity Himself.

The Divine Entity is Transcendent. He is located above the scope of all knowledge derived through the physical senses. That Entity alone is styled 'Divine' Who is not limited within the scope of the senses of man. That which is liable to fall a victim to the clutches of human senses is the idol, no matter whether it has the abstract or the concrete form. Such entity is a mere concoction. If we get rid of a certain measure of foolishness the whole of our ignorance is not immediately dispelled. The conception of the Brahman that is obtained by the process of differentiation from the conceptions of the entities of the mundane world, is a negative entity. It is a proper procedure to seek to eliminate the unwholesomeness of matter. But this is not the whole affair. It is certainly improper to maintain that the transcendental is material. But neither need we suppose that the Absolute is the consequence of the subsidence of mundane relativity. What we require is substantive declaration and not mere negative speculation. The Words of Sreeman Mahaprabhu, of Srimad Bhagabatam, offer this Absolute Positivism and not the conditional positivism of Auguste Comte.

The mundane world is the function of a particular potency of Godhead. That potency is located in His external body. When our brains are stupefied by the working of the potency belonging to the external body of the Divinity we are apt to think that we might be benefited by the postulation of a theory of Divine Descent by the exercise of our animal impulses through the processes of anthropomorphism or zoomorphism. If we choose to imagine any inanimate entity or any man to be Godhead we would be put to difficulty.

It is necessary to engage ourselves in the quest of the Transcendental Entity. He is by no means any lump of flesh which is constituted of matter.

Gaudiya Society

A short but in every way most remarkable article bearing the above name has been published in the Gaudiya of April 15. The article is from the pen of Mahamahopadeshak Pandit Srijukta Ananta Vasudev Para-Vidyabhusan B. A. The present discourse is suggested by and based on the said article.

The Hindu society is organised on a professed religious basis. This is anomalous to modern thinkers. In no modern country society is without some sort of representative arrangement for regulating itself as it likes. No modern society would submit to be regulated by an unchangeable code that had its origin and application in ancient times. Modern society is also ruled more by tacit conventions and not by any rigid codes. If the social convention is not observed by an individual he suffers from social boycott which is, however, not enforcible by any authority. But social opinion in matters of etiquette and morals has nevertheless a tremendous and tangible effect on the stubborn recalcitrant. Social opinion has nothing to do with the doctrines of religion, nor is it enforced directly or indirectly by any individual or group possessing a superior religious status. In India and most Eastern countries society is more or less under the control of classes that ultimately derive their powers from religious sanction. There are elaborate codes, which are as unchangeable and as authoritative as any doctrine of religion, for regulating the minutiæ of social and individual life and often in a manner that is not at all applicable to modern conditions.

The Hindus possess a great affection for their social organisation which they identify with the Varnashrama system of the scriptures. The term Varnashrama itself is variously explained. The more orthodox explanation is as follows. 'Varna' means literally 'colour, quality or disposition.' 'Ashrama' means, in this case, 'stage of life.' The Varnashrama system refers to classification of society on the bases of 'disposition' and 'stage of life.' The dispositions permissible within the system are four, viz., (1) that of the Brahmana, (2) that of the Kshatriya, (3) that of the Vaisya and (4) that of the Sudra. They may be rendered as (1) intellectual, (2) political, (3) industrial and (4) servitorial dispositions respectively. The 'stages' are also four, viz., (1) that of the *Brahmachari*n, (2) that of the Grihastha, (3) that of the Banaprastha and (4) that of the Yati. These correspond to (1) student life dedicated to the service of Godhead, from 8th to the 36th year, (2) house-holder or married life up to the 50th year, (3) life after renunciation of the world, dedicated to the service of Godhead, outside the family, and (4) life as a sannyasin or peripatetic teacher of religion without worldly ties. None but a Brahmana can be a teacher of religion.

This classification of society according to disposition and stage of life is supposed to be the precursor of the caste system of the present day. The caste system divides Hindus into a very large number of hereditary groups bearing a confusing variety of designations. The connecting link between Varnashrama and caste, which latter is based on the principle of heredity and exclusiveness in matters of social intercourse, is supplied by the words Brahmana and Sudra which occur in both systems. In the Varnashrama system the Sudra has no access to the scriptures either as student or teacher. He must be a dependent on a member of the three higher Varnas. But as classification into Varna and Ashrama was by individual disposition and stage of life and not by birth, no one was eligible for the higher grades of social life by the mere fact of high birth. The status of a woman was that of her parents, and, after marriage, of her husband.

In regard to the method of recruitment caste Hindus are under the impression, and this is the present practice in the caste system, that the Varna of a person was always determined by that of his parents. This would make 'disposition' identical with 'heredity'. Given that the life of every individual member of a society is strictly regulated, birth carries a very definite cultural possibility. The life led by a Brahmana is distinctively on a very high level and different from those that are obligatory on the other sections. Would it be quite unreasonable under these circumstances to show a decisive preference to the children of Brahmana parents in settling the Varna of a new-born? In the codes great importance is attached to the purity of seminal descent.

But the Varnashrama system was nevertheless not an arrangement of the type of the castes. The specific disposition of the individual was always admitted as the real test of Varna. Birth in a higher grade was only a presumptive evidence of the presence of the corresponding disposition. But recruitment was distinctly of the individual and by the test of disposition alone. Even Manu, who is the favourite authority of caste Hindus, is quite explicit on this point. He says that by birth every one is a Sudra. It is after and in consequence of the samskara of upanayana or admission to spiritual pupilage that a boy obtains the status of the twice-born. That very word 'twice-born' shows that the first birth, which is common to all, is not the cause of the status.

Recruitment to the higher grade, i. e., to the status of the twice-born, was effected by the method of the samskara of upanayana or admission to spiritual pupilage. What was the condition to be fulfilled for such admission? There are many texts, and not a single text that contradicts them, that the condition to be fulfilled was that of disposition. Those who possessed a natural leaning for the truth, were alone judged eligible for the study of the Scriptures (the Veda).

But all those who were admitted to the study of the scriptures were not Brahmanas. The purely intellectual section of these pupils alone was given the status of Brahmanas. Those among the students who devoted themselves exclusively to the quest of the Absolute Truth were the Brahmanas. Those who showed also an aptitude for politics were Kshatriyas. Those who possessed over and above their spiritual taste a natural aptitude for industrial pursuits were drafted as Vaishyas. All these three sections of the twice-born, however, had this in common that they possessed genuine preference for the Absolute Truth. Those who did not show such natural preference for the Absolute Truth were regarded as really insincere and disloyal and were not allowed to have an independent status within the society. They were admitted into the Varnashrama society on one condition, viz., that they must submit to render personal service to the members of the three higher groups. On this condition alone the insincere person was permitted to be the lowest member of the society. Thus was formed the class of Sudras. If an insincere person refused to place himself under this regulation, he was not allowed to be a member of the Varnashrama society. He was treated as an alien. Such persons might be either simply outside the pale of society (antyaja), or might possess a positive repugnance to the Varnashrama system (mlechcha).

A person admitted to the status of the twice-born was not free to conduct himself as he liked. If a Brahmana did not lead the fully regulated life of a Brahmana as laid down in the codes he was liable to be degraded to the status of a Sudra, even during his life-time, along with his children. Conversely the status of a person could be improved, and would be improved on principle, if he developed decided eligibility for the higher life. Even a Sudra could be raised to the highest status of a Brahmana by the application of this principle. Manu disowns Brahmanas who are Brahmanas only by the possession of their sacrificial thread. This shows that the hereditary principle was gaining ground, from a very early period, against the better judgment of the people. As a matter of fact heredity must have always been a very strong consideration in practice. It tended to become more and more the only consideration both in practice and theory. As soon as heredity was established as the only test of recruitment to the status of the twice-born the inducement for living up to the requirements of the higher status was necessarily weakened and gradually eliminated. The arrangement thereby degenerated into a kind of caste system. But the caste system is nevertheless not the result of the mere degeneracy of the Varnashrama organisation.

There must have been a violent disturbance and subsequent regrouping of society on new principles unknown to the Varnashrama society, by persons who might have been influenced by hazy ideas of the by-gone days. Hereditary Brahmanas, in reconstructing society from heterogeneous groups with barbarous manners and customs after a period of social anarchy, fashioned the caste sysetm for meeting the new requirements of the nation. It is to this Age that the origin of the earliest of the current Smarta codes should be referred. These facts may also be put as follows in the vocabulary of the Puranas.

Brahma is the first ancestor of man and of all entities. The descendants of Brahma are Brahmanas. These descendants are of two orders, viz., (1) his seminal posterity and (2) his spiritual posterity. The Rishis prided themselves on seminal descent from Brahma. They split up into the groups of Kshatriya, Vaishya, Sudra, Antyaja, Mlechcha, etc., according to differences of qualities and secular occupation. The spiritual descendants of Brahma, instead of designating themselves by seminal descent from any particular Rishi-ancestor, offer to be classed by the test of individual disposition evidenced by the possession of the requisite quality and by vocational aptitude.

Gaudiya or Madhva Gaudiya society is the community of the spiritual descendants of Brahma. Gaudiya society is regulated by Sree Haribhakti-vilas in consonance with Brahma-Vidya or transcendental knowledge, with the proviso that if the secular sciences devote themselves to the quest of the transcendent they thereby cease to be classed as secular. But otherwise there is a categorical distinction between the secular and the spiritual.

The secular Vidya and the regulative codes based thereon are studied and followed by the Rishi-kula who pride themselves on their seminal descent from Brahma. This society, as we have surmised above, attained its supremacy by the gradual decay of the spiritual association of Varnashrama system and by the complete victory of the secular out-look after a national calamity itself brought about by spiritual degeneracy. This society is regulated by Sankara-Gaudiya and Kamalakar-Raghunandan lines of thought. Both of these lines are purely secular thought in its complimentary distinctive and constructive aspects respectively.

The Madhva Gaudiyas do not subscribe to the either line of the secular thought which dominates the Smarta Hindu society. Any attempt to force Madhva Gaudiyas to adopt secularism in the name of the religion of the Vedas and Upanishads is, therefore, both disingenuous as well as a grave offence against the true principles of religion.

The Madhva Gaudiya communion does not also identify itself with Madhva Society regulated by the thought which finds expression in such codes as Sadachar-smriti, Chhalari Nrisimhacharyya's Smriti, etc. The Madhva thought is undoubtedly theistic and quite distinct from and antagonistic to the secularism of Kamalakar-Sankara. But the Madhva Gaudiyas follow the thought of Sree Chaitanya Deva. They are by no means regulated by the codes compiled by Raghunandan and Kamalakar; nor do they subscribe fully to the codes of the Madhva school. It is only persons, who are not sufficiently well-informed about the extent and nature of the differences between the codes of the various communities, who are liable to commit the blunder of supposing them to be equally binding on all.

Sree Madhabendra Puri is the first propounder of the distinctive Madhva Gaudiya line of thought in the domain of pure theism. This is definitely traceable and is a historical fact. In the same chain are Sree Sanatana, a scion of a Karnata Madhva family, his disciple Sree Rupa, belonging to the same lineage, and also Sree Rupa's disciple Sree Jeeva. Madhva Gaudiyas take their stand on the spiritual thought of Sree Rupa who sprang from a Karnata Brahmana family domiciled in the country of Gauda

The Madhva Gaudiyas have no concern with the affairs of the various castes and sects that are found now-a-days in Bengal. They have nothing to do with the secular aims and aspirations of any groups or individuals. The history of the different contemporary castes and sects of this country is to be found in the records of the later Puranas and other works. These books also describe in detail the objects and methods of those organisations which are quite different from those of the Madhva Gaudiya society. But those organisations are periodically seized with a violent desire for bringing the theistic societies within the jurisdiction of codes intended for regulation of themselves. The spiritual societies are anxious not to permit the suppression of their spiritual interests by any such procedure. They stand for the unimpaired preservation at all costs of their categorical distinction against the mundane outlook on life represented by the Smarta codes.

Sree Prataparudradeva

(ii)

KING Prataparudra enquired (from Sarbabhauma Bhattacharyya), 'Why do all of them (the newly-arrived devotees from Gauda) hurry to the residence of Chaitanya without seeing Jagannath on their way ?' Bhatta said, 'It is no doubt the procedure of natural love that they are so anxious for meeting Mahaprabhu. Their plan is to meet Mahaprabhu first and then to come for the sight of Jagannath in His Company.' The King said, 'Baninath, the son of Bhabananda, is taking mahaprasadam, from the Temple of Jagannath. More than half a dozen persons are carrying the same. They are taking it to the residence of Mahaprabhu. Why is such a great quantity of mahaprasadam required there ?' Bhatta said, 'Apprised of the coming of the devotees they are taking the prasadam at a hint from the Lord.' The king asked, 'The regulation of the Tirtha requires the new-comer to fast and shave. Why should they take food without following those rules ?' Bhatta replied, 'What you say is the function in accordance with scriptural regulations. But on the path of natural love for Godhead there is a more refined realisation of one's duty. It is the indirect command of Iswara that enjoins shaving and fasting. To take prasadam is the Direct Command of the Lord. Fasting is to be observed if there is no mahaprasadam. In this case there is the Command of the Lord and it is an offence to refuse the prasadam. Especially as Mahaprabhu Himself is serving the prasadam why should they fast by foregoing so much more gain ? On a former occasion the Lord brought me cooked prasadam. I ate the cooked food in the morning sitting in my bed. One, into whose heart He mercifully sends the loving impulse, realises his entire dependence on Krishna and gives up the functions enjoined by the Veda and by custom. Says the Bhagabat, 'When Godhead is Merciful and manifests Himself to the soul of a person the latter gives up the judgment that makes him attached to the regulations of the Veda and of society.'

Then the king alighted from the terrace of the Palace and sent for both Kasi Mishra and the Padichhapatra. He ordered them too to provide comfortable lodgings, sufficient prasadam and every facility for visiting the shrines, etc., for all the followers of the Lord who had come to meet Him, so that they might not be inconvenienced in any way. They were advised by the king to carry out every Command of the Lord and to do His Wish even on a hint without waiting for explicit orders. He dismissed them after personally instructing them in the above manner.

Kasi Mishra and Padichha made their way to the presence of the Lord, greeted His Feet and introduced themselves to all the Vaishnavas who had newly arrived, in a becoming manner. They made their submission to the Feet of the Lord, praying for His Command for serving the Vaishnavas. They informed the Lord that they had arranged for the residence of all the devotees. They prayed for permission to provide mahaprasadam for all of them.

At this the Lord turned to Gopinath Acharyya, who was present, and directed him to take with him the Vaishnavas and show them their lodgings. Baninath was to supply mahaprasadam to all the Vaishnavas.

Kasi Misra and Padichha then took both Gopinath and Baninath with them. They showed Gopinath all the lodgings that had been arranged for the stay of the Vaishnavas and made over to Baninath an ample supply of mahaprasadam. Baninath soon returned to the residence of the Lord with a great variety of mahaprasadam. Gopinath also turned up after making the lodgings ready for occupation by the devotees.

The Lord then commanded the Vaishnavas to repair to their lodgings. They were to have their meal in the residence of the Lord where they were to meet again after bathing in the sea. Making their obeisance to the Lord the Vaishnavas went to their lodgings with Gopinath Acharyya. The Lord conducted Haridas in to the flower-garden attached to His own residence and assigned him a secluded cottage there for his stay.

In the evening the devotees met the Lord again in His residence. Rai Ramananda also came. The Lord then went to the Temple of Jagannath with all His followers. He began the Samkirtanam in the Temple after the evening aratrika, in four groups to the accompaniment of eight mridangas and thirty-two karatalas. The Lord Himself danced in the centre of the performer of the Samkirtana. The whole of Neelachala poured into the Temple to witness the function. The Lord then circumambulated the Temple of Jagannath, dancing. The four kirtana-sampradayas sang the chant forming two groups, one preceding and the other following the Lord. The Lord exhibited all the eightfold sattvika perturbations as He danced in the midst of the Samkirtana. Then the Lord made the procession take its stand behind the Temple and separated the four groups, each of which now sang independently of the others. Nityananda, Advaita, Bakreswar and Sreebas were selected to be dancers in their respective groups. The Lord was simultaneously Present in all the four groups.

King Prataparudra on receiving the tidings of the great Samkirtana in progress in the Temple mounted the terrace of his Palace with all his people to have a sight of it. The King's heart was touched by the wonderful spectacle and his longing for meeting the Lord exceeded all bounds. The Samkirtana in the Temple was performed by the Lord daily, as long as the devotees stayed at Neelachala.

The meeting of Sree Prataparudra with the Supreme Lord was brought about by gradual stages. The King in his anxiety to meet the Lord had written to Sarbabhauma from Cuttack at the time when the Lord returned to Puri from the South. Bhattacharyya wrote back to say that he had been unable to obtain the Command of the Lord for the proposed meeting. The King wrote to Sarbabhauma a second time requesting him to put his case before the devotees of the Lord and to seek their help in obtaining for him the Mercy of the Lord. The King wrote that it would not be possible for him to rule his kingdom if he was refused the sight of the Lord. He concluded his letter with the words that if Sree Gaursundar still continued to withhold His Mercy he had made up his mind to give up his throne, become a yogi and live by begging.

Bhattacharyya was filled with anxiety on receiving the King's letter and went to the devotees and told them about the King. He then showed them all the King's letter. The devotees were surprised, on perusal of the letter, by the great devotion of the King to the Feet of the Lord. But all said that the Lord would never agree to meet him and if they spoke on behalf of the King the Lord would be grieved at such request. But Sarbabhuma pleaded the cause of the King and entreated them to request the Lord not for meeting the King but merely to submit the King's case.

Thereupon the devotees went to the Lord. But on their arrival in His Presence no one spoke, although they were fully willing to do so. The Lord said, 'What have you come to speak about? I see you wish to speak. But why do you not do so?'

Nityananda said, 'We wish to make our submission to you. We cannot rest till we speak out. But we are afraid in our minds to speak. We wish to speak nevertheless, whether it is proper or improper. The King has made up his mind to turn yogi if he does not meet You. He writes that he would wear the coin on his ears and turn beggar. He finds it impossible to apply his mind to the affairs of his kingdom without having a sight of You. He wishes to have the unobstructed sight of Your Beautiful Face and clasp Your Lotus Feet to his bosom.'

But although such entreaty touched the Heart of the Lord, yet outwardly He spoke cruel words. "It is then the wish of all of you to take Me to Cuttack from here and meet the King. Leaving out the spiritual point, such conduct will be condemned by the people. Not to speak of the people even Damodar will scold. I am unable to meet the King even if it be the command of all of you. I would meet the King if Damodar says it is proper".

Damodar said, 'You are Godhead and Your Own Master. What is proper or improper is perfectly known to you. I am a most insignificant jeeva. How can I prescribe the rule for You? You Yourself will meet him and I shall also see the same. The King loves You. You are subdued by love. His love will make him have contact with You. Although You, being Godhead, are Absolute Autocrat, yet by Your Nature You are entirely under the power of love'.

Nityananda replied, 'Who is there to propose that You should meet the King? But it is nevertheless the peculiar nature of persons in love that they give up life if they fail to obtain the cherished object of their desire. The wives of the sacrificial Brahmanas are the evidence. For the sake of Krishna they gave up their lives when they were forbidden by their husbands to meet Krishna. There is a method, if You approve of the same, for saving his life even if You cannot meet him. If you have the Mercy of giving him a piece of Your outer-cloth he will live in hope on receipt of the same'.

The Lord replied, 'All of you are extremely well-advised. Do what is good.'

Thereupon Lord Nityananda begged for a piece of the Lord's outer-cloth from Govinda. He handed it to Sarbabhauma. Sarbabhauma sent it to the King. The King's mind was gladdened on receipt of the cloth. The King worshipped the cloth as the Lord Himself.

Ramananda Rai then came from the South and prayed to the King for permission to stay with the Lord. The King gladly ordered him to do so, and also told him about his desire to meet the Lord. 'Mahaprabhu is extraordinarily Merciful to you. Try by all means to obtain His permission for me to have a sight of Him.'

Subsequently both of them came together to Puri. Rai Ramananda now joined the Lord. Ramananda submitted at the Feet of the Lord the loving devotion of the King and mentioned the King's case whenever there was an opportunity. Ramananda had been minister of the King and was well-skilled in the art of persuasion. He softened the Mind of the Lord by his descriptions of the love that was cherished by the King towards the Lord. Meanwhile the anxiety of Prataparudra for meeting the Lord became everyday more and more intolerable. Ramananda Rai then prayed to the Lord for showing His Feet to Prataparudra.

The Lord said, 'Ramananda, speak after due consideration. Is it proper for Me, being a Sannyasin, to meet the King? The begging sannyasin is a loser both ways by his meeting with kings. Leaving out the question of after-life, such conduct is sure to expose one to the ridicule of the people.'

Ramananda said, 'You are Godhead Himself and Your Own Master. There is no one of whom You need fear. You are not responsible to anybody.'

The Lord said, 'I am a Sannyasin, a member of a particular human ashrama (stage of regulated life). I am afraid of violating those external regulations, by My body, mind or speech. A point of ink on a white sheet of cloth cannot hide itself. Just so, the least lapse of a Sannyasin is sure to be commented on by all persons.'

Rai said, "You have delivered all the sinners. 'The Lord of the Elephants', the servant of Jagannath, is devoted to You".

The Lord said, 'The vessel full of milk becomes untouchable if but a drop of wine is put into the same. Although Prataparudra is full of all good qualities the single fact, that he bears the name of 'King', pollutes him. Yet if you desire it so very much, you may bring his son to meet Me. The Shastras say that 'One's own self is born as one's son'. If his son meets Me it will be the same as if he himself meets Me'.

Thereupon Rai intimated the Wish of the Lord to the King and brought the King's son to the Lord. The King's son was possessed of a very handsome appearance, his colour being gold-blue like that of the fresh grass. He was in his budding youth. His eyes were wide, resembling lotus-petals. He was clad in yellow and wore rich ornaments on his body. He excited the recollection of Krishna in the Mind of the Lord. The Lord embraced Him under the influence of Love for Krishna. The Lord then said, 'He, indeed, is the highest devotee by whose sight the recollection of the Son of the Chief of Braja is aroused in the minds of all persons. I am most fortunate by obtaining his sight'. With these words the Lord embraced him once more.

The King's son experienced the overwhelming power of love for Krishna by the Touch of the Lord. He exhibited his loving condition by his profuse sweating, shivering, tears, stupefaction and horripilation. He shouted the Name of Krishna, danced and wept aloud. At the sight of these wonderful exhibitions of his love, the devotees spoke in praise of his great good fortune.

The Lord then composed him and commanded him to meet Himself everyday.

Rai took his leave of the Lord and came to the King with his son. The King was filled with joy on noticing the changed behaviour of his son. On embracing his child the King was overwhelmed with love for Krishna. He realised as if he experienced the Direct Embrace of Mahaprabhu Himself.

From that day the fortunate son of of King Prataparudra was enrolled among the devotees of the Supreme Lord.

THERE is no possibility for the clear realisation of the principle of simultaneous distinctive-cum-non-different manifestation unless one learns to accept every statement in its synthetic as well as analytic aspects. Those persons to whom this world, which is a product of the material energy, has been manifested, constitute, in their proper natures, the order of jeevas, who do not claim any affinity with the mundane energy. If those persons engage themselves in serving activities in viewing this manifested world by means of their unfettered spiritual aptitude, they would be in the position to perceive the manifestations of the spiritual truths offered by this exhibition in the visible form.

The attempt to describe in terms of mundane vocabulary by the positive help of the mundane literatures, or to delineate the negation of the mundane to those who are attached to the subject-matter of mundane literatures, can only present the bare outline of the spiritual literature. The person proceeding towards the direction that is pointed out to him, will be thereby enabled only to experience the possible existence of the spiritual. The point where his further progress will be arrested is apt to be assumed by him as the region of the unlimited ; and, under this impression, he is apt to desist from the attempt to proceed any further. In such case such an individual will devote himself to the discourses about the world fashioned by the material energy and be thereby disabled from entering the realm of the blissful activities of unclouded cognition. Dharma (mundane virtues), Artha (mundane values) and Kama (mundane felicity), that will be sought by him under the urge of sensuous desire, will be procured by him as enjoyable entities. These will bar his way to the spiritual realm. If those worldly persons, who are seekers of salvation, are disposed to suppose the advance to the line of demarcation, located on the outer boundary of the phenomenal world, which just touches the fringe of active spiritual manifestations, as the realisation of their desired goal, they will miss the concrete diversity of active spiritual existence. In this position the realisation of one's affinity with the marginal potency who is void of the distinctions, such as those inhering in the entity himself, between the entity and other similar entities and between the entity and other alien entities, cannot display the activities of the spiritual atom.

The realisation of the true nature of the self is attainable by the eternal aptitude of the individual soul. The manifestation of this aptitude is brought about in the individual soul by the Divine Spiritual Power Whose Eternal Nature it is to manifest the principles of Bliss, Existence and Cognition. The followings are calculated to affect prejudicially the attainment by the individual soul of the above aptitude. The first is the attitude which regards four propositions of the Sruti as Mahavakyas (superior propositions), these being perceived to provide liberation from materialistic affinity. They are asserted as Mahavakyas by persons established in the Santa rasa (mellow quality of equanimity) in their attempt for effecting a reconciliation among the conflicting mantrams and for proving the applicability of all mantrams to the monistic meaning of the Sruti proposed by them. The second of the obstructive processes consists in undervaluing the three mantrams of the Mundaka, viz., 'Dva suparna,' etc., by harbouring the selfish materialistic desire of assigning them a lower position by non-spiritual classification into high and low. These unwarrantable procedures prevent the realisation of Indivisible Knowledge as the Object of worship. Instead of His realisation they make the Object of worship Himself subject to those erroneous speculations about good and bad that constitute the mental function. They draw those who indulge in them away from the simultaneous consideration of the synthetic and analytic aspects, and by bringing down the Truth, Whom the Vedanta seeks to establish, to the world of material discriminations, make such persons the adepts of the undifferentiated view by the postulation of fictitious material identity between the Object of worship and His worshipper. Unless one is illumined by the Light of the Object of worship and of his worshippers of the spiritual realm, there is never wanting the opportunity for remaining confined within the darkness called 'materiality.'

The audience may be inquisitive about my career and fitness, in connection with my servitorship of the order of the exhibitors of the spiritual kingdom. In answar to such enquiry I am in a position to state that my preceptor is the exhibitor, in his role of master of the show, of eternal devotion to the Eternal Activities of existence, cognition and bliss, in the line of apostolic succession from Sree Sanatan Gurudeva, the follower of Sree Krishna-Chaitanyadeva. Not possessing the eligibility of exhibiting in an adequate manner all the teachings of that exhibitor, I am still showing this temerity from the conviction that it is my eternal aptitude to offer my co-operation for the fulfilment of my cherished hope of obtaining the inclination for serving the Truth, by the power that is commensurate with my eligibility, on the stage of initiation into the transcendental knowledge.

The transformed enjoyable entities of this world, after they undergo assimilation by fire, are required to be given up. They then become refuse matter. They have hence been termed 'offal' or 'excrement'. I have come to know in the chain of the transmitted transcendental sound that I am but the meanest among the worms addicted to excrement and liable to be deceived by the deluding temptations of ephemeral enjoyment, being actually less than the blade of grass. In lieu of being keeper of the store of the good luck of material affinities, I happen to be destitute of all worldly ambition. For this reason I am more insignificant than the worm bred in offal and it is certainly proper that I should realise myself to be the lowest of them all. The two Bandyopadhyayas Jagadananda and Madhabananda once set themselves to oppose the propagandist activities of Sree Gaursundar, Who is Existence Cognition and Bliss, being urged by their habitual mood of unbridled license.

Sree Nityananda is the Embodiment of perennial Bliss. Sree Thakur Haridas is bodily one with four-faced Brahma. He is of the most most-revered order of the eternal paraphernalia of Vishnu, immune from the thraldom of the deluding potency, free from any ambition of being master of any entity, thoroughly versed in all Knowledge, foremost of the servants of Hari and cherishing the egoism of being the servant of the Divine Holder of Gobardhana Mount. Jagai and Madhai refused to carry out the Command of Sree Chaitanya who had commissioned Nityananda and Haridas to promulgate the same. Jagai and Madhai were habituated to the mode of thinking, which is un-troubled by any considerations in favour of the principle of the division of the people, according to their dispositions (varna), into Brahmana, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Sudra, and which is devoid of all moral sense and is actively disposed to mischief. Jagai and Madhai, in opposing the promulgation of the tidings of the highest universal good, resorted to the commission of the most heinous crimes of every description. Knowing myself to be more restlessly mischievous than even Jagai and Madhai, I could recognise the quality of my patience in not desisting from evil. By the grace of the lotus feet of Sree Guru I could thus have a glimpse of my real condition more impatient than even that of Jagai and Madhai. In consequence of my disillusionment I am now engaged in the attempt to establish my soul in the state of true forbearance. The success of my attempt depends upon the mercy of the inhabitants of this world afflicted with the scorching triple misery. Therefore, I should be inclined to introduce myself as a person who is without egotism and arrogance.

It is my endeavour to have the eligibility of being established in the conviction that those, who, for the purpose of becoming disposed to the service of Godhead and for manifesting their real nature as possessors of such disposition, will listen to my words, will thereby suffer the total loss of all virtues. In this world those who, are averse to the service of Godhead, are led by such aversion to achieve brittle, material, worldly prosperity by welcoming the thought of engaging in activities other than the service of Godhead. The virtues acquired by such persons will be destroyed by the guilt of their association with myself. Above every thing else I have greatest sympathy for the honour of such persons through fear that I am doing them harm. I am trying to pick up the conviction that I should tell them so in introducing myself.

Therefore, it so happens that there will be found in me the want of different kinds of ineligibility if I am judged by the test of fitness. I am ineligible for satisfying those who are actuated by any consideration other than the service of Krishna. I am wanting in eligibility for ministering to the gratification of the senses of any person. I possess no fitness for the acquisition of merits which are the products of good works. I am engulfed in the depths of ineligibility in respect of any sort of endeavour for arrogating to myself superiority in the competitive practice of malice in this world. I am also wholly unfit for resting in the state of quietude born of the absence of such non-spiritual differences as those touching the entity itself, as those between the said entity and other entities of the same species and as between entities of one species and another, which is realised by the attainment of fulness of knowledge free from ignorance in the quest of the undifferentiated Brahman. Neither do I possess eligibility for that ideal of impartiality, endorsed by the judgment of the world, which is valued in speculations regarding the entity void of every potency, which is labelled Brahman. Therefore, my only eligibility, who am ineligible in every way, is to beg for mercy.

Srijukta Sakhicharan Bhaktibijaya :— The Gaudiya of 25th March has published a photo of Srijukta Sakhicharan Bhaktibijaya, the well-known philanthropic merchant of Calcutta in order to familiarise the public with the personality of the donor whose offer of substantial financial support backed by his earnest representations, brought the idea of the immediate extension of the propaganda to western countries within the serious consideration of the Mission in a somewhat unexpected manner. This is hinted in the Editor's speech at the fare-well accorded by the public of Calcutta on the 18th of March to the preachers on the eve of their departure for London.

Farewell-address of the devotees of Sree Gaudiya Math :—

The farewell-address in Bengali, which was presented to the preachers of the Mission proceeding to London, by the devotees of the Gaudiya Math of Calcutta, on March 18, gives expression to the altruistic nature of the propaganda conducted by the preachers of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha. The Teaching of Sree Chaitanya was never intended by Himself to remain confined within the limits of India, Sree Krishna Chaitanya accepted life-long exile at Puri for impressing the necessity of change of heart on the Pandits of Nabadwip who mistook as service of Godhead their grossest addiction to the concerns of this world. The Supreme Lord was compelled to seek for support and sympathy for the cause of the Absolute Truth, which was withheld by the parochial mentality of the sophisticated teachers of Religion of the centre of scriptural studies, from the worshippers of Sree Jagannath Deva who were least infected with speculative and polytheistic ambitions. Sree Viswa-Vaishnava-Raj Sabha, in pursuance of the Method of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, are anxious to embrace so-called strangers who possess the least trace of the genuine disposition for the service of the Absolute by disowning, by their actual sincere conduct, every form of gross and subtle narrowness. Their preachers do not hold their commission from any popular, oligarchic or autocratic authority of this world for the furtherance of any other purpose.

Opening of Sree Krishna Keertana Hall of Madras Gaudiya Math :—

The key of Sree Krishna Kirtana Hall was solemnly handed over to the Editor by Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay Dharmaprana, Avl., the donor, at a public meeting for the formal opening of Sree Krishna Keertana Hall held in the premises of the Madras Gaudiya Math on the 22nd March at 6 P.M. The donor, Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay Dharmaprana Avl., the well-known Engineering Contractor of Madras, was very careful to state that the gift was absolutely unconditional. The foundation stone of the Hall had been laid by His Excellency Sir George Frederic Stanley, Governor of Madras, on Jan. 27, 1932. The Hall was, beautifully decorated for the occasion by Messrs. Wrenn Bennet and Co. The unique function attracted a very large and representative gathering of the citizens of Madras including an unusually high percentage of the notabilities, Judges of the High Court, the Advocate General, Professors, Merchants and many other important personages. The speech of the Editor was brief. Unalloyed theism promulgated by Sree Krishna Chaitanya is identical with that method of approaching the personality of Godhead which instead of seeking to tamper or mutilate the Absolute Truth by crippled attempts of regulating Him, offers an absolutely clean and sincere heart in which He Himself might reveal His own Phase. Godhead can show different Manifestive Aspects of His Own as per the eligibility of the approachers. The Supreme Personality of Godhead has instigated fortunate souls to build a lecture Hall for the purpose of invoking the Transcendental sound in order to impart the true theistic views among the audience. Thanks are due to His Excellency the Governor of Madras for his kind patronage, to Mr. T. S. Ramchandra Iyer, I. C. S. for donation of a portion of the plot of the land in accordance with the desire of his illustrious father late Sir. T. Sadasiva Iyer, an ex-Justice of the Madras High Court and to Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay for his noble and unconditional gift of the Hall to the Mission. In gift like this alone for the unalloyed service of Sree Krishna, altruism reaches its purity and perfection. Rao Sahib Mr. Swaminath Pillay had been a main factor in the accomplishment of the noble purpose of his son-in-law and deserved the thanks of the public for his sympathy and support.

The Spiritual Call

THE call for the service of the Absolute must not be confounded with the call for the offer of any bodily or mental function to any limited concern of this mundane existence. The continuance of the aptitude for worldliness shuts out all possibility of spiritual awakening.

It is easy to deny the existence of the soul apart from and independently of the body and mind. It is not at all easy to prove that we can be satisfied with any form of mere bodily and mental existence. The body and mind bind ourselves to this world and its concerns. The ideals and prospects of living, which have been realised by their means up till now, have always been recognised as essentially unwholesome and trivial by the better judgment of the race. The world has always been in travail for bringing forth some ideal that is worthier than any mental concoction. This is the psychological urge of the religious quest.

Ethical thought itself, which is perceived as marking the high-water level reached by the developed conscience of the race and which certainly represents the characteristic excellence of the truly civilized man, is being felt to be inadequate, at any rate in its current forms, and to need immediate and drastic rehabilitation. The discoveries and inventions of the physical Sciences have proved to be a source of new miseries and embarrasments of no mean order. In fact these cherished possessions of the race are to go the the way of all the flesh to the refuse-heap for being replaced by very different arrangements of the same trivial stuff. Is it desirable that this periodical readjustment should cease altogether ? Is it practicable to effect a permanently stable and really satisfactory ordering of the affairs of humanity on any line ? The League of Nations sitting at Geneva is engaged in considering the ways and means for some sort of a stable organisation, being forced thereunto by the terrible prospect of an impending catastrophe threatening to overtake the whole race. There is no avoiding the issue under the time-honoured plea that it is insoluble.

But the perception of the difficulties of the worldly situation and the inadequacy of the remedies proposed by the official creeds for their cure, is not again the spiritual call, but only one more futile call for a fresh synthesis in the light of ever-changing human thought. It is to this familiar end that the efforts of the representatives of the Nations assembled at Geneva are being directed. The physical scientists undoubtedly possess the lead in the councils of mankind at this present critical juncture. They believe in the practicability of ensuring the progressive (?) improvement (?) of the affairs of man, with the resources of knowledge derived from this phenomenal world by the methods of experiment and observation. Nature is the source of all ills that flesh is heir to. Nature is to be the kind mother to heal all wounds inflicted by her on her children, if they persist in enquiring of her. She can give man unmixed and lasting happiness by making him strong and wise in body and mind. She is supposed to be able even to perpetuate human life, which is the highest of boons conceivable by man.

Their recommendation is being acted upon by thinking sections of humanity with single-hearted devotion in the modern Age, with very satisfactory results on the whole. The Age has progressed by leaps and bounds towards the realisation of the promised ideal felicity. But as the goal is not a stationary one, there have always been evoked the necessary salutary (?) drawbacks for stimulating the efforts of the workers for achieving an ever-expanding happy result.

But have these brilliant scientific activities no really definable termination? Does their constructive force decisively exceed their destructive power ? Is the happiness offered by their constructive face really acceptable to the better judgment of the race? For example the sciences are multiplying luxuries and amenities. Are these valuable for their own sake, or as palliatives of an otherwise intolerable condition created by the very methods that are being recommended and fostered by the secular thought itself?

This is the enquiry on the threshold of spiritual life? The physical sciences, including the empiric philosophical systems and so-called rational interpretations of the revealed scriptures offered by empiric thought, can but promise amelioration. If the race neglects their advice, its sufferings are palpably increased in intensity and volume. It is on this observed fact that the empiric thought takes its stand. The attempt at the multiplication of so-called cures and palliatives for the manifold evils which hold out no hope of ever ceasing of their own accord, is the natural outcome of the demands of the present position.

But will the present position, after the elimination of all its so-called evils, be worth retaining at all? We are so busy with the operation of fighting the besetting evils that we have not a moment to spare for thinking out the issue to any real conclusion.

The call to spiritual living insists, at the very first moment of its real appearance, that we must make time for reconsidering the whole position in a dispassionate mood. We must cease for the nonce to be parties to the quarrels of pedants who, in their anxiety to confine themselves to the so-called needs of the moment, dogmatically shut the door on the serious consideration of the real issue. There is absolutely no necessity for this abnormal haste and impatience.

What shall we do with this life? Shall we try to perpetuate it? Shall we try to improve it? Is it worth either perpetuation or improvement? What is this life? Is it body? Is it bodyless? Which of these should be our objective? Are not these question very relevant? Has modern thought given its serious attention to them? Is it justified in neglecting them on principle? Should it continue to neglect them? Or should it concentrate on them exclusively?

The spiritual call proposes the last course. What is the use of one's persevering in activities that are without a clear purpose? It is an analogous, but not the identical, mood that made Descartes and Bacon pause to take stock of the whole position and suggest a consistent line of conduct for the adoption of the race. Bacon is content to suppose that life means the body and comforts of the body. The mind is found to depend for its sustenance and nourishment, on the body. The body is tacitly adopted by him as the sole tangible basis of the whole activities of the race. He gives the decent burial to the thoughts of the deductive schools who were trying to meet the needs of this life by equivocal inferences from the words of the Bible, without caring to have a look on the world in which it was necessary for them to live and have all their present interests. The metaphysical back-ground of the frank materialism of the inductive schools is supplied by Descartes who identifies the individual with his thoughts. The extreme form of this line of speculation is to be found in such expressions of Shakespeare as, 'There is nothing good or bad. But thinking makes it so'. But Shakespeare himself doubted the truth of it when he penned, 'Our little life is rounded with a sleep.'

There is an inexplicable background to the present life. That background is located beyond our thoughts; so that if we begin with 'thought' we are committed to 'our little life' and its petty concerns which cannot satisfy us because they are really 'petty' and as such not in themselves alone worthy of man's complete personality. Thought cannot analyse itself. It cannot go beyond its own narrow limits. But thought is capable of being really aware of its insufficiency. Its inadequacy cannot, however, be supplied by itself, although it can be ignored and denied by the exercise of its prerogative of being dishonest.

How can this inexplicable and inaccessible background of life be reached by our admittedly inadequate present resources? This is the first real question on the path of spiritual enquiry.

Therefore, the spiritual call is clearly distinguishable from the calls to worldly activities conditioned by the resources of human thought directed to the exploitation of Physical Nature, by two specific characteristics. The spiritual call recognises the inadequacy and non-finality of human thought. It recognises the unsatisfactory nature of activities under the direction of human thought, by reason of the absence of any clear acceptable purpose therein. This is the negative aspect. The positive aspect of the spiritual call involves the conviction of the necessity for the search of a worthy goal with resources other than those of human thought operating on physical Nature. It involves the assumption of the practicability of this preliminary quest with our present resources.

The revealed Scriptures express the above facts in a clearer manner in terms of concrete realisation. They declare that the Object of quest cannot be any other than the Absolute Truth in as much as our nature is essentially rational and inquisitive. This perfects the dictum of Descartes and allows the real function and importance to human thought even in its present crippled form. The Scriptures further declare that the Absolute in His Full Manifestation is the Ultimate Reality Who is Conerete, or, in other words, that He a Person Whose Activities are also reciprocal Divine Personalities. The Concrete Absolute Truth is the proper logical equivalent of the Transcendental Active Supreme Personality. The Activity of the Supreme Person also means that He is both Male and Female i.e., Predominating and Predominated Entity. Being All-Knowledge the Supreme Person and His subservients possess the absolute initiative. The Supreme Person, Male and Female, is the Object of quest with our present inadequate resources. It is practicable to approach Him with our present utterly inadequte equipments because the initiative is taken by the Absolute Himself. The Initiative of the Absolute manifests Himself as the activities of persons subsequent to their spiritual awakening. The Living source of all such activities is the Absolute Himself and His Eternal Paraphernalia. The Absolute manifests Himself in the Form of the Transcendental Sound on the lips of His devotees. The Transcendental Sound is, therefore, the only intelligible Means. It is not possible for any person to receive the Message of His devotee unless he is prepared to approach Him with unconditional submission that is due to the Absolute Master, Who is identical with His Message. The personality of the devotee is thus the key to the whole position. It is, therefore, incumbent on every person to seek the help of the bona fide devotee of the Absolute, always bearing in mind the caution that the devotee is not recognisable by any worldly tests of ability, imperfect morals, etc., but reveals his spiritual nature through his spoken words to those who are prepared to submit to the servant of the Absolute for receiving and retaining their spiritual enlightenment by his causeless grace.

An Address on the opening ceremony of Sree Krishna-Keertana Hall

My Friends,

I have great pleasure, as indeed, I deem it a great privilege and honour, to be in your midst again about a year after to open this Hall as desired by our esteemed friend Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay Dharmapran Avl., the well-known merchant of South India, who is the noble donor of this Hall to our branch Math in this Presidency town. It would not be out of place here to deal in some details with the desirability of our knowledge and association of topics essentially required as preparatory before we embark for an unknown land by completing suitably our present journey of life. There are diverse views maintained by different people of various mentalities, and the selection and acceptance of the best lie in our individual predilection by listening to the comparative merits of each.

Man claims the supreme position among the sentient objects who have got to transact with the phenomena with a future hope of a continuity of the same even after the transformation of the present tabernacle. Rationalism is associated with man and as per our demand we entertain hopes of using our discretion in the fittest way as far as possible. We know we are dependent of entities without whom our sentientism [rational activities (?)] cannot find real display. Dependence is an inseparable element in us, though our ego is always exercising a potentia inherent in us for dispelling all discomforts of the mundane atmosphere. We are endowed with senses and the senses have no other predilections but to secure felicities in every transaction. When we take up an individual case, we find that gratification of our senses is the principal characteristic in our person. And this personality of many among us often actuates a descending mood among our co-sharers. A reconciling harmony is solicited when we actually put ourselves in difficulty in search of necessary viands. This necessitates a garner to store up all requirements for our use in future. If we prove not to be encroaching upon our friends and co-sharers we cannot live, but the impending regulations to control our senses predominate our decisions on civic principles. We find ourselves quite restricted in our movements, though non-restrictions prove to be factors of our peaceful living. We look upon the integer for a harmonious settlement of this contending aspects of our decisions. The resort of our needs goes on discussing the merits and demerits of the situation of the very fountain-head of the phenomenal representations. When we are not satisfied with this universal demonstrative aspect as the holy shelter to supply our needs, we press on our ratiocination for the hidden object behind the exoteric manifestations. The Esoteric Fountain-head comes up before our inspection, always setting Himself free from being handicapped in the phenomenal region. So we are compelled to consider the situation of the Eternal Blissful Knowledge transcending all regions of mental speculations. This Oversoul claims to incorporate pure uncontaminated souls on His Harmonious Plane. Our mental speculations may trouble us by asking—why the principal Transcendental Object should not incorporate an all-pervading conception of both non-matter and matter, the conception of parts and the whole, and the inclusion of the two ends of specification. On the other hand the very mental speculation would lead us to rank pantheistic speculation where all sorts of phenomenal exclusions are the principal factors. As individuation is a necessary element in me, and as I find such individual situations to be the objects of our reciprocal activities, and as they are numerous and the numerical position, experienced in our present phenomenal range, is found to be rupturous, there should be a uniting tie to cement the variegated positions, and we often jump into impersonation and dissociative ideas of relativities, The Personality of the Absolute can then only pacify the unsympathetic jealousy innate in the view of mundane persons. This would thereby lead us to the Acme of maximised Magnitude Who is free from all mundane restrictions of temporary aspects and locations in a particular limited space. Again, the phenomenal restrictive views should not be imposed on the Personality of a thoroughly Independent Integer. So the Personality of Godhead is to be approached instead of considering Him to be an accused on the dock for our sensuous inspection. We should allow Him to retain Everything His own. This method of approach is known as unalloyed theism.

The Supreme Lord Sree Krishna Chaitanya has asked all sections of the people of this world not to tamper or mutilate the Absolute Truth by their crippled attempts of regulating Him, but to approach Him with an absolutely clean and sincere heart in which will be revealed His Own Phase. He can show different Manifestive Aspects of His Own as per the eligibility of the approachers.

The Supreme Lord has mercifully disclosed the Name of the very Object of pure theism as Sree Krishna. The conception of an impersonal God, void of all attributes or all possessions of different potentia, is included in Sree Krishna, as being one of His partial Phase where all sorts of sensuous attributions are eliminated.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead has instigated fortunate souls to build a Lecture Hall for the purpose of invoking the Transcendental Sound in order to impart the true theistic views amongst the audience who happen to be present to give an aural reception to that Sound. It is the Providential will that a few from the north-east side have come to this place to take part in invoking the manifestive demonstration with the aid of noble souls who have come forward to help this cause, and I heartily thank them one and all. I take this opportunity of conveying most cordial thanks on behalf of my humble self as well as the Viswa Vaishnav Raj-Sabha to His Excellency the Governor of Madras for his associating himself with the great cause by laying the foundation stone of this Hall last year. I personally and on behalf of the Viswa Vaishnav Raj Sabha thank most sincerely Mr. T. S. Ram Chandra Iyer I. C. S., who donated so kindly and voluntarily a portion of this plot of land to our Mission for the purpose of Sree Krishna Keertana in furtherance of the noble desire of his illustrious father late Sir T. Sadasiva Iyer, a Justice of the Madras High Court, who purchased this very portion with the noble object of giving chance to the public at large of listening to Krishna-Keertana from genuine source. He was truly a lover of Krishna both by profession and faith till the last days of his life and so he was loved by the people of this country. My blessings and thanks go also to Tridandi Swami B. H. Bon through whose sincere service and efforts was purchased the remaining portion of this plot upon which the Hall has been built, from funds collected from the purse of generous souls of this sacred land.

Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay certainly deserves equally best thanks from us all for his noble and unconditional gift of this Hall to Sree Sree Guru-Gauranga Gandharbika-Giridhari of the Sree Chaitanya Math at Sree Mayapur, Nadia, Bengal, of which this Madras Gaudiya Math is a branch. We marked his nobility when he first made quite a substantial donation for the propagating purpose of the Madras Gaudiya Math. Thence forward he has been in touch with our Math, and his inclination to serve the Supreme Godhead Sree Krishna developed gradually as Sree Krishna's Mercy descended upon him. As a result of this he readily promised and gave all the necessary bricks for this Hall when the erection of this Hall was first contemplated and planned. But the service of Sree Krishna, when sincere, has a peculiar charm and attraction, and it encourages and draws the sincere beginner nearer to Him and to His higher and higher service gradually. Our friend T. Ponirula Pillay felt this encouragement and attraction and in course of time he came forward with full contribution for this Hall in the erection of which his engineering skill, long experience, his hard-earned money and labour, and personal supervision received their truest and highest reward. For, this gift of him has to be properly discriminated from all other gifts of the world made for mundane purposes—the purposes of body and mind, whereas this one is purely for the purpose of serving the Godhead Sree Krishna Himself, and human souls fallen from the service of the Lotus Feet of Sree Krishna. In gifts like this alone for the service of Sree Krishna, altruism reaches its purity and perfection. Today I bless Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay with all my heart, and I am sure he will be infinitely blessed by Sree Krishna, and thanked by all people both in present and future times, as Sree Krishna Keertana that is, the chanting of the Holy Name of Krishna, will spread from this Hall far and wide in this peninsula—and farther to the wide world at present and in the days to come.

I also take this opportunity of publicly thanking all—the members of the family, friends and relations of Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay who have always encouraged him in this great service by their constant support and sympathy, and I shall fail in my duty if I do not in this connection mention particularly the name of Rao Saheb Mr. Swaminath Pillay, the noble father-in-law of Mr. T. Ponirula Pillay, whose encouragement had been a main factor in accomplishing this noble object.

SREE GAUDIYA MATH,
ROYAPETTAH, MADRAS,
March 22, 1933.

SIDDHANTA SARASWATI.

THE next event that we find mentioned in connection with Sree Prataparudradeva is when Mahaprabhu begged from Kasi Misra, Sarbabhauma and Padichha, representing the King, the favour of the King's permission for cleansing the Gundicha temple. They agreed to this strange request after expressing their surprise and protesting that the function was not worthy of Him. However, they proposed to supply the pitchers and broomsticks that would be necessary for the purpose. Mahaprabhu accepted this offer of help. Then Mahaprabhu with all his devotees thoroughly cleansed the Gundicha Temple. The Lord had the sight of Jagannath, after the period of anabasar, from the Bhogamandap as the press of the crowd made it impossible to have the view of Jagannath from behind the Garuda column as was always His reverential practice. On this occasion alone His great anxiety for the sight of Jagannath led Him to break that rule imposed by reverence.

The Supreme Lord was pleased to notice the humble service of King Prataparudra on the occasion of Panduvijaya when Jagannath came out of His Temple and mounted the Car for His journey to the Gundicha Temple. Sree Prataparudra with his own hands swept clean the path of Jagannath with a golden broom and sprinkled the same with sandal water. This might be deemed a mean occupation for the occupant of the throne. It is this humble service that touched the Heart of Mahaprabhu and was the cause of His Mercy to Prataparudra.

The Supreme Lord in the company of all His devotees then performed His Wonderful Dance in front of the Car of Jagannath as it journeyed from the Temple to Gundicha. The chanters of Samkirtana were divided into seven groups. The Supreme Lord was simultaneously present in all these groups. This Divine Manifestation was, however, open to the view only of the inner devotees of the Lord. Sree Prataparudra had the good fortune of being favoured by the sight of this Divine Performance. The King at once informed Kasi Misra who confirmed it saying that the King was fortunate beyond measure. The King communicated the same by hints to Sarbabhauma who also admitted the truth of it. No other of the King's attendants could see it. It is only those persons, who are favoured by the Supreme Lord, may know Him. Not even Brahma and Siva can know Him, except by His Favour. This Mercy shown to King Prataparudra is a matter that was beyond the range of perception of others, contrasted with His open refusal to grant the prayer of King for being favoured with His sight, which was known to everybody. For this reason it is never possible for any one to understand the Conduct of Sree Chaitanya. The Supreme Lord manifested all those Transcendental Pastimes that He had once displayed at Vrindavana, in course of His Dance in front of the Car of Jagannath. The devotees alone could recognize the same. But no one else knew. King Prataparudra, surrounded by his attendants and resting on the shoulders of Harichandan, witnessed the Samkirtana with rapt attention. Sreenibas at one time happened to stand in front of the king obstructing his view of the Lord. Harichandan touched Sreenibas to convey the hint that he should stand out of the line of view of the King. But Sreenibas was not aware of the touch of Harichandan, who was gently pushing him, due to his absorption in the Samkirtana. But as Harichandan continued his efforts Sreenibas felt it and angered by his interference he slapped Harichandan. This unintentional insult to the companion of the sovereign made Harichandan furious and he attempted to speak to Sreenibas rude words. But King Prataparudra himself checked his retaliation observing, 'You are fortunate in as much as you have received the touch of his hand. I am not so fortunate as you. It is in reward of your excellent deeds.'

The Lord now ceased from His Wonderful Dance and commanded Swarup to sing. The song of Swarup brought about the embodied manifestation of the corresponding rasas in the Moods of the Lord. In this mood of loving separation the Lord Exhibited a movement as if He was about to fall to the ground, just in front of the King. Sree Prataparudra caught the Lord in his arms with the greatest reverence. The touch of the King recalled the external consciousness of the Lord. He shrank from the contact of the King and said that 'He was most unfortunate indeed, as he had to suffer the touch of a person who was sunk in worldliness.' There was none of His associates near enough to render Him help, as Nityananda appeared to be careless due to his absorption in Samkirtana, and Kashiswar, Govinda and others happened to be at some distance at that moment.

The angry words of the Lord made the King afraid that he had been guilty of an unpardonable offence. But Sarbabhauma told the King to banish all such doubts as the Lord was really well-pleased with him and that the Lord was merely teaching their duties to His devotees by making the King a means for this purpose. Sarbabhauma also promised to inform the King a means for this purpose. Sarbabhauma also promised to inform the King at the proper moment when he was to present himself before the Lord.

The Lord now pushed the Car of Jagannath with His Head from behind. This made the Car go forward at great speed to the astonishment of all beholders.

The Car of Jagannath stopped at Balagandi where every person is eligible to make his own offering of eatables to Jagannath. The broad street and the gardens on either side of the road were quickly filled with innumerable worshippers engaged in the act of offering eatables to Jagannath on the spot each by himself.

The Lord retired to a flower garden and laid Himself down for rest on the bare floor of a room inside the garden. The devotees who had taken part in the Samkirtana also rested under the trees of the garden.

As the Lord, absorbed in His Loving Mood, was resting in the garden, King Prataparudra presented himself there. By the advice of Sarbabhauma the King had taken off his royal robes and was clad in the simple garb of a Vaishnava. He came unattended. With folded hands the King sought and obtained the permission of the devotees for approaching the Lord. He then ventured to clasp the Feet of the Lord, and, as he did so, he prostrated himself on the ground.

The Lord lay on the floor with closed Eyes absorbed in love. The King tended His Feet with tact and care. The King hymned the Lord by reciting the verses of the Rasa Pastime from the chapter 'Jayati tehdhikam....'. As the Lord listened to the words of the King He was pleased beyond measure. The Lord asked the King repeatedly to go on with the recital. As the King recited the verse, 'Taba kathamritam.....', the Lord rose up and embraced the King, by the impulse of Love. The Lord said, 'You have given Me priceless treasure. I have nothing to give you in return, and so I give you only My Embrace'. So saying the Lord began to recite the same verse. The Lord repeated the verse over and over again. The bodies of both shivered and tears overflowed their eyes. That verse runs as follows, "Those persons are the most magnanimous givers in this world who sing without stint. Thy nectarine words that are full of power, most delightful to the attending ear, dissipate the malady of separation from Godhead, are cherished by the loving devotees and are the life of all afflicted with the pang of separation."

As the Lord repeated the word 'bhurida' (most magnanimous giver) He embraced the King once more. The Supreme Lord seemed not to be aware who he was. His mercy had been aroused by the sight of the King's previous services. The Lord now bestowed on him, the favour of His Mercy without enquiring about him. This is a concrete instance of the great power of the Mercy of Sree Chaitanya, which fructifies without caring about eligibility of the recipient.

The Lord said, "Who are you that have done Me this good? Who have made Me drink the nectar of the Pastimes of Sree Krishna, coming here all of a sudden?" The King said, "I am the servant of. Your servant. This is my hope that You would kindly make me the servant of Your servant."

Thereafter Mahaprabhu showed the King His Divine Power. The Lord forbade Him to divulge the matter to anybody else. The Lord did not give out that He recognised the King. He, of course, knew everything in His Heart, but appeared to be wholly unaware of the King's presence in His External Behaviour towards him.

The devotees praised the King on witnessing his good fortune. The King after making his prostrations came away from the Presence of the Lord, and, with folded hands, greeted the feet of the devotees. The King then sent a great abundance of Mahaprasadam by Sarbabhauma, Ramananda and Baninath. The Mahaprasadam sent by the King filled half of the space of the garden. The Lord was very much delighted on beholding the display of such great variety of Mahaprasadam. The Eyes of the Lord were gladdened with the joyful sight at the thought of the pleasure with which Jagannath tasted those offerings. Then the Lord made His devotees accept to the full as much of the Mahaprasadam as they had capacity for. The surplus sufficed for the feeding of thousands of persons. By the command of the Lord Govinda fetched all the poor to honour the Mahaprasadam. The Lord watched the pastime of the feeding of the poor and destitute, instructing all who honoured the Mahaprasadam to say "Hari." Those poor people were over-flowed with love for Krishna as they uttered the name of Hari. Such is the wonderful pastime of Sree Gaursundar.

It was now time for the Car of Jagannath to resume the journey to the Gundicha. But although all the Gaudiyas who were employed to draw the Car, pulled with their utmost strength, they failed to move the Car, and at last gave up the task as hopeless. The King now hurried to the spot with his chief men and ordered the strongest wrestlers to draw the Car, and, when these also failed, huge elephants maddened by every provocation were harnessed to the Car and were ruthlessly goaded to put forth all their strength. Still the Car would not move an inch. On hearing of this, the Lord came thither with His devotees and watched as the maddened elephants were being goaded to pull the Car. The elephants trumpeted under excrutiating pain as they pulled with all their might, but the Car remained immovable. All the spectators were now filled with a great dismay and rent the sky with their loud lamentations

Thereupon the Supreme Lord unharnessed all those elephants and handed the cables of the Car to His devotees. The Lord put His own Head to the Car and pushed from behind. The Car now moved quickly forward with the rumbling sounds of its wheels. The devotees only ran grasping the cables in their hands but had no occasion to pull, as the Car sped by itself. In their joy all the people shouted, "Glory to Jagannath". The Car reached the gate of the Gundicha in a moment. The people were amazed on witnessing the power of Chaitanya. The people congratulated themselves on their good fortune as they shouted in company, "Glory to Gaura Chandra, Glory to Sree Krishna Chaitanya." Sree Prataparudra Deb with his friends and advisers was elated with love on witnessing the Glory of the Lord.

In the fifth year after His arrival at Puri the Lord decided to perform the long contemplated journey to Vrindaban by way of Gauda. He set out on the Vijaya Dasami Day from Puri. He was joined by Rai Ramananda at Bhabanipur and passed the first night of the journey at that place. Ramananda travelled in a dola and the Lord journeyed on foot. The next morning the Lord reached Bhubaneswar. Thence He came to Cuttack and had the sight of Gopala. At Cuttack the Lord accepted the invitation of a Brahmana whose name was Swapneswar. The devotees of the Lord were the guests of Ramananda. The Lord put up in his garden. After taking His meal the Lord rested under a Bakula tree in the garden.

Rai Ramananda conveyed the news to Prataparudra. The King felt a great joy on hearing of the unexpected Arrival of the Lord and hastened to meet Him. On catching sight of the Lord the King fell prostrate on the ground. Distracted with love he got up and prostrated himself over and over again. He recited hymns to the Lord. His body exhibited signs of horripilation and his eys were full of tears. The Lord was pleased on seeing his devotion. The Lord rose from His seat and embraced the King. The King continued to recite the hymns and made his obeisances once again. The body of the King was bathed with the tears of Mercy of the Lord. Then Ramananda, after helping the King to be composed, made him assume his seat. The Lord now bestowed His Mercy on the King without reservation. The Lord fully vouchsafed His Mercy to the King whence the Lord is designated, "Deliverer of Prataparudradeva" (Prataparudra-samtrata). The companions of the King greeted the Feet of the Lord as the Lord bade him farewell.

On coming outside the King issued his royal commands on the spot to all the administrators (bishayi) throughout his kingdom, ordering them, "To build new residences in every village, to collect all necessary articles in abundance which should fill not less than half a dozen rooms at each place, personally to conduct the Lord to the resting places and to attend on Him night and day 'cane in hand' for His service. The King commissioned two of his highest officers, Harichandana and Mangaraj, to arrange everything. His commands ran as follows, 'Get a newly-built boat. Have it kept waiting at the river-side. At the point where the Lord after taking His bath will cross over to the other side, erect a memorial column to signify that it is the greatest of all Tirthas. I will bathe there at all times and may I also die at that place. At Chaturdwar make the best newly-built residence. Ramananda is to be always by the side of the Lord."

The King, on being apprised of the Departure of the Lord that evening, made his queens be mounted on elephants which carried canvas chambers. They drew up in a line on the side of the road The Lord resumed His journey in the evening with all His devotees. He bathed in the Chitrotpala river as soon as He arrived there. The queens of Prataparudra obtained the sight of the Lord at this place and made obeisance to Him They were filled with love for Krishna by the sight of the Lord. They forthwith began to articulate the Name of Krishna and their eyes shed tears. Srila Kaviraj Goswami commenting on this event observes that "such merciful Personality is unheard of in all the three worlds at any time, even the distant sight of Whom arouses love for Krishna."

The Lord crossed the river by boat. It was moonlit night. The Lord then came to Chaturdwar. Stopping there for that night the Lord bathed at that place next morning, Just then the Mahaprasadam of Jagannath arrived. By the Command of the King, Padichha sent an abundance of Mahaprasadam everyday by many bearers The Lord after accepting the Mahaprasadam with His Own resumed His journey by taking the Name of Hari. Ramananda, Mangaraj and Harichandana, these three, accompanied the Lord and were in personal attendance on the Lord for His Service. Two of the King's sons also accompanied the Lord. The Lord dismissed the King's sons on arrival at Jajpur and took leave of Rai Ramananda at Remuna. As the Lord spoke the word of parting Rai Ramananda fell senseless on the ground. The Lord was welcomed by the royal officers on His Arrival at the frontier of the kingdom. The Lord stopped here for several days.

I am a person who is lacking the eligibility of culling small alms, like tiny drops of honey gathered by the bee, from the opulence of ability of persons possessed of superior skill in gathering the fruits of utilitarian activities and dispelling ignorance, or possessed of desire for immoral activities or innocent worldly pleasures, or for liberation from all mundane activity. Yet there is a great variety of alms that I beg from animate entities, all of whom are full of mercy and proud of their power of work and power of knowledge. I live upon small alms like the bee. This is my nature. By reason of this constitutional peculiarity I am eligible for culling small alms from all the container and contained entities of the world for the improvement of my body, mind and speech. Therefore, I am an object and beggar of the mercy of all of you. Being, however, unable to maintain in tact at all time the function of begging by reason of unfitness, I confess my want of eligibility also for the function of begging.

Sree Krishna-Chaitanya, the Ocean of Mercy, is the Most Magnanimous of all givers of alms. He is the Giver of Love for Krishna. He is endowed with Eternal Unalloyed Name and Eternal Beauty. His Name is identical with the Possessor of the Name. He has manifested the complete endeavour for giving away the Unlimited Name as Sound described as Eternal, Pure, Full and Free to all animate entities in every part of the world at all time in different ways. To carry out His Command is certainly the only function of my soul, the utter futility of my endeavour for the attainment of the aptitude for His service notwithstanding. Therefore, I pray to be eligible for accepting my share of the fulness of the eternal diversity of the mood of Master and servant, Attracter and attracted, Object and offerer of worship; for endeavouring for my share in Him that facilitates my chance of being established in my own unalloyed position. I pray to be eternally established in such aptitude. I pray for all this

May the entities who are exhibited manifest their relationship with their eternal subjective nature, who are real existence-cognition-and-bliss, instead of being received as constituent parts of this phenomenal world. This is my prayer. May the external structures of the exhibits not merely attain the level of objects of enjoyment offered for the gratification of the view of their spectators. May their observers obtain an opportunity of obtaining the highest good by progressing more in their aptitude for the unalloyed service of Godhead instead of receiving any worldly benefits. May they also afford me the same opportunity. This is my only prayer.

The degree of eligibility for the service of Godhead varies in different persons. But such eligibility is attainable by all persons. The exhibited diversities would help every person to attain the aptitude for serving those manifestations in proportion to his degree of eligibility. May the only Proprietor of the exhibited entities, Who is no other than the Son of Nanda manifested by Vrindabana visible in this mundane world, bestow this eligibility. May Sree Chaitanyadeva, the Bestower of Love for Krishna, confer in them the corresponding eligibility. Sree Krishna Chaitanyadeva propagated His Power in the heart of Sree Rupa, effulgent with the substantive reality, at the Dasaswamedha Ghat of Prayag. He injected the Power that arouses the cognitive aptitude by conferring the strength for getting rid of malice born of the inert condition, into ferocious wild animals, while passing through gardens of enjoyment on His way to Vrindabana. May the same Power be injected and eligibility conferred on the entities exhibited and on the faculty of vision of spectators who are liable to hold firmly the view that inert entities are identical with the cognitive reality, and thereby show His Blessings on my service of Sree Guru under the guidance of Sree Rupa. I also pray for the alms of Your Mercy in regard to these words of prayer uttered by the synthetic and analytic methods.

Sree Krishna Chaitanyadeva quitted His Home and resided in Sree Purushottama in the Act of exhibiting the Pastime of giving up all mundane thought. It was certainly His Purpose in taking up His residence at Sree Purushottama to cause all conditioned souls to realise in the same the considerations regarding the tasty quality of loving spiritual separation and the practicability of the attainment of the highest desideratum of mankind by such realisation. The thought of the verse of Srimad Bhagabatam, 'Ahuscha te nalinanabha.....' represents the acme of rational judgment. The realisation of this should be the object of quest of all individual souls. The site of those Pastimes enacted at Syamantapanchaka is the original source of our Theistic Exhibition. It was in accordance with such realisation that this Exhibiton was first opened at that place for arousing the aptitude for the highest good on the occasion of the solar eclipse.

That Bhakti is alone the best of functions is mirrored in the emphatic statements of the books and the incomparably pure career of Sree Chaitanya and His beloved associates. The distinctive features of that devotional aptitude are manifested in the records of the scriptures and in the words of those exponents of the scriptures who live up to the teachings of the scriptures. For the purpose of enabling the present cognitive faculty to understand the tidings of the realm that is unknowable or knowable with very great difficulty, it is all-important to describe those transcendental activities and to provide the needful excitant by their representation by the dramatic method. For this reason it is necessary to manifest them by the method of the exhibition for remedying the disease of deluded vision. I had been submitting during the last twelve years times without number with all manner of humble supplication to all sincere helpers of the promulgation of the Heart's Desire of Bhagaban Sree Chaitanyadeva, the supreme importance of an Exhibition for imparting sound theistic education, in order to induce them to take it up in right earnest.

The order of the psilanthrophists (prakrita sahajiyas) on learning about my proposal regarding the organisation of an exhibition of theistic culture, tried to get up a show. But their purpose is quite different from ours. The psilanthropists never bathe in any other current of thought except that of this universe created by the material Energy (Prakriti). They do not cultivate the transcendental science. They count upon the feasibility of maintaining their existence after death on the knowledge of material enjoyment possessed by man in the conditioned state. It was in order to demonstrate to the people that those who lead the spiritual life have no affinity with any mundane exhibition, that I had to translate into action the ideal of the Theistic Exhibition conceived by me. With the desire of promoting the well-being of communities who are engrossed in the pursuit of material enjoyment, I invoked the manifestation of the theistic Exhibition successively at Sridham Mayapur, Sree Gaudiya Math and during last year in the quarter of the town in which Sree Gaudiya Math is located, during the period subsequent to the Kurukshetra Exhibition.

The order of our Gurus helps us in the realisation of our desideratum by acting up to the requirement of spiritual thought, urged thereunto by the sense of humility. Most of them brought about the descent of the tidings of the Household of Krishna, by undergoing the hardest labour at the risk of their lives, to the plane of this world created by the deluding potency of Vishnu for the purpose of subduing the sixfold animal passions, such as lust, anger, etc., that are innate to the human race.

We are not unaware that by the process of descent to this mundane plane the view of the transcendental is liable to be missed by the external vision of men directed by the superficial cognitive faculty. But we still cherish the strong hope that all those living receptacles, in whose hearts the aptitude for service is flickering like the light of the lamp about to go out becoming once more inclined towards service and kindling with the services of moods appropriate to the spiritual variegatedness appertaining to the Name, Form, Quality, Paraphernalia and Activity of Krishna, will be established in the sphere of Vaikuntha-Goloka in the stage of leaving off this mortal coil. It is with this basic purpose that we are busy in providing the opportunity of making available the transcendental boon of Vishnu and Vaishnavas to the human race.

The purpose behind the organisation of the Theistic Exhibition is to make the conditioned soul be acquainted with some of the fundamental problems of human life by the complementary positive and negative methods of exposition. What is good (sat) condition ? What is summum bonum ? Wherein consists the difference between the desirable entities of this world and the highest good ? How may the sixfold divine prerogative be attained by being liberated from the sense of need in regard to the three objectives of mundane piety, riches and objects of enjoyment? What manner of evil results from the quest of the featureless Brahman by the exclusive state that is devoid of all pomp and circumstances of the Divinity? It is necessary to produce a living interest in the right solution of these besetting problems.

It is first of all necessary to examine the current misconceptions regarding the 'good' i. e. sat (or the abiding or real state). In order to do so we should prepare a comparative table setting forth all the different conceptions that have been engendered in this ever-changing world in the stable principles of mind and faculty of individual judgment, together with the varying degrees of the asat (ephemeral) element, that appear in them. If we prepare such a comparative record we would find that there is no room for the unalloyed cognitive essence in the receptacles adulterated with active and inert mundane qualities. It is only persons who are adepts in the spiritual service of Vishnu, who can understand the difference that separates the real significance of the term sat (good or abiding principle) from the entity, which is a product of relative reasoning, that appears as the good (sat) to conditioned souls. The vocabularies of languages represented by the records written in the Brahmi, Kharausti, Sanki, and the other scripts, educate us in cultures that, instead of helping us to attain the unalloyed state of the real of pure cognition only bind us to the delusions of ephemeral sound and language. These are not subjects that are fit to be learnt by sadhus who are full of eternal cognition and bliss. The invocation of the realisation of the true subjective nature of the entity of spiritual service (bhakti) among mankind, is necessary for knowing all this.

Of two friends possessing similarity of nature and purpose one is found to experience the aptitude for the enjoyment of this transitory world. He happens to notice in his friend the disposition of supplying the means of enjoyment of the self-same transitory world. This leads him to aspire after the condition of abnegation. This process is also found to involve him in the folly and undesirable hankering of losing his acquired possessions. When he finds that it is his proper function to do good to his friend, he employs himself in the office of servant of his friend. He is then in a position to understand that the purpose of acting the part of enjoyer by employing his friend as servant, is not any part of the good education. In such circumstances he is apt to regard the rendering of service to his friend as most needful from the point of view of a thoughtful observer. It is only when his conscience, that is prone to enjoyment and acceptance of service, is touched by the service of his friend and is also made aware of those whom his friend serves as well as the instrumentals and materials by whose means he renders them his services, that he becomes acquainted with the glory of his friend. He then becomes aware that the assertive and meaningless exertions of a person, devoid of the serving aptitude for his friend, are productive of grief, infatuation and fear. This knowledge is consequent upon the realisation, in the act of performing the eternal function, that the friend is the powerful ordainer of hunger, thirst, decay, infatuation, fear and sorrow. The person who understands his friend to be the reservoir of all light, recognises him to be his friend in the tie of the serving function. Bhakti is that eternal and supreme function without whom the diverse forms of all other non-devotional activities cause the misapprehensions of souls, indulging in enjoyment or abnegation of mundane entities, who are apt to mistake one thing for another. Bhakti enables the individual soul to realise his eternal nature of the aptitude of a servant by causing him to give up the disposition of being master which is foreign to the essential nature of the soul, in order to ensure one's escape from the evil that is attendant on the state of ignorance. The egoism, that regards oneself as master of one's own activities, as regulator of others, by making the individual soul a sojourner of the mundane world on the paths of fruitive work and empiric knowledge, prevents the performance of the function of exclusive serving devotion to the Feet of Godhead.

By assuming the role of the master of Godhead, Who is the Eternal Object of worship, to install Him as a concept having the nature of a servant, is but the invocation of sheer misfortune on the part of the individual soul. In the attainment of the highest good the unalloyed state of his service tends to become the only aptitude of the individual soul. The power of decision of a judge who is subject to childish caprice does not point to the service of Godhead. It is for this reason that Godhead condescends to serve the instructed, in the Role of the Instructor. When the individual soul, on realising his own want of purity runs after the acquisition of the same, he is liable to remain impure, because no one, who happens to be in the state of impurity, is eligible for the sight of Godhead. Sometimes, assuming himself to be pure, in lieu of seeking the knowledge of the real truth, he is busily engaged in pursuits that are pleasing to himself, under the impression that any pursuit that is pleasing to himself is thereby proved to be pure.

As the result of his attempt to foist his own impurity on Godhead, he supposes it to be on a par with the Beneficent Full Autocracy of Godhead. Knowing himself to be the seat of cruel assertive activities, the individual soul is liable to imbibe the malicious disposition by his attempt to view Godhead with his deluded material eyes.

When the jeeva exercises his faculty of intelligence on the form of Godhead Who is possessed of eyes resembling the Petals of Lotus flowers, and on His Glance of Mercy, he is in a position to have the sight of the Eye of the Divinity Who is Eternal, Unalloyed, Full and Free. He is then in a position to know that his own vision is defective being tainted with error, prejudice, faulty perception and the purpose to deceive. In this phenomenal world there is found current knowledge of the Name, Form, Quality and Individual Servitorship of Godhead, couched in the language of mundane spectators. But such knowledge is not included within the limits of time and space. If one is bent upon regarding such perception to be similar to the mundane process, such perversity will prevent him from obtaining the real sight of the Entity of the Supreme Person when He chooses to descend to this mundane plane. Such deluded vision, in stead of exciting the recollection of the Eye, Ear, Nose, Tongue, Skin and Mind of the Lotus-Eyed One, would make the small mouth be only guilty of uttering big words by making the observer suppose that They are also tainted with defects similar to his own. It is then that the aversion to Godhead begins to show itself in the mal-interpretation of the scriptural text 'kapyas' and the Supreme Person seems to be included within the category of the material. The Theistic Exhibiton cherishes the desire of unfettering such a person from the chains of the deluded vision, born of the sensuous enjoyment of the conditioned soul, for the purprose of exhibiting the distinctive character of the pure theist.

Sree Vyasa Puja Response

(ii)

ALL so-called knowledge of this world is knowledge born of the fleshy senses. The knowledge that is received at the University or from physical Nature, may promote greater synthesis, analysis and development of the experience of this mundane world. It is not proposed to discard the knowledge that is imparted by the Universities (literally the academies of this world). But it is proposed to ascertain the relation of Godhead with the same. To discard such knowledge is the barren form of renunciation (falgu vairagya). We learn this from the teaching of Sriman Mahaprabhu. 'The discarding of entities that are related to Hari by liberationist, under the misapprehension that they are mundane, is called barren abnegation.'

The different branches of mundane knowledge are being applied in an improper way by mankind who have their faces turned away from Krishna. It is as if ornaments for the ear are being worn on the feet. It is necessary to admit the real utility of every entity. Extreme attachment to things of this world and extreme aloofness from all worldly concerns are equally removed from the function of the servant of Godhead. The servant of Godhead should cultivate affinities with all entities on Krishna's sole account.

We are apt to suppose that name and form are bound to embarrass in every case. Such an inference is derived from mundane experience. From where have name and form come to this world ? Where is their source ? It is because there happen to be really name and form in that transcendental realm that the perverted reflections of those entities are cast in this world. 'From Whom all these entities have their birth, by Whom they live, to Whom they go back and in whom they enter, seek for That. That is Brahman.'

It is forbidden to the Brahmacharin (one who serves the Brahman) to look upon any woman. But notwithstanding such injunction it is no proof of the possession of superior intelligence to jump to the conclusion that womankind is, therefore, wicked. The very same thought, by which woman is adjudged to be condemnable, is also equally applicable to the male. To look upon an entity as an object of one's sensuous gratification, is to cast one's eye upon woman. It applies equally to both male and female. The entity is not condemnable. There is scope for condemnation of the disposition that makes use of the entity. The diversity of the world is not bad nor defective. But the (ephemeral) wrong use of that diversity is certainly condemnable. If the diversity of the world is to be used for the service of Godhead, it should be one's duty to accept it thankfully for the purpose.

It often happens that we practise a habit of keeping our hands in an uplifted position and other diverse forms of asceticism. But by their means no actual result is achieved. "If Hari is worshipped, where is the further use of ascetic practices? If Hari is not worshipped where is the use of ascetic practices in such circumstances? If Hari is Present both inside and outside, what is the use of ascetic practices? If Hari is not Present, both inside and outside, what is the use of ascetic practices?

If we do not serve the Eternal Entity we are guilty of making the wrong use of this insignificant human life. Whereas if we serve Godhead, the human life becomes worth living.

Krishna is the Figure of all nectarine rasas (mellow tastiness). In Him there is no want of any rasa. The servant of Krishna is fully aware of everything regarding the other devatas (gods) of this world or of the series of the Avataras (Descending Divine Personalities) of Vishnu. The Self-same Krishna is served only by His devotees. That Entity is unattainable by fictitious knowledge. Those, who have had an opportunity of listening to the text of the Bhagabatam, 'Jnane prayasam udapashya.....', know that the sight of the Transcendental Realm of Knowledge will not be available by the efforts of countless lifetimes by means of such knowledge. A disease, which is most difficult of cure, has got into its jaws the human race. In its terrible grip we are seized with the determination not to employ our body, mind and speech in the service of Godhead and are bent upon abusing our freedom of will. It is necessary to be freed from the clutches of this monster.

The inadequate, or less than full, conception of the Whole has been termed 'Brahman' and 'Paramatman'. The conception of 'Paramatman' has been formed by incorporating undesirable elements by joining together truth and untruth for the satisfaction of the principle of comprehension. But it is not possible to interpolate any counterfeit entity in the Divinity.

It is not the mark of the state of liberation to be merely freed from the clutches of inconveniences. Something more is required. The conception of redemption (mukti) does not mean merely getting rid of untruth. We require positive accretion. It is not our final requisition merely to be freed from the inexperience and uselessness of this mundane world. Unless we have the taste for the diversity of the Transcendental Activities of the Entity, Who is full of Eternal Pastimes and Divine Activities, we are apt to be caught in the virtues and vices of the world being intoxicated with the dynamics of mundane existence. Only those who are desirous of liberation from the conditioned state are anxious to get rid of the inconveniences of this world. But it is one's duty to turn one's serious consideration to those matters in which the unconditioned souls are actively interested. So long as the conditioned state prevails the conviction of the possbility of difference of ways and means is unavoidable, due to the fact that it is not possible in the conditioned state to have any idea of the subject in whom the unconditioned souls are actually interested. Till we are freed from the clutches of this misjudgment the conditioned soul, liable to be contaminated with the fourfold defects of error, prejudice, inadequacy of sense-organs and tendency to deceive, cannot place enough reliance on the words of the redeemed souls. Those who have arrived at the conclusion that the essential characteristic of mukti (liberation) is merely cessation of misery, have been betrayed into a line of thought that is prevalent in the conditioned state which exposes us to the triple miseries of this mundane world. The scope of their vision is very short, indeed. If we refrain from the active consideration of the positive diversities of the Absolute, Who is located beyond the mundane, by being misled by their words, what do we gain by such conduct ? Sree Chaitanyadeva has not employed Himself in the pursuit of any thoughts that centre round the current activities of this body or mind. He has employed His Thought on the subject of the diversity appertaining to our relationships with the fullness of Entity possessed of His Eternal Body, that prevails in the real state which is located beyond both of these two bodies. We should employ our thoughts on that subject even while we are allowed to be in this world. Every rational entity is vitally interested in this matter.

It is the full realisation of bliss that should be sought after. The mere cessation of misery is not what is required. In the state of positive liberation (mukti) we should attain some positive entity. We should be on our guard that in our quest for one entity we may not go after a different entity. It is necessary to perform the preparatory activities before death. It is only if the accumulated intelligence of all our friends, the concerted help of all persons, can employ themselves in the service of the servants of Godhead, that we should accept them. But we should by no means display any aptitude for carrying the burden and refuse matter of this world to the next.

Subserviency to Godhead is the only good path open to us. If we know how to work out a simple equation by the rule of three we would be in a position to understand how much normal endeavour should be made for the eternal life in proportion to what has actually been found necessary in the apparent interests of a hundred years of existence. That endeavour must be made within the short span of this life. Because it is the human life which alone is capable of yielding the summum bonum. If mankind is in a position to understand this simple mathematical proposition it can have no other function in this life except the quest of Krishna. It is supremely necessary for us to fully connect every activity,—to take each simple step and to draw each simple breath,—with the reference to Krishna.

The order of my preceptors has told us many things in very beautiful language. I shall not repeat them. I would, however, state a few essential things for their acceptance. We have no other function except throwing ourselves on the protection of Godhead. We must not consider Godhead to be the care-taker of our garden. It is not our desideratum to attend only to our present day needs. Our primary duty, basic purpose, is the service of Hari. The two verses of Sree Rupa Gaswami viz, 'anasaktasya bisayan' ... and 'prapanchikataya buddhya ...' like the polar star point out the course to be followed by us by the negative and positive enunciation of the same. We must always walk in that path on which we shall be fully provided with the service of Krishna. May we never perform any activity being deprived of the service of the servants of Godhead. If we donot employ all secular knowledge. —history, literature, philosophy, science, the arts of war and politics,—in its proper sense, or in other words, if we do not fully connect everything with the reference to Krishna that is reduce it to the service of Godhead, it would give rise to the controversial method which would make us think that we should give up this thing, and that thing, and that it is not this and not that.

How is it possible for us to conceive of the transcendental entity with the present capacity of our senses ? Srila

Rupa Goswami Prabhu has supplied the answer of the question in a very charming manner by refuting the psilanthropic views. 'Hence (i. e. being transcendental) the Name, etc., of Sree Krishna is not perceptible by the senses. He manifests Himself of His own accord on the tongue, etc., that is disposed to His service.' 'The proper enjoyment of the entities of this world by one who is unattached to them by fully connecting the same to the reference to Krishna is called the right form of renunciation.'

The very first aphorism of the Brahma Sutra is, 'thereafter this gives rise to the enquiry regarding the Brahman'. In the person who has become detached from the mundane world, who has transcended the material planes of fruitive work and empiric knowledge, there arises the enquiry regarding the Great One or the Brahman which sets him free from the quest of the small. Those who have not transcended the mundane plane are non-vedantists. The atheistical professors of the system of Sankhya etc., remain confined to the limiting numerical reference. The expansion of one quadrant is open to our view. Our vision fails to take in simultaneously the extended space of three quadrants. The potency that corresponds to individual souls originates from Samkarsana. If this is not understood we are landed to the question, 'Who is to ask whom?' "Seated on the same tree (on which sits also the Supreme Soul) the individual soul sunk (in the enjoyment of worldly entities) is subjected to sorrow due to infatuation by reason of his non-Divine nature."

If one supposes the Served and His servant, the Guru and his disciple, the self-realised soul and the neophyte, to be on a level of equality with each other, he is liable to be sunk in worldliness. Such a person is overtaken by sorrow, or attains the state of the Sudra. Inquisitiveness about the Brahman or the state of the Brahmana is no longer retained. It is no doubt desirable to be able to see everything with an equal eye. But such seeing does not involve the abuse of the realisation of the common nature of the worshipper and Worshipped. On that plane although there is non-difference as regards quality, there is difference as regards magnitude. In difference there is reference to non-difference, while in non-difference there is reference of high and low. 'Those persons whose intellect is lighted up with the Veda (Real Knowledge) are Pandits. Pandits see the Brahmana possessed of learning and humility, the cow, the elephant, the dog and the eater of the dog with an equal eye. By missing the significance of the above verse if the elephant and the dog are considered as the same in the gross sense, no consistent meaning can be made out. The equality of vision refers to the soul.

The entity which is called grief is an aptitude born of the state of want or destitution. "Sugasya tadanadara-srabanat tadadrabanad suchyate hi" (Br. Sut. 1.3.34.)

Even the very slightest deviation from the Real Truth is subject to the law of change. The view that there is a rival of Godhead—that there is a Beelzabub—is derived from aversion to Godhead. Between our words and those who are extremely vain of the empiric knowledge of the Scriptures, there flows a great Biraja river. Those who suppose that they can understand everything very well, can write correct language, can speak well, have no aptitude for hearing. The external coating alone possesses any attraction for their minds. They only gossip fictitious stories about the Brahman. They do not make any enquiry for knowing about Him.

Is the human race doomed to remain so foolish? Will it be never able to understand the tidings of the Possessor of the Triple Potency, of triquadrantal expansion? Will its stunted intellect be never expanded?

The answer to the quest for the Brahman is contained in the aphorism Yanmadyasya yatah.....', from Whom this world has its birth, continuance and dissolution. Therefore, this world can never be false. If the world is supposed to be false then He, by the transformation of Whose Power this world has had its birth, also is proved to be false. If the reflected image is denied, the original source of the image is also subjected to hostile attack. There is no unwholesomeness in the original substance, but there is unwholesomeness in the shadow. This is all the difference. The Ultimate Entity is born in Mathura. He abides in Vrindavana. Whereas when the separation to Mathura begins, there ensues the exquisite state of the love-lorn maiden. In the Divine Realm of Dvaraka there prevails the Manifestation of Majesty. In Pravas there is the Pastime of Disappearance. At the point where the intellectualism of man terminates, foolish persons are declaring that the Transcendental Activity also terminates. Leela (Transcendental Activity) is never ended. That Activity goes on at all time in the form of the circle of light traced by a revolving point of fire.

Gaudiya Math Propaganda in Europe

Extract from the letters of the preachers

[The party of preachers of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha consisting of Tridandiswami B. P. Tirtha, Tridandiswami B. H. Bon and Sm. Sambidananda Das M. A., started on 10-4-33 in the afternoon from Bombay on board M. V. Victoria.]

Letter of Tridandiswami B. P. Tirtha of 26-4-33

We reached Dover at 6-30 P. M. on 22-4-33 via Genoa. Victoria station, London was reached by an hour and a half's journey from Dover. We bowed down our heads to the Lotus Feet of Sreegurudeva on alighting at the Victoria Station. Tridandiswami B. H. Bon at once sent a wire of our safe arrival in London. We put up at night at the Indian Students' Union Hostel, 112 Gower Street. All letters are to be addressed without the words 'His Holiness'.

Arrival in London

After a good deal of search we got suitable accommodation though not quite comfortable on 24th evening (£2-10s a week) at 9 Torrington Square, London W. C. I.

On the 25th we met the Secretary of the Friends' Society in London and Mr. Shastri of Madras, Sans. Mss. antiquarian. We are handicapped for non-arrival of luggages from Genoa. Cotton clothes are of no use now. We shall have warm clothes in no time. Today is a fine sunny day or rather a gala day for the English people, the first such day since our arrival.

Letter of Tridandiswami B. H. Bon of 26-4-33

Our letters will be sent to Calcutta as His Divine Grace' whereabouts are not known to us.

We reached London on 22-4-33 at 8 in the evening. The sun sets at 8 P. M., but darkness is felt at 8-30 P. M. Indian Students' Union is managed by Indian Y. M. C. A. We stayed here for two nights. We shifted to 9 Torrington Square on the 24th. We have been cooking for ourselves.

Prof. Rolan Penrose, an Englishman, whom we met on the M. V. Victoria gave us two letters for London and two for Paris. We have seen the two London gentlemen. One of them Mr. J. Harvey Theobold is on old man of 70 and very learned. I saw him on 25-4 with Tridandiswami B. P. Tirtha at the 'Friends' House' of the Quackers. He introduced us to Mr. John P. Fletcher, Secretary, London centre of the Friends' Service Council, an elderly gentleman. I talked to him for about 30 minutes. He promised to arrange some meetings for us in the Quackers' Association. All the introductions are in the big trunks which have not arrived yet. We expect them on 28-4-33. It will take 15 days' time before I may begin to meet people by appointment. It is now cold as at Ooty ; but the local people say it is the hottest time of the year. Kindly ask our friends not to write "His Holiness", as both Catholic and Protestants will be offended.

Acquaintance on Board

Letter of Tridandiswami B. H. Bon of 5-5-33 :—

His Divine Grace' letter by Air Mail was received on 4-5-33. This is a land of too much formality and etiquette. Our ordinary wearing cloth is smiled at by ladies and gents on the streets. I have seen Mr. Fletcher of the 'Friends' House'. The letters from * * were very useful. Mr. F. H. Browne C. I. E., of the "Times" was informed by * * of our coming to London. He received me yesterday. Mr.

Frederick Grubb, an old and highly educated gentleman introduced by * * was also awaiting our arrival in London. He will think out in what practical way he can assist us. The Editor "Central News" introduced by * * has already taken up our cause and news have been sent to all papers and it is circulating like fire. I have also seen news Editor of Reuter. He has shorthanded our talk with him and it will be sent down to all papers. Editor, 'Daily Express' was very much interested to talk to us. They have taken our photos and these will be out shortly. Editor, 'Manchester Guardian' wants me to wait for 15 days for arrival of their Eastern news Editor who is now away from London. I expect to see Editors of Free Press of India, Morning Post, Evening News, Daily News, Evening Standard and others. Reporters have already begun to question me on serveral points. Yesterday I have written to Sir Findlater Stewart, India Office. I shall see Sir Samuel Hoare and Mr. Butler. On Tuesday the 25-4-33 Tridandiswami B. P. Tirtha delivered a short speech of twenty minutes at the Indian Students' Union—discussion group. There were twenty Indian students and two English ladies. The lecture was quite good. It was on 'the Message of the Supreme Lord'. As usual in this country questions begin to flow in torrents after the speech. I was desired by Tridandi Swami B. P. Tirtha to conduct the questions.

Landlord and Landlady are always kind to us in teaching English etiquette and formalities whenever we express our desire to learn Here manner maketh a man.

Letter of Tridandiswami B. H. Bon 12-5-33

39, Drayton Gardens, South Kensington, London, S. W. 10., was occupied on 10-5-33.

London office opened

I was invited to tea at Mr. and Mrs. Grubb's on Sunday the 7th inst. at 4 P. M. Sir Alladi Krishna Swami, Advocate General was also one among others. We two were on the same table with Mr. Grubb, our host. The same day there was a huge procession to Hyde Park of the Labour Party. Prominent members of the Parliament (Lobour) spoke brilliantly. We were present naturally with all prominence. Several came forward and we had to answer such questions as 'Why we worship trees ?—hills ?—many Gods ? What happens after death ? What is ghost ? etc." Lt. Colonel Seymour gave me the address where we are living. We are now exclusively alone. We are staying with Mr.

and Mrs. Bellham who are Godfearing people. Mr. Bellham is serving in the Goverment. I was invited to a lecture at Caxton Hall on 9.5.33 when Sir John Thompson, K. C. S. I., K. C. I. E. spoke and the Most Hon'ble the Marquess of Reading, G. C. B., G. C. S. I., G. C. I. E., G. C. V. O., presided. The meeting was organised by East India Association of the Conservative Party. On the proposal of Mr. F. H. Browne, C. I. E., of the Times and General Secretary of the Association I have been accepted as a member. I shall be allowed to give remarks and views at the next meeting on 1st June, on the speech of the main speaker. The season in London ends in July and re-opens in October. This season is fully engaged. Mr. Browne may try to give me earliest chance in October to be the main speaker at Caxton Hall. On the 10th I interviewed Sir Findlater Stewart at India Office by appointment. I had a very lively talk most freely for 40 minutes. I told him of the religious tolerance of the British Crown and explained how a loving relationship must be maintained between the Crown and religious people. In India in early days the King was to protect and support religious men who in their turn were to pray for the safety of the throne. Sir Findlater was much satisfied. He questioned me about our Mission's activities and lastly asked me what he could do for us. I asked him for our paying homage to Their Majesties on behalf of the Mission and to the Prince of Wales, to deliver lectures in Parliament and in the different Universities. He said he would consult with Sir Samuel and do his best to help us in several ways. I have sent my letters to Sir Samuel, Mr. Henry Wheeler, Sir Charles Tegart and Lord Irwin. It will take me at least six months to see all those to whom I have letters. They are again introducing me to their friends. On Sunday next I shall see Mr. H. L. S. Polak, Solicitor, at tea being invited. I am thinking of inviting those whom I have already seen. Back date for return invitation is unmannerly. Sambit has taken his admission today for Doctorate and paid £21. Sambit is daily cooking for us. In the day we take rice, dal and potatoes. In the night we have milk, bread and a curry. This is all that we have as our food. The news agencies are giving full attention to us. During the last week the following papers have published about us :—

Early this week we expect many more papers publishing news about us.

Philosophy will not appeal to them very much at the beginning. We must create interest in the public first. We have not yet received the books from Bombay. I have got receipt of the despatch of Sree Krishna Chaitanya from Bombay ; the books will reach by S.S. Mandola, in which many delegates for the Economic Conference are coming. In addressing letters to us, particularly registered letters, wires and money orders, kindly instruct not to write "His Holiness" or "Bon Maharaj". We will not be given delivery of things and money in that case. Our name in wires or letters must correspond with the name in passports. It is, "Tridandi Swami B. H. Bon" or "Tridandi Swami Bhakti Hriday Bon" and not "Maharaj"

Gaudiya Math in Bombay

The public are already aware of the arrival in Bombay of His Divine Grace Paramahansa Sreela Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj, President of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha and Acharyya of the unalloyed Gaudiya Vaishnava Community, in connection with the despatch of a party of Gaudiya Missionaries for preaching the Religion of Transcendental Love to the Countries of the West.

His Divine Grace is now staying at Jangoo Villa on the Babul Nath Road, close to the Babul Nath Temple, with a large party of learned preachers with the intention of establishing a permanent propaganda centre in Bombay City. The Bombay Gaudiya Math will serve as the head-quarters of the Mission in Western India.

The Message of Sree Krishna Chaitanya has continued to be misunderstood and misrepresented by many of his so-called followers during the last two hundred years. This has given rise to a number of sects within the Gaudiya Vaishnava Communion which profess views, on the alleged authority of Sree Krishna Chaitanya, that are diametrically opposed to His actual teachings. It is the purpose of His Divine Grace to enlighten all persons, irrespective of caste, creed or colour, in regard to the true principles of unalloyed devotion taught by Sree Krishna Chaitanya.

His Divine Grace is inviting the co-operation of all honest servants of Sree Krishna for carrying out this Heart's Desire of Sree Krishna Chaitanya on the lines chalked out by Sree Rupa who was authorised by Sree Krishna Chaitanya to give to the world the message of unalloyed devotion taught by Sree Krishna Chaitanya. His Divine Grace has been joined by hundreds of self-dedicated souls who have renounced the world for carrying the message of Divine Love to all parts of the world by acting up to their preaching.

The expanding activities of Sree Viswa Vaishnava Raj Sabha are represented by the establishment of over forty Maths, i. e. permanent centres of propaganda, in all parts of India. The Sabha is running six journals in different languages and is regularly editing and publishing the priceless works of the immense Gaudiya Vaishnava Literature from its own printing presses. It also employs organised parties of preachers under the lead of trained Paribrajaka Sannyasins who approach all persons in their homes in order to inform them regarding the object and method of the propaganda by discourses, readings and exposition of devotional scriptures, and address public gatherings of the people from the platform by constantly travelling through all parts of the country.

His Divine Grace is always accessible to all honest inquirers. His Divine Grace gives His regular discourses from 4 P. M to 8 P. M. every day. The preachers of the mission are available for addressing public meeting and for giving discourses and expositions, on the invitation of the public. These functions are undertaken by them without any pecuniary remuneration.

Preachers of the Mission arrived in London :—His Holines Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj, His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Hriday Bon Maharaj and Sriman Sambidananda Das Adhicary, Bhakti-sastri. M.A., preachers of Sri Viswa Vaishnav Raj Sabha reached London on April 22.

His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj delivered a short discourse on the Message of the Supreme Lord at the Indian Students' Union, 12 Gower Street, London on May 2.

London office of the Gaudiya Math was opened on May 10, at 39 Drayton Gardens, South Kensington, S. W. 10.

Faridpore :—His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Vivek Bharati Maharaj expounded Srimad Bhagabatam on April 25, at the residence of Sj. Mahendra Nath Saha, Zemindar at Pancharia in the District of Faridpore.

Madras :—His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Rakshak Sridhar Maharaj conducted a Sankirtan procession along the streets of Sri Perembadur, Madras, on April 30 and duly circumambulated the holy temple of Sri Ramanujacharyya. His Holiness had a long discourse with Srijut Ram Das Bhattacharyya M.A., B.T., resident of the local Sanskrit College, who was convinced of the super-excellent of the chanting of the Holy Nama promulgated by Sri Krishna Chaitanya.

Sree Gaudiya Math, Calcutta :—His Holiness Tridandiswami Srimad Bhakti Vilas Gavastinemi Maharaj delivered an interesting discourse on the Teaching of Geeta at the Lecture Hall of Sree Gaudiya Math, Calcutta, on May 6. Swamiji Maharaj spoke for an hour and a half on Sree Rai Ramananda at the same place on May 14

Departure :—Disappearance of Sripad Akinchan Dasadhicary took place at 5 A. M., on April 18 at the Gaudiya Math, Calcutta. He was living at the Math in his old days, serving the Math with zeal and devotion to the last moment of his life. His separation is felt by all devotees.

Foreword

THE name of the Journal, the 'Harmonist', stands in need of a little explanation. 'Sajjana-toshani' the only Sanskrit name headed the paper when she used to appear in Bengali, and the same spirit and aims of the 'Sajjana-toshani' are to be continued though she has now put on the English garb. "Harmonist" is the free English equivalent of the word 'Sajjana-tosham.' This point will bear a little elucidation. The title 'Sajjana-toshani' was adopted to signify a definite purpose.

The word 'Sajjana' is made up of two parts viz. 'Sat' and 'Jana'. 'Sat' is 'Godhead' or the 'Absolute Truth'. This is in accordance with the sruti 'ॐ तत्सत्'. 'Sat' means the Ever-Existent, the Unchangeable, the One Spirit and Harmony Himself. The 'Sajjana' is one who belongs to and serves the 'Sat', 'Toshani' is in the feminine form and means one who is desirous of pleasing. The journal aims exclusively at pleasing 'Sajjanas'. The feminine form of the word is indicative of her attitude of humility in regard to 'Sajjanas'. The word 'Sajjana' is not really narrow in its denotation. To him who possesses the clearest spiritual vision all living beings without exception are 'Sajjanas'. This is specifically borne out by the passage :—

"हे साधवः सकलमेव विहाय दूरात्
चैतन्यचन्द्रचरणे कुरुतानुरागम् ॥"

'Ye Sadhus, bidding farewell to everything from a distance, offer your hearts' devotion at the Feet of 'Chaitanyachandra'.

The 'Harmonist' as preacher of God's Word has to be endowed with the requisite qualities. Her high mission is to please all living beings by conveying to them the Divine Message in the fitting manner. Her object is emphatically not to create rupture but to bring about harmony. This constitutes the vital difference between her and the elevationist or the salvationist. Both of the latter fail to satisfy the hankering of the soul, because they only offer or withhold the things of this world. The elevationist (कर्म्मिन्) attempts to do temporary good to himself or to a few at the expense of others. The object of all good work is at best merely temporary relief and even that is uncertain. All such efforts have, moreover, the invariable dark side. This is true of the so-called philanthropic endeavours no less than of our 'jajnas' that involve the direct sacrifice of animal life (पशुयज्ञ). The Salvationist is a deluded, disguised seeker of his purely individual interest.

Both the systems involve ultimate disappointment and confusion for all concerned. The Salvationist perched on the solitary height of his sterile, egotistic isolation is on reaching his goal condemned to a neutralized existence which is death in life. This prospect is not different from that of the Karmis who are equally deluded, and cannot do lasting good to any one. The remedy that both of these propose for the ills of life is manifestly inadequate and even harmful. Their particularistic methods multiply hostilities and increase confusion. The object of the 'Sajjana-toshani' is the radical cure of evil. Her method is entirely different from those of the elevationist or the salvationist. She is absolutely unselfish and impartial. Her method is that of अमन्दोदया दया' 'non-evil-producing kindness' of Sree Chaitanyadeva so beautifully described by Damodar Swarup, the Second facsimile of the Supreme Lord, in the Sloka—

'हेलोद्धूलितखेदया विशदया प्रोन्मीलदामोदया
शाग्रच्छास्त्रविवादया रसदया चित्तार्पितोन्मादया ।
शश्वद्भक्तिविनोदया समदया माधुर्य्यमर्य्यादया
श्रीचैतन्य दयानिधे तव दया भूयादमन्दोदया ॥'

'Thou ocean of Kindness, Sree Chaitanya, may that vast non-evil-producing Kindness of thine be aroused towards me that tends to dissipate all sorrows with ease, to fully reveal everythig by reason of its purity, to unfold without reserve the transcendent bliss, to conclude all the wranglings of the Shastras, to shower rasa (the quality of harmony), to confer Divinely rapturous intoxication of the pure mind, to cause incessantly the natural flow of devotion, to bestow tranquility of the soul,—and which exhibits the limit of transcendental sweetness.'

With the above object in view the 'Sajjana-toshani' made her first appearance in the year 1879 in the modest form of a Bengali spiritual Monthly edited by Thakur Bhaktivinode. The paper remained under his editorship for seventeen years. She was later made over to the present editor who conducted the paper till she attained her twenty-fourth year of publication. Though the further publication of the 'Sajjana-toshani' was not possible for various reasons the object of the paper was subsequently taken up with vigour by the well-known Gaudiya, the Bengali religious Weekly, which was started five years ago.

The 'Sajjana-toshani' as edited by Thakur Bhaktivinode was mainly in Bengali with occasional separate English numbers. The start was with articles on current topics congenial to the harmonic school of religionists to which were later added original texts of the four Vaishnava Sampradayas with the object of gradually familiarising the public with the vocabulary and technicalities of the four schools. Thakur Bhaktivinode as the Pioneer-Preacher of 'Suddha bhakti' 'pure devotion' in Bengal in the present age had to serve a public which was at the time unprepared to receive his true message in its entirety. Although at that period even his supporters failed to grasp the full meaning of his message, his writings made the general public acquainted with the principles of the Vaishnava-religion in the measure of the capacity of each individual.

The profesors of Vaishnavism or Harmonic School are by tradition divided into three classes according to the quality of their devotion. Those whose devotion is unalloyed are 'Suddha bhaktas'. The 'Misra bhaktas', the next class, consist of those whose devotion is alloyed. The third class, that of 'Biddha bhaktas', practise a form of devotion which is almost wholly perverted. In the days of Thakur Bhaktivinode the number of devotees professing 'Suddha bhakti' in Bengal were very few. His appeals had to be made to the class of 'Misra bhaktas' and 'Biddha bhaktas' among whom he found supporters and sympathisers. The 'Sajjana-toshani' of that period did not altogether escape the influence of the views of these supporters. Thakur Bhaktivinode, himself the Pioneer 'Suddha bhakta,' found it absolutely necessary to tolerate more or less this influence of 'Misra bhaktas' and 'Biddha bhaktas' within the movement. By the will of our Supreme Lord the Sajjana-toshani became subsequently strictly the organ of the Suddha-bhakti movement and it is a proof of the fact that Thakur Bhakti-vinode's object is being carried out that a large number of highly educated and sincere souls have been accepting the principle of "Suddha-bhakti".

Thakur Bhaktivinode issued occasional English numbers of the 'Sajjana-toshani'. His object was to spread the message of 'Suddha bhakti' in and outside Bengal. His object in regard to Bengali-knowing community has been taken up by the Gaudiya-Editorial board. The 'Sajjana-toshani' thus finds herself in a position to cease herBengali garb now on the appearance of the Gaudiya and array herself in English to make her appeals to the world at large.

This is in accordance with the desire of Mahaprabhu, as He gave vent to proselytism. He did not limit His message to any narrow sect. On the contrary, His message is for the whole living world including be it remembered the world of animals and plants. For the purpose of spreading His message of the Divine Love He employs an infinite army of followers.

A passage in the Chaitanya Bhagabata (Life of Sree Chaitanyadeva by Thakur Brindabandas)* clearly records the desire of Mahaprabhu—

'पृथिवीते आछे यत नगरादि ग्राम । सर्व्वत्र प्रचार हइबे मोर नाम ॥'—चैः भाः

'My Name will be preached everywhere, in all the villages and towns of the whole world'.

*The English version of which will appear serially in the 'Harmonist'. The second edition of the original work with exhaustive notes in Bengali is being published by the Gaudiya Printing Works.

The 'Harmonist' seeks to carry out this desire of the Lord. For the present she is appearing in English, Sanskrit and Hindi. But she does not by any means desire to confine herself to these languages only. The Lord desires His Word to be preached to all living beings. The 'Harmonist' stands for this desire. She cherishes the faith that a day will come when His Word will be preached everywhere all over the world through the medium of all the languages including the language of animals and plants when this will be practicable. She believes that Gaursundar will in the fulness of time raise up fit preachers in every part of the world and in numbers amply sufficient for His Purpose. This is the message of the 'Harmonist'.

In conclusion it may be pointed out that association (सङ्ग) with 'Suddha bhaktas' is absolutely necessary to enter into the spirit of Mahaprabhu's teachings. The 'Harmonist' will serve to bring about the association of the public with the 'Suddhabhaktas.' The 'Suddha bhaktas' expect that they can count upon a patient hearing from 'Sajjanas'. Such association will be for mutual benefit. It is necessary at the outset to caution the reader against the theory of 'Vox populi vox Dei'. The 'Harmonist' has nothing to do with 'vox populi'. Her only concern is with 'vox Dei'. It is the voice of God alone that will find utterance in these pages. The kind indulgence of the reader is solicited to overlook shortcomings in expression inseparable from the employment of a foreign language and consider only the spirit irrespective of the defective garb in which she might be clothed.

The Gaudiya Math : Its Message and Activities

BY the grace of the Lord of the Gaudiyas the message of the Gaudiya Math is to-day not unknown to any one in the whole of Gauda Desh—and not in Gauda Desh only, but over Naimisharanya, Ayodhya, Prayag, Kasi, Sree Brindaban, Mathura on one side and also over Dakshinatya and everywhere throughout the tracts of Orissa on the other, has been well proclaimed the message of the Gaudiya Math, the principal branch of the Sree Chaitanya Math which is the root implanted in the soil of the Advent of Sreeman Mahaprabhu, —Sree Mayapur Nabadvipa Dhama. Over Gaudamandala, Kshetramandala and Brajamandala the message of the Gaudiya Math has gone forth.

The truth (satya) is propagated in a two-fold way viz.—positively or by the method of direct support and negatively or by the method of opposition. The truth cannot be made sufficiently known by the positive method alone. Propaganda by the method of opposition more than the presentation of the positive aspect brings about more brilliantly in this world the appearance and glorification of the truth. In the Satya Yuga, Hiranyakasipu more than Prahlad by the adoption of the method of negative propaganda proclaimed greatly the glory of Nrisinghadeva. In the Treta Yuga, Ravana more than Hanumana proclaimed the greatness of Sree Ramachandra to the world. In Dwapara more than the Pandava, Yadava and other devotees, Kansa, Jarasandha, Shishupala and the rest as antagonists proclaimed the greatness of Sree Krishna. In the Kali Yuga,—Jagai, Madhai, Chand Kazi, Prakasananda, Saraswati—the professor of Mayavada, Ramchandra Khan—the hater of Vishnu and Vaishnavas, Ramchandra Puri and in after times, the various hypocrite sects, more than the Bhaktas of Gaur, have proclaimed the greatness of Gaur and Nityananda to the world by adopting the hostile method. The truth is in all ages propagated in this way by the positive and negative methods. The true message of the Sree Gaudiya Math has spread and is spreading in the world in this manner.

It may be asked—'What does the Gaudiya Math do? Is the Gaudiya Math merely one other association like the thousands of sects that are to be found in this world? Or, is the Gaudiya Math one among the other welfare-societies of the world? Or, is the Gaudiya Math one of the many mischievous organisations that carry on their activities in this world? What work does the Gaudiya Math do for the benefit of the world? Is the Gaudiya Math affectionate like a mother, a protector like a father or a helper like a brother? What good does the Gaudiya Math do to the world, what well-being of society does it desire, what very inconsiderable service does it render to mankind that the world, the civilized world, or the whole of mankind, should listen to its message?'—Many such questions may arise in our minds.

The Gaudiya Math is not an association like the thousands of sects. The Gaudiya Math is not desirous of the welfare or non-welfare of the world like other benefit-or-mischief-making societies. The Gaudiya Math does not do work that is beneficial or harmful in terms of worldly enjoyments. The Gaudiya Math is neither affectionate nor cruel like a worldly mother, neither protector nor destroyer like a worldly father, neither helper nor enemy like a worldly brother. What then is this Gaudiya Math that the world should listen to its words?

There need be no want of harmony between the Gaudiya Math and the whole world, as the only disharmony is caused by one little word. The Gaudiya Math says that harmony between itself and the whole world can be established by means of one word, viz. that the duty of all jivas consists in the exclusive service of the Adhokshaja (अधोक्षज) the transcendent. The majority of the people of this world says that the service of the Akshaja (अक्षज), i. e. the phenomenal, is the duty of everyone of the jivas. Even when this is not actually said by word of mouth, in practice it is this that is always done. The Gaudiya Math says that that which is the object of our activities (sadhya) should itself be the only means (sadhan) for the attainment of the object. In the opinion of the majority of men of the world sadhya and sadhan are different, one from the other. The Gaudiya Math says that words like 'unity', 'universal love' etc. so long as one continues to be under the influence of the physical and mental dharma, are mere sounds like such words as akash-kusum (ærial flower) etc. Harmony is possible only when one has obtained a firm footing in the dharma (function) of the soul.

This distinction requires to be made perfectly clear. The service of the Adhokshaja means the service of the transcendental Godhead. That which helps or hinders the gratification of the body or the mind is not the service of the Adhokshaja, it is the service of the Akshaja. The body is pleased by the enjoyment of free air, by gazing at the open sky. The troublesome mind is gratified if it is allowed to roam at will like an unbridled horse, to revel in the beauties of Nature to gather as it lists honey from the many-tinted flowerage of the groves of poesy. The contrary of this the neutralizationist's point of view is based upon repugnance of all gratification. Neither of these is service of the Adhokshaja—both are service of the Akshaja.

The majority of the people of the world, although they profess to be positivists, fail to see, although it must be quite patent, the greatest of all the phenomena. They at any rate forget it in practice even when they appear to know. The greatest of the positivists like Charvaka, although he could not but have observed this greatest of all the phenomena, failed to take notice of it ;—that great phenomenon is generally known by the name of—death.

If the memory of this great event is retained in our minds we would assuredly be solicitous for the 'amrita' (deathlessness). The sruti says we are all children of the 'amrita'—heirs of the 'amrita'—

शृण्वन्तु विश्वे अमृतस्य पुत्राः—(श्वेताश्वः २।५)

'Listen ye, all children of the the amrita.'

In this world there are found two kinds of endeavour for obtaining this 'amrita'. Like unto the sons of kings of the epochs recorded in history some try to ascend the throne of their father by treason against the father ; on the other hand, loyal sons in seeking to be heirs of a kindhearted and affectionate father look upon constant service as being both the means and the end.

The Gaudiya Math under-stands the last-named as being the appropriate and eternal method. Why is it appropriate ? Because—

"शृण्वतां स्वकथाः कृष्णः पुण्यश्रवणकीर्त्तनः । हृद्यन्तःस्थो ह्यभद्राणि विधुनोति सुहृत् सताम् ॥"

'Sree Krishna, the tidings of Whom whosoever listens to or sings is sanctified, the Benefactor of all holy persons, appearing in the hearts of all who listen to the accounts of Himself destroys the evil propensities of their hearts to the very root'. This seed of sin or sinful desire or ignorance (अविद्या) is the cause of the wordly sojourn of the jiva.

Why is the method eternal ? Because—

"भेजिरे मुनयोऽथाग्रे भगवन्तमधोक्षजम् ।"

'In the beginning the 'Munis' 'sages' worshipped the Adhokshaja Bhagabana (the transcendental God in His plenitude) in this way'.

That type of kindness which does not give rise to 'मन्द' 'evil' is termed 'अमन्दोदया दया'. As for example if a sick man is allowed to eat tamarind or a drunkard is helped to proceed to a liquor shop kindness is indeed shown, but in the sequel it turns out to be productive of harm to the person who is the recipient of kindness. If the sick man is placed under medical treatment against his will and inclination, if the drunkard is protected from his evil course, 'अमन्दोदया दया' 'non-harm-producing kindness' is shown. Preventing floods and famines, nursing the sick, pleasing or displeasing anybody, or stultifying the faculty of consciousness of any one—every one of these is an instance of 'मन्दोदया दया' 'harm-producing kindness'. Man can not understand it till he realises his true position. By such acts the jiva is not really benefited. Cutting the root of misery is doing real good to others ; the treatment that allows the gangrene of sensual desires to remain does no real good to the patient,—neither is it a proof of great wisdom out of spite to the gangrene of sensual desires to hang the sick-man holding out the prospect of 'मुक्ति' annihilation as complete and permanent cure.

"स्वयं निःश्रेयसं विद्वान् न वक्त्यज्ञाय कर्म्म हि । न राति रोगिणेऽपथ्यं वाञ्छतो हि भिषक्तमः ॥"

"Just as the best physician, even if the patient evinces a desire for unwholesome food, does not allow it ; in like manner he who is himself aware of 'निश्रेयः' 'the highest good' never advises an ignorant person to do 'कर्म्म'-'work' for his own interest." The Sruti says—

अविद्यायां बहूधा वर्त्तमाना
वयं कृतार्था इत्यभिमन्यन्ति बालाः ।
यत्कर्म्मिणो न प्रवेदयन्ति रागात् तेनातुराः क्षीणलोकाश्च्यवन्ते ॥
—(मुण्डक १।२।९)

—'Ignorant persons being themselves in the midst of manifold 'अविद्या' 'errors' think thus, 'we have gained what we want'. Because they work for their own interest they have no experience of the real truth by reason of their attachment to such work. With extreme solicitude they gain little as the result of their activities. After a time they fall from that position.' The Sruti further says—

अविद्यायामन्तरे वर्त्तमानाः
स्वयं धीराः पण्डितम्मन्यमानाः ।
जंघन्यमानाः परियन्ति मूढ़ा अन्धेनैव नीयमाना यथान्धाः ॥

—(मुण्डक १।२।८)

'Those who remaining in the midst of ignorance consider themselves to be conscientious and enlightened such perverted and ignorant men come to grief like the blind man led by the blind.'

Most people of the world forgetful of their own Home under the spell of the enchantress are running headlong in the opposite direction—in this performance again their intoxication, eagerness, concentration and firm determination are so intense that they have indeed very little opportunity to think about Home. But the voice of the Gaudiya Math, the flying, red-tinted banner of the Gaudiya Math arresting the ear and the eye of all persons is ever proclaiming—

"कृष्ण बल सङ्गे चल एइ मात्र भिक्षा चाइ ।"

'Say 'Krishna', come along ; this is the only alms we beg.'

'Back to God and back to Home is the message of Gaudiya Math.'

"To arrest the pervertedly current tide and to redirect it towards the Eternal Source is the seemingly unpleasant duty of the Gaudiya Math."

The Gaudiya Math says, 'All men of the world without exception are our kin—all birds and beasts, grass and shrubs are our kindred ; whatsoever conscious being wheresoever existing belongs to our Supreme Lord ; we shall conduct our kindred from out of the spells of the enchantress towards Home. We shall not be showing for-the-time-being sweet symapathy for them by enabling those who have fallen into the snares of the enchantress to get more deeply entangled. Even if under the spell of the enchantress they fill heaven and earth with their loud protestations against our endeavours we will still proclaim the message of the 'amrita' to them.

Even if it be contrary to the current of thoughts of the religious or religiously minded people as that term is understood by the world, or appear strange or wonderful to them, we will still for ever practise and proclaim those religious works, the 'sanatan dharma', made by God, the tidings of which are unknown to any of the Rishis, gods, siddhas and men,—the dharma which although it happens to.

be hidden, pure, difficult to understand alone enables us to attain the 'amrita',—the dharma that is the supreme dharma of the jiva, the dharma to which all jivas without exception have a claim, the dharma to which everyone in the universe may become the heir. That dharma is the object as well as the method of our endeavours.

The current that is sweeping the world, the flood on which it is adrift—the famine by which it is distressed—the want, fear, sorrow, delusion by which it is mastered, oppressed and tortured—can be prevented, can be pulled up by the root, by the method of moving Homeward—of self-surrender at the holy feet of the sorrowless and fearless 'amrita.' So long as we shall stay in the foreign land—the greater the distance and the speed with which we shall continue to run towards foreign lands and away from the direction of Home—so long and to the same extent sorrow, fear and delusion will not leave us ; they will on the contrary mock us like the delusive deer by their further and steady increase. The Sruti says—

"द्वितीयाद् वै भयं भवति ।"

—(बृहदारण्यकोपनिषत्)

'Fear must result from the perception of a second entity different from Godhead.' Death cannot be abolished from this mundane world. By no amount of efforts of the united jivas of the whole universe the three-fold misery can be banished to the Andamans. No one can extinguish the fire of Ravana's funeral pyre—it is the water well cooled by contact with the Feet of Sree Ramchandra that alone has the power to quench it. Once the world is fairly embarked on the high tide of the Holy Name the insignificant worldly flood retires forthwith ; if the alms in the shape of the glorification of the songs of Hari become easily procurable, the little famines will leave us for good as a mere attendant result. With the appearance of sorrow-delusion-fear-killing 'bhakti' (devotional faith), avidya (nescience) the root of every form of misery of the jiva is destroyed and the soul is well satisfied.

'Bhakti' is like fire. Nothing else can purify gold in the manner that fire can. Without 'Bhaktiyoga' (association of Bhakti) other forms of effort are meaningless like the attempt to refine gold by the application of tamarind, earth or ashes.

To imagine 'arthabada' in regard to the Holy name, or, in other words, to imagine that the glorification of the Name is mere exaggeration of praise is that Godless intellectual attitude which gives rise to our belief in other tangible forms of effort. We think that the work of glorification, preaching etc. of the Name of Hari is not conducive to the general good. Or again we may think sometimes that the glorification and preaching of the Name is on a level with other kinds of effort. The first is 'arthabad' in regard to the Name, the second is the 'aparadha' 'offence' of believing the Name as being equal to other good works. To have faith in the Holy Name is so very rare that we may leave it out of consideration ; if we had faith even in 'Namabhasa' (the most dimly perceived Name) we would have never said that succouring the victims of floods is better than kirtan and prachar (singing and preaching God).—freeing the country from famines, opening of hospitals are better than preaching devotion to God. Hundreds of famines can be got rid of, not by 'Namabhasa' but, even by 'Namaparadha' (offensive taking of the Name). The 'mukti' that is not obtained in crores of births by 'Brahma-jnan' 'knowledge of Brahman' can be had by one single 'Namabhasa'. This is no exaggeration, this alone is the only true message. Sree Gaursundar, the Saviour-of-Kalijuga 'Avatari' (the source of incarnations) by means of the 'Namacharya' (the teacher of the Name by his own personal example) Sree Thakur Haridas has borne testimony to it. Adopting the Jaina view aggravated by the bad logic of purveyors of vulgar news neither Chaitanyadeva nor any of His devotees was ever in a hurry to prevent flood or famine or to found hospitals, nor did they give any other advice to any one except telling all men at all times and places—

"कलिकाले नाम बिना नाहि आर धर्म्म"

* * *

"खाइते शुइते यथा तथा नाम लय ।
देश काल पात्र नाहि सर्व्व सिद्धि हय ॥

* * *

या'रे देख ता'रे कह 'कृष्ण' उपदेश ।
आमार आज्ञाय गुरु हञा तार एइ देश ॥"

* * *

"उच्च संकीर्त्तन ता'ते करिले प्रचार ।
स्थिर चर जीवेर खण्डाइले संसार ॥"

* * *

"भारत भूमिते हैल मनुष्य जन्म या'र । जन्म सार्थक करि' कर पर-उपकार ॥"

"In the Kaliyuga there is no other dharma except uttering the Name of Krishna.

* * *

Taking the Name in whatever place whether eating or sleeping, irrespective of time, place, person—all is fulfilled."

* * *

"Whomsoever thou meet'st, instruct him about Krishna, by My Command being Guru save this land."

* * *

"Thou did'st proclaim the high Sankirtana and cancel the worldly course of jivas moving or motionless."

* * *

"Ye that are born as men in the land of Bharata, attaining the significance of human life do good unto others."

There is no other dharma of the jiva except kirtan (singing God). To the extent that one disbelieves 'bhakti' 'devotion' as denoted by kirtan or the Holy Name—in other words those who think that all wants cannot be fulfilled by kirtan—to that extent are such people 'nastik' 'atheistical.' The degree of help one gives in the propagation of 'bhakti' as denoted by kirtan is the sole measure of one's belief in God. On the other hand, a man is a 'nastik' 'disbeliever' to the extent that he obstructs kirtan. As the Name has to be taken every moment even while eating or sleeping, as bhakti denoted by kirtan is the only dharma of the jiva, as there is no other dharma except this, where is then time for getting rid of flood or famine or founding hospitals ? Those who claiming to be positivists are forgetful of the greatest of all facts viz. death,—those who being fallen, like the blind man led by the blind, under the spell of the enchantress, loiter about like travellers without an objective, —it is such people that have time for work other than Hari-kirtan (singing Hari). All other efforts with the exception of Hari-kirtan are the cause of 'sansar' 'the worldly sojourn'—the road leading not to the East but in the opposite direction ; on the other hand all-time Hari-kirtan is turning away from every other direction to face the East, or journey Home-ward.

The Gaudiya Math is the missionary of this all-time kirtan. The Gaudiya Math does not ask to destroy all efforts of the world but to deflect their course. The Gaudiya Math begs every one of us to offer his all to Krishna. The 'dhum dham' or pomp and display of the Gaudiya Math is for the sole purpose of making all efforts of the world 'Krishnapara' 'having Krishna as their Goal'. The offering to Krishna comes first and after the offering has been made bhakti begins. The Gaudiya Math says 'make the offering to Krishna first and after that has been done profess to be a 'bhakta' 'devotee'.' The Gaudiya Math says—do not imitate the the 'kirtankari' (one who does kirtan). 'Dhang' 'burlesque' is the other name of 'anukaran' 'imitation.' By arraying oneself in the trappings of 'Dhang' or 'shang' 'harlequin', people can be deceived but no good is done either to oneself or to others. It is those who follow the 'kirtankari' that are really their own benefactors or properly alive to self interest, and also benefactors of others or mindful of others' interests. They are not blinded by considerations of undue personal advantages nor do they cheat others ; and are, therefore, truly disinterested. It is by kirtan alone that the claims of self-interest, interests of others and disinterestedness are simultaneously satisfied.

'Bhog' 'enjoyment' or 'Mukti' 'freedom from misery' in the shape of prevention of famines etc. is gained by

'Namaparadha' 'offensively taking the Name' or by 'Namabhasa' 'taking the dimly perceived Name.' That by which crores of times greater eternal good is produced—whereby the lotus of the eternal well-being of the jiva blossoms forth—that 'Sree Nama' 'Holy Name' the Gaudiya Math endeavours to give away freely. They are earnestly trying to give away freely Krishna Himself.

In this world there are many persons who spread unwholesome doctrines after advertising their intention to give good advice ; but most men are deceived by the idea that the actually pleasurable experience of the moment is the 'good.' In Sanatan-Siksha (instruction to Sanatan)—

"के आमि, केन मोरे जारे तापत्रय । इहा नाहि जानि केमने हित हय ॥"

"Who am I, why doth the three-fold misery afflict me ? I do not know how good can be."

In answer to the question 'how can there be good' the message of the 'good' that Gaursundar, the Expounder of the 'Sanatan-dharma' 'traditional religion' delivered to us regarding the only means of obtaining that 'good' if it once reached our ears we would not have considered 'bhakti' denoted by 'Kirtan' as weak and other methods as strong. Turning our face away from the direction in which the treasure would be easily found we would not have hurried towards the South for the bite of wasps, towards the West for the terrors of the Yaksha (the demon that guards worldly riches), towards the North for offering our lives to the fangs of the black snake. Our Home is Eastward, we are running with all speed away from the East towards other points of the compass ; and when the people of the East call out to us to turn back, deluded by the mirage we say 'We will not listen to you, see what beautiful lakes full of the cleanest water lie yonder before our very eyes.' Talking thus and being by degrees enamoured of that which only appears to our senses we are ever moving away from Home towards foreign lands. In those circumstances the doings of the Gaudiya Math sometimes seem to us and to those who are like-minded with ourselves as being contrary to our ideas. This is likely and need not cause any surprise; but all this notwithstanding the Gaudiya Math bearing its message, with its bright flag flying, emblazoning on it the words that attract our ears and eyes, is ever saying :—

"नेह यत्कर्म्म धर्म्माय न विरागाय कल्पते । न तीर्थपाद-सेवायै जीवन्नपि मृतो हि सः ॥"
"एवं नृणां क्रियायोगाः सर्व्वे संसृति हेतवः ।
त एवात्म-विनाशाय कल्पन्ते कल्पिताः परे ॥
यदत्र क्रियते कर्म्म भगवत्परितोषणम् ।
ज्ञानं यत्तदधीनं हि भक्तियोग-समन्वितम् ॥"

'The work that is not done for the sake of 'dharma,' the 'dharma' that is not performed for the purpose of 'virag'

'renunciation,' the 'vairagya' 'renunciation' that is not practised for the service of Vishnu, such work, 'dharma' or 'Vairagya' whosoever practises is dead in life, The 'naimittic' 'conditional' 'Kamya-Karmas' 'fruitive works' are the cause of 'Sansar-bandhan' 'the bondage of the world' or 'Yoni-bhramana' 'birth-journeys' ; but those very works if they are done for God-head have the power to destroy un-Godliness. The 'bhagavaj-jnanam' 'Divine knowledge' associated with 'bhakti' 'devotion' denoted by sraban, kirtan etc. (listening to, singing etc.) is assuredly the unswerving fruit of work that are performed in this world for pleasing God.'

—It is this that is the subject of the propaganda of the Sree Gaudiya Math. The Sree Gaudiya Math by its practice proclaims that without the gratification of the senses of God-head by the gratification of the senses of the jiva no real good can accrue either to oneself or to others. By invocation of 'mukti' 'annihilation' in deprecation of the pleasures of the senses of the jiva, God is not served. There are many hypocrite-sects who counterfeit 'bhakti' 'devotion' by assuming the paraphernalia of the false devotee but are not aware that 'bhakti' is an impulse of the soul. Of these some for the purpose of filling their bellies, some for fame, or some again by imitating some other purpose serve to delude the people.

The Gaudiya Math says—in the name of dharma it is not proper to practise trade. Not using Hari to serve our own pleasures, our duty is only to serve 'Sree Hari.' The Gaudiya Math says that imitating the devotee of Hari or putting on the dress of Narad as in a theatrical performance is far from walking after the devotee of Hari or following Narad. The delightful tune, time, cadence alone do not constitute the Hari-kirtan of the Gaudiya Math ; those are found even in the performances of the gramophone or of harlots. 'Chetanata' 'consciousness' is necessary, the fiery life is necessary, simultaneous practice and preaching is necessary. The Gaudiya Math says that he who does not possess a pure character is not fit even to be styled man not to speak of being regarded as religious (धार्म्मिक). The Gaudiya Math keeps at a distance from the five 'Kalisthanas' 'abodes of quarrel'. The 'Kalisthanas' according to a text of the Bhagabata are the following—(1) dissipating games such as cards, dice etc. ; trade or the profession of a trader in the name of dharma ; (2) indulgence in luxuries such as betel, tobacco, wines etc. ; (3) improper association with woman or unusual addiction to one's own wife ; (4) animal slaughter ; not to proclaim the truth to people but to deceive them by un-truth ; not to preach Harikatha 'the word of God' to jiva ; in lieu of Harikatha to give other kinds of advice ; (5) by cheating people or by accepting money that is earned by their labour from people in general to apply such wealth to the maintenance of wife and children or increasing the scope of one's own enjoyments; not to employ everything the body, mind and speech of the jiva-life, wealth and intellect—in the service of Sree Vishnu who is the Proprietor of all things and the Supreme Lord of all wealth.

The shastra says, of all things the human body is the dearest to God; the human body is the giver of the 'paramartha' 'highest good' and is very difficult to obtain; and, therefore, while this body lasts, without being immersed in any other thing, not deceiving ourselves by thinking that any other method except sorrow-stupor-fear-killing 'bhakti' is productive of good, it is our duty unceasingly to practise devotion. Other forms of devotion to God are weak, the devotion denoted by kirtan is strong. Once the protection of the strong 'bhakti' is secured it gives to jivas the highest good with little effort on their part. Therefore, by preaching kirtan at all times to induce, by right of the highest kinship, the whole of the jiva to turn Homeward is true universal love, true help of others, true kindness and the true duty of life. The Gaudiya Math embracing all without exception the inhabitants of the universe, in sadness calling upon all to turn their face towards God to be preachers of this bhakti denoted by kirtan, says,—

"हे साधवः सकलमेव विहाय दूरात्
चैतन्यचन्द्रचरणे कुरुतानुरागम् ।"

"Ye, the righteous, bidding goodbye to everything from a distance, offer the devotion of your hearts to the Feet of Chaitanyachandra."

Associated-Counterpart

THE Sanskrit word 'Guru' (गुरु) ordinarily means 'heavy' as opposed to 'Laghu' (लघु) meaning 'light'. In its technical and etymological sense, the meaning of the term is 'One Who by His Super-human (अतिमर्त्य) Personality and the light of great examples of the trancendent force of His devout character dispels the darkness or ignorance of the human-heart and transfuses Himself into the lives of those who unconditionally and sincerely surrender themselves to His Divine Feet.' Such is the great Personality, the Highest Ideal, that bears the appellation of Guru in the Shastras. Hence the Sruti says :—

"तद्विज्ञानार्थं स गुरुमेवाभिगच्छेत् समित्पाणिः श्रोत्रियं ब्रह्मनिष्ठम् ॥"

"To know the Godhead fully, one should completely and most humbly surrender himself to the Holy Feet of a Guru, Who is versed in the Srauta Shastras (श्रौतशास्त्र) and is ever-devoted to Brahman."

Some may question this saying,—'what can be more intolerable than to submit to another's control over our conduct—nay, over the whole course of our spiritual life ?' Verily resignation, submission or a complete obedience come into direct collision with the ordinary activities, based on empiricism, of our misdirected free-will which always leads us to the pursuit of the senses. It is easier to bear fasts and austerities or to part with any necessaries of life than to submit one's will to that of another who is a close and devout follower of the Transcendent Truth (अधोक्षज सत्य). But to surrender oneself sincerely to the Highest Ideal is the greatest of all sacrifices and it is the only royal road to the Goal of Unbounded Eternal Bliss.

As students of the empirical school, we are also expected to urge—we may obey God but why need we obey a Guru ?' In anticipation of such words coming from our lips as the out-come of unconscious apathy towards Godhead, God Himself tells us in language that cannot be misunderstood—

"आचार्य्यं मां विजानीयात् नावमन्येत कर्हिचित् । न मर्त्त बुद्ध्यासूयेत सर्व्वदेवमयो गुरुः ॥"

'You should know that the Acharyya is the associated counter-part of Myself. He should never be disregarded in any way. With the very limited power of mundane knowledge the transcendent conduct of the Acharyya should not be measured and found fault with. The Acharyya is the embodiment of all Godliness.'

Guru or the Spiritual Guide is a God-sent Super-human Personality to save us from the bondage of empiricism. We are not to look upon Him or trust in Him or His transcendent wisdom as if He were a mortal being ; thereby we would be totally led astray from the path of devotion (भक्ति). The Spiritual Pastor to Whom we submit is the Ambassador of Vishnu to lead us into the eternal kingdom of Vaikuntha (वैकुण्ठ) i. e. the kingdom which is free from all form of want. The Godhead helps us, speaks to us through His associated counterpart, we mean, our eternal Spiritual Master, the Gurudeva (गुरुदेव). We can never so surely discover God's Will, God's Voice, as through the channel of humble obedience and sincere surrender to our Spiritual Master, so emphatically taught and devoutly practised by all the true devotees of olden times. The Spiritual Guide or Acharyya is our Model—the Highest Ideal, before us. We need not shrink through pride, vanity or self-sufficiency from treading in His foot-steps. So we should take the vow of sincere obedience to the Divine Words of our Spiritual Guide, remembering Him to be the most beloved, the associated counter-part, of the Godhead,—Who condescends to come down from Baikuntha to lead us thither, our original abode Without such a Spiritual Guide or Guru a person is like a boat without a helmsman or a ship without rudder or compass, left to drift hither and thither with every wind that blows. Hence the Acharyya says :—

"यो गुरोश्चरणं समवहाय भगवदन्तर्मुखी कर्त्तुं प्रयतन्ते, ते तेषु तेषु उपायेषु खिद्यन्ते अतो व्यसनशतान्विता भवन्ति अतएव इह संसारे तिष्ठन्त्येव। अकृतकर्णधारा जलधौ यथा तद्वत्।"

'Those who attempt to approach the Godhead ignoring the Holy Feet of the Gurudeva are put into great difficulties by the very means they adopt. They are overtaken by hundreds of dissipations. Hence they are surely forced to remain in the succession of births and rebirths. As a lay man in a boat without the assistance of helmsman intending to cross the ocean is sure to lose his life, so a man intending to approach Godhead without the help of the Guru is sure to be lost'.

The true devotees of the Absolute Truth—Krishna, are the salt of the earth ; they are the medicines of human lives that are suffering from spiritual sickness. Without their presence and occasional advent in this world, the world would not be worth living in. And our Guru or Spiritual Guide should be one who is the best of all such true devotees.

Because the spiritual Guide is above all human frailties, ignorance and weakness, because He is Krishna's own Person—Krishna's most beloved—Krishna's associated counter-part,—so He is the fittest Person to guard us against the deceits of illusion or Maya. God's own person can alone shield us from the clutches of illusion and confirm by His light of examples the importance of unalloyed devotion. There is healthy contagiousness in His undeviating adherence to the Absolute Truth, in every example of His devout action. His ever-living Words are like sharp-edged weapons cutting the tangled knots of our mental attachment to empericism. His words are inspiration to the weak in heart and healing balm to those who are constantly suffering from spiritual sickness. A Spiritual Guide is the living beacon on the path of devotion.

But where can be found such Highest Ideal ? The truly sincere and humble soul that earnestly desires to advance in spiritual life will get such an Ideal. But if we consciously or unconsciously want to be cheated we shall accordingly get a cheat. For there run the words of the Godhead himself—

"ये यथा मां प्रपद्यन्ते तांस्तथैव भजाम्यहम्।"

'I deal out justice according to the manner I am approached, i. e. if one approaches me with a sincere heart I also deal with him sincerely that is show him the true path by sending my Own Person to him, on the other hand, he who tries to cheat me is deluded by my Maya.

If good Guides are rare, much more are good subjects for guidance. The Sruti says :—

आश्चर्योऽस्य वक्ता कुशलस्य लब्धा
आश्चर्यो ज्ञाता कुशलानुशिष्टः ॥

Too many of us want to be directed after our own fashion and would fain combine the double service against which the Acharyyas have warned us those of God and of the world :—

"लोकरक्षा गोराभजा एकत्रे निष्फल"

'To try to retain all worldly advantages and to serve God at one and the same time is incompatible.'

So if we earnestly and sincerely desire to devote our life for the eternal service of the Absolute Truth,—Krishna, we should pray most sincerely to Him to supply us with a Guide after His Own Heart (and not after our ever-deceiving heart or emotional fancy); and never doubt but that He will kindly send to us His own most trusted and most beloved Agent—His associated counter-part. Verily except Krishna's own Representative no one is fit to occupy the most responsible office of a Spiritual Guide.

So we should be most careful in choosing a Guru. Rather it is impossible for a man who is ever likely to be duped by the senses or phenomena to choose a Guru Who is not a thing of this World, Who is the Transcendent thing, that has condescended to come down to the earth according to God's Will.

No professional priest or "sale-tongued" preacher can hold the position of a Guru. Mercenary people are actuated by personal motives, self-interest and vanity and are not intent solely on God's Glory and the good of the fallen souls like a True Spiritual Guide. As a man in fetters and hand-cuff cannot unchain another man who is in a like predicament, so a man claiming to be Guru but himself fallen in the clutches of Maya, can not free another from the same danger.

No question of heredity can arise in choosing a Spiritual Guide. As it has been previously said that our Spiritual Guide should be a God-sent Person—the direct Representative of Krishna so mundane reference has no value in His case. Even worldly common sense tells us that the son of a doctor cannot always necessarily be a doctor. Krishna's Representative appears in this world irrespective of heredity. Sree Mahaprabhu says :—

किबा विप्र, किबा न्यासी, शूद्र केने नय ।
येइ कृष्णतत्त्ववेत्ता, सेइ गुरु हय ॥

Whether He appears in a Brahmin family, whether He is found in the garb of a Sannyasin or even if He makes His appearance in this world in a Shudra family, whosoever is versed in Krishna-tatva (the transcendent knowledge of Krishna) He and He alone is fit to be a Spiritual Guide.

It follows, therefore, that neither an elevationist nor a salvationist is fit to be a Guru because they themselves are in the state of want (अभाव) and not in their natural and true position (स्वभाव). The man who has lost his natural position i. e. the eternal service of Krishna which is the only eternal function of the Soul (जीवात्मा), is in a state of want and, led astray by the energy of Maya, tries to fulfil his wants by the things that are mundane. In this way sometimes he thinks to make up his shortcomings by turning himself an elevationist so as to have the taste of soma-liquor, to have women, gold and fame in this and after-worlds, or sometimes critically ignoring such hedonistic attitude he takes the pessimistic view of the world and becomes a salvationist.

Both of them are needy persons, and it is a matter of common sense that a needy person cannot remove the needs of another. The Shastras enjoin strict avoidance of any spiritual dependence on these classes. It is incumbent on us, therefore, to take refuge at the Holy feet of a Devotee, Who serves Krishna, by all means and at all times.

In conclusion, let us prostrate ourselves at the Holy Feet of Gurudeva, Who is no other than the associated counter-part of Krishna and Who being Kindness Incarnate, is ever busy in kindly operating on the cataractous eye of ignorance of Jivas with the spikelet of transcendental knowledge, thus opening their eternal spiritual eyes and anointing them with the collyrium of unalloyed and disinterested love for Krishna.

Thakur Haridas

WE shall reverently review the career of Sree Thakur Haridas who was so entirely devoted to the service of Sree Hari in the spirit of Thakur Haridas whose pride was in the servitude of the Supreme Lord and shall feel satisfied by thus honouring ourselves and hope that the reader will share our satisfaction. The great devotee made his appearance in this world at the village of Budhan, in the district of Jessore, towards the end of the 14th century. It is necessary to have some idea of the state of society in Bengal at that period in order to be able to understand the significance of the Thakur's appearance. The caste-system had lost all its propriety and its so-called purity was only another name for oppressive practices due to the grossest abuse of its principles. The views regarding religion that were then upheld by the public opinion of the so-called religious communities were nothing but the infuriated expression of sectarian rancour. On the one hand, the rotten Hindu-society swollen with the pride of caste showed every contempt for those who formed the lower grades of its own strata and in the name of religion endeavoured merely to realise selfish ambitions. Their practice of religion took the forms of hostility to Vaishnabas and attacks on the Sanatan Dharma—the Eternal Religion of all Jibas. The meanness of the selfish, contempt for the true faith, wanton cruelty showed all the virulence of a chronic disease that had penetrated to the very bones and marrow of the Hindu society. On the other hand, the narrow-minded Yavana sampradaya was enacting scenes of malice, hatred, aggression and oppression towards the Hindu-community. The Yavana-society failing to appreciate the true greatness of Hinduism never desisted from its persistent and many-sided activities against the religion of the Hindus. The Aryas and Yavanas of Bengal were acting towards each other on the conviction that the dharma of man was based on the principle of mutual animosity leading to unjustifiable attacks on the mode of worship of each by the other. The contending passions of the two parties brought untold suffering on society in Bengal. The generality of the people devoid of all religious association and demoralised by every form of luxury held in high estimation the pleasures of the world and material power. Exter al display had become so prominent in all the religious practices of the Hindus that it would be no exaggeration to say that there was not a single person who had any sympathy for the method of artless devotion. Under the inpression that the attainment of the kingdom of the next world was a feat as difficult as the crossing of the highest mountain peaks, the difficult methods of the Yoga, arduous bratas 'vowed observances' such as Chandrayana etc., severe Brahmacharyya and Sannyasa 'asceticism' etc. were pointed out as the paths leading to Bhukti 'enjoyment' or mukti 'annihilation'. As they had doubts regarding the possibility of attainment of the trivial fruits of dharma, artha and kama by offensive taking of the Name and of mukti the goal of the so-called vedantist practices by taking the dimly perceived Name, the Hindus had absolutely no respect for the straight path of devotion,

In these dark days of Bengal, thirty or thirtyfive years in advance of the appearance of Bhagaban Shree Chaitanya-deva, in order to help the transcendent activities of Him Who is Love Himself, the four-faced Birinchi appeared in non-Hindu Yavana family in the village of Budhan. The actual site of Budhan village is not known at the present day. But several maujas belonging to Budhan pargana are remembered by the inhabitants of the locality. We do not learn anything about the boyhood of Thakur Haridas from authoritative works. No reliance can be placed on recent books on the subject that offer fictitious accounts bearing the names of ancient authors. In the opinion of some the appearance of Brahma in non-Hindu Yavana family was in expiation of the offence of stealing the calves. There are some again who hold that Shree Pralhad Maharaj became visible under the name of Haridas.

When he grew up in years Thakur Haridas, giving up the social customs and principles of the Yavana family was found constantly taking the Name of Shree Hari. The writers who have recorded the lila of those days are silent as regards the agent by whose instigation Thakur Haridas was initiated in the rite of the Name of the Godhead transgressing the rules of Yavana society and also as regards the person whose mercy he obtained. We, therefore, feel a certain degree of apprehension in adducing proofs in support of those facts after the lapse of such a long period. Haridas ascertained that to pray to God without any selfish object giving up all mundane expectations and impulses is the only duty of life. After having arrived at this decision though still very young. Thakur Haridas left Budhan and taking up his residence in a solitary cell close to Benapole began loudly taking the Name of Krishna.

Sree Kshetra and Alalnath

SREE Kshetra is one of the holiest Vaisnab Tirthas, has ever been the seat of the worship of Vishnu and is accordingly styled 'Dashavatara Kshetra' in the Shastras. Sree Jagannath Deva is the Sovereign of the Purusottam kshetra. The Sankhyayana Brahmana says :—

"आदौ यद्दारु प्लवते सिन्धोः पारे अपुरूषम् । तदा लभस्व दुर्दृनो तेन याहि परं स्थलम् ॥"

As explained by the Sankhyayana Bhasya, the sloka means "from eternity in the remote land the Brahma-in-the-Form-of-Wood Who is not made by anybody, manifests Himself on the shores of the sea. All worshipping Him attain the region of the best Vaisnabas" The account of the Daru-Brahma as being wellknown in the Sruti is repeatedly mentioned in the Smritis. The Sreemurtis of Jagannath Deva, Balaram and Suvadra are eternal. The worship of Sree Jagannath Deva appears to have been restored in very early times by Adi Visnusvami from the clutches of pseudo Vaishnabas passing in the name of Buddhists. The Car Festival dates from his time. According to old tradition Utkal was conquered in very earily times by king Pandya Vijaya of the Pandya country who on the occasion removed the Sree Bigrahas from Nilachal to a place afterwards named Sundarachal from where they were again brought back to Nilachal on the departure of the conqueror. This event, it is said, was the origin of the Car Festival and it appears to be indicated by the term Pahandi (i.e. Pandya Vijaya) applied to the ceremony when the Sree murtis are brought out of the Temple and placed on the cars.

Adi Vishnu Svami was the son of 'Deveswar' or 'Deva Svami' the Purohit and mantrin of king Pandya Vijaya. The pseudo-Vaishnabas were powerful in Sree Kshetra and regained possession of the Temple and continued their mode of celebration newly adopting the practice of the Car Festival and other ceremonies instituted by Adi Vishnu Svami although they changed the names of the Sree Bigrahas and converted the Temple into a Buddhist-Shrine. Sree Kshetra according to tradition was in later ages visited by Sree Sankaracharyya, Sree Ramanujacharyya, Sree Madhvacharyya and Sree Nimbarkacharyya whose sampradayas established their respective maths at the place.

The World-Teacher Sree Gouranga Deva attended by Prabhu Nityananda arrived at Nilachal in the beginning of the sixteenth century as the Acharyya of the Madhva Gaudiya Sampradaya. He was later on joined there by Sree Advaita Prabhu, Sree Thakur Haridas, Sree Svarup Damodar, Sreepad Gosvamis who were His agents and the general body of His followers. The transcendental activities of Sreeman Mahaprabhu at Nilachal where He resided for the last eighteen years of the period during which He was manifest in the world are described by Sreemad Kaviraj Gosvami in the Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita. To this day all the spots at Sree Kshetra sanctified by His deeds are visited by all devout pilgrims.

Om Vishnupad Sreemad Thakur Bhaktivinode the Pioneer Preacher of suddha Bhakti of the present age performed Hari-bhajan in Sree-Kshetra during many years. The Sree Purusottam Math and the seva of Sree Gour Sundar have been established in the Thakur's Bhajan kuti these six years.

Alalnath is well-known to the readers of Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita. It is situated on the sea-shore fourteen miles to the south of Puri where stands the beautiful stone-temple of Sree Alalnath, a four-armed Bigraha of Vasudeva. The Sree Bigraha of Alalnath (Alwar-nath) is alleged to have been set up by one of the twelve alwars (alwar is the Tamil equivalent of the associate of the Godhead) and serves as the connecting link between the Tamil lands of the south and the Odhra – Utkal Desha. During the period of anabasara (i. e. commencing from after the day of snanyatra to before Navayaubana) Sreeman Mahaprabhu retired to Alalnath from Puri and resided there with some of His devotees. The Sree Brahma Gaudiya math has been established as a branch of the Sree Chaitanya Math close to the Sree Mandir where Sree Chaitanya Deva used to reside during his stay at Alalnath.

Let us hope that the Purusottam Kshetra will again become the centre for the propagation of the doctrine of suddha bhakti taught here through so many years by the supreme Lord Himself and from here spread to the extreme limits of the south by way of Alalnath.

FIRST PART

CHAPTER I.

Summary :—The chapter constitutes the brief introduction to the subject. In the five opening verses which are in Sanskrit obeisance is made to Sree Chaitanya, Nityananda and the devotees of Vishnu. This is followed by the Mangalacharana (auspicious act in the beginning for success of the work) in which the obeisance to the devotees takes precedence of that to Chaitanyachandra Himself. Then comes the obeisance to Nityananda, the tutelary Divinity of the author. His grace is recognised as the source of the author's inspiration in the undertaking which is beyond the capacity of mortals. In this connection Nityananda Tattva (the Truth about Nityananda) is established and elaborated. The chapter concludes with a succint enumeration of the transcendent activities of Gaursundar and ends, as in the case of every subsequent chapter, with a declaration of the author's dependence on the grace of Nityananda. The attitude is that of resigned humility.

The Lila (transcendent activities) of Sree Chaitanya has been divided into three separate parts. The first part Adikhanda is devoted mainly to the display of His learning. In the middle part Madhyakhanda is described the display of 'kirtan' (preaching). The last part Antyakhanda chiefly deals with the preaching of the Sreenam (Holy Name) in the garb of ascetic during His residence at Nilachal (Puri).

1. With arms extending to the knee, of colour yellow like that of gold,
The only two progenitors of the Sankirtan (1), with wide eyes resembling the lotus,
The two Protectors of the world, the two Supremes of the twice-born, the two Divine fosterers of yuga-dharma, (2)
Make I obeisance to the Twin, the Benefactors of the world, the Embodiments of the Divine Pity.

2. Obeisance to the Existent in the three-fold time, Son of Jagannath, Obeisance to Thee with Thy servants, sons and consorts.

3. Appearing in the world, with Mercy, of average human Form, Ever Existent Lords, Sree Krishna Chaitanya and Nityananda, the two Brothers I do worship.

4. Glory to Him, of tempered prowess, bright as gold, with lotus-wide eyes,
With six arms reaching to the exquisite knee, diversely dancing to perfection, replete with mellow devotion.

5. All Glory to Divine Krishna Chaitanya Chandra,
All Glory to His Deeds that are eternal and holy,
All Glory to the servant of the Lord of the Universe,
All Glory to the Dance of all His beloved.

6. In the beginning at the feet of Sree Chaitanya's loved followers
My prostrated obeisances I make in end-less ways.

7. Then bow I to Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the Great Lord,
Who appearing in Nabadvipa bore the Name of Bisvambhar.

8. 'The worship paid to My devotees is higher than mine',
The selfsame Lord didst affirm in the Vedas and the Bhagabata.

9. 'I hold as higher in every way the worship that is paid to My devotees,

10. Wherefore have I in the beginning offered my homage to His devotees ;
Thus augurs it well for the success of the undertaking.

11. Obeisance to the cherished Divinity of my worship, Nityanandarai,
By Whose grace the glorious deeds of Chaitanya manifest themselves.

12. Obeisance to Lord Balaram with a thousand Faces, Whose thousand Mouths are the abode of the glorious deeds of Krishna.

The Para-Vidya-Pitha at Sree Mayapur

HISTORY bears testimony to the fact that Sree Nabadvipa at the time of Mahaprabhu was a vast University-town to which students from all countries flocked in very large numbers for advanced studies in all branches of Sanskrit or unalloyed learning. They sat for the purpose at the feet of numerous eminent Professors who had their 'tols' in the town and who freely admitted those who submitted to the rules of pupilage into their household where the students had the privilege of sharing the pure and simple life of their preceptors. If the purity of the fountain-head can be restored we may reasonably expect that we would again have in our midst eminent Professors, capable of guiding to transcendence deeply versed in all branches of learning devoting their lives to expounding the real meaning of the Shastras that has well-nigh been forgotten to inquisitive seekers of the Truth and enable Nabadvipa to regain its glorious position as the greatest seat of transcendental Sanskrit learning.

With the above object in view the Para-Vidya Pitha has been established at Sree-Dham Mayapur, the place of Advent of Sreeman Mahaprabhu. The Vyakarana (Harinamamrita Vyakarana of Sripad Jiba Goswami) and Kavya classes have already been started. Classes in Navya and Madhwa Nyaya, in Vedanta with the commentaries of the different schools and in other subjects will be opened as soon as a sufficient number of pupils of the right type are available. The Para-Vidya Pitha will in the long run provide for the teaching of the Vedas, Vedanta, Nyaya, Sahitya, Smriti and other branches of Vedic and Sanskrit learning.

Para-Vidya means learning by which the Godhead can be realised and the term indicates the spirit in which all studies should be undertaken. The Para-Vidya Pitha hopes to provide by the Grace of Mahaprabhu the highest training in the different Shastras in a pure and unworldly atmosphere to all sincere students.

Sreedham Mayapur :—The annual function of the Circum-ambulation of the nine islands of Sree Nabadvipa was duly performed by thousands of devotees, who had assembled from all parts of India. The huge procession of the devotees started from the Sree Chaitanya Math preceded by Sankirtan and led by His Divine Holiness Paramahansa Thakur going the round of each island in one day and completing the Circum-ambulation of Sree Nabadvipa in nine days. At each island Mahaprasad and accommodation were provided for everybody free of cost. The Advent of Sree Gour Sundar was celebrated on the following day by treating all assembled people to Mahaprosad and by Sankirtan and Harikatha by His Divine Holiness Paramahansa Paribrajakacharyya Sreemad Bhaktisiddhanta Saraswati Thakur with their Holinesses the Tridandi-Swamijis of the Gaudiya Math. The next day Sree Sree Gandharbika Giridhari were solemnly installed by His Divine Holiness Paramahana Thakur in the specially designed and newly built Temple. It is a composite structure consisting of the main shrine which is in the middle from which project laterally four minor shrines. Sree Gandharbika Giridhari and Sree Mahaprabhu occupy the main shrine. Each of the minor shrines is occupied by one of the founder Acharyya of the four Vaishnab Sampradayas viz Sree Ramanuja, Sree Nimbarka, Sree Vishnuswami and Sree Madhwa. The lofty temple stands with its spacious Natmandir within the Sree Chaitanya Math. An immense concourse of people witnessed these grand ceremonies and joined enthusiastically with the Sankirtan party that circumambulated the temple. Mahaprosad was distributed to all present without stint.

The Suddha Sanatanist-Conference assembled next day in the Sree Chaitanya Math under the presidency of His Divine Holiness Paramhansa Thakur. It was attended by the devotees from all parts of India at the special invitation of the Viswa Vaishnab Raj-sabha. It was proposed to take immediate steps for the establishment of a Veda Vidyalaya attached to the Sree Chaitanya Math. Careful arrangement had been made for the accommodation of those devotees who came from a distance to take part in the conference.

Separate and special arrangements were made for the accommodation of ladies who came to witness these ceremonies. Mahaprasad and accommodation were provided in all cases.

Thakur Bhaktivinode

THAKUR Bhaktivinode 'the founder of the Sajjanatoshani' made his auspicious advent into this world on the 2nd September 1838. He remained visible to us for a period of seventy-six years.

The seat of the family in which Thakur Bhaktivinode made his appearance is Calcutta but he first saw the light in the village of Birnagar (Ula) within Nabadwipamandal (the circle of Nabadwipa). One of the ancestors was the recipient of the special favour of Lord Nityananda, the Associated Counterpart of Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya. In boyhood Thakur Bhaktivinode resided in his maternal uncle's house at Birnagar in the midst of opulence. He was overtaken by a sudden adversity in his eleventh year. Shortly after this he came to Calcutta.

In Calcutta, Thakur Bhaktivinode studied in the Hindu Charitable Institution for four years and later in the Hindu College. From Calcutta he proceeded to Orissa and took up his residence for a time in the village of Chhuti. There he taught in a school which he established in the neighbourhood, at Kendrapara, the headquarters of the sub-division. In 1859 Thakur Bhaktivinode moved to Puri. He next served as a teacher at Cuttack, Bhadrak and Midnapur.

In 1861 Thakur Bhaktivinode's long service under Government began. He was employed in various capacities and at different places. While posted at Puri he disposed of the case of the notorious Bishakishan * whom he convicted and sent to prison.

* Bishakishan belonged to the sect of atibadis, so numerous in Orissa, originally founded by Jagannathdas a Brahman of Jajpur who adopting 'mayabad' (the doctrine of illusion) fell away from the path of unalloyed devotion and cut off his connection with Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya. A few persons belonging to this atibadi sect of whom Bishakishan was the leader gave themselves out to be a new type of avatars (incarnations) and assuming the role of Krishna indulged in all sorts of profane immoralities under the guise of Ras pastimes. Bishakishan attained Yoga-siddhi (miraculous powers acquired by practising Yoga i.e. certain forms of ascetic severities) and gave sundry proofs of it. He predicted correctly future events and his remedies in treating diseases were infallible. His selfish desire for material aggrandisement filled him with worldly ambition and in Thakur Bhaktivinode was employed by Government to supervise and organise the proper management of the Temple of Jagannath.

During a short leave Thakur Bhaktivinode went to Sree Brindaban where he met Sree Jagannathdas Babaji. While visiting Sree Radhakunda, Gobardhan and the other holy sites, Thakur Bhaktivinode heard of the oppression that was practised there at that time by a gang of professional robbers who bore the name of Kanjharhs. By great exertions he was able to reclaim this powerful gang and even induced them to lead moral lives.

The publication of the Sajjanatoshani was begun in 1879. Thakur Bhaktivinode re-established the Vishva Vaishnav Sava in Calcutta in 1884. In 1887 while posted at Krishnagar, Thakur Bhaktivinode made the discovery of the Site of Advent of Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya. The identification of the site which was in accordance with the transcendent experiences of Sree Jagannathdas Babaji and other Siddha (Perfect) holy sages was corroborated by the evidence of the records of the Collectorate which were for the purpose, subjected to an exhaustive and searching examination by Thakur Bhaktivinode who in his official capacity had free access to them.

Thakur Bhaktivinode now turned his attention to the active preaching of the Sree Nama (the Holy Name) and journeyed to different places for the purpose. The Nabadwipdham Pracharini Sava was established in 1300 B. S. In that year on the full-moon day of the month of Falgun the Sree Vigrahas (Holy Images) of Sree Gaur and Vishnupriya were installed at Sree Mayapur the place of Advent of the Supreme Lord. Thakur Bhaktivinode retired from service under Government in 1894.

Thakur Bhaktivinode is the author of a vast number of works on शुद्धभक्ति (unalloyed devotion), numbering over a hundred, in Bengali, English, Oriya, Hindi, Persian and Sanskrit. This is a superhuman record, especially if we bear in mind the fact that the task involved the close examina- of many Sanskrit and Bengali works that were then almost unknown and could be procured only with great difficulty ; and several big books had to be copied out in their entirety by the author with his own hand. Some of his works are of immense dimension and everyone of them is a priceless treasure that will ever remain an inspiration to those who choose to walk in the path of unalloyed devotion. It is not possible to deal with the contents of those works here. It is our intention to review them in regular and systematic way in future issues of this Journal.

Thakur Bhaktivinode ceased to be visible in this world on 23rd June 1914.

The above is a brief outline of the exoteric activities of Thakur Bhaktivinode which had as their only object the service of Sree Krishna. He was Sree Gauranga's Own ; and his holy impulse of constant service of Hari was manifest in the absolute artlessness of his external conduct as of his inmost thoughts. He made his appearance in this world at a time when Gaudamandal (the holy land of Gauda) had become an arena of the unholy contentions of so-called religious sects of every description which were unanimous only in their relentless hostility to the doctrine of unalloyed and eternal devotion to God. Thakur Bhaktivinode appeared in this world out of divine pity for us with the object of remedying those disorders by the ministration of the healing balm of the loving instructions of Sree Chaitanyachandra. His acts are those of a Vaishnav who is ever pure, ever free from every defect, ever delighting only in the Name of Krishna and ever indifferent to mere worldly values. Those alone are privileged to have the sight of a Vaishnav who have their faces turned towards God.

furtherance of his selfish interests he fomented risings against the Government. Mr. Ravenshaw—after whom the College at Cuttack is named—took a keen personal interest in this affair and gave his close attention to every phase of it.

Religious Views.

'DHARMA' means 'that by which we are enabled to fully understand the reality'. In regard to such understanding all objects are found to be divided into two broad classes viz. those that are living and those that are devoid of the principle of life. We are living beings. We see the world as its observers. We act independently on our own initiative. But in our present estimation life-less objects cannot do all this. Knowing, willing, feeling are the natural functions of the living. The non-living do not appear to possess these functions. These functions of the living are exercised in two different ways viz. positively by the srauta process, that is by the descent of the transcendental reality or the descending method,—and negatively, by the ordinary method of empiricism or the ascending process based on perception of the external world by the channels of the senses. Both of these methods have been employed from eternity in the attempt to obtain the knowledge of the reality. The Sreemad Bhagabat, the un-concocted commentary of the Brahma sutra, says—

"एतावदेव जिज्ञास्यं तत्त्वजिज्ञासुनाऽत्मनः । अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां यत् स्यात् सर्व्वत्र सर्व्वदा ॥"

But the dharma can be known by the positive, descending or srauta method. Or it may be put thus—the knowledge regarding the synthetic reality being recited and heard, by a succession of such recital followed by such consequent manifestation to the sense of hearing, has always been appearing in this world. It is of course possible to undertake the investigation of the reality by the negative method, the method of difference or the progressive method on the basis of the experience of external objects perceived by the senses ;—but by such methods the reality can not be fully known. Hence the Sreemad Bhagabat also says—

"ज्ञाने प्रयासमुदपास्य नमन्त एव
जीवन्ति सन्मुखरितां भवदीयवार्त्ताम् ।
स्थानस्थिताः श्रुतिगतां तनुवाङ्मनोभि-
र्ये प्रायशोऽजित जितोऽप्यसि तैस्त्रिलोक्याम् ॥"

That is to say 'Thou un-conquered Vishnu Who art beyond the reach of mind and of words, those who giving up the path of abstract reasoning based entirely on the experience of external, material (non-spiritual) objects gained by means of the senses with the resolve 'I must in a reverent spirit, because it is worth listening to, hear kirtan (recital)' from the holy mouths of sadhus (the uncontaminated) who are free from the fourfold disqualification of error, inadver-tence, deceipt and deficiency of the organs of sense and are fully experienced in the delineation of transcendental reality, and with body, mind and speech discarding all egotism pass their lives ever intent on Thy sanctifying story,—such persons placed in what-ever circumstances in this three-fold world knowing Thee rightly, even Thee Who art unconquerable and so very difficult to be known, are enabled to make Thee submit to loving devotion.'

Thus we find that the full view of the reality by the complete cessation of all delusions is not obtainable on the path of abstract reasoning—it is attainable on the road of the Spiritual Guide and disciple or by listening to kirtan. The shastras and pious custom have proclaimed this road as being that of 'bhakti' or devotion. Sruti (i. e. hearing) is another name of the Veda. Abandoning that srauta path or allegiance to the Veda, acquiring knowledge with the instrumentality of the organs of the sense that mutually contradict one another and deceive at every step, and adopting, under the impression that it constitutes our main warranty, the testimony of direct perception, inference or tradition etc, that is to say all evidences with the exception of that of the authoritative sources or of the Veda, the position that we take up is liable to be rendered untenable by a cleverer dialectician. By such method we shall never be able to gain the absolute knowledge. Comte the famous philosopher, who was born in one of the countries of the west, professing this reality of matter has left to us an abundant differential exposition by the method of induction resting on his own materialistic personal experience. Although he professes to be a realist his method of exposition resting entirely on the experience of material objects has necessarily failed to make any approach to the transcendental reality. In like manner most philosophers or religious sects conceiving that the objective to be reached is the undifferentiated Truth, as opposed to differentiated matter, are endeavouring to approximate the same with the help of personal experience, the product of the material senses of each.

By such efforts, notwithstanding any success in elaborately embellishing the particular body of opinions of their respective sects, those thinkers have only helped to increase or consolidate the narrowness of clique, party or sect. For the reason that all those religious or philosophical speculations are not making for universal harmony or unity by basing themselves on the principle of one Absolute Truth that it is narrowness that has been spread by their means. All those bodies of sectarian opinion also shift to an ever-increasing distance from the basic ideal of the knowledge of one Absolute Reality, instead of harmony, are erecting steadily under the name of equality vast dividing barriers. If we enquire for the cause of this we find that sectarian differences are the product of the differences of inclination due to the great force of the mental function. There is no doubt about the fact that such differences of inclination are a second nature in the case of beings that have, from time that has no beginning, their faces turned away from God. The various schools of opinion having arisen in advocacy of the variety of inclinations due to differences in the experience of the world gained by the exercise of the external senses and narrowness being thus generated, mutual differences and hostilities have gone on steadily increasing. It is for this reason that the different religious or philosophical views are technically styled sampradaic vadas (sectarian controversial theories or creeds).

On a little reflection we find that the ultimate object the attainment of which is the aim of those theories or creeds is one or other of the four purusharthas (principal 'objects of human life') viz. dharma, artha, kam and moksha (religious merit, worldly prosperity, desire of sensuous enjoyments and emancipation). All those efforts for the attainment of these 'objects of human life' are based on external or non-spiritual (achit)knowledge of the reality obtained by means of the senses.

The gratification of one's senses or selfish desires is the fulfilment of such efforts. The inexperience displayed in the investigation of the absolute reality by thus mistaking the material for the spiritual knowledge gives rise to the endeavour to effect a compromise between matter and spirit by simply placing them under one and the same category. It is this that is responsible for the increased narrowness of the different speculative schools and religious sects that aim at the attainment of the aforesaid 'four objects of human life'.

The acharyya (teacher by his personal example) of the doctrine of 'undifferentiated intelligent reality' (chinmatrvishesa vada) Shree Shankara adopting the system of worship of the five gods (panchopasana) has effected a compromise between religious merit, worldly prosperity, sensual gratification and emancipation. In the pancharatra (system inculcating five different knowledge) work Purusha Samhita it is laid down that man worships the Sun(Surya) for obtaining religious merit, Ganesha for worldly prosperity, Sakti (female energy) for sensuous gratification and Siva or Rudra for emancipation. In their opinion, on the attainment of success (siddhi) consequent on a course of worship which is a pursuit of the temporary (anitya) in which the object of worship is to be understood by the worshipper as being really unreal or temporary (achit or anitya), the difference between, or the specifications of, the worshipped and the worshipper disappears, and with this 'realisation of unity' (advaita-siddhi) or the 'undifferentiated state' (nirvishesa) the ultimate object of desire is gained. For this reason the form of the worship of Vishnu that is based on selfish desire (e. g. at certain places the worship of Dadhivamana for getting rid of disease, sorrow, fear) is also classed with the 'worship of the five' ;—in the case of such Vishnu-worship also the end that is desired is the 'destruction of the worshipped' or 'the attainment of the undifferentiated Brahman in the form of the complete elision of the individual self.' Therefore we see that the 'worship of the five' based on these doctrines can by no means ever be the 'highest (parama) duty', or 'the eternal (shashvata), permanent (sanatana) and constant (nitya) dharma of the jiva.'

Hence the Sreemad Bhagabata has said—

"स वै पुंसां परो धर्म्मो यतो भक्तिरधोक्षजे । अहैतुक्यप्रतिहता ययात्मा सुप्रसीदति ॥"

Or in other words that by means of which bhakti (devotional faith) in the adhokshaja (the transcendental Godhead) is aroused is the highest dharma of man. Such devotional faith possesses two distinguishing features viz,—(1) it is akaituki causeless(2)it is apratihata (un-interrupted) ; and it is only by such devotional faith that the soul is well satisfied. The word adhokshaja that has been used in the passage quoted means 'He by Whom the knowledge that is born of the senses is transcended' "अधःकृतं अतिक्रान्तं अक्षजं इन्द्रियजं ज्ञानं येन सः" that is to say 'He who exists beyond the scope of all knowledge of the jiva that is born of the senses' ;—He is Sree Krishna. To him is assured 'the right reserved' of enjoying Himself in ways that are beyond the reach of the knowledge born of the senses of horizontally-moving animals, man, gods etc. etc. The love (preeti) towards this transcendental reality that is produced by the practice of the highest dharma is known as bhakti (devotional faith)—seva (service भज् धातुः सेवायाम्), which is not based on any adventitous cause and which is ever uninterrupted. And the worship that is ordinarily found enacted of the object of worship based on the desires for religious merit, worldly prosperity, sensuous gratification and emancipation, is not suddha bhakti (pure devotion) ; and the temporary excitation of bhakti (devotion) that is due to peculiarities of place, time or object, being interruptable and distortable by time, is therefore,also not pure devotion. The devotion that is causeless (akaituki), or in other words, which is based on the desire for the exclusive love for the transcendental object of worship, and which is uninterruptable or without intermission, by such devotion alone the satisfaction of the 'soul' (atman) is obtained. Here the word 'soul' does not mean merely the perishable body 'made up of the five elements' (pancha-bhautika) with the ten organs of sense, nor does it mean the mind (manas) 'the eleventh sense' the propeller or ruler of the aggregate of the sense-organs. All effort by the body or the mind of the jiva is only gratification of the senses of the jiva and is not the love of the transcendent. The service of the transcendent or devotion is not really gratification of the senses. The Sree Naradapancharatra says :—

"सर्व्वोपाधिविनिर्म्मुक्तं तत्परत्वेन निर्म्मलम् । हृषीकेण हृषीकेश-सेवनं भक्तिरुच्यते ॥"

By means of all the senses (hrishika) exclusively to desire the love of Vishnu Who is the Lord of all the senses, is devotion. This devotion is not covered up by the twin conditions of gross and subtle matter, and by reason of its ending in signifying the service of Vishnu it is suddha or free from impurity. It is on account of the predominance of the knowledge born of the senses and aversion to the service of the transcendent, that the impulse of pure devotion and the 'soul' have been covered up, in the state of bondage of the jiva, by those two gross and subtle conditions.

The Chaitanya Doctrines.

BY the Grace of Mahaprabhu thoughtful minds all over the world now realise that Absolute Truth must transcend all limitations of time and space. This auspicious result has been greatly helped by the widely ranging speculations of scientific men who, during the four centuries since the advent of the Supreme Lord have been busy carrying on their investigation in diverse fields of human knowledge in different parts of the world. This is also the attitude of the educated classes in this country. The anomaly of diversity of religions is admitted on all hands. From the point of view of the scientist there can be but one religion. Scientific investigation has brought out the fact that the existing religions contain elements that are adventitious having had their origin in the special circumstances of the age or locality. The Doctrines of Mahaprabhu are absolutely free from all such defects. They are eternal and universal. This is a large statement made with due deliberation ; and the attempt will be made in the pages of this Journal to fully substantiate the claim. This great subject can be suitably unfolded only by gradual steps ; and, if it is to be properly understood, will require as a preliminary the patient and close attention of the readers for a certain length of time.

In all His teachings, Mahaprabhu in pursuance of the Shastric method expounds everything in the order of (i) subject of reference (ii) Explanation of relationship with the subject, and (iii) object of such relationship.

According to Him whatever the Veda says is true. It is, therefore, the duty of Sadhus (holy persons) to strictly obey the Vedas in their conduct. It is the function of the Vedas to make known Sreekrishna directly or indirectly, positively or negatively. Therefore, as regards the subject of reference, everything in the Veda relates to Sree Krishna. As regards explanation of the relationship with the subject the Veda regards devotion to Krishna alone as significant. The goal of such relationship is the love of Krishna.

(i) सम्बन्ध, (ii) अभिधेय, (iii) प्रयोजन

Sreemad Gaurchandra, Who is the Godhead Himself, teaches jivas (souls) the following ten tattvas.

(1) The word of the (iv) Vedic tradition is the chief evidence ;—which teaches the following nine conclusions.—

(2) Krishna Himself or Hari is the Absolute Truth in the Universe.

(3) He is All-powerful.

(4) He is the boundless Ocean of the nectar of rasa (harmony).

(5) Jivas (souls) are in their essence decimal parts of Hari.

(6) Due to their 'tatastha' (intermediate between 'chit' and 'achit') character 'jivas' in the state of bondage are in the power of 'Maya' (illusion).

(7) Due to their 'tatastha' nature jivas in their free state are beyond the power of 'Maya'.

(8) The relationship with Sree Krishna of the whole Universe comprising 'Jiva' and 'Jada' (matter) is that of inconceivable (transcendent) simultaneous difference and agreement. (v)

(9) The only 'sadhan' (function, duty) of 'jivas' (souls) is unalloyed devotion. (vi)

(10) The only 'sadhya' (object) of 'jivas' (souls) is the unalloyed love of Krishna.

The doctrines of Mahaprabhu are thus stated in an old sloka—

आराध्यो भगवान् व्रजेशतनयस्तद्धाम वृन्दावनं
रम्या काचिदुपासना व्रजवधूवर्गेण या कल्पिता ।
श्रीमद्भागवतं प्रमाणममलं प्रेमा पुमर्थो महान्
श्रीचैतन्यमहाप्रभोर्मतमिदं तत्रादरो नः परः ॥

Sreekrishna who is the God-Head Himself is the only Object of worship, His eternal Abode is Sreedham Brindaban. The best mode of worship is that of 'braja gopis'. The Sreemad Bhagabat is the unadulterated recorded evidence. Love of Krishna is the goal. These are the doctrines of Sree Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. We have the highest regard for His doctrines and none for any other.

Khlystism.

THE practice and doctrines of the 'Khlysts' a religious (?) sect of Russia bear a striking resemblance to those of the prakrita-sahajias, Bauls, Kalachandis and Kisoribhajas of this country. In all of these cults the root of error assumes the form of the absurd and profane blunder that the transcendental activities of the Godhead as found in the Scriptures are identical with the vilest sexual orgies of the worst human debauchees. Those who are excessively addicted to sensual enjoyment are sometimes so much deluded thereby as to suppose that all men are equally vile. Some of the very worst among them are so entirely lost to all sense of shame that they feel no hesitation in actually proclaiming, to those who failing to see through their artifices are willing to listen to them, that there is nothing holier and happier than sexual immorality ; pretending to have discovered the abominable doctrine (?) in the Scriptural accounts of the transcendental activities of the Godhead.

Most people of this world, although they do not possess the knowledge of the transcendental reality, are, however, sufficiently convinced of the mundane necessity of leading a chaste life and are not prepared to lend any deliberate support to doctrines that may undermine sexual morality. This is undoubtedly a sound instinct. But such desire for sexual purity unenlightend by faith in God is not in itself of sufficient strength to save us from the clutches of pseudo-religionists of the type of 'Khlysts' and we should, therefore, be on our guard and avoid intimate association with a person without previously satisfying ourselves by careful personal enquiry about his practices, irrespective of his religious practices bearing in mind the advice of Goursundar that 'no one can be a teacher of dharma who does not himself practise it.'

To what terrible lengths of immorality unscrupulous psilanthropists may lead their willing victims is well known in this country. That the evil is to be found everywhere and is not peculiar to this country will be clear from the following account of the infamous 'Gregori Rasputin' who figured so prominently in the history of Russia during the early period of the Great war, taken from Prince Yonsonpoff's memoirs that is appearing in the Sunday Chronicle of London.

In that work 'Khlystism' is described as essentially sexual in character : it is a blend of the coarsest animal passion with a belief in the highest spiritual revelation. The 'prayer meetings' (?) of the Khlysts combined in an intense degree religious (?) ecstacy and erotic abandon. The Khlysts believe that at the height of their hysterical excitement the Holy Spirit (?) descends among them, and that the licentious conclusion of their ceremonies is nothing else than an act of 'God's blessing' (?)..... The ceremony begins with a slow rhythmic dance which changes to a mad whirl. There is a blinding glitter of candles in the room during 'prayer' (?) and the inevitable climax is a wild, amorous debauch.

Here is the remarkable account of the Rake's Progress of the satanical Gregori Rasputin, the typical Khlyst. Rasputin was by birth a peasant. He was the son of a professional horse-stealer and was himself a horse-stealer in early life. He was not endowed with a prepossessing appearance. His face was of the most ordinary peasant type—a coarse oval, with large, ugly features overgrown with a slovenly beard and with a long nose; his small grey eyes looked out from under bushy eyebrows with piercing yet shifty glances. This ungainly ruffian who was being constantly thrashed by infuriated peasants whose horses he stole became all at once the Autocrat, to all intents and purposes, of the Russian state.

While still engaged in stealing horses in his native village in a remote corner of Russia Rasputin was discovered by 'a young missionary monk a well-informed and deeply religious man and as naive as a child' and presented by him as a man of God to Bishop Theophan who in his turn introduced the impostor (?) to the Tsar's palace. Rasputin's amazing influence over his victims is supposed by the writer of the memoir to have been due to his immense dynamic force which was the result of ascetic practices. He could go without food or sleep like an Indian Fakir. To those, however, who distrusted him his eyes appeared to be amazingly repulsive. They also noticed that he walked with a mincing gait and approached young maidens even of the highest families with a sly, sickly smile embracing them without ceremony, kissing them with 'an air of condescension.' At the Tsar's palace he appeared in the guise of a righteous man who had consecrated himself to God; in society drawing rooms, among his female admirers, he was much less circumspect; and finally, at home or in a private room at a restaurant in the intimate company of his associates, he gave full vent to his drunkenness and wanton debauchery. In certain—incidentally very small circles of the highest rank in St. Petersburg society occultism of every kind was cultivated. In this environment Rasputin was assured of marked success. Rasputin justified all his monstrous debauchery with typical Khlyst reasoning; and sometimes instilled into women the belief that association with him was far from being a sin. The Empress of Russia was entirely in Rasputin's grip and on the outbreak of the Great war not a single important event at the front was decided without a preliminary conference with him. This naturally alarmed the people who tried their best to induce the Emperor to cease his connection with Rasputin. But the Emperor and the Empress remained deaf to all supplications advice, warnings and threats. The more Rasputin was opposed, the more convincing the evidence against him, the less attention was paid to the matter at the Tsar's palace. &c.

The Prakrita Sahajia, Baul and Kalachandi sects of pseudo-Vaishnavas of this country who almost openly practise and preach sexual immorality are not ashamed to declare that their doctrines (?) are those taught by Mahaprabhu. Whose followers they give themselves out to be. The practices of these and other allied sects will be treated specifically in coming numbers of this journal. It will suffice for the present to give the reader a concrete example of Gaursundar's own practice as indicative of the principles that He recommended His followers—householders as well as ascetics—to follow in their relations with the female sex.

During the period that Mahaprabhu displayed the lila of leading the life of a householder His Practice is thus indicated in a general way in three short sentences by the author of Sree Chaitanya Bhagabat, the oldest and the most authentic account of His career,—

"एइ मत चापल्य करेन सबा सने ।
सबे स्त्री मात्र ना देखेन दृष्टिकोणे ॥
स्त्री हेन नाम प्रभु एइ अवतारे ।
श्रवणेओ ना करिला विदित संसारे ॥
अतएव यत महामहिम सकले ।
गौराङ्ग 'नागर' हेन स्तव नाहि बले ॥"

—(चै: भा: आ: १५।२८-३०)

"He played many such merry pranks on all persons, barring only this that He never cast even a side-glance on a female. It is known to the whole world that in this incarnation the Lord did not even allow His ear to hear such a thing as the name of a female. Hence all devotees of exalted position never address Him as amorous Gauranga."

Mahaprabhu exhibited the lila of renouncing the world and becoming an ascetic at the age of twenty-four. It was during His residence at Puri as an ascetic that the following incident took place which is thus described in the Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita, the companion work of Sree Chaitanya Bhagabat.

One day Sree Bhagawanacharyya invited the Lord to his residence and had many choice dishes cooked at his own place to be offered to Him. He himself asked the junior Haridas who used to sing kirtan to the Lord to obtain by begging fine, white raw rice from the sister of Shikhi Mahiti. The sister of Sikhi Mahiti was an old lady of great piety and an eminent Vaishnava who was declared by Mahaprabhu Himself as belonging to the very highest class of Vaishnavas ranking her with Swarup Gosain, Rai Ramananda and Shikhi Mahiti himself. Haridas brought from her rice by begging. The Acharyya was very much delighted by obtaining the fine rice and had it cooked with very great care. At noon when Mahaprabhu sat at His meal He said that the rice was very fine and asked from where it had been obtained. The Acharyya said the rice was obtained by begging from Madhabi Dasi. The Lord said, 'who went there to beg ?' The Acharyya mentioned the name of the junior Haridas. The Lord praised the rice and sat down to meal. On his return to his own residence He commanded Govinda not to admit the junior Haridas into the house from that day. Haridas was distressed finding the door of the Lord shut against him. No one know why he was forbidden admission. Haridas gave up food and at the end of the three days Swarup and others went to the Lord and said, 'Lord, what offence has Haridas committed ? Why is the door shut against him for which he has gone on fast ?' The Lord said, He cannot see the face of a Vairagi who accosts a female. Saying this Mahaprabhu retired to the inner apartments. All were struck dumb at the sight of the Lord's anger. Another day all of them together submitted this prayer at the feet of the Lord on behalf of Haridas—'Lord, the offence is slight. Be propitiated. He has now learnt the lesson and will not offend again'. The Lord said, 'My mind is not under my control. It refuses contact with a Vairagi who accosts females. Give up this vain talk all of you and betake yourselves to your proper duties. If you say anything more you will not see Me here.' Hearing this all put their hands to their ears and dispersed to their respective duties. .....Yet another day all went to Paramananda Puri and requested him saying 'Propitiate the Lord'. Then Puri Gosain came alone to the Lord. The Lord did obeisance to him, had him seated with great respect and asked, what is your command ? What has brought you here ? Puri Gosain begged Him to be propitiated towards Haridas. On hearing this the Lord said, "Gosain, listen to Me, you stay here with all the Vaishnavas, command Me to go to Alalnath. I shall reside there with only Govinda to keep Me company." Saying this the Lord called Govinda and making obeisance to Puri left the place. Puri Gosain much agitated hurried after the Lord and by entreaties persuaded Him to return to the house.....All the devotees then went to Haridas and Swarup Gosain said 'Listen, Haridas Believe that all of us desire your good. The Lord insists. The Godhead is his own master. He is merciful and will be again kind some day. If you insist His firmness will increase. His anger will leave afterwards. He has bathed and taken His meal'. Saying this and persuading Haridas to have his food and bath Swarup returned to his house encouraging him to cherish hope. When the Lord used to go out to have sight of Jagannath, Haridas had a view of the Lord from a distance.....Haridas passed one year in this way but still Mahaprabhu was not propitiated. One day, as the night was nearing its close, making obeisance to the Lord Haridas set out for praying without telling any one. There vowing the attainment of the lotus feet of the supreme Lord Haridas gave up this life by entering the Tribeni.....One day Mahaprabhu asked the devotees, 'Where is Haridas? Let him be brought here.' All said, 'On the day that completed one year having risen up at night he went away no one knows where'. On hearing this Mahaprabhu gently smiled. All the devotees wondered in their minds..... A Vaishnava came to Nabadvipa from Prayag. He told them all about Haridas, of his solemn vow and of his immersion in the Tribeni. On hearing this Sreebas and others were filled with wonder. At the end of the year Sivananda accompanied by all the devotees with great joy came to meet the Lord; When Sreebas asked, 'Where is Haridas?' The Lord replied, 'a being enjoys the fruit of his acts'. Then Sreebas narrated Haridas's story, the vow he took and his immersion in the Tribeni. On hearing this the Lord laughing with hearty satisfaction said 'this is the proper expiation for the offence of looking upon a female as an object of sensuous desire.'

THE sixteen names of thirty-two letters, the Tarak Bramha Name, was adopted as the form of prayer. That one born of a Yavana family was bound to use only Yavanic language in worshipping God, such narrowness never manifested itself in the heart of magnanimous Haridas. Accepting the principle of Universal and highest charity and living in the solitary cell of Benapole he continued loudly to take the Name. The sight of Haridas endeavouring with a singleness of purpose to take the Name aroused the feeling of hostility in the malicious section of Hindu society. The pure-hearted people were delighted with the spectacle of Haridas's un-precedented love for the Name; but the evil impulses of certain persons imbued with the mischievous instincts of brutes were not subdued. One of the leaders of this body of haters of devotees formed the resolution of devising a method of defiling Haridas. This man by name Ramchandra Khan was very well-known in those parts. He had also an immense following and great material prosperity made him proud. Under the advice of several mean-minded friends he prepared to engage himself in an evil deed. Haridas did not originally belong to the district of Ramchandra. He, an alien, had come to reside in the village of Ramchandra. Without offering to support the evil deeds of Ramchandra he was always occupied with the Name of Hari ; born in Yavana family he uttered vocatives of the Sanskrit language in calling God ; the Name uttered by him, because he prayed with a loud voice, penetrated into the auricular cavities of persons such as Ramchandra Khan etc. and such hearing in the opinion of Ramchandra being clearly against the Shastras, Ramchandra volunteered to create trouble for Haridas. Ramchandra thought that Haridas was a weak-minded youngman like himself that he was engaged in uttering the Name of Hari merely under the impulse of the moment, had become a sadhu being denied the possession of objects of sensuous gratification and therefore, would be drawn away from the path of holiness by the actual contact of any object of sensuous desire ; and thinking thus and gaining over a certain harlot by holding out the prospect of pecuniary reward he sent her to the solitary cell of Thakur Haridas. The Lord of day had just gained the summit of the sun-set mountain, the lonely cell had become lonelier at the approach of darkness, Sree Haridas was taking the Name of God with undivided attention, his faculty of external perception had shrunk as the result of taking the Nāme and all inner faculties were engaged in the service of God,—when the harlot sent by Ramchandra Khan appeared before him. That fallen woman by the beauty of her person and the display of amorous gestures born of the passions of the heart that make a man forget himself, tried her utmost to shake the impulse of the service of Thakur Haridas. But through the three divisions of the night—the periods of dusk, the dead of night and the small hours of departing gloom—no change was produced in the heart of Haridas. Remaining firm he did not fall into the enchanting meshes of the harlot. Those objects of sensuous gratification for the attainment of which the irrepressible appetites of the human mind are eager, by presenting themselves in the solitary cell of Haridas did not obstruct his service of God. There is a very great difference between the heart of a Vaishnava and that of an ordinary man. The harlot failing with all manner of effort to gain her object returning at sunrise to Ramchandra Khan reported everything as it had happened. The hard-hearted Ramchandra instructed her to try again at night to captivate the heart of Haridas. Acting under the direction of the heartless Ramchandra that woman, lost to shame, continued to employ all her arts to prevent the devotional practice of Haridas. Three successive nights passed away in this manner and yet the un-worldly heart of Haridas seeking no respite from the service of Hari did not render the least help to the realisation of the confident hopes of the harlot and Ramchandra. In answer to all the efforts of the harlot Sree Haridas Thakur always persisted in telling her that as the required number of Names to be counted had not been completed he was for that reason occupied in uttering the Name. Those who are ever engaged in taking the un-defiled Name do not turn to sin even when such sins accumulate close to them. The elevationists are not able to forego such opportunities of sinful acts; but watching the manifestation of the super-natural force of the character of Haridas the heart of the sinful woman was changed. Throwing herself at the feet of Thakur Haridas she said with contrition, 'I am addicted to sin, contaminated by the lust of many; you are the greatest of devotees engaged in the service of Hari; the evil propensities of my heart have been destroyed in your company by the force of your transcendental power; I am now a supplicant for following the footsteps of a Bhagabat like yourself; out of mercy direct me to walk in the path of devotion!' The heart of the merciful Haridas was touched. He forgot all about the bad profession of the harlot—the unworthy object of the lust of many and deciding that she was eligible for taking the mahamantra of the Name of Hari in the manner that is free from offence, rescued her from the deep well of sensuality. Such mercy is not met with anywhere except the heart of a Vaishnava. All praise to Haridas! May your mercy be appreciated by all the people of the world—that non-evil producing, disillusioning kindness of thine towards the ugly harlot that tried to turn your mind away from the service of Krishna. There can be no comparison between the man who is bound by the results of his actions and the Vaishnava who is worthy of the homage of all the gods. The Suddha Bhaktas who have thrown themselves on the protection of the Name treasuring up in their hearts the incomparable deeds of Thakur Haridas should free from offence un-ceasingly call upon the Name of Krishna and will thus obtain the mercy of Thakur Haridas who is the acharyya of the Name i. e. teacher of the Name by his own practice The six passions of lust etc. will ever fail to ensure the success of any efforts directed against the devotees of God.

EQUALITY.

Why dost thou hate the worship of the stranger?
The symbols of worship are many in different lands among different peoples.
Some worship with 'Kachha' off, some on their knees,
Some again remain with eyes closed in worship of Brahma,
Some worship in 'yogasana', some find joy in Sankirtan,
All are worshipping the one beloved Krishna,
Therefore live all as brothers in good amity,
Always practise Hari bhakti in this life or in death.

Sri Chaitanya Bhagabat.

13. The most precious jewels are treasured in the best loved places,
The Mouths of Sree Ananta are the Treasury of the jewels of (Krishna's) glorious deeds.

14. Therefore in the beginning if praises of Balaram Find expression in that mouth manifests the Kirtan of Chaitanya.

15. A thousand-hooded serpent is Lord Balaram.
What-so-ever the Lord does is all unrestrained.

16. The great Lord Haladhar, of immense stature, Drunk with the praise of Chaitanya Chandra, of exceeding patience.

17. Above him there is none other dearer to Chaitanya.
At all time does He delight in that form.

18. His behaviour what-so-ever being listens to, sings,
Him does Srikrishna-Chaitanya give his supreme protection,

19. With him are greatly pleased Mahesh and Parvati,
On his tongue dances the Pure Goddess of speech.

20. With ninety-thousand consorts, Parvati and the rest,
Does Siva offer homage to Sankarshan as His worshipper.

21. This narrative in the fifth skandha of the Bhagabat
Is the Balaram ballad revered of all Vaishnavas.

22. Generously unconventional to the extreme is the narrative of His Rasa(3) pastimes
In Brindaban in the company of gopis He did take delight.

23. Two months of the spring that bear the names of Madhab and Madhu, Did last, says the Purana, the Rasa-pastimes of "Wielder of the plough"

24. Listen, those slokas of the Bhagabat are these,
Spoken by Sree Suka, to Raja Parikshit who was the hearer,

25. 'Two months did there abide those of Madhu and Madhab,
The Divine Rama augmenting the amour of the gopis during the nights.

26. Encircled by spiritual damsels He took His delight in gardens fringing the Yamuna
Which were lightened by the shining digits of the full moon served by breezes perfumed with the scent of the lotus.

27. His praises sung by Gandharbas, within the circle resplendent with the beauty of ladies,
He did sport like that Lord of the herd of female elephants, the Tusker that serves Mahendra.

---

(3) Rasa—harmonious, ecstatic and amorous dance of spiritual milk-maids in a circular form illustrated by kissing, embracing, singing etc. with a view to enchant transcending all rules of society.

28. Drums sounded in the sky, the gods in delight did send down the shower of flowers.
Forthwith did the Gandharbas and the Munis please Rama by reciting the deeds of His prowess.

29. All association with females is condemned by the Munis
Who thus did sing hymns of praise in the rasa of Rama.

30. At Whose rasa the gods appearing sent down the flowery shower,
The gods who know that difference there is none between Krishna and Haladhar.

31. The doings of Haladhar are hidden away in the four Vedas.
It is not I who say but all have been revealed in the Puranas.

32. There are some people who by reason of foolishness do not look into the Puranas ;
They hold the rasa-sport of Balaram as not revealed.

33. But the two Brothers in the society of gopikas
Did in the same spot perform the rasa-sport inside Brindaban.

34. 'Thereafter, on a certain occasion, Govinda and Rama of wonderful prowess,
Sported in the wood at night encircled by the ladies of Braja ;

35. Their praises sung melodiously by those females who were so attached to them by love ;—
Their bodies beautifully decorated with ornaments, sandal-paste, garlands and clothes free from all particles of dust ;

36. Preferring the dusk with the stars visible and the moon showing above the horizon,
With bees intoxicated by the odour of Mallika, served by breezes blowing over the lotus,

37. Sang they together, blessing the ear and the mind of all beings,
Discoursing melodious airs athwart the whole gamut.

38. Listening to the Bhagabata without loving Rama Ensures the expulsion of the hearer from the paths of Vishnu and Vaishnavas.

39. Who does not recognise the Bhagabata is like the Yavana ;
His punisher is the Lord Yama in each successive birth.

40. Even now some that dance and caper in the guise of eunuchs
Aver, 'Is there shastra in which is found the rasa of Balaram ?'

41. Some sinners never admit though they see the shastra,
And misinterpret even by offering one meaning as another.

42. Balai is Love-embodied of Chaitanya Chandra ;
Offending against Him brings death at every step.

43. In different forms He Himself becomes the servant as well as the Lord—
All those signs appear to view only in His descent into this world.

44. As chum, brother, fan, bed, offerings, Apartment, umbrella, clothing, diverse ornaments, seat,—

45. The Lord in all forms serves Himself ;
Whom He favours he alone knows.

46. As apartment, bed, seat, shoe, fine clothing, pillow, umbrella and other transcendental insignia,
By reason of the difference of form persisting to the last, Thou art rightly styled 'Shesha' by people.

47. The mighty Sree Garuda, the constituent of Ananta, Gracefully and with zeal encompasses Krishna.

48. Whether Brahma, or Siva, or Sanaka with other sons of Brahma, Vyasa, Suka, Narada and others—who-so-ever bears the name of devotee

49. Worshipped of them all is great Shree Ananta,
The Lord with a thousand faces, saturate with mellowing devotion.

50. Primal god, great yogi, Isvara, Vaishnava,—
This the full height of His glory is not known to all.

51. Ye have heard about His service, now listen as regards His power—
How self-supported He abides in Patala.

52. Shree Narada Gosvamin attended by tamburu
Thus sings His praise putting it into verse in the presence of Brahma.—

53. By whose thought Satva and the other qualities of Nature following one another in regular order, that are the causes of the origin, persistence and absorption of this world, were enabled to act—
Whose Form is ever-lasting and without a beginning ; Who being One in His Own Self contains the many ;—how can man know His ways ?

54. Who out of His infinite mercy to us assumed the pure satva Form wherein all effect and cause manifests itself ;
Whose prowess is infinite, of Whose un-blameable Lila for subduing the minds of His Own the Lord of the hunted hath a glimpse.

55. Whose Name after being heard, or accidently, or being distressed, or in jest, if by the fallen is recited,
Instantly destroys the endless sins of men ;—on Whom else besides the Divine Shesa the seeker of the highest good shall depend ?

56. On one head of the thousand-headed great Ananta, of immeasurable, infinite prowess,
Is placed like an atom this globe of the world with its hills, streams seas and living beings ;—His deeds even with a thousand tongues who can recount ?

57. The great Lord Ananta of such prowess, of infinite might, possessed of all high qualities and majesty,
Dwelling at the base of rasatala, self-supported, holds up with ease this world in order to nourish it.'

58. Creation, maintenance, destruction, satva and the other qualities that follow in its train,
Are produced and cease to be, time and again, by whose Glance ;

59. Yet in His Own Self Ananta is One, Whose Glory is ever-lasting and without a beginning :
Who can understand His Ways ?

60. The Lord out of mercy assumes the pure satva Form Wherein unfolded with graceful ease all things are manifested.

61. The ripples of His Movements the mighty Lion having imbibed, Delights the minds of his kin with alacrity.

62. The Name of Ananta heard or duly recited—
Who-so-ever in whatever wise may opine—

63. The bondage of endless births does instantly snap ;
Wherefore his hold of Him a Vaishnava does never relinquish.

64. Without Shesa there is no deliverance from the world ;
Yea, the Name of Ananta redeems all jivas.

65. To nourish this boundless world with all its hills and seas,
The Lord supports it on His head,—

66. As a tiny point on one of His thousand hoods, Scarce aware that it exists,—so infinite His power.

67. With thousand mouths, the up-holder of the world, the foremost of gods, Keeps on singing incessantly the glories of Krishna.

68. It is Ananta Who sings and there is no end of beauty and glory ;
Both being mighty neither of them may win nor yield.

69. To this day with His thousand beauteous mouths
Shesadeva sings the deeds of Chaitanya and finds no end.

70. Shree Raga (4)
(Burden of song)
Hey Ho ! Rama and Gopala are vying in praise of one another !
Brahma, Rudra, the gods,
Siddhas and the greatest munis
Are gazing on with joy.

71. With the cry 'I must reach shore,' He doth plunge making all speed to get across the sea,
But the ocean of Krishna's glory offers no bounds and broadeneth out evermore.

(4) One of the six primary musical modes.

PRAYER

"Say Radha-Krishna, oh say, say all"— Teaching this
O'er all Nadia
Go dancing Gour and Nitai.
For no reason under the influence of Maya Drift'st thou
Gasp'st as thou art drowned, brother.
Jiva is the servant of Krishna,
This belief
Once accepted there is no more sorrow.
Krishna when thou say'st
Thou wilt be thrilled,
Thy eyes will shed tears, I say.
Say Radha Krishna
Come along,
This alms alone I beg,
'All dangers leave,'
Says Bhakti-vinode,
'When I sing that Name.'

PURE SERVICE

Naughty mind ! What Vaishnab thou art !
To think on gold and woman
Night and day
There is no use ; all those do not remain.
Your gold
Dost procure but pleasure ;
By means of gold serve thou Madhab.
The love of women
Is not thy domain.
Its sole Lord is Yadava.
For the sake of fame
In lonely cell
Thy 'Hari nama' is mere vanity.
Material fame
Is the pig's refuse.
Know'st thou not it is the treasure of Maya

Taking Refuge in God (श्रीशरणागति)

[I]

1. Sree Krishna Chaitanya, the Supreme Lord, out of Divine Pity for jiva,
With His Own Associates and his Own Abode descending

2. The Love of God that can only be obtained with the utmost difficulty to give freely away, Teaches to take refuge in Him : resignation, that is the very life of the devotee.

3. Lowliness of the spirit, dedication of self, loving acceptance of Him as Protector, Cherishing faith that Krishna will surely protect,

4 Assenting only to acts that are conducive to devotion,
Promising to renounce conduct that is adverse to it—

5. In these sixfold ways, whoever takes refuge in Him,
His prayer reaches the ears of the Gracious Child of Nanda.

6 At the feet of Rupa and Sanatana holding the straw between the teeth
Falls Bhaktivinode clasping both the feet with his hands

7. Crying all the while as he says : 'I am the vilest I do realise, Teach thou me resignation and make me the worthiest.'

[II]

1. Forgetting thyself, coming into this world,
Having suffered manifold pain,
At Thy feet have I come,
Thee I shall tell my sorrows :

2. In mother's womb while I lay
In the deadly fetters of bondage,
For once, Oh Lord, showing Thyself to me
Didst Thou abandon Thy poor servant.

3. Then thought I : after I have birth,
I shall worship Thee.
I was born but fallen into the meshes of Maya
There was not a particle of Knowledge.

4. A fondled child in the lap of kindred,
Laughingly I passed the time.
The affection of the father and mother madest me forget,
This world did taste sweet.

5. By slow degrees day by day, growing up as a boy
With other boys did I play.
In a few more days the pow'r of understanding was aroused
I conned my lessons night and day.

6. In the pride of learning I journeyed to many a place,
Earning wealth,
Supporting kindered with all my heart,
Hari, Thee I forgot.

7. Now in old age Bhaktivinode
Crying feels so sad ;
Not worshipping Thee the days passed in vain,
What help is there now ?

A RELIGIOUS PREACHER IN BOMBAY.

His Holiness Tridandi Swami Bhakti Hriday Ban Maharaj of Gaudiya Math, Calcutta, delivered a highly cultured lecture on "The Eternal and Universal Religion of all Souls" in lucid English before a big and educated audience at the Shrauta Smarta Dharma Pratisthapak Vidvad Parishad at Madhavbag. The depth of knowledge and the way of exposition of His Holiness were so appealing and enrapturing—the thundering yet sweet voice was so very attractive that the audience were kept spellbound, so to say, in as much as the whole spacious compound of the Parishad was filled in a minute and not an inch was left vacant.

They say that "The Right Light comes from the East", and so we should deem of our Swamiji who comes from the Eastern Corner of India to the Western extremity of the country and Vidvad Parishad—why only Vidvad Parishad? whole Bombay is proud—not only Bombay, India—the world—should boast of such a spiritual giant, a luminary of the firmament, who will surely be enriching and ameliorating the spiritual atmosphere of the present day. The Bombay Public heartily welcome His Holiness and believes that he will deliver a series of lectures.

A hearty vote of thanks to the president and the lecturer from the Mantri, Mr. Mohanlal H. Dave, terminated the proceedings.

A series of lectures on Eastern Philosophy will ere long follow at Madhavbag—the dates will be announced in time.

THE EXPRESS, PATNA

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 1926

The Amrita Bazar Patrika, April 20, 1926

Swami Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj of Sri Gaudiya Math of Calcutta with three Brahmachary followers has come here and is putting up in the Thakurbari of the late Radha Charan Baba. In the Thakurbari as well as in other places he has been explaining the Srimat Bhagwat. Swamiji has sacrificed all mundane pleasure for the propagation of Sri Krishna's religion of the Srimat Bhagwata as revealed to us by Lord Gauranga. In his daily discourses, quite in conformity with the Bhagwata Path he is showing his vast erudition in the Vedas, the Upanishads, the Vedanta, the Shankhays and other branches of Hindu religion and Philosophy. Coupled with his great learning, his deep Bhakti has charmed all who have had the good fortune to hear him once. His life and character truly depict what Sree Krishna Chaitanya wanted his followers to be. Those who are prejudiced against Vaishnavism and who have not sunk deep into the sweet religion of Prem and Bhakti, those who have studied Vaishnavism through Vaishnava beggars and Bairagis and corrupt practices of the so-called followers of Lord Gauranga will be profitted by seeing and hearing Bhakti Pradip Maharaj, who will shed a divine lustre into their hearts—a lustre that will dispel all their doubts and show them who is Gauranga and what is the true Vaishnavism. Being a staunch Vaishnava himself the Swamiji has mercilessly attacked those followers of his own sect who have led the lofty religion of Sri Gauranga into filthy degeneration and in this direction, which is also an end of his mission, he has spared nobody. Swamiji was given a good reception and hearing in Monghyr and Jamalpur by the local gentry and he will shortly leave this town with his followers for Patna.

Purushottam Math—The thirteenth anniversary muhotsob of the disappearance of Om Vishnupad Sreemad Bhaktivinode Thakur was duly celebrated at the Purusottom Math, Puri on the 29th June, 1927. There was an immense assemblage of pilgrims at Puri on account of the Rathayatra ceremony of Lord Jagannathdeva. Every care had been taken to invite all persons that were in the town to attend the public meeting which was organised in the afternoon in connection with the anniversary celebrations. The huge building, the Patharkuti, had been beautifully decorated for the occasion and excellent arrangements had been made for the accommodation of a very large gathering of pilgrims that was expected in accordance with the experience of former years.

But the crowd that turned up in response to the invitation of the Trindandiswamies and brahmacharies of the Purusottom Math was unprecedentedly large and exceeded the capacity of all accommodation that could be devised.

This was the case both as regards the gentlemen as well as the ladies. The Vaisnavas of all the Maths at Puri were fully represented as well as every other local institution connected with religion. All through the afternoon and the evening a continuous stream of guests continued to arrive. The monster meeting was presided over by His Holiness Sreemad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj. Kirtan songs by Thakur Bhaktivinode were sung at the beginning and at conclusion as well as during the intervals of the lectures which were delivered by their Holinesses the Tridandiswamies of the Gaudiya Math. The profoundly learned speeches of their Holinesses the Tridandiswamies dealing with the career and teachings of Thakur Bhaktivinode & specially the presidential address were listened to by the immense audience with rapt attention from beginning to end. I gathered from those who were capable of forming a proper estimate in regard to spiritual insight and Shastric scholarship that all the speeches displayed in the highest degree the qualities of lucidity of exposition & firm grasp of all the most essential principles. The gentlemen as well as a large number of the most highly respected ladies who were present were unanimous in expressing the very highest appreciation of the speeches and the Kirtan songs. At the close of the meeting all persons male and female were treated to the Mahaprasad of Sree Sree Jagannathdeva. The whole function was in every respect an unique event and was an unqualified success. To this connection it is deserving of special mention that the success of the function was no less due to the untiring energy of the Brahmacharies of the Purusottom Math headed by his Holiness Tridanda Swamin Sreemad Bhakti Vivek Bharati Maharaj who was responsible for the organisation of the celebrations. The works of Thakur Bhaktivinode published by the Gaudiya Math were exhibited for the inspection of the guests.

Visit of the Divine Holiness to Cuttack.

His Divine Holiness Paramahansa Paribrajakacharyya Sreemad Bhakti Siddhanta Saraswati Goswami Maharaj came to Cuttack on the 9th July in connection with the celebrations of the annual mahotsab of the Sachchidananda Math. All the inhabitants of the town had been specially invited to witness the ceremony of the installation of the Sree Bigraha of Mahaprabhu at the Sachchidananda Math on the 9th. In response to this invitation a very large crowd of the towns-people gathered in the compound in front of the Math which had been prepared for the meeting that was held in the afternoon. The meeting was presided over by His Divine Holiness Paramahansa Goswami Thakur. Lectures were delivered by His Holiness Tridandaswami Sreemad Bhakti Pradip Tirtha Maharaj and Sreepad Sundaranada Vidyavinode B. A. editor of the Gaudiya on the object and methods of the Suddha Bhakti movement. His Divine Holiness in addressing the meeting spoke for over two hours on Sabda Brahman and Sree Bigraha tattva. The whole of the vast audience listened to the end with the closest attention. The kirtan songs which preceded and followed the lectures were sung by Anantavasudeva Brahmachari Para-Vidyabhusan, B.A. and other Brahmacharies of the Gaudiya Math and were also highly appreciated. At 9 P.M. the installation ceremony of Mahaprabhu was duly performed by His Divine Holiness. The function which was most successful closed with the distribution of Mahaprasad to all present and everyone was sumptuously fed.

CORRESPONDENCE

To The Editor, the Harmonist.

Dear Sir,

I notice a news in the columns of Sree Gauranga Vishnupriya (Bengali) that there was a meeting held at the Municipal town of Nabadwip where the congregation is alleged to have declared the position of Sri Sri Mayapur Yogapitha to be untenable. They further showed their audacity of subscribing to the erroneous view of Vairagi Brojamohan Das alias Radhakishore Singh of Sarutia, who based his argument on a paper inadvertently written by a foreigner under misapprehension in the Calcutta Review. The people of the present town of Nabadwip need not make a profiteering game when they see their leader is fanning an unauthenticated design and follow him in order to be misguided under a wrong comprehension. Would you take any interest in asking the Secretary of the Vishva Vaishnava Raja-Sabha to hold a meeting in order to appoint five commissioners to examine the members of the said congregation and their object of feeble attempt at nullifying the established history and geography of Nadia? This would divulge many things which can help in satisfying a bonafide enquirer as to the location of the true position of the birthsite of Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya Deva. The said Vairagi being a new-comer and bird of passage and quite ignorant of Sanskrit, Persian, English and other literature has no access to the old books which have reference of the locality. The Vairagi has proved his inability in all his attempts to prove his allegations for the last dozen of years even backed by interested parties where as it is admitted on all hands that the location of the tomb of Chand Kazi and the site of the palace of the Sena Kings in the old town decidedly stand as remnants of old. The matter may be fully dealt with in your esteemed paper. The bone of contention between the two theories lies in the two parties, viz. vox populi and vox Dei. I believe, you belong to the vox Dei party, whereas the other party appears to be actuated by the sinister motive of getting up a party of vox populi by throwing dust to the eyes of people. The few persons who have turned out to be abetters in his present attempt forget that they represent anybody except themselves and that even the vox populi is not always necessarily the vox Dei.

Vaishnavism and Hinduism

WHEN Sriman Mahaprabhu on His return from Gaya initiated congregational preaching of the Suddha Sanatan Dharma (the pure, eternal religion) the people of Navadwipa were filled with panic. In a well-known passage of his famous work, Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita, Kaviraj Goswamin has graphically described the then attitude of a section of the Hindus. Some of the Hindus even went so far as to prefer formal charges against the conduct of Mahaprabhu before the Kazi, the local agent of the Moslem government, praying for His outlawry in the interest of religion. The charges brought against Mahaprabhu are given in the passage of Sree Chaitanya Charitamrita referred to above. These Hindus said in effect—'The Kirtan propounded by Mahaprabhu was a thing they had never heard of. The Kirtan of Mahaprabhu was objectionable because it was sung loudly to the accompaniment of mridanga and karatal, constantly and by many people together. It prevented their sleep. It was against Hindnism as it admitted the lowest class to the privilege of chanting the Name of Krishna. It was profane as the Name of Krishna was admitted even by Nimai to be Mahamantra and as such must not be noised about, as according to the Shastras of the Hindus the potency of a mantra is impaired if it be heard by any person.' They urged with commendable caution that the keeping up of nights by Hindus at the worship Mangalchandi and Visha- hari at which dancing, singing and music were very properly performed could not constitute a precedent in favour of the new-fangled practices.

The Smartas (the followers of Smriti, canonicals) made these allegations against 'Avatari' Sree Gaur-Sundar, 'the Saviour of Kali-Yuga' (source of incarnations), 'the only maintainer of the Yuga-dharma' (the divine dispensation of the Age) as Nimai was guilty of endeavouring to introduce the un-alloyed devotion to God denoted by kirtan which is the only eternal dharma (function) of all jivas (beings) in place of the dharma, concocted by the human mind, that accorded with their ideas. These protesting Hindus were under the impression that the puerile creed which they had acquired by right of inheritance was 'Hinduism'. The dancing, singing and musical performances with which the vigils of Mangalachandi and Vishahari were kept perfectly innocent because by their means the desire of sensual gratification and aversion to Hari increased. Those orgies did not disturb them in the least but their ears were deafened by the sound of mridanga and cymbals. They were particularly lavish in their praise of the previous conduct of the very Nimai which they declared was perfectly blameless because it bore an external resemblance to their own at least to an extent. But after his return from Gaya when He began to preach openly the dharma of the soul His practices at once appeared to them to be 'destructive' of all religion.

This religion which they chose to call 'Hinduism' consisted, in their opinion, in the worship of Mangalchandi and Vishahari ; in 'the thirteen festival, of the twelve months' ; in sraddhas (funeral ceremonies) for appeasing the ghosts of dead ancestors ; in the performance of domestic duties after the approved manner of un-complaining beasts of burden—marrying and giving in marriage, loyally practising the duties of eating, sleeping, fearing, sexuality etc. till the very moment of the exit from this world ; for fear of the next world by means of 'gifts,' 'contemplation' etc. procuring the reputation for holiness and other honours from God-less people of this world and also gaining thereby Heaven and other enjoyable lokas (regions). It was 'Hinduism' in order to earn a living and become known as a religieux, effecting a compromise between the verbal name —a mere thing of this world which is itself the manifestation of the external, shadowy Power of God, and the eternally self-revealing Holy Name of the God-head ; to take as occasion serves this grossly—distorted, reflected image of the Name ; or to suppose that the Name is on a level with Dharma, Jajna, (Sacrifice), Brata (vowed observance) etc. and, therefore, with all greater confidence to nourish every manner of evil thought on the basis of such perverse reliance on the Name ; etc. etc.

And because this 'mere' 'Lad' was proclaiming Truths that were opposed to such concoctions of the diseased mind therefore, they thought that they owed it to themselves to drive Him out as the 'destroyer' of the religion of the Hindus. Nay, further, as the Mahamantra of the Name of Krishna was on a par with other Mantras and as no Mantra was to be uttered in a loud voice so as to be heard by anybody else, the potency of Mantra being impaired if heard by anyman, and as Nimai Himself said that the Name of Krishna is Mahamantra and yet loudly proclaimed the same purposely to make all people hear the Name, therefore, was it not decisively established that by such conduct which was undeniably opposed to the shastras He was proved to be guilty of deliberately profaning the shastras of the Hindus ?

These so-called Hindus who were as a matter of fact polytheists who placed the chit and jada (the conscious principle and matter) in one and the same category, who considered Isvara (transcendental Ruler) and the Name of Isvara as a mere constituent part of their ordinary ceremonies, in order to harass Sree Gaursundar had recourse to the Kazi and having approached him had the effrontery to say—'This Nimai is obstructing the preaching of the Mussalman religion, therefore, as you have the power it is your bounden duty to turn Him out of the town.'

Vaishnavism was in this manner maligned by a section of the Hindus in the days of Mahaprabhu. The prevalent opinion of the present day happens to be that Vaishnavism is only a branch of 'Hinduism'. But those who have had the good fortune of realising the true nature of Vaishnavism know that the Vaishnava can by no means be styled as a common 'Hindu.' The Vaishnava is never a Brahman, Kshatriya, Vaisya or Sudra. The Vaishnava is not a common Hindu or a karmi. It is no doubt true that a Hindu who is born in a Brahman, Kshatriya, Vaishya, Sudra or Antyaja family or any other person whoever he may be is potentially fit to be a Vaishnava. As a matter of fact any jiva (being) whose spiritual nature has been awakened is fit to be a Vaishnava. But if, therefore, a Vaishnava is designated as a Hindu, Musalman, Christian, Brahman, Kshatriya, Vaishya, Sudra or Antyaja the thing signified by the term is not exactly indicated. Those who suppose that a Vaishnava is a Hindu, Brahman, Kshatriya Vaishya, Sudra or Antyaja are utterly ignorant of the real nature of a Vaishnava and of Vaishnavism.

The so-called Vaishnavas of the present day are so misinformed of their personality that when they are asked about their designation they think it to be honourable to describe themselves as Hindu, Brahman, Kshatriya, Vaishya, Sudra etc. Such designations are not applicable to a true Vaishnava. A Vaishnava ever describes himself only in term of his own proper and eternal nature as an humble aspirant for the service of the servant of the servant's servant of the Supreme Lord. Because such designation truly describes the nature of the Vaishnava. Sreeman Mahaprabhu has taught us this Truth in the Sanatan-Siksha (His teachings to Sanatan) that 'the jiva's proper self is the eternal servant of Krishna.'

Those whose minds are much too thickly incrusted with an accumilation of empiristic ideas may make a pretence of supposing the above 'to be a piece of sheer bigotry on the part of Mahaprabhu.' But if such self-deluded people ever have the good fortune of being truly enlightened by the Grace of God they will only then understand that all beings are the fractional parts of the One Absolute Truth and the eternal servants of the Source of all Avatars (Incarnations), Isvara (Divine Lord), the One, the Son of the Lord of Braja —Shree Krishna.

Because we have lost all memory of our true selves, therefore, it happens that we are so over-anxious to be designated 'Turks,' 'Hindus', or 'Srautas' and to suppose that the highest duty, the summum bonum, of life consists in the preservation of the 'Hindu dharma or in other words 'the function of the body and the mind.' Here in Bengal we recognize Harihar Bandopadhya's son Raghunandan Bhattacharyya as the great man when all of us should follow. Raghunandan has made an elaborate arrangement for the perpetuation of this 'Hinduism' which ensures the endless cycle of births and rebirths in the company of a motley host of changing dogmas; and consciously or unconsciously enlisting ourselves as the loyal disciples of the Bhattacharyya mahasaya we are often in danger of committing the grave offence of hating those sincere Vishnavas who practise exclusively the dharma of the soul supposing them to be transgressors against the 'good, old' customs and as being devoid of the religion of the 'Hindus.' Hence even Advaitacharyya although appearing in a staunch Hindu family is in our opinion a back-slider from the path of Hinduism, because he had the temerity to receive with honour the devotees of God. Similarly Nityananda, also coming of a Hindu Brahman family, is according to our judgment guilty of unholy practices as he taught the world by his personal practice to honour the Mahaprasad. And some of us do not hesitate to go still further and even to insinuate that Mahaprabhu Himself upheld those 'good' customs of the 'Hindus' against Nityananda and Advaitacharyya ! Mahaprabhu always said that no one was fit to be a teacher of dharma who himself did not practise it. He Himself set the example by practising personally the suddha sanatana dharma (the unalloyed eternal function) that He taught. This is what He Himself has said of His Own Practice—

'नाहं विप्रो न च नरपतिर्नापि वैश्यो न शूद्रो
नाहं वर्णी न च गृहपतिर्नो वनस्थो यतिर्वा ।
किन्तु प्रोद्यन्निखिलपरमानन्दपूर्णामृताब्धे-
र्गोपीभर्तुः पदकमल्योर्दासदासानुदासः ॥'

'I am not a Brahman, nor a Kshatriya, nor a Vaishya, nor again a Sudra ; neither am I a Brahmachari, a Grihastha, a Banaprastha nor a Yati. But I am only the servant of the servant's servant of the lotus Feet of the Consort of the damsels of Braja, Who is the ocean of nectar overflowing with eternally self-revealed, fullest, transcendental bliss.'

An Humble Suggestion

[By Sj. Atul Chandra Bandyopadhyaya, Bhaktisaranga]

TO err is human. However learned and intelligent a man may be, he is liable to a creeping error. The greatest philosopher should always remember that human nature is at every moment apt to fall into various errors, specially when we undertake to judge of things, spiritual and eternal, with our emperic knowledge. Of all human excellencies, reason is undoubtedly the greatest ; but it has its own jurisdiction. There are men whom Nature has indeed favoured with superior powers. Our mind again is always changeable. We accept a theory today and reject the same a few days after. Every one so often experiences the fallacy of theories established by great men. The great inequality that we often perceive in the productions of the mind of the same man should discourage dogmatism. A man's body varies with the weather and time, and changes oftener than the moon ; so the mind must rise and fall like the mercury in the tube. It is one hour pure as ether ; the next moment, foul as the thickest fog. Where is, therefore, the certainty of human intellect ? Where is the boast of human reason ? This fickleness of the mortal frame, this instability of human wisdom should teach us humility and abate our pride. This is overlooked by many philosophers most of whom are found strongly prejudiced towards their own favourite opinion. Prejudice or prepossession generally stands like a stumbling block in the way of justice and do not suffer our reason to look abroad. It is this fatal propensity which shamefully misleads our judgment. To avoid being led astray by such a dangerous error, we must be very careful to divest ourselves of acquired prejudices and hear impartially before we pass any sweeping remark on any subject.

It is admitted on all hands that the powers of the mind do depend upon the organs of the body which vary in course of time. The mind being inseparably connected with matter, cannot proceed beyond material phenomena. It has therefore no access to the spiritual world, (वैकुण्ठ) the door of which is shut against all who want to enter with his prepossessions or the dim light of wisdom of this world. Rules and laws of the material world have no access there. Material time and space have no place in this world of eternity. Material senses cannot approach that realm. Who can set land-marks to limit dimensions or find plummets to fathom the depth of that mighty mysterious exstence ? What numbers can state, what line can gauge the lengths and breadths of that eternal world ? A theist cannot help conceiving of One Spiritual Supreme Being in this spiritual Realm of eternity, in spite of all that can be said by the most obstinate atheist and his own doubts can devise.

Be you the most intellectual giant, the most learned scholar, the best orator, the most experienced man in the world, you must stop dead at the Gate of the Divine Sphere of Spirit and seek counsel of sound judgment as to how to proceed further.

"नायमात्मा प्रवचनेन लभ्यो न मेधया न बहुना श्रुतेन"
(कठ, १।२।२३)

You will have to drop all before you face this world and submit fully to the process of deduction (श्रौतपन्था). This is what is called civil death which makes you competent to have a glimpse into the mysterious principle of spirit.

"तद्विद्धि प्रणिपातेन परिप्रश्नेन सेवया" (गी ४।३४)

A light (emperic knowledge) may be useful to us to find out something in a dark room (material world); but it is of no use to us when the sun shines brightly upon us. It is simply ridiculous to attempt to see the sun with the help of a light, which owes its origin to the sun. God is Self-effulgent. His Powers are identified with His Person. In material objects there is a difference between the person and his powers, between the thing and its attributes, its name, its form and its action. But it is a spiritual truth that in spirit the thing is identical with its name, form, attribute and action. Most of the western philosophers having identified the mind and the perverted ego (अहङ्कार) with the soul or spirit, failed to rise beyond matter and its relation. The line of demarcation between the soul or spirit and the mind, will be observed in the following sayings of Krishna (the Lord of all Lords) in the Geeta—

"भूमिरापोऽनलो वायुः खं मनो बुद्धिरेव च । अहङ्कार इतीयं मे भिन्ना प्रकृतिरष्टधा ॥"
(गी ७।४)

(1) The solid, (2) liquid, (3) fire, (4) poteney and (5) space (these five elements which form the physical body or outer case of a being) and (6) the mind, (7) the understanding and (8) the perverted ego (the three elements which compose the astral body or inner case of a man) are all substances which have relation to the creative principle of matter (अपरा प्रकृति वा मायाशक्ति) whereas, the soul which is an emanated atomic part of the Divine Soul, is a sort of His Energy of a different nature (जीवशक्ति वा तटस्थाशक्ति) which produce beings who are spiritual in nature but liable to be enthralled by Maya (His illusory energy) when their true and innate position as eternal servants of the Deity is forgotten by them. God has infinite powers, but the Scriptures describe of only three divisions of the attributes of His Powers, viz. (1) The attribute of God's Power which exhibits spiritual existence called the chit-shakti and the spiritual kingdom is called chit-jagat. (2) The maya-shakti which creates the material phenomena known as mayik-jagat. (3) The jiva shakti which differentiates souls that are naturally located between chit-jagat and mayik-jagat and are so constructed as to be liable to be enthralled by maya-shakti in consequence of want of power when unaided by chit-shakti of the Deity. Those who prefer to serve their Master are protected from falling into the clutch of maya and undergoing troubles in consequence, and they are admitted in chit-jagat as eternal servants.

The soul engrossed in matter loses itself in mind, and the mind takes the seat of its master the soul and acts through senses enjoying this world. In fact the soul is the proprietor of its properties (1) mind and (2) body. When the sleeping soul is, fortunately however, made to turn back to hear and think of or to move towards its, original position, matters give way : the body and the mind follow suit till the final object of spiritual existence is attained. Mind engrossed in matter is doomed to wallow in the mud of this world, whereas, mind liberated from all pressure of gross matter tends to go back to God and back to Home above. Between mind and spirit there is a wide gulf which can only be bridged over by spiritual cultivation.

There are so-called great men or rational thinkers who deny the existence of spirit. But this truth cannot be subjected to dry reason or barren arguments, but is only to be felt by sincere men as intuitive truth.

The prudent philosophers have discovered that all the mistakes we are guilty of, originate from (1) भ्रम, (2) प्रमाद, (3) करणापाटव and (4) विप्रलिप्सा, whereby our boldest and strongest thoughts are lost. (1) We mistake 'infamy' for 'renown' and 'ruin' for 'benefit'. (2) We misunderstand things when the brightest rays of truth shine in vain upon our mind. (3) The senses we observe with are always defective and incapable of giving us a perfect view of things observed. For instance when we look a glassful of water with our naked eyes, we do not see any germ in it unless and until a microscope be used. Then again we donot see in darkness. (4) A general inclination for deception creeps into our heart when we take one-sided view and establish facts or theories with the greatest assurance. All are subject to fall victim to these defects. The only exception is God the Almighty and His associated counterparts who remain in the Absolute Truth. He is All-knowing, All-powerful and All-blissful. He is Omni-present, Omni-scient and Omni-potent, the like of Whom cannot be found anywhere. He is One without a second and possesses infinite powers. Out of His own supreme power and prerogative He appears before us as "Avatar" or "Sree Bigraha". He comes down from His Even-blessful Abode to this world, in the form of a man when we actually need His help. Sometimes He sends His "Parsadas" Associated Counter-parts fully empowered to act here on His behalf. When theism is forced to give way to pantheism, atheism scepticism and agnosticism ; irreligion unscrupulousness and duplicity bring about chaos on earth. Sin and its consequences surge round us tumultuously clamouring to have their way and we find ourselves in the midst of a whirl-pool against our wishes. He comes to this world to save us from their clutches and re-establishes peace and order.

"परित्राणाय साधूनां विनाशाय च दुष्कृताम् । धर्मसंस्थापनार्थाय सम्भवामि युगे युगे ॥"

(गी ४।८)

He may remain here and at the same time everywhere in and out of the universe. Mutually contradicting powers and attributes live in harmony with Him ruled by His super-natural Self. With all His parapharnalia and with all His Majesty, Might, Glory, Beauty, Wisdom and Supremacy, He reigns eternally in the spiritual world and at the same time exists in every created object and place in all His fulness. The Omnipotent Author of Nature is Supreme Will in Himself and is above Nature, her laws and rules, because everything has come out of His Will and power. Supreme Lord Krishna-Chaitanya is at the centre of all spiritual and material phenomena—the point whence "Harmony" shines eternally with her All-Beautiful Lord—"The Absolute Truth". His Injunctions are at all times universally true and must be universally relied upon. They are embodied in the Vedas, the Geeta, the Upanishads, Sreemad Bhagabatam and other Sat-Sashtras which must be accepted as the only evidence in spiritual matters. Fortunate and blessed persons hear and obey them. They are not intended for any particular sect or a particular caste or creed, but for all beings and all souls—whether animal, human or celestial. They are not based on local or apparent truth, but on the Absolute or unchallengable Truth. If brought to this platform by the Grace of the Almighty, persons of contrary interests and different sentiments come to peace and live in eternal association with that Transcendental Being, a life of continuous joy, peace, happiness and success in this world in and the next; Harmony having laid her hand on the contending parties and brought all their differences to an amicable conclusion. How to arrive at this platform should be our first question.

I alone cannot approach His Divine Abode unaided by the spiritual light from One Who realizes the principle of spirit. Here comes the question of "Sat-Guru"—our spiritual guide—who is the nearest and dearest part and parcel of the Supreme Being. He comes to this world, in the form of a man to save dormant souls from the clutch of Maya (His illusory energy), to infuse into every man the Divine power to go through life victoriously and successfully, to give every erring being the power to be re-instated to his former position and have all the rights and privileges of such a position—the eternal service of Godhead.

Generous Reader, do you feel the need of such a friend, staunch and true,—who will stand by you thick and thin?—who will give you power to win, when you are strongly tempted to do wrong in accordance with or in contradiction to the dictates of your own reason and judgment?

"Where can I find our Spiritual Guide? How to get Him to be interested in me?"—should naturally be our next question.

If I am sincere and true in my desire, He will reveal Himself to me. He is always near me. He is ever ready to receive every one who comes to Him. Many have found Him. Many are enjoying His friendship and living in close communion with Him. I should express my willingness to obey Him and I will find a consciousness in me that He has heard my prayers. The next moment I find Him disguised before my eyes in human form—"Mahanta Guru" or "Sat-Guru" welcoming me with his stretched arms and the Gate of God's Realm opens.

Religious Views

IN the three Vyahritis of bhuh, bhubah and svar, in the four lokas (regions) of Mahah, Janah, Tapas and Satyah situated above the three Vyahritis—and in the seven infernal regions of Atala etc. the enjoyer of the pursuit of objects that is practised by the senses, is not the soul (atman), but an attribute (उपाधि) of the soul, or non-soul ;—such pursuit is not the submissive following of the transcendent, or devotion ;—but it is the mere temporary gratification of the senses. By such mental functioning narrowness or sectarianism is manufactured. But if by the methods of attentive listening, subsequent questioning and serving, submitting completely to the transcendent and real Truth, we follow that course which is likely to please Him,—only then is the realisation of the Absolute possible ; as in the words of Sree Geeta (4/34) :—

"तद्विद्धि प्रणिपातेन परिप्रश्नेन सेवया ।
उपदेक्ष्यन्ति ते ज्ञानं ज्ञानिनस्तत्त्वदर्शिनः ॥"

Thus it would appear that it is not even the mind, which is a dim and distant glow of the pure intelligence, that is denoted by the term 'शुद्ध आत्मा' (immaculate soul), or 'I' ; and, therefore, by the functioning of such mind the true meaning or purpose of the Veda cannot be learnt. It is so because mental function is fickle, changeable and liable to be dis-jointed and obstructed at every stop ; and it is for this reason that spiritual object cannot be served by non-spiritual object or non-spiritual mode of action. If such non-spiritual object or mode of action is allowed to be the guiding force the task of effecting real harmony becomes extremely impracticable on account of the adumbration of differing speculative theories. Although Sree Shankaracharyya made the attempt to establish outward reconciliation by means of सगुण उपासना (attributive worship) but as, however, it led up finally to the position of an Abstract Brahman devoid of material attributes, no real reconciliation was effected thereby. In the Sufi school also we find that there is this worship of the Ego or 'anal hak' ;—as a matter of fact such view is the product of mental function which forms, as it were, the very root. Such mental function being liable to distortion by time and being given to garnering of fragmentary knowledge, those empiricists and intuitionists have never been able to obtain, in its proper form, the knowledge of the service of the transcendental Reality. They are guided by the knowledge that arises from the perception of this world by means of the senses, or obey the experience of the circumscribed intuition that is found in this world ;—and, therefore, in the attempt to ascertain the true object of worship, they are forced to adopt the doctrine of illusory appearance, even in the case of intuitive experience, on the analogy of knowledge that is derived from perceptual experience. Although the abstractist may be led by the method of negative reasoning to the admission that the Absolute Truth is beyond all phenomena in which the least trace of the mundane factor happens to be present, as being the mere antithesis of the phenomenal, it does not follow that the Absolute Truth itself, being pure Intelligence and the supreme moving Power behind everything, is, therefore, necessarily mere abstract intelligence, or absolutely devoid of quality ;—because, his observation being the product of either selfish enjoyment in the form of apprehension of this world by the senses, or of non-spiritual instinctive experience of this world, on account of its changeable character and by reason of its not being in a position to attain the proximity of the Reality,—being situated at a great distance from the subjective nature of the Reality,—the correctness of its finding about the subjective Reality is properly enough open to controversy and doubt. Under the influence of mental imagination he may declare the ultimate Reality to be a mere abstraction ; but, as a matter of fact, such declaration does not affect the subjective nature of Reality itself. His subjective existence does not change in the least. By propounding the doctrine that the form of mere material abstruction, the opposite of material diversity, is a point of pure intelligence he has simply transformed himself into an illusionist by means of such mistaken attribution. Exactly the same is the case of mistaking the rope for the snake. But the rope does not actually become the snake by being mistaken for the snake. Therefore, in order to be able to eliminate such illusionism, which is an obstacle in the way of the vision of the real truth of things, it is absolutely necessary, as a preliminary condition, to realise properly our true relation to things.

I have already said that even if the transcendental is denied, He still remains full of all the manifestations of the pure intelligence, by virtue of His transcendental nature. Among the mental functionists of the West, although the agnostics or sceptics (as for instance Huxley, Spencer etc.) led away by their particular tastes or experiences happen to entertain the conviction of un-knowability or doubt regarding the existence of absolute Reality, it is not therefore, as a matter of fact true that He has no existence at all. Another instance in point is that of Mr. Robert

Buchanon, the author, who has ridiculed the teachings of Jesus Christ as being mere concoctions of the mind, and has expressed his doubt regarding their utility ; just as the knowledge of objects that belong to the fourth state of the soul is not attained by means of the sense ;—the knowledge regarding the fourth to infinite dimensions although apprehensible with the aid of materialistic mathematical science we have failed to comprehend in terms of the actual experience of our limited knowledge ;—nor does there exist any method by which this is possible ; because those objects, viz. the objects of the fourth state etc., are matters that happen to lie beyond and outside the limits of all material experience. It is for this reason that the Sreemad Bhagabat (1/1/1) has addressed the Absolute Reality with the words :—

"धाम्ना स्वेन सदा निरस्तकुहकं सत्यं परं धीमहि"

'Let us meditate on the Absolute Truth, with its parapharnalia, that ever dessipates all illusion'. The expression 'स्वेन धाम्ना' means 'with all its transcendental parapharnalia ; and 'निरस्त कुहक' implies that the Absolute Truth enables the worshipper to attain its own presence without producing any differences or contradictions in its realisation ; that is to say, it does not deceive or delude him Vishnu Himself is that transcendental Reality ;—He is that Truth Whose presence dissipates all illusion. If we think that He is only one of those the gods who are empowered to rule over the world, and is specially endowed with the quality of sattva, we may, indeed, thereby secure the gratification of selfish purpose but are unable to realise the distinctive characteristic of Vishnu viz. His freedom from all limitation. He is 'वैकुण्ठ'—'विगता कुण्ठा यस्मात् सः' ; or, in other words, He is not finite, or any circumscribed object within the limits of the universe. He is the only location of all existence,—the one only root-cause of the realisation of the truth of all objects spiritual and non-spiritual ; that is to say, all objects have existence because He abides in them. He is the giver of power to all the gods. It is even customary to salute the neutralist after his renunciation of the asrama stage of life with the formula 'नमो नारायणाय' 'obeisance to Narayana' on the ground that he is a fit abode of Vishnu. Vishnu is the Lord of the subjective existence of all objects,—He alone is worthy of our regard ; objective experience being destructible,—that is to say, not having any connection with Vishnu, is not valued in the shastras ; eg. Sree Geeta (9/23) :—

"येऽप्यन्यदेवताभक्ता यजन्ते श्रद्धयान्विताः । तेऽपि मामेव कौन्तेय यजन्त्यविधिपूर्वकम् ॥"

'The show of worship, prevalent in the world, of many gods, conceived in terms of external experience as different gods or rulers of the universe, has no connection with Vishnu, and is, for that reason, absolutely lacking in the quality of devotion ; and therefore, such worship is in violation of the clear injunctions of the shastras, or are improper or an act of impiety ; that is to say they are forbidden.' As a matter of fact it is this external apprehension that is meant by the worship of material objects that are the products of physical Nature (प्रकृति). This worship of the prakrita (product of physicul Nature and its mother prakriti (physical Nature), is known as mayavada (illusionism). Moksha which is the summum bonum of this Nature-ism (प्रकृतिवाद) or Illusionism (मायावाद), is, in the opinion of the professors of nature-ism, nothing else than the state of absorption in the non-manifest physical nature (अव्यक्त प्रकृति) by the gradual narrowing of external perception. But we learn from the Brahmasutra 'ईक्षतेर्नाशब्दम्,' (1/1/5) that physical nature herself is not able to create the world !—the world is created by Maya (the externol energy of God) by the power of the glance of the supreme Lord, Vishnu. In the opinion of saukhya smriti (sankhya karika 21) the world is created by the union of purusha and prakriti—God and nature —after the manner laid down in the logical dictum of co-operation of the blind with the lame in performing a journey. Therefore, the nature-ist does not admit the word of the Veda—"यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते, येन जातानि जीवन्ति, यत् प्रयन्ति अभिसंविशन्ति, तद्विजिज्ञासस्व, तदेव ब्रह्म" (तैः भृगु, १ अनु) ; in other words, he does not admit the supreme God, Vishnu, as being both the efficient and material cause of the universe.

Thus* we find, by a consideration of all controversies that have up till now arisen or are likely to arise in the future in the world, that all philosophical or religious views have as their basis these three words viz.—(1) चिद्राहित्यवाद (view that excludes pure intelligence), (2) चिन्मात्रवाद (view that admits a point of pure intelligence), (3) चिद्विलासवाद (view that holds the extensive manifestation of pure intelligence). According to the first, the cessation of consciousness is itself the summum bonum (as in the schools of Buddha and Kapila). In the second, the goal to be reached is the cessation of all distinguishing features of consciousness, or, in other words, the absence of distinction between the worshipped, worship and worshipper ;—the sumum bonum being the unified state of existence of the seer, seeing and the seen. In the third, there is eternal existence of the worshipped, of worship and of many worshippers. Although the first two views contain instruction recommending renunciation, the abstinence that they favour is mixed up with the tendency to wordly activity. All philosophy of the world that is the product of the active impulse are subordinate to these two views. By exclusive addiction to the active impulse, or by being guided by external knowledge generated by the exercise of the senses, the experience of the transcendental Reality, the goal of our true self, is not gained ; unreal, external objects alone are secured.

In the Sreemad Bhagabat Sree Prahlad Maharaj says to Hiranyakasipu, the King of the Daitayas, (7/5/30-31) :

'मतिर्न कृष्णे परतः स्वतो वा
मिथोऽभिपद्येत गृहव्रतानाम् ।
अदान्तगोभिर्विशतां तमिस्रं
पुनःपुनश्चर्वितचर्वणानाम् ॥
न ते विदुः स्वार्थगतिं हि विष्णुं
दुराशया ये बहिरर्थमानिनः ।
अन्धा यथान्धैरुपनीयमाना-
स्तेऽपीशतन्त्र्यामुरुदाम्नि बद्धाः ॥"

The purport of the sloka is —'those who abuse the office of a house-holder, that is to say, are engrossed in surveying the world by means of external senses assuming the role of observers ; or are busily occupied in enjoying ephemeral worldly objects as their Lord and proprietor ;—are 'अदान्तगो', that is to say, their senses are not under their control ; on the contrary they themselves are the object slaves of those senses ; and, therefore, their thoughts are never directed to their own Lord whom alone they ought to serve, to the lotus feet of Sree Vishnu which alone is the one thing that they require ;—They endeavour to gain external, ephemeral objects ; their senses are busy in the quest of enjoyable material objects ; and, therefore, fettered with the chains of the illusive energy of God, they fall again and again into the darkness of this world.' But the devotees of God constantly employ all their senses in the service of the supreme Lord, Sree Hari ; 'the service of the Lord of the senses by means of the senses' is thus properly realised only in their case.

"सुरर्षे विहिता शास्त्रे हरिमुद्दिश्य या क्रिया । सैव भक्तिरिति प्रोक्ता यया भक्तिः परा भवेत् ॥"
(भः रः सिन्धु पूर्व २।८ संख्याधृत)

The devotees are found graded into three distinct orders having different duties. The duties of the youngest order are thus defined :—

All their acts are performed with reference to God and this is the form of their spiritual endeavour. Such activty should not be styled karma or fruitive work of the elevationist.

For the intermediate grade the duties are thus described.—

"लौकिकी वैदिकी वापि या क्रिया क्रियते मुने । हरिसेवानुकूलैव सा कार्या भक्तिमिच्छता ॥"
(तत्रैव धृत पञ्चरात्रवाक्य)

One who aims at loving devotion as his ultimate object, performs all worldly duties and acts enjoined by the Veda as a help in serving Sree Hari who is the object of his worship.

The duties of the best devotees are—

"ईहा यस्य हरेर्दास्ये कर्म्मणा मनसा गिरा । निखिलास्वप्यवस्थासु जीवन्मुक्तः स उच्यते ॥"
(भः रः सिन्धु पूर्व २लः धृत नारदीय वाक्य)

He is engaged under all circumstances, with body, mind and speech, in an unlimited endeavour to serve Sree Hari.

In the sloka "ज्ञाने प्रयासमुदपास्य" quoted above from the expression "स्थानस्थिताः", we can understand that it is practicable to serve Sree Hari under all conditions. Therefore, of the three methods viz. work, knowledge and devotion, it is only by the last, that is the method of devotion, that the proximity of the ultimate Reality itself, the One Truth, Vishnu, can be gained ;—and it is un-attain-able by the other two methods.

THE magnanimous Thakur understood from this incident that most of the villagers, with Ramchandra Khan as their mouthpiece, were opposed to his devotional practices. Therefore, having already realised that it was proper to give up that mode of worldly life which was unfavourable to the practice of devotion the moment the danger threatened to become actual, Thakur Haridas bestowing on that woman the Name of Hari as well as the cell of his devotional practices went off to a different place for the purpose of worshipping Hari. The woman giving up her sinful course made an offering of her accumulation of ill-got riches for the service of Brahmans. By the mercy of Haridas becoming well-versed in the Name of Hari she came to be regarded with great reverence in society.

As the result of his wicked treatment of Sree Haridas Thakur the feeling of hatred against God and His devotees increased apace in the heart of Ramchandra Khan. Consequently when Lord Nityananda with his entourage of Vaisnavas arrived a few days afterwards in the mandap of Ramchandra, the evil-disposed Ramchandra treating Him with contempt said that his spacious mandap would not accomodate Him and His gosthi (personal adherents) but that he was prepared to house Him in his 'gostha' (cowshed). On hearing this the Lord went away to another village.

By means of this load of iniquity which now reached its full weight Ramchandra speedily brought down upon himself the most terrible destruction. In consequence of delay, prompted by avarice, in the payment of revenue to the Mahammedan ruler of the country the Yavana monarch forcibly entering his mandap polluted it for good by slaughter of animals and other similar acts ; plundered all the wealth of Ramchandra ; and finally spat into his mouth and even compelled him to swallow objectionable blood and flesh of animals, etc. Ramchandra was made aware by this event that his temporary greatness had been the merest of trifles. Such greatness, the existence of which is liable to be destroyed in a moment, can never be the permanent means of obtaining the highest good.

Giving up the hut of Benapole Thakur Haridas came to Fulia a village of the Nadia District situated midway between Ranaghat and Santipur. Sree Advaita Prabhu from Sylhet had by that time settled down at Santipur. Having the Company of Sree Advaita Prabhu Haridas with mind filled with joy went on taking the Name of Sree Hari. Giving up all worldly pleasure he passed his days immersed at all time in the bliss of the Name.

At that period there was a powerful community of Brahmans in the village of Fulia. Most of them gave sundry help to the Thakur in his worship of the Name. At that time the Bhagirathi used to flow close by the village. Haridas bathed in the Ganges daily and chanted the Name of Hari with a loud voice. By the severe decree of Providence several Brahmans of the village of Fulia took up an attitude of opposition to his worship of the Name. On the western side of the Bhagirathi lay the muluk of Amboa. It was the place of residence of a powerful Kazi who was the royal officer in charge of the administration of the muluk. Those Hindu Brahmans who were the enemies of the devotee of God agreeing with the views of the local Yavanas formed a conspiracy to have Haridas punished by the chief Kazi of Amboa muluk on a charge of being a promoter of social disorder. By orders of the Kazi Haridas was brougdt before him. As administrator of the district the mulukpati Kazi had under arrest a large number of criminals. Thakur Haridas availed of the opportunity of associating closely with the prisoners. Many of the captives were led to hope to be released by the intervention of Haridas. Desirous of their well-being Haridas expressed his wish to put up at the prison-house. At this the prisoners were filled with misgivings as regards the kind intentions of Haridas and were dejected. Finding that the prisoners were depressed by misunderstanding his good purpose Haridas hastened to tell them every thing that was worth knowing in a way that they could understand. 'The highest good of jiva lay exclusively in the Name of Krishna and the worship of Krishna. Being every moment deluded by material objects jiva turns his face away from Hari. Those who are at this place in the state of confinement are really most fortunate as in their case there is no opportunity of the God-less mood becoming strong. For the present at any rate being at a distance from all pleasurable material objects these jiva have got an excellent opportunity of taking the Name of Hari during the period of captivity. After release from confinement acting according to the dictates of their desires they will have the misfortune of procuring again coveted material objects. Although I do not wish to continue in the state of captivity, yet this is my prayer to you that you may always utter the Name of Hari forgetting material pleasures. If the Name of Hari is uttered by your months you will be freed from your worldly bondage within a short time.' Having thus blessed the prisoner magnanimous Haridas was brought before the Kazi, the ruler of the muluk.

The mulukpati Kazi aware of the respectability of Haridas honoured himself by offering him a seat suited to his position. Then the Kazi said,—'You have had the rare good fortune of having sprung from a Yavana family of high lineage. Being born in such high family and in a superior society how has such perversion of judgment manifested itself in you ? The Yavanas look down upon the Hindus with an eye of contempt ; they feel compunction in accepting food touched by them. Why have you thus lowered yourself by the violation of the religion of your community giving up the customs and practices of your high ancestry ! By such behaviour in this world how will you obtain deliverence in the next ! If you are prepared to accept my good advice, adopting the social customs of high Yavana families read chahar kalma, and being again initiated in the Yavana religion destroy the sins that have been practised.'

Jiva-fish, why dost thou fall into the net of Maya any more ?
Art un-aware thou wilt be in eternal bondage ?
In hope of trivial pleasure, a captive in the fetters of Maya,
Wilt thou remain in this altered state liable to punishment, like one in the powet of another.
Now with strength of bhakti, in the water of the ocean of love of Krishna, Remain thou, playing at ease, in obedience to Krishna.

Taking Refuge in God (श्रीशरणागति)

[III]

1. In pleasures of learning I spent the time
In highest confidence ;
I never served Thy Feet ;
Thou art the Refuge now.

2. As intently my studies I pursued Hope increased ;
Knowledge was the path, I thought.
The hope was unfulfilled, The knowledge proved weak ;
That knowledge was ignorance, I now know.

3. All worldly knowledge Is treasure of maya ;
Thy service it obstructs ;
Breeding attachment for this transitory world
It makes an ass of jiva.

4. Turned such An ass, The load of the world
On my back I carried long ;
In old age, For want of power to enjoy ;
Nothing now pleases me.

5. Life is become Misery now ;
The knowledge has proved untrue ;
The torment of untruth Has grown intolerable ;
The learning is now the pointed shaft.

6. Except Thy Feet There is no other treasure
In the world ;
Bhaktivinode, Quitting his hold of worldly knowledge,
Now only values Thy Feet.

Sri Sri Chaitanya Bhagabat

72. The limit of the material power of Purusha
I do not know, neither do the munis
born thy elders ;
The primal god, thousand-mouthed Shesha, who is ever singing the praise,
Up till now has failed to reach the bounding shore of those qualities.

73. Such is the Lord, the possessor of greatest power, self-regulated,
Who abideth in rasatal for maintenance of the world.

74. Narada himself, appearing in the assembly of Brahma,
The praise of whose qualities, sings to the accompaniment of his lute tumburu.

75. Listening to praise Brahma and the gods are convulsed ;
For singing it Narada is revered everywhere.

76. Ever so little write I of the power of Ananta ;
For such Lord Nityananda may all have most loving regard.

77. Getting across the world, who-so-ever desires Immersion in the ocean of devotion, let him worship Nitaichand.

78. This the desire of my heart at the feet of Vaishnavas—
In each successive birth may I serve Lord Balaram,

79. The difference between dvija, bipra and brahman is merely one of name ;
Even such is the difference between Nityananda, Ananta and Baladeva.

80. The knower of the inmost mind Nityananda said in sportive mood
In the form of a book to indite this brief narrative of the deeds of Chaitanya.

81. By whose grace the deeds of Chaitanya manifest themselves,—
On the tip of Shesha's tongue is placed the treasury of Praise.

82. Whence is Ananta embodiment of all Praise,
Whose twin lotus feet I unworthily have sung.

83. The deeds of Chaitanya Chandra that sanctify all who hear,
Are manifested by the special favour of the devotees, this know ye as certain.

84. Who ever knows the deeds of Chaitanya that are hidden in the Veda ?
I only write as I have heard from the lips of devotees.

85. I see no beginning nor end of the deeds of Chaitanya ;
In the manner He empowers so I write.

VOL. XXV. SEPTEMBER 1927, 441 Chaitanya-Era. NO. 4.

'Math and Mansion'

1. 'Man', 'animal', 'bird', 'insect', 'fly', 'tree', 'hill' etc. are so many names for the 'body', that is to say they acquaint us with different bodies.

2. This 'body' is born, grows for a time and thereafter dissolves into the five elements. It is a material object and is not self-conscious. This is the nature of all material objects.

3. Inside this 'body' there is another material object called the 'mind' which suffers the pains and pleasures of the 'body'. This 'mind' is also subject to destruction and change.

4. He who takes or bears this 'body' and 'mind' is jiva (in the state of bondage). The jiva is self-conscious and devoid of birth and death. The jiva takes different 'bodies' and 'minds' as the result of selfish enjoyment (कर्म्म).

5. The jiva cannot suffer the pains and pleasures of the material body.

6. This jiva is the eternal worshipper of Vishnu. All jivas are Vaishnavas.

7. The Vaishnava cannot be properly included within any class or condition of people judged by the criteria of 'body' and 'mind'.

8. If the jiva, living inside the body made of the five elements or in a mansion made of brick etc., is eager to enjoy other bodies, he is called a self-centred or pseudo-householder ('गृहव्रत' वा 'गृहमेधी').

9. But when the jiva inhabiting this mansion knows that he himself is not the house, and also views other mansions as mansion and not as indweller, and does not seek to enjoy the fruits of his labour, or, in other words, is devoid of the desire for selfish enjoyment, then he is called a house-dweller ('गृहस्थ').

10. Kindness to jiva (जीवे दया) is remedying of this unfortunate condition of those jivas who, belonging to the class of pseudo-householders, suppose themselves to be mansions and not the dwellers there-in.

11. When the house-dweller jiva becomes desirious of being kind to other jivas and wants to make his own life worth-living by doing good to others, he thereupon becomes a 'Math-dweller' (dweller in monastery).

12. The 'Math-dweller' is ever kind to jivas ; he has no other duty except being kind to jivas.

13. By being kind to jivas one is kind to one's own self and pleases Krishna. Doing everything for the sake of Krishna is devotion or service of God.

14. The 'Math-dweller' does nothing for his own selfish enjoyment or for increasing the selfish enjoyment of the seekers of worldly pleasures. Rather he collects all the various objects that are intended for such selfish enjoyment and employs them in the service of Krishna and His devotees.

15. The 'Math-dweller' giving up for good all evil association lives in good companionship and abstains from dissipating games, intoxicants, sensuous association with females, slaughter of animals and earning of money for his own selfish enjoyment.

16. The 'Math-dweller' preaches the afore-said principles by practising them himself.

17. The 'Math-dweller' without being himself attacked by bees or serpents, with dexterity gathering honey and hood-jewels (which others either use for their own selfish enjoyment or are attacked before they can gather them for such enjoyment), employs them in the service of Krishna.

18. The 'Math-dweller' does not himself deceive others and helps innocent and foolish people by exposing cheats.

A Letter.

My affection-incarnate,

I have this morning come to Sri Gaudiya Math from Puri with P—. Immediately on arrival at the Station I heard that by the will of God T— has gone away from us. You knew T— as your son ; he is a servant of Krishna. He came into the household of a Vaishnaba, you served him in the office of the parents of a Vaishnaba, he has gone away after accepting that amount of service of which he was in need. T— indeed got his body from you but he is a soul—a Vaishnaba. His eternal duty is service of God. A Vaishnaba comes into this world on the pretext of individual need and remains in material space for the allotted period of such mission and thereafter proceeds where-so-ever Baladeva sends him according to his fitness. You know Maha Lakshmi (Sat-Energy i.e. सन्धिनीशक्ति) dwells in the heart of Baladeva and Krishna with His Ecstatic Energy (ह्लादिनी शक्ति) dwells in Maha Lakshmi ;—therefore, T—has gone away in order to serve the object of his worship. As he happens to be a soul—a Vaishnaba, emanating from Lord Nityananda, the Incarnation of the Power of Being (सन्धिनी) if you learn to look upon Nityananda as son, you will no longer experience any want. Nityananda Himself has been present as the Knower of the heart (अन्तर्यामी), of T—, you have served Him,—Continue to Serve Him still. The mass of matter of which the body of your son was composed in elemental space, has dissolved into five elements. But the Soul of T—remains employed in the constant service of God and His Energy. Your son, as an object of selfish enjoyment, has been dissociated from the company of his father, as a similar object of selfish enjoyment. He is an object of enjoyment of God ; and, therefore, his duty as a Vaishnaba is to remain the object of God's enjoyment, that is God's servant. God knows that you are not enthralled in the bondage of maya (Illusory Energy). He will not, therefore, overwhelm you in your misery, aiding you with the power of His infinite mercy. Please recall to memory the Story of Sribas and his son.* Peruse 'Shokashatan' of Thakur Bhaktivinode and Sri Chaitanya Bhagabat of Thakur Brindabandas. At the time when Mahaprabhu accepted Sannyas, He said to His aged mother, His wife Vishnupriyadevi and to the inhabitants of Navadwip,—"I am only a being, variously connected with you. After My departure, establish, in My place, all these relationships with Krishna and afford me the opportunity of freely serving Krishna." In the absence of T—you also will have more time for serving God-head. What God does is for our good. What more can I say to console you ?

With Eternal blessings,

Sree Siddhanta Saraswati

Unalloyed devotion.

UNALLOYED devotion (शुद्धभक्ति) is thus indicated in Bhakti Rasamrita Sindhu—*

"She (unalloyed devotion) is the destroyer of misery, giver of good, inspirer of contempt for moksha (emancipation from worldly bondage), extremely difficult to obtain, the essence of the most highly concentrated bliss and capable of attracting Sree Krishna."

'Misery' is three-fold viz.—'sin','seed of sin' and 'nescience'. The man in whose heart unalloyed devotion makes her appearance is naturally freed from sinful activities. Sinful impulses—'the seed of sin'—also find no place in the

*"क्लेशघ्नी शुभदा मोक्षलघुताकृत् सुदुर्लभा । सान्द्रानन्दविशेषात्मा श्रीकृष्णाकर्षणी च सा ॥" —(पूः १लः १२)

The story runs thus in the Chaitanya Bhagabat Vol. II. 25. 57-65

* The Lord spake to the dead child "why dost thou go away leaving the house of Sribas ?" The dead child answered "Lord ! In this body for as many days and in the measure ordained, I have tasted all things, the period of allotment has run out and I cannot stay any longer, I am now going to another sphere. The ordained connection with this body is ended and so I cannot stay. Lord, have mercy on me that I may not forget Thee. No one is the father of anybody, nor anybody's son. Everyone enjoys the fruits of his own actions. As long as I was destined to be in Sribas's house, I remained here and now I go elsewhere. I make obeisance to Thy Holy Feet with all Thy associates. May Thou forgive my offence. I am departing now."

heart that is sanctified by devotion. Mistake regarding the true nature of jiva is 'nescience'. With the appearance of unalloyed devotion the consciousness that 'I am the eternal servant of Krishna' is spontaneously aroused, and, therefore, nescience, in the form of mistake regarding one's real nature, ceases to exist. As soon as the light of unalloyed devotion enters the heart, 'sin', the 'seed of sin' and 'nescience' are instantly destroyed. 'Misery' vanishes on the appearance of devotion. She is, therefore, 'the destroyer of misery.'

Unalloyed devotion is the 'giver of good.' The love of all the world, all good qualities, all happiness etc. are denoted by the word 'good'. One in whose breast unalloyed devotion manifests herself is thereby endowed with the four good qualities of humility, kindness, absence of pride and readiness to honour everybody; and, therefore, everyone in the world loves him. All good qualities that are inherent in the jiva spontaneously manifest themselves in the devotee. As in the sloka—*

"In him, who possesses selfless devotion to Hari, dwell all the gods with all their good qualities. But where is the possibility of those great qualities in one who is not a devotee of Hari; in as much as he runs after phenomena driven by mental predilections?" Devotion can confer all kinds of happiness—at her will, can give everything—worldly pleasures, the pleasure of undifferentiated union with Brahman, all success, enjoyment, salvation etc. But as the devotee does not want to have any of these he obtains eternal supreme bliss from her.

Devotion inspires contempt for 'moksha'. No sooner does the love of God-head, ever so slightly, makes her appearance in the heart, piety, wealth, passion and salvation lose all value.

Unalloyed devotion is extremely difficult to obtain. This point is not easy to grasp. Despite thousand and one varieties of endeavour unalloyed devotion ever remains most difficult to attain due to the fact that cleverness in serving God-head happens to be so rare. The Goddess of devotion satisfies and deludes most of her votaries with the gift of salvation; she does not give unalloyed devotion unless she detects special fitness in the recipient of her favour; for these reasons unalloyed devotion has ever been such a very rare attainment. Sree Rupa Goswami Prabhu observes in his Bhakti Rasamrita Sindhu—*

*"यस्यास्ति भक्तिर्भगवत्यकिञ्चना
सर्वैर्गुणैस्तत्र समासते सुराः।
हरावभक्तस्य कुतो महद्गुणा
मनोरथेनासति धावतो बहिः॥"
—(भाः ५।१८।१२)

*"ज्ञानतः सुलभा मुक्तिर्भुक्तिर्यज्ञादिपुण्यतः। सेयं साधनसाहस्रैर्हरिभक्तिः सुदुर्लभा॥"

That is to say—'by efforts after knowledge salvation in the shape of knowledge of the undifferentiated Brahman can certainly be obtained ; heavenly enjoyment is easily gained by pious deeds such as jajna etc ; but so long as the knack in the practice of devotional communion is lacking, despite thousand manner of efforts unalloyed devotion for Hari is not obtained'.

Unalloyed devotion is the essence of the most highly concentrated bliss. It is transcendental bliss, the boundless ocean of happiness. The happiness that exists in the material world, or the bliss due to the realisation of the undifferentiated Brahman that is found in the sphere of negative thoughts, multiplied a billion-fold, does not attain even the scale of comparison with a solitary drop of the ocean of the bliss of unalloyed devotion. Material pleasure is trivial, immaterial pleasure is dry ; both are different from spiritual bliss which belongs to quite another category and possesses far different characteristics. Things that are categorically different from one another cannot be compared one with the other. For this reason those that have realised the bliss of devotion are in a position to enjoy substantial happiness so intense that to them the bliss flowing from the realisation of the abstract Brahman appears to be as contemptible as the tiny pool indented by cattle-hoof. He only knows who has actually realised this bliss : it is inexpressible.

Unalloyed devotion is capable of attracting Krishna. Sree Krishna waited upon by all His beloved, subdued by love, is drawn close to one in whose heart devotion makes her appearance ;—and He cannot be won by any other method.

Unalloyed devotion is thus defined by Sree Rupa Goswami in his Bhakti Rasamrita Sindhu—*

"Unalloyed devotion is the cultivation of friendly feeling towards Krishna by means of all the senses to the exclusion of all selfish desires and unhampered by intellectual striving after he undifferentiated Brahman or by self-enjoyment etc." In other words un-adulterated devotion is that culture of friendly relation with Krishna by means of all the senses, which is free from every desire other than that of devotional improvement and which further involves exclusive attachment to Krishna and the abandonment of all worship of the gods as separate divinities. Such friendly feeling implies spontaneous liking for Krishna. The pursuit of the abstract Brahman or the Over-soul is possible only by the methods of inductive reasoning and concentration (योगः) ; and is, therefore, not devotion (भक्ति). Knowledge (ज्ञान) in this connection means the knowledge of Sankhya and the quest

*"अन्याभिलाषिताशून्यं ज्ञानकर्म्माद्यनावृतम् । आनुकूल्येन कृष्णानुशीलनं भक्तिरुत्तमः ॥"
—(भः रः सिः पूः विः १।६)

of the undifferentiated Brahman. The true knowledge regarding spirit (जीव), matter and God-head and of their inter-relation, is absolutely neccessary for the realisation of the self. Such knowledge is a part and parcel of the practice of unmixed devotion. By the word 'karma' is meant the selfish, fruitive and penitential works that are daily performed by the smartas. The services of Krishna, although they have an external semblance to such activities, are quite distinct from 'karma' for the reason that they possess the characteristic of selfless, unflinching devotion to Krishna ; and are, therefore, known by the name of 'bhakti' or 'devotion'. The renunciation (वैराग्य) or knowledge (ज्ञान) that precedes the appearance of devotion is also a variety of selfish enjoyment(कर्म्म). Therefore, the causeless, incessant, and exclusive service of the soul (जीव)to Sree Krishna alone indicates unalloyed devotion.

But it may still be asked 'How are we to ascertain that our devotion to Godhead is unalloyed ? The following sloka of Sreemad Bhagabat supplies three criteria of un-alloyed devotion by means of which we are enabled to distinguish in our own case as well as in that of others, genuine from pseudo-devotion.

"Just as in the case of one sitting at meal the taking of every morsel of food is attended with simultaneous satisfaction, nutrition and appeasement of hunger, so in the case of a devotee betaking himself to the holy feet of a true Preceptor (सद्गुरु), unalloyed devotion, realisation of the transcendental Truth and renunciation of everything else than Krishna—all these three—simultaneously manifest themselves."* This applies only to the case of one who has already realised true devotion. It may also be noticed in this connection that of the six indications of un-alloyed devotion, mentioned in the sloka quoted at the beginning, only the first four appear in the incipient stage of devotion ; the last two manifest themselves in the realised state alone.

'Vishnu' and 'Vaishnava'.

THE words 'Vishnu' and 'Vaishnava' have been manifested in this world from eternity. They were in use during the pre-historic period. In the vedic age the use of the words 'Vishnu' was very frequent. The glories of 'Vishnu' have been sung by the Vedanta as well as by the Upanishads in many places.

The Rig-Veda is considered to be the oldest of the four vedas. It is the oldest

*"भक्तिः परेशानुभवो विरक्ति रन्यत्र चैष त्रिक एककालः ।
प्रपद्यमानस्य यथाश्नतः स्यु- स्तुष्टिः पुष्टिः क्षुदपायोऽनुघासम् ॥"
—(भाः ११।२।४२)

book of the world. Long before the compilation of the Rik-Samhita, the Divine mantras were manifested in the hearts of the Rishis, having been handed down by a regular succession of preceptors. We find the following mantra in the first mandala of the Rigveda*

The above mantra also occurs in the Atharva-veda VII. 2-5. ; and recurs in the Sam-veda-Samhita.

In the above Rik-mantra, the verb 'निदधे' has the 'लिट्' form. According to the Sutra of Panini 'परोक्षे लिट्' (३।२।११५) the 'लिट्' form of a verb is used to denote action that is not actually perceived by the speaker and hence the alternative word for 'लिट्' is 'परोक्ष'. As for instance, in the sentence 'रामो वनं जगाम' the speaker is directed to use the 'लिट्' form of the verb if he wants to express the fact of Ram's sojourn into the forest long after its actual occurrence. Therefore, in as much as the oldest Rik-mantra, in order to express the fact of the 'Tribikrama Incarnation of Vishnu, uses the 'लिट्' form of the verb, it is definitely proved that Vishnu is not a mere god of the vedic age ;—but that, on the contrary, He had no beginning. He is the Ever-Existent, Eternal, Unchangeable Reality or Godhead Himself. Vishnu is eternal (सनातन). The worshippers of Vishnu are also eternal. This is so because we find in this very first mandala, in the next Rik-mantra, the clear statement to that effect viz—*

In this mantra the realm of Vishnu has been described as the highest ; by the expression 'दिवीव चक्षुराततम्' His self revealing character is affirmed ; by the plural form of the word 'सूरयः' the eternal existence and plurality of the worshippers of Vishnu are established ; by the expression 'सदा पश्यन्ति' the constant nature of His worship by many worshippers is asserted.

A class of writers confounded by the Illusory Energy of Vishnu, relying on worldly learning, have vainly attempted to prove that 'Vishnu', in the Vedas, is only an alternative name of 'Suryya'. Durgacharyya and other saura commentators of the nirukta have thus failed in their disingenuous attempts to establish their particular, narrow, sectarian views. Sayanacharyya, in his commentary of the Rig-veda, explains the threefold-stride of Vishnu by means of the story of the Bamana Incarnation. The commentator Mahidhar in his explanation of the same passage has noted as follows—"विष्णुस्त्रिविक्रमावतारं कृत्वा इदं विश्वं विचक्रमे विभज्य क्रमतेस्म। तदेवाह त्रेधा पदं निदधे भूमावेकं पदमन्तरीक्षे द्वितीयं दिवि तृतीयमिति क्रमादग्नि-वायु-सूर्यरूपेणेत्यर्थः (वाजसनेय संहिता ५।१५ भाष्य)", that is to say 'Vishnu

*"इदं विष्णुर्विचक्रमे त्रेधा निदधेपदम्। समूढमस्य पांसुरे ॥"—(१म-२२सू-१७ऋ)

*"तद्विष्णोः परमं पदं सदा पश्यन्ति सूरयः। दिवीव चक्षुराततम् ॥"—(१म-२२सू-२०ऋ)

by the manifestation of His threefold-power-Incarnation encompassed the whole universe with His three strides. One stride appeared on the earth, the second in the sky and the third in the realm of light—as fire, air, and 'Suryya' respectively."

Notwithstanding the fact of 'Vishnu' being the appellation of one of the twelve Adityas, the nirukta has clearly proved that 'Vishnu' and 'Suryya' are not the same god and that the Supreme Lord Vishnu is never an alternative name of 'Suryya'. As a matter of fact in the Rig-veda itself 'Vishnu' and 'Suryya' have been described as separate gods. (Vide Rik—I. 90-9)*

"May Mitra, Baruna, Suryya, Indra, Brihaspati and Urukrama Vishnu grant our well-being". It is clearly proved by the mantra just quoted that 'Suryya' and Urukrama Vishnu' are two different gods. Had it been otherwise they would not have been mentioned separately. It will be superfluous to multiply such instances.

The vedic gods are divided into three classes according to their place of residence viz residents of the realm of light, of the sky and of the earth. Among the gods of the realm of light are—Dyu, Baruna, Mitra, Suryya, Pushan, Vishnu, Vivashwata, Aditya, Ushas, Asvin etc. Here also, just as Asvin is not Suryya, for the same reason 'Vishnu' cannot be 'Suryya'.•

We find the story of the strides of the threefold-power-Incarnation of Vishnu also in the Mahabharata—*

The events of the pre-historic age are recorded in our shastras such as the Mahabharata etc. Only meagure references to the events of that remote age, of which the history is contained in the Itihasas and the Puranas such as the Mahabharata, the Srimad Bhagabatam etc, are to be found in the Vedic-Samhitas etc. The subject treated in the Mahabharata and in the Puranas such as Srimad Bhagabat etc, is the history of events that occurred long before the period of the compilation of the Riksamhita ; and it is for this reason that the Puranas and Itihasas, although written in the period subsequent to that in which the Samhita-portions of the Vedas were compiled, are full of accounts of events that occurred in the pre-vedic period.

There is also another class of records from which we learn definitely that 'Vishnu', in the Vedas, is not merely another name of 'Suryya'. The Rishis have thus described the mode of contemplation of Vishnu—†

*"शं नो मित्रः शं वरुणः शं नो भवत्वर्यमा । शं नो इन्द्रो बृहस्पतिः शं नो विष्णुरुक्रमः ॥"

*"क्रमणाच्चाप्यहं पार्थ विष्णुरित्यभिसंज्ञितः"
—(शान्तिपर्व १३।१७१)

†"ध्येयः सदा सवितृमण्डलमध्यवर्त्ती
नारायणः सरसिजासनसन्निविष्टः ।
केयूरवान् कनककुण्डलवान् किरिटी
हारी हिरण्मयवपुर्धृतशङ्खचक्रः ॥"

"Within the orb of 'Suryya', seated on the lotus, decorated with keyura and golden kundala, crowned, adorned with necklace, holding the conch and disc, may we always contemplate Narayana of golden complexion."

In the Geeta, Vedavyasa, the great Codifier of the Vedas, has informed us in words spoken by the Supreme Lord —

"The effulgence of the moon, the fire and the sun that lights up this vast world is a part of my Halo."

Just as there is a group of writers who have attempted to prove that the Vedic Vishnu is identical with 'Suryya' so also there happens to be another class of people, similarly deluded by the Illusory Energy of Vishnu, who hold the opinion that in the Rigveda it is 'Indra' who bears the name of 'Vishnu'. But in the Veda itself it is definitely mentioned that 'Vishnu' is different from 'Indra' and 'Suryya' (vide Rigveda I 155s. Riks. 1,2,3,4,5,6 etc.). In these Riks Indra and Vishnu have been mentioned as separate gods, and Vishnu has been distinguished from the other gods by such special epithets as 'इनस्य' (१।१५५।४) 'the Lord of all' (vide Sayana's commentary), 'त्रातुः' (१।१५५।४) 'Protector' (Ibid), 'अवृकस्य' (I bid.) 'without a foe', नित्यतरुणः 'Ever young', 'उरुगाय' etc. Speaking of Indra the Rig-veda says (vide I, 155.3)—'Indra gives animals their procreative power (vide S's commentary on the same mantra). Also the use of the compound word 'इन्द्राविष्णु' occurs in numerous passages of the Rig-veda. Panini notes—'देवता द्वन्द्वे च' (६।३।२६) 'In compounding words signifying 'god' the first word (पद) takes the suffix 'आनङ्'. In accordance with the above sutra, we can say definitely that in the compound 'इन्द्राविष्णु' Indra and Vishnu are the names of two separate gods.

The various different passages in the Vedas in which the word 'Vishnu' has been used are quoted below, along with the mantra, for information of the reader. In the Rig-veda—

1. अतो देवा अवन्तु नो यतो विष्णुर्विचक्रमे ।

Thakur Bhaktivinode.

THE transcendental nature of Thakur Bhaktivinode as realised by suddha bhaktas finds expressions in the following sloka* which is repeated by all his followers in making their daily obeisance to him :—

"Obeisance to Thee, Bhaktivinode,
by name Sachchidananda,
The Embodiment of Gaur's Love,
the great follower of Rupa."

The mercy of Gaurasundar has the power of establishing Jivas in their true nature and thereby enabling them to realise the bliss of eternal service to God. Thakur Bhaktivinode is the embodiment of this Shakti (Attribute) of Divine Love. Gaurasundar is Godhead Himself. His Attributes are not separate from Himself. There is no difference between the Attributes of Gaurasundar and Gaurasundar Himself. The bhakta ('devotee of God')is the inseparably associated counterpartof Godhead. The Attribues of God and the Devotee of God are Divine. His relation to God is one of inconceivable simultaneous difference and identity. The difference consists in this that the shakti and the devotee are worshippers (आश्रय) and not the object of worship (विषय). Godhead with all His transcendental parapharnelia ever indwells His shakti and His devotee. They are His own. Out of pity for the apostate Jivas, God sends His own Messenger into this world in every age for establishing the pure (शुद्ध) and eternal (सनातन) religion in the form of constant service of Krishna. Either Krishna or Krishna's own messenger establishes the true and eternal religion in this world. This task is beyond the capacity of those who are not helped by the Grace of God Himself.

It will not be possible for us to understand the true meaning of the career of Thakur Bhaktivinode if we do not keep constantly in our mind this all-important fact that Thakur is the embodiment of Divine Love,—a saviour of the fallen beings, sent by God Himself into this world for the purpose of establishing the eternal religion of all Jivas (सनातन धर्म्म), which consists in the eternal and incessant service of Krishna ; He taught Sanatan Dharma to the world by way of propaganda and by practising it himself in every act of his earthly life. 'All (good) qualities of Krishna manifest themselves in His devotee and not at all in those who are given to selfish enjoyments.' So says the Bhagabatam :—*

*"नमो भक्तिविनोदाय सच्चिदानन्द नामिने । गौरशक्ति स्वरूपाय रुपानुगवराय ते ॥"

*"यस्यास्ति भक्तिर्भगवत्यकिञ्चना
सर्व्वैर्गुणैस्तत्र समासते सुराः ।
हरावभक्तस्य कुतो महद्गुणा
मनोरथेनासति धावतो बहिः ॥" (५।१८।१२)

He was an ideal father, erudite scholar, practical reformer, and distinguished author. This was realised by everyone who had the good fortune of coming into close personal contact with him. It is reali-ed by an increasing number of people in this country who have devoted their serious attention to the subject. His practice is exemplified by the conduct of everyone of his followers. They exist at the present moment in our very midst; and it is quite practicable for any of us to observe closely their mode of life. Everyone who has really taken the trouble of watching their daily life is bound to be convinced of the transcendental purity of the minutest acts of their lives. Those suddha bhaktas fully realise that it is by following the path chalked out by Thakur Bhaktivinode that they have been enabled to attain such perfect purity of body, mind and speech. The purity of the stream is the conclusive proof of the purity of the source.

Thakur Bhaktivinode, in the midst of the multifarious duties of a most active official, found time to propagate the teachings of Sree Gaurasundar and firmly re-establish the practice of Sanatan Dharma in this country. His activity was many-sided. A main item was the identification and restoration of forgotten and uncared-for holy sites (लुप्ततीर्थ). His epoch-making and most momentous discovery in this field was that of the actual site of Sreedham Mayapur, the place of the Advent of Mahaprabhu Sree Chaitanya Deva, which was completely lost sight of for many years. The actual site of the residence of Pundit Jagannath Misra, the father of Sri Gaurasundar, was found out and arrangements were made for the preservation of this Holy Site and for the construction of a permanent shrine on the spot in which Holy Images of Sree Sree Mahaprabhu and Vishnupriya Devi were solemnly installed. Many of the old sites connected with Mahaprabhu in the region of Gauda (गौड़मण्डल) were discovered and identified and arrangement made for the proper maintenance of the shrines connected therewith. Propoganda-centres were opened at different places of Gauda-desha. Thakur Bhaktivinode established Nama-hattas (propaganda-centres of the Holy Name) at different places in the districts of Nadia, Burdwan, Midnapur etc. He also worked hard for the revival of the religion of unalloyed transcendental love of Godhead in the Muttra-quarters For this purpose Thakur Bhaktivinode constantly travelled from place to place often on foot, begging at every door and always delighting in Hari Sankirtan in the company of a large number of devotees The closing years of his life were spent at Puri where he built a small house for the purpose of bhajan ('practice of devotion') on the sea-beach. He cut himself off from the world during the last four years till his disappearance in 1914.

During these years he was visited in his bhajan-kutir by many people of every description and was ever ready to help them with advice and necessary instructions.

It will thus appear that Thakur Bhaktivinode was in his own life indefatigable in the practice of sudha Sanatan dharma taught by Mahaprabhu and was no less strenuously occupied in the work of restoration of the worship of God at holy sites and the establishment of congregational and individual religious life in the country. But at the same time he was aware that his misson was also to expound to the whole world the teachings of Sri Mahaprobhu which had been and is still misunderstood by people in this country and elsewhere He directed his attention in the first instance to Bengal. He found that the people had practically no knowledge of the monumental works of the associates and the most illustrious followers of Mahaprabhu. The very existence of many of those works was unknown. Those who gave themselves out to be the followers of Mahaprabhu mistook ignorance of the Scriptures for devotion (भक्ति) and selfish enjoyment (काम) for love of God (प्रेम). The educated people had very little practice of religion in any form. The mass and especially women were addicted to Smarta ritualistic practices, the object of which was the attainment of selfish enjoyments. The Pandits were mostly either supporters of such fruitive ceremonies or believers in an abstract form of God devoid of all spiritual pastimes, this latter being the bequest of Godless Buddhism and the teaching of Sankaracharyya. Scepticism among the educated classes coupled with the prevalance of Polytheistic or Neutralistic and negative attitudes on the part of the learned among the pundits left the country without a lead on the path of the eternal religion of Jiva viz. the incessant service of Godhead who is the Absolute Truth, the Eternal Existence and the Ocean of all transcendental Bliss (रस).

The embodiment of God's love in the form of Thakur Bhaktivinode out of pity for Jiva in his distress and perplexity took up at this stage the task of enlightening him again about the only duty of all Jivas which has been proclaimed by all the different Scriptures and which was made clearly manifest to the people of this country four hundred years ago by the Supreme Lord Himself, Who playing the role of a devotee taught Jiva his duty in its concrete form that there might be no room for misunderstanding.*

"Himself practising the Dharma, The Lord teaches Jiva th at if one does not practise Dharma himself, he cannott-each it to others." The career of Mahaprabhu embodying the teachings of all the Scriptures was the subject that Thakur Bhaktivinode placed before the people of Bengal in clear and simple language and with a wealth of learning and depth of spiritual insight that make his numerous works a part and parcel of the Scriptures of all countries, explaining in minutest detail, in unambiguous language, the only true religion of all Jivas. They deserve to rank with the immortal works of Thakur Brindabandas and of Kaviraj Goswamin as Scriptures of the Suddha Sanatan Dharma.

We have not obtained any comprehensive work on the Suddha Sanatan Dharma directly from the pen of Sri Chaitanyadeva Himself. His teachings were, however, recorded with the most zealous care by His Associates and Followers during the period that He remained manifest in the world and in that immediately following His disappearance. The monumental works of the six Goswamis were composed in Sanskrit under His own direction. The account of His career was recorded systematically in verse in their great works Sri Chaitanya Bhagabat and Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita by Thakur Brindabandas and Krishnadas Kaviraj Goswamin respectively, both of whom were disciples of Lord Nityananda, the Greatest Associated Counterpart of Sriman Mahaprabhu.

In Bengal, at the time of the appearance of Thakur Bhaktivinode, the works of the six Goswamis were practically unknown. The works of Thakur Brindabandas and Kaviraj Goswami were little known and were almost utterly misunderstood. The socalled Vaishnabas of Bengal were then, as a rule, looked down upon by the orthodox Hindu society. But the name of Mahaprabhu was universally venerated. The esoteric meaning of His teachings had been completely forgotten and even the most highly gifted intellects of the country admired Vaishnava devotional literature as merely satisfying their poetic fancies. The divinity was confounded with humanity. This philanthropic attitude was general and was partly responsible for the prevalence of immoralities in socalled many religious practices that ate into the vitals of society.

आपनि ना कैले धर्म्म शिखान न याय॥"
—(श्रीचैतन्यचरितामृत आदि ३।२१)

With the object of dispelling this general ignorance of the principles of Suddha Sanatan Dharma, Thakur Bhaktivinode applied himself to publish systematically important authoritative works dealing with the teachings of Mahaprabhu, with exhaustive explanatory notes in Bengali. A few of these publications may be mentioned here. In 1880 he published Sree Krishna Samhita in Sanskrit with the most learned Introduction, Appendix and Translation in Bengali. In 1886 he published the Gita with commentaries of Srila Biswanath Chakravarti Thakur and his own annotation 'Rasik Ranjan' in Bengali; in 1891, Srimad Bhagabat Gita with commentaries of Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusan and his Bengali annotation 'Bidvad Ranjan'. In 1894, Ishopanishad with his Bengali annotation 'Vedarkadidhiti'. In 1895, Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita with his 'Amritaprabaha Vashya' in Bengali. In 1897, Sri Brahma-Samhita with his Bengali annotation 'Prakashini'. In 1898, Sri-krishna Karnamrita with his Bengali annotation. In the same year Sri Upadeshamritam by Sri Rupa Goswami with his Bengali annotation 'Piyushbarshini Virtti' and Sri Brihat Bhagabatamritam by Sri Sanatan Goswami with his annotations in Sanskrit and Bengali. In 1901, Sri 'Bhagabatarka-marichimala. In 1904, edited Satkriasaradipika—a Vaishnaba Smriti by Srila Gopal Bhatta Goswami.

This was supplemented by the publication of a series of original works in Bengali prose and verse. Some of the most important of them are—in 1881, Kalyan Kalpataru; in 1886, Sri Chaitanya Sikshamrita;in 1890 Sri Navadwipadhama Mahatmya; in 1892, Sri Mahaprabhu and His Siksha; in 1893, Sri Saranagati, Sokashatan, Jaivadharma; in 1900, Sri Harinama Chintamani; in 1902, Bhajan Rahasya. The Bengali religious monthly 'The Sajjana-Toshani' was started by him in 1879 and he continued to edit the paper for seventeen years when it was made over to the present editor who published it for seven years till the appearance of the weekly Gaudiya—the only Bengali organ of the Suddha Bhakti movement The Sajjana Toshani, re-appeared this year bearing also the alternative name of 'The Harmonist' and has been given by her editor a tri-lingual garb of English, Sanskrit and Hindi. Besides these Thakur Bhaktivinode also wrote a numberof works in English, Sanskrit, Persian, Urdu and Hindi.

Thakur Bhaktivinode possessid a style that is easy, invigorating, cheerful, lucid and uniform and enriched with the fresh wealth of an ample vocabulary culled from the inexhaustible store-house of Sanskrit and adapted into Bengali in a natural way. The Bengali language in the hands of Thakur Bhaktivinode has thus been transformed into a powerful vehicle for the conveyance of the sublimest and the most highly philosophical truths of religion with an ease and precision that makes his works highly interesting and at the same time perfectly intelligible to the most ordinary reader including women and children.

Thakur Bhaktivinode is the Pioneer of the Suddha Bhakti Movement that is at present sweeping over the country. In his numerous literary works he has supplied the golden key that unlocks 'the region of Eternal bliss' to all jivas. The teachings of Mahaprabhu give us the real meaning of the Scriptures, reconciling all differences of opinion that trouble the world. In Mahaprabhu centres the only hope of the future and present of all jivas. But the teachings of Mahaprabhu were not grasped by people of this country and their real significance passed long ago clean out of the memory of the nation. Thakur Bhaktivinode has made the eternal religion live again in his pages. Without his help no body at the present day can understand the teachings of Mahaprabhu or the Absolute Truth. With his help the Absolute truth can be easily understood. The Absolute Truth alone can reconcile the otherwise irreconcilable differences and discords of this world. It is universally recognized that the Truth is bound to prevail over untruth in the long run. But even the Truth can only be grasped by those whose minds are perfectly free and prepared to receive it when it actually makes its appearance. But most of us are not ready to welcome the Truth for its own sake. Thakur Bhaktivinode tells us that a perfectly pure mind alone is fit to receive the Truth. Perfect purity is not to be found in the world. It belongs to Divinity alone and is imparted by Divine Grace ; and God often sends His own beloved to convey His Grace to fallen jivas if only they submit to receive it from him.

The utsabas (religious celebrations) of the vaishnavas are the concrete realisation of this Divine Truth. They are the practical recognition of the necessity of honouring God by the method of honouring His beloved ; because it is the only way of serving God and obtaining His Grace.

We shall conclude this brief account of Thakur Bhaktivinode by presenting the reader with a few short extracts from the Thakur's writings embodying his views regarding Nama-Bhajan (Adoration of the Holy Name) which constitutes the fundamental doctrine of the Suddha Sanatan Dharma and the solution offered by him of some of the most pressing problems that confront the generation.

The Holy Name :—"There are many persons who failing to understand the distinction between 'the dimly perceived Name' (नामाभास) and the Holy name Himself (श्रीनाम), suppose that the Holy Name is only an ordinary word made up of certain letters of the Alphabet and that, therefore, the taking of the Holy Name without faith (श्रद्धा) is also effective. They adduce as proofs the history of Ajamila and certain passages of the Scriptures such as "साङ्केत्यं पारिहास्यं वा" etc. It has already been stated that the Holy Name is the 'Absolute Truth Himself' (चैतन्य) and 'the embodiment of the elixir of the highest ecstatic emotion (रसविग्रह) ; and is not attainable by the organs of sense. This being so, if one does not seek the help of the Holy Name with a mind free from offence, no good result is possible. The effect of the utterance of the Holy Name by a person devoid of faith (श्रद्धा) is that thereby it becomes possible for such person subsequently to take the Holy Name with faith. Therefore, those who, deliberately misinterpreting for a selfish purpose, explain the Holy Name as being merely the juxtaposition of a number of letters forming only a constituent part of fruitive ceremonials, are utterly impious; and their taking of the Name is an offence against the Holy Name Himself."('Harinama' Page 7.)

"Sriman Mahaprabhu with His associated counterparts, attendants, powers and associates (साङ्गोपाङ्गास्त्रपार्षद) has taught the jivas of the world sankirtan (congregational chanting) of Harinama (the Name of Hari) which is the proper religion in Kali-Yuga. It is not the fact that His appearance was for the purpose of the deliverance of a small number of people of India On the contrary, His purpose was to deliver all jivas by the propagation of the eternal religion to all countries of the world. Mahaprabhu Himself declared this in the following words—*

"My Name will spread into all the regions and villages of the earth." There is no doubt that this indisputable command will very shortly turn into a fact. It appears to be absolutely certain that all the religions of the world will mature into one universal church of the sankirtan of the Holy name..... Oh ! When will that day arrive, when in England, France, Russia, Prussia and America, fortunate men of those countries, with flags, drums, Khole and Karatal (cymbals) etc, in their native towns, shouting ever and anon the Holy Name of Sri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu will send a thrill of ecstatic delight all over the world ! When will that auspicious day make its appearance when, from one end of the earth white men of Europe and America forming into procession and shouting "All glory to Sri Shachinandana," will meet halfway and embrace us as brothers and the devotees of our country will reciprocate advancing from the other end ! When will that day be when those Europeans will declare "Brothers, we have betaken ourselves to the Holy Feet of Sri Chaitanya Deva—the Ocean of Love ; we beseech you to embrace us as a token of your kindness !" When will that day dawn when the absolutely pure transcendental love of Vishnu will be the only religion of all Jivas ; and, like rivers meeting the ocean, all the narrow creeds will finally merge in the eternal Vaishnab religion."

Varnasram Dharma—"It is not the purpose of any patriotic Indian to destroy the Varnasram Dharma (the duties of the four Varnas and of the four stages). It is our duty to eliminate the impurities that have crept into the system. In order to rejuvenate Varnasram Dharma, it will be necessary to adopt the following principles—(1) No one's Varna will be settled by birth alone (2) the Varna of Every person should be settled in accordance with the nature formed by the association of early years and by the course of acquistion of knowledge and experience."

(The Sajjana Toshani Vol II. Page 123.)

The Selection of Sadguru (True Spiritual Guide) "At the time of accepting a preceptor one must satisfy himself that (1) he must be well acquainted with the true significance of the scriptures that will enable him to dispel the gloom of ignorance from the mind of the disciple and that (2) he must be above all human frailties and ever devoted to the Transcendental Truth. Such a preceptor is doubtless capable of instructing the disciple in knowledge of every kind. The preceptor who initiates should never be renounced except for the two following reasons (1) the disciple should renounce his preceptor when he discovers that his Guru does not possess the above qualities due to the disciple's mistake in choice. (2) the disciple should repudiate his preceptor in case he (preceptor) becomes a hater of Vishnu and Vaishnaba."

(Jaivadharma ch. XX)

"Within the Gaudiya Sampradaya an abundant crop of evils have sprung up during the last four hundred years. The first and foremost duty of an Acharyya is to uproot those evils completely.....He alone is an Acharyya who teaches the Dharma that he himself practices."

Thakur's two predictions :—

(1) Some person imbued with the power of God will again establish the true Varnasram Dharma in accordance with the Divine Dispensation.

(2) Within a short time there will exist only one Sampradayu (School) in the realm of devotion 'bhakti'. Its name will be "Sri Brahma Sampradaya." All other Sampradayas will merge in this Brahma Sampradaya.

CHAPTER II.

Summary :—In this chapter are treated,—the precedent appearance of the associated-counterparts and eternal associates of God-head, the then condition of Nabadvipa, Advaita Prabhu's Krishna-worship with water and Tulasi, the appearance of Sri Nityananda on the 13th day of the bright fortnight of the month of Magh, the hymn of the gods while the Lord was in the mother's womb, the advent of Sri Gaur-chandra ushered by Sri-Krishna-Kirtan on the full-moon day of the month of Falgun and the attendant rejoicings.

The establishment of the Dharma of the Kali Age, viz., the Nama-Sankirtan of Sri Hari, was the cause of the Incarnation of the Supreme Lord with all His paraphernalia. At that time Nabadvipa was a most prosperous town and a great centre of learning, but devoid of godli-ness. On the advent of the Supreme Lord Nabadvipa became the centre of the propaganda of the eternal religion whither gathered together a large number of the most eminent devotees born in different parts of the country. These facts have been clearly stated in this short chapter.

1. All glory to Mahaprabhu Gaursundar, Glory to the son of Jagannath, the Great
Lord of Lords
2. Glory to the Life of Nityananda-Gadadhar, All Glory to the Refuge of Advaita and other devotees.
3. All glory to Gauranga with the association-of-kindred of His devotees !
By listening to the story of Chaitanya, devotion to God is gained.
4. I make my obeisance again at the feet of the Lord ;
May the Incarnation of Gaur-chandra manifest itself on my tongue.
5. All glory to the Ocean of holy pity, Gaur-
chandra,
All glory to Nityananda, embodiment of the holy service of God !
6. The two Brothers and Their devotees are the unknown Truth,
Even They out of mercy make the Truth
well-manifest.
7. In Brahma and other beings the Truth manifests itself by the grace of Krishna,
As all Scriptures—the Vedas and the Bhagabat—sing,
8. By whom of yore the heart of Brahma was made reminiscent of the power of creation and by whose direction the goddess of speech.
Who declares the worship of Sri Krishna, was born from the mouth of Brahma,—may the greatest of Rishis be kind to me !
9. Brahma was born of old from navel-lotus of Vishnu.
Yet lacked the power of sight ;
10. Where-upon as he besought the Lord with all his heart,
The Supreme Lord Himself out of mercy appeared before his view.
11. Then, by the grace of Krishna, the goddess of speech manifested herself,
And then had he knowledge of the Supreme story of all Incarnations.
12. Even such is the Incarnation of Krishna-chandra, most inscrutable,
Without his grace who has the power to know ?

13. Incomprehensible, unapproachable, is the lila of Krishna-Incarnation,
As Brahma himself has declared in the Bhagabat—

14. "Who in the three worlds knows Thy lila, O Lord? Thou art the Great, the Container of every blessing, All-soul, Lord of all revelation, Lo, where or why or in what manner or when, dost Thou ever play? Manifesting even Thy own incomprehensible power.

15. Why does Krishnachandra incarnate Himself
Who has power to know this Truth?

16. Yet what has been said in the holy Bhagabat, Geeta, Touching cause of His Incarnation let me repeat—

17. "Verily, O Bhara'a, whenever religion decays,
And un-godliness grows apace, then I incarnate Myself.

18. "For the protection of sadhus, the destruction of evil-doers.
The establishment of religion, I am Born in every Age."

19. Whenever religion is checked
And impiety waxes strong,

20. In order te protect the godly and to destroy the wicked,
Brahma with others supplicate for His Incarnation at the feet of the Lord.

21. Whereupon the Lord, to establish the Divine dispensation for the Age, Becomes visible in this world with His associates and attendants

22. Chanting of the Name of Hari is the Divine dispensation for the Kali Age
For the establishment of which is the Incarnation of the mighty Son of Sachi.

23. Hence says the Bhagabat that for the manifestation of Kirtan, the Truth of all truths, Gaurchandra became Incarnate—

24. "In the afore-said way, O king, they worship God in the Dvapara Age;
Now listen how by the ritual of tantras they worship Him in the Kali Age.

25. "Those possessed of spiritual discernment, by the method of adoration replete with Sankirtan, Worship the chanter of Krishna of yellow complexion with His associated-counterparts, attendants, instrument and companions."

26. In the Kali Age there is no other religion than chanting the Name of Hari,
All this was manifested by Chaitanya Who is Narayan Himself.

27. In the Kali Age in order to foster the religion of Sankirtan
The Lord Himself became Incarnate with all His attendants.

28. By the command of the Lord, first of all, His attendants,
Where born in the midst of mortal men.

29. Even Ananta, Siva, Birinchi, the Rishis—
And the associates and kin of all Incarnations—

30. All were born as devotees;
Krishna alone knows who was sprung from whom.

31. Some were born in Nabadvipa, some in Chatigram,
Some in Rahr, some again in Odra,
Srihatta and to the West

32. In various places the devotees were born,
And came to Nabadvipa where they were joined together.

33. In the region of Navadwipa itself were born most of the Vaisnavas, Though some of the best beloved servants of the Lord appeared at some other places.

34. Sribash Pandit and Sriram Pandit,
Godly Sri Chandrasekhar worshipped of the three worlds,

35. Healer of the disease of mortality Sri Murari—
All these Vaishnavas were born in Srihatta.

36. The foremost of the Vaishnavas Pundarik Bidyanidhi,
The beloved of Chaitanya Vasudeva Dutta—

37. All these appeared in Chatigram.
Haridas was born at Buddhan.

38. In the land of Rahr is the village of Ekchaka
Where appeared the Divine Nityananda ;—

39. Hadai Pandit was the prince of pure Brahmans Whom the original and universal Father pretended to have as begetter.

40. The ocean of mercy, bestower of devotion to God, the stay of all holy Vaishnavas, Nityananda Rama thus manifested himself in Rahr.

41. In secret the gods uttered jubillant shouts,
In secret they showered celestial flowers ;

42. And from that auspicious day, over all the regions of Rahr,
All blessings appeared fast to multiply.

43. In Tirhut appeared Paramananda Puri,—
In whose company jointly at Nilachal sported Sri Chitanya.

44. There be many holy places on the bank of the Ganges,
Why then does a Vaishnava prefer impure lands for his birth ?

45. Even the Lord Himself appeared on the bank of the Ganges ;
Why did He will the birth of His associates afar from the sacred steam ?

46. In diverse lands that lie out of the track of the Ganges and the Name of Hari,
In regions never trod upon by the Pandavas,

47. To favour the jivas of those places,
Krishna contrived the appearance of great devotees.

48. The Incarnation of Chaitanya is for the deliverance of the whole world,—
This the Lord Himself by His own holy mouth has promised.

49. The Lord saves all by making His own Vaishnavas,
To be born in impure lands and unholy families.

50. Whatever the land or the family in which a Vaishnava makes his appearance—
His power saves all for a million leagues.

51. The places where the Vaishnavas resort Attain the sanctity of the holiest tirthas.

52. Wherefore in every region Sri Chaitanya Narayana Caused His devotees to appear.

53. In all different lands the devotees were born,
Thence came up to Nabadvipa where all were joined together.

54. In Nabadvipa the Lord Himself was to appear,
Therefore all His devotees gathered there.

55. There is no village in the three worlds like Nabadvipa
Where the Supreme Lord Chaitanya became Incarnate.

56. Aware of the Advent of the Lord, Bidhata,
With an abundance of every blessing, had filled the place.

57. Who can describe the glories of Nabadvipa ?
Millions bathed at every ghat of the Ganges

58. The city swarmed with millions of people of every age and caste.
All highly skilled by the grace of Sarasvati.

59. All boasted of their mastery of the shastras, Even children pitted themselves against the Professors.

60. From all different countries people flocked to Nabadvipa ;
Learning could be relished only by studying at Nabadvipa !

61. There was no limit to the gathering of students ;—
The number of Professors,—no body could tell.

62. All the people lived in great happiness by the kind glance of Rama ;—
But wholly absorbed in worldly pursuits all their time uselessly passed away.

63. The whole world was void of devotion to Krishna,
The evils of later Kali appeared even at this early state.

64. People know nothing of religion and duty :—
They kept up whole nights over songs of Mangalchandi,

65. Or, worshipped Bishahari with boastful pomp,
Or, squandered their fortunes away in making dolls !

66. They wasted their wealth on the marriage of sons and daughters,
In such vanities the time of everyone was wholly spent.

67. Even the Bhattacharyyas, Chakraverties, Misras,
Missed utterly the meaning of the Scriptures ;

68. And for teaching the Shastras they earned The reward of certain perdition for themselves and their hearers.

69. They did not praise the kirtan of Krishna, the Divine Dispensation of the Age,
They blamed everything that they praised.

70. There were those that practised austerities and renunciation
But even their mouths never uttered the Name of Hari.

71. Perchance at their bath, the very best Uttered the Names of 'Govinda' and 'Pundarikaksha'.

72. There were Professors who taught their pupils the Geeta and Bhagabatam,
But even their tongues never expatiated devotion to God !

73. Finding all world bewitched by Vishnu's
Illusory Power,
The devotees were moved with great grief.

74. 'How will all these jivas be delivered !
The world is drowned in coarse pleasures !

75. 'Being implored no one takes the Name of Krishna !
Everyone ever talks of his learning and rank !

76. And so the Bhagabatas practised devotion all by themselves,
Worshipping Krishna, bathing in the Ganges, discoursing Krishna.

77. All joining together they prayed with blessed word—
'Soon, O Krishnachandra, vouchsafe
Thy Power to all'.

78. In this same Nabadvipa dwelt the greatest of the Vaishnavas,
Named Advaita-Acharyya, praised in all worlds,

79. The most eminent teacher of knowledge, devotion and renunciation ;
Equal to Sankara in expatiating devotion
to Krishna

80. Who excelled in interpreting all Scripture, of the three worlds,
And taught from every part that 'devotion to the Feet of Krishna alone is true.'

81. With stalk of tulasi immersing in water from the Ganges, Incessantly he worshipped Krishna with high zeal.

82. And ever with a mighty voice, pregnant with the Power of Krishna-inspiration,
He spake, and the sound of his voice, piercing the universe, reverberated in Baikuntha.

83. Love's appealing voice reached the Ears of Lord Krishna,
And overcome by devotion the Lord Himself appeared.

84. Therefore is Advaita the foremost of the Vaishnavas,
His devotional attachment to Krishna merits universal praise.

85. Advaita lived thus in Nadia,
Grieved at sight of the people so void of devotion.

86. And all the world was mad with the taste of material pursuits,
And Krishna-worship and devotion to Krishna, was realised by none.

87. Some worshipped the goddess Basuli with a great variety of offerings,
Some worshipped demons with meat and wine.

88. In the midst of this perennial orgy of dance and song, music and tumultuous gaiety,
Only the most blessed Name of Krishna was never heard by anybody.

89. The gods have no joy in festivities from which Krishna is excluded, Advaita most of all felt sick at heart,

90. By nature Advaita was ever kind of heart—
Being moved to pity he turned his thoughts to the deliverance of jivas—

91. "If my Lord Himself becomes Incarnate
Then all these jivas would be saved!

92. "Then would I merit my boastful name of 'Advaitha-Singha',
If I could show to all here the Lord of Baikuntha."

93. "Bringing here the Lord of Baikuntha, seeing Him face to face, Shall dance and sing, delivering all jivas!"

94. Making this resolve, with this single purpose,
Advaita constantly worshipped Sri Krishna's Holy Feet.

95. 'Advaita is the Cause of the Incarnation of Chaitanya',
This the Lord Himself has repeatedly declared.

96. In Nabadvipa also dwelt Pandit Sribasa,
In whose house Chaitanya displayed His Harisankirtan.

97. The four brothers sang Krishna's Name at all time,
Worshipped Krishna and bathed in the Ganges three times a day.

98. And many other Vaishnavas lived disguised in Nadia,
Born previously by God's command.

99. Sri Chandrasekhar, Jagadish, Gopinatha, Sriman, Murari, Sri Gaduda, Gangadas.

100. To name every one singly would swell the bulk of the book,
In the narrative I shall take the name I know.

101. All of them were diligent in the practice of religion, all were open-hearted,
No one knew anything else than devotion to Krishna.

102. All behaved to one another as kin and friends of all.
No one was aware of his own appearance in this world.

103. Finding the whole world void of devotion to Vishnu
All were pained in their inmost hearts ;

104. No one was willing to listen to Krishna-discourse,
The devotees chanted His kirtan by themselves.

105. They met together at the house of Advaita for the period of a few dandas,
When they were relieved of all their griefs by Krishna-talk.

106. The devotees saw that the world was one blighted waste,
There was no place to converse, so they cried in their grief.

107. All the Vaishnavas combined, even Advaita himself,
Failed to persuade even a single being to understand the Truth !

108. Smitten with despair Advaita began to fast,
And all the Vaishnavas sent forth sighs and lamentations.

109. 'What is the dance for Krishna ? Why is His kirtan chanted ?
Who is a Vaishnava ? Why is he called such ? What is Sankirtan ?'

110. The people knew nothing of these in their hankering for sons and riches ;
And all the pashandis jointly scoffed at the Vaishnavas !

111. The four Sribasa brothers in their own house,
At nightfall, sang aloud the Name of Hari.

112. Hearing this the pashandis said, "Woe betide to us ;
This Brahman will ruin the village !

113. "The Yavana king is very violent, if these doings Ever reach his ears Nadia is doomed !"

114. Said others,—"Let us pull down his house
And cast into the river this Brahmin with his house.

115. "We must kill this Brahmin for the good of the village,
Or, else the Yavanas will devour all of us !"

116. In this manner talked all the pashandis,
The Bhagbatas heard this and shed tears crying 'Krishna'

117. But Advaita blazed up with wrath,
And, listless that his clothes fell off, thus spoke to all the Vaishnavas—

118. "Listen, Sri Nibasa, Gangadas, Suklambar—
I shall cause Krishna Himself to become visible to all eyes ;

119. "Krishna Himself appearing in this world will deliver all,
The Lord joining you will Himself expound devotion to Krishna.

120. 'If I fail in this, then will I put forth from this body
Four arms and taking up the disc

121. "Decapitate all the pashandis !—
So shall it be if Krishna be my Lord and I, His servant.'"

122. In this strain ever spake Advaita,
And with this resolve worshipped Krishna's Holy Feet.

123. And all the devotees with a singleness of heart
Amidst tears worshipped the Lotus-feet of Krishna.

124. The Bhagabatas roamed over all Nadia
And heard no-where any discourse of devotional worship.

125. Some for grief thought of giving up their bodies,
Some sighed and fell to crying 'Krishna' ;

126. No one's food tasted in his mouth,
Everyone was cast into deep grief by seeing the godless ways of the world.

127. The devotees now renounced all enjoyment ;
And the Supreme Lord Himself prepared to be Incarnate.

(To be continued).

AN APPEAL.

We humbly approach the generous public with our prayer which would appear novel to them. The people of the world are pulling up with their thoughts in three different ways. So, religious views chersihed by those three different sections vary from each other. What is innate in man is displayed in different manifestations, and this fact is proved in religious platform too Some are engaged in carrying on their inner thoughts in give-and-take policy, which is, in other words, "Karmabad," while others are freeing themselves from receiving and bestowing, i. e. hankering after freedom from the manifested world, be it mundane or heavenly. The third view of religionists is quartered in devotional activities, which is wrongly observed by the former two sections. This school of devotees entertains the Personality of Transcendental Godhead with His Paraphernalia, consisting of Spirit & Matter. The spirit as well as matter are counter-parts of the Origi al—one being the associated and the other disasociated. The associated counter-part is harmonical with original, where as the disasociated counter-part has difflective feature in it. So, the thinking world will naturally class these three in a differentiative mood. Let us not disturb these three ideas considering their situation when we require to admit them to speak freely.

Institutions of the former two classes are abundant all over India and abroad, and people may confound that similar institutions are in existence to combat with the other two. But true devotional institution has got harmonious origin which does not permit un-loving conduct to any particular thought. In order to enlighten the people of Northern India of the true devotional enterprise of the Religion of Love, three such institutions are already established at Benares, Nimsar and Brindaban, and a fourth one is going to be established at Kurukshetra, which will serve the purpose of distinguishing physical and mental activities with that of unalloyed spiritual proceedings on the plane of religion.

We crave with every humility to draw the attention of the public to support us in any way they can for the interest of the present society. This act of kindness on the part of the people will not only encourage us in our present attempt, but this will lead to the desired success and fulfilment they long for from the Benevolent Almighty. We intend to celebrate the Installation Ceremony of the Institution of Sanatan Dharma or all-pervading Eternal Religion at the afore-said four places.

PROPOSED DATES OF CELEBRATIONS :

1. Benares, from 25th September to 10th October. 2. Brindaban, from 11th October to 8th November. 3. Kurukshetra, from 9th November to 22nd November. 4. Nimisar, from 23rd November to 26th November.

VOL. XXV. OCTOBER 1927, 441 Chaitanya-Era. NO. 5.

The Birth of Krishna.

A LITTLE over five thousand years have elapsed since the advent of Lord Sri Krishna in this world. The Lord appeared in the region of Mathura at the conjunction of the dvapara and kali ages as Son of Vasudeva-Devaki.

The process of the Lord's birth is thus described in the Srimad Bhagabat. Sri Krishna having willed to be manifest in the world first appeared in the heart of Vasudeva and from his heart passed to the pure heart of Devaki. Nursed by her love in the form of maternal affection, like the waxing moon, Sri Krishna underwent gradual growth in the heart of Devaki. Subsequently, on the eighth lunar day of the dark fortnight of the month of Bhadra, on Wednesday, while the moon was in the constellation of Rohini, in the depth of night, from out of the heart of Devaki the Lord passed to her conch in the lying-in-chamber of Kamsa's prison. Sri Krishna was born four-armed, holding the conch, disc, club and lotus, adorned with crest, pendant and other ornaments, wearing a great profusion of curls and clad in yellow robe.

The advent of the Lord did not in any way resemble the birth of a jiva. The birth of the supreme Lord, like all His manifestations, is eternal and transcendental. Sri Krishna ever manifests the lila of His birth in the pure and unalloyed hearts of His devotees. The eternal and transcendental lila of His birth became visible in this mundane world towards the end of the drapara age.

The cause of His advent into the world is described in the following sloka of Srimad Bhagabat.—*

"His passionless nature, as represented by devotees like Vasudeva etc., being oppressed by opposed, perverted and terrible forms in the shape of daityas like Kamsa etc., like the kindling of fire by the rubbing of two pieces of fire-wood, the Lord of mundane and transcendental worlds, the kind-hearted Lord Srikrishna, although devoid of phenomenal birth (अज:), joining with the Lord of Baikuntha, His byuha, the Prime Cause Purusha, His secondary 'Incarnations and other differing forms comes down into this world from His own sphere." The main cause of the appearance of Sri Krishna in this world is His wish to gratify the yearnings of those loving devotees who happen to be placed in this world ; as no one except Godhead Himself has the power of satisfying the longings of His devotees. In order to delight Srutadeva, Bahulasva and other bhaktas by the sight of Himself and for showing kindness to Vasudeva and others of His beloved ones by the destruction of the forces of danavas, the supreme Lord was born in this world. This was the main cause. The prayer of Brahma and other gods for the relief of the world was a secondary cause of His birth.

The plenary Incarnation is not manifest until the main cause is about to fructify. At the time of the full Incarnation separate and partial Incarnations for relieving the earth become superfluous. Just as on the occasion when the Suzerain Emperor himself marches out to conquest the vassal kings of different regions follow him as a matter of course, so also when Sri Krishna Himself appears in the world, His manifestations viz., the Lord of parabyam (वैकुण्ठ), His byuha (fourfold manifestations viz. Vasudeva, Sankarshana etc.), His secondary Incarnations such as Rama, Nrisingha, Baraha, Vamana, Nara Narayana etc., also appear simultaneously on the earth with Sri Krishna. As thousands of sparks issuing out of a great fire are re-absorbed into it, in like manner all Incarnations having issued out of Sri Krishna are on His advent into this world re-absorbed into their original Source. Or again just as for the conflagration of villages and towns the power of lamps and of a great fire are identical, but the full happiness, in the form of relief from the discomforts due to cold, can be obtained only from the great fire,—in like manner, although the relief of the earth from oppressions may be effected equally by Purusha and secondary Incarnations, the supreme happiness of loving devotees cannot be

*"स्वशान्तरूपेष्वितरैः स्वरूपैरभ्यर्द्यमानेष्वनु- कम्पितात्मा ।
परावरेशोमहदंश युक्तोह्यजोऽपिजातो भगवान् यथाग्निः ॥

afforded by any one except Sri Krishna Himself.

The jiva is born as the result of his karma and his birth is brought about by the power of maya which is alien to the nature of the jiva. The God-head is born of His own will and by His own power which is eternally and inseparably joined with Himself. The power by which the Supreme Lord manifests His birth is eternal spiritual and full of transcendental bliss. Whereas the power by which the jiva is born is external to him and full of the triple misery. This difference has been described by the Lord Himself in the Geeta—*

"My birth and actions are transcendental ; those who know this truly are not born again on leaving the body ; such persons attain to Me, O Arjuna."

As the Lord is not born by entering into the vital fluid like jivas so also He has no mundane parents. We learn from the previous history of Sri Vasudeva-Devaki that in expectation of the birth of Sri Krishna, in their third previous birth in the manvantara (period of manu) of Svayambhuba Manu, Vasudeva was a prajapati by name Sutapa and Devaki was known as Prisni. Having been commanded by Brahma to pro-create offspring they devoutly practised tapas (austerities), controlling their senses, for the period of twelve thousand years of heavenly measure. The four-armed Sri Vishnu, thereupon, appeared in their hearts purified by devotion, and on expressing His willingness to confer any boon that was desired by them they prayed for a son like the Lord Himself ; whereupon the Lord agreeing to be their son became known by the Name of 'Prisnigarbha' 'Born in the womb of Prisni.' After this, in their second previous birth, when Sutapa and Prisni being reborn on the earth bore the names of Kashyapa and Aditi, then also Vishnu was born as their son Vamana, the younger brother of Indra and was known by the Names of 'Upendra' and 'Vamana.' According to this account of the scriptures Vasudeva and Devaki would seem to have been mere jivas perfected by a course of spiritual efforts. But Vasudeva-Devaki the eternal parents of Sri Krishna can never be merely perfected jivas. Therefore, the efforts of Sri Vasudeva etc., as spiritual novices in their previous births were rendered possible by the will of God Himself for the edification of this world by the manifestations of Vasudeva etc. in the pure hearts of the devotees of Krishna. That is to say Vasudeva etc. are ever perfect and never practised any courses of spiritual endeavour. But their portions attaching themselves to certain jivas practised spiritual endeavours for the instruction of the world ; and those

*"जन्म कर्म्म च मे दिव्यमेवं यो वेत्ति तत्त्वतः । त्यक्त्वा देहं पुनर्जन्म नैति मामेति सोऽर्जुनः ॥"
(गीता—४।९)

portions were subsequently re-absorbed into the original. The accounts in the scriptures only express the fact that the original and its offshoots are identical in manifestation.

The above proves that the birth of the Supreme Lord Sri Krishna is transcendental. But from the history of His devotees in the Scripture it seems at first sight that they were born and suffered various troubles and miseries like ordinary jivas. If they were not like ordinary jivas how could miseries befall them on their appearance in this world in the train of God Himself? What else are such occurrences as the incarceration of Devaki-Vasudeva in the prisons of Kamsa, the grief of the dwellers of Braja at separation from Krishna, the devoted attachment of Nanda and Yasoda for their son resembling that of mundane parents, etc.? The satisfactory solution of such complaints is realised by the jiva only when he is established in his proper self. The attendants of God-head are the direct manifestations of His own power. Their births etc. are the sports of God's transcendental power. By the will of Sri Hari Himself they appear in this world as helpers of His lila. Their exhibitions of suffering etc. are only subtle methods of tasting the elixir of His lila. Those exhibitions are not the consequences of their selfish worldly enjoyments like the sufferings of this world. On the contrary, they add a variety to the enjoyment of the delicious sweetness of the service of Krishna. The attachment of mundane parents for their short-lived son is merely the perverted reflection of the transcendental, wholesome and all-absorbing attachment of His original parents imbued with spiritual love for their eternal Son, Sri Krishna. The attachment of worldly parents for their ephemeral son being the selfish enjoyment of the fruits of karma, is altogether unwholesome and, therefore, to be shunned. But the atachment of Nanda-Yasoda for their eternal Son is perfectly wholesome and worthy of being emulated by those possessed of transcendental love.

Birth of Sree Krishna

(Translated from the Sreemad Bhagabat—Sk. X. Ch. 3)

1. There-upon appeared, imbued with all good qualities, the most beauteous time
Of the birth-star of the Birth-less, with serene planets, stars and meteors.

2. The quarters rejoiced, the clear sky became star-lit ;
On the Earth, towns, villages, pastures and mines overflowed with every blessing.

3. The streams flowed with a pellucid current, the lakes were decked with beautiful lotuses,
The rows of flowery woods resounded with the melodious notes of birds and hum of bees.

4. The winds blew, pleasant to touch, laden with holy incense and pure ;
The sacrificial fires of the twice-born burnt tranquilly with a full and steady flame.

5. The minds of the pious, ere-long oppressed by the foes of gods, were gladdened ;
At the birth of the Un-born celestial drums beat harmonious music,
Celestial singers (kinnaras and gandharbas) joined in song, the choir of perfect beings (i) sent up hymns of praise,
Danced with delight celestial dancers and heavenly nymphs,
Overjoyed the saints and the gods showered celestial flowers ;—

6. And toward the ocean slowly the heavy-laden clouds muttered thunder
At the birth of Janardana in the gathering gloom of dark night.

7. The In-dweller, Vishnu, appeared in the pure, unalloyed heart (ii) of Devaki, Likest the full moon rising in the quarters of the East.

8. And Vasudeva saw that marvellous Boy, with the lotus eyes, four-armed, holding the conch, club and other weapons,
Marked with the sign of Sribatsa, the gem koustuva adorning the neck, in yellow robe, beauteous with the hue of the dense cloud,
The great profusion of curls lit up with the glory of the effulgence of the most precious jewels that studded the crest and pendant,
And adorned with the most exquisite belt, armlets and brace-lets.

9. Whereupon Anakadundubhi surveying Hari,his son,with eyes expanded wide with wonder,
Rendered oblivious of everything by joy at the happy event of the Appearance of Krishna, (mentally) bathed and gave away as present ten thousand kine to the twice-born.

10. Then, assured that He was, indeed, the Supreme Being Himself, bending low with palms joined he of pure understanding, Freed from fear, aware of God's omnipotence, thus, O Bharata, addressed in prayer the Lord Whose effulgence irradiated the lying-in chamber—

(i) सिद्धि (ii) विशुद्ध सत्त्व

Vasudeva said—

11. "Lord, Thyself hast appeared,—the Being Himself Who is beyond Nature, Embodiment of unalloyed bliss, Seer of the inmost minds of all ;

12. Who having first created by His own power this world made up of the three qualities,
Without being within, yet is conceived as pervading it ;—

13. As the unchangeable primordial principles, in association with changeable qualities, being different and of various potentiality, produce the world,—
And thus combining and producing appear as auxiliary, though unchanged and unchangeable-existing before the birth of the world :

14. So Thou, conceived by the pure intelligence as possessed of transcendental qualities, art free from all mundane qualities ;
And being perfectly un-covered, there is neither exterior nor interior of all that are of Thee, or of Thyself, the Soul of everything.

15. He who affirms as true the objects of his own selfish enjoyment, does so through foolishness and ignorance of his real self ;
Such speculation is nothing but empty words—accepting as true that which is utterly rejected by the Scriptures.

16. From Thee, O Lord—Who transcends all effort, change and quality—the birth, maintenance and destruction of this world are said to proceed :
In Thee, the Supreme Lord, there is no contradiction, all qualities serving Thee as Their source.

17. Such art Thou Who, for the maintenance of the threefold world by thy Own power, wear'st the white colour of Thine,
The red permeated by rajas for the purpose of creation and the black hue of tamas for the destruction of the world,

18. Thou, the Infinitude, the Supreme Lord of the Universe, in order to protect this earth hast appeared in my house :
Thou wilt destroy the armies led by the wearers of the insignia of Kings served by crores of Asuras.

19. Lord of the gods, this churl, forewarned of Thy birth in my house, killed our children that were born before Thee,
And is even now approaching with brandished weapons, hearing of Thy advent from the lips of messengers."

THAKUR Haridas had infringed the social code by giving up Yavanic manners and customs, and it was for such offensive conduct that he had been on that day hauled up before the administrator of the district at the instigation of the Yavana community which was actuated by a desire to safe-guard the traditional customs of their society. Thakur Haridas made the following reply,—"All this is merely the sport of the illusory power of God. The true religion is not the monopoly of either Yavana or Hindu ; and therefore, there can be no danger of the worship of Hari which is the common object of both communities, becoming impossible by one's leaving the Yavana society. God is beyond all material objects ; He is the eternal, indivisible and absolute Reality. He is the perfect Truth. One worships Him in the manner that his own understanding approves, this also is His dispensation. It is not necessary to create disorder by ignoring differences of the fitness of different persons. It is God Himself Who having caused me to be born in a Yavana family has employed me on this quest of the highest good ; and on the other hand, He may similarly, causing another to be born in the highest Brahman family of the Hindus, make him turn a Yavana because of his Yavanic propensities. Such is the will of God Who is ever full of beneficence. I will not follow the Yavanic custom by reading kalma, giving up the highest good. Be pleased to award any punishment if you consider this an offence. I am prepared to accept it."

The muluk-pati Kazi now began to blaspheme against Vishnu in scolding Haridas, and when at last Haridas said, "Even if my body be cut to pieces, if body and life leave me, my mouth will never give up the Name of Hari," being much enraged the Kazi sentenced him to be put to death after being severely whipped at twenty-two market-places af the Amua muluk !

While he was being whipped in the market-places, Haridas employing himself in the recollection of Sree Krishna and chanting aloud Krishna's holy Name, remained unaffected by pain. The good people of those places noticing the utmost severity of the blows inflicted on the body of Haridas openly sympathised with him, but the wicked rejoiced. Some apprehended that very great harm would befall both the principal as well as his aiders and abetters of such brutal persecution of the great saint. In the same way that Prahlad was tortured in olden times by command of Hiranya Kasipu, Thakur Haridas was humiliated and oppressed by those Yavanas. Bearing patiently his intolerable pain Haridas always said, "Have mercy on all these jivas O Lord, may none of them offend Thee by their treatment of me !" Till at last even the Yavanas said, "The whole Yavana community will suffer the terrible consequences of this inhuman oppression of you who is, indeed, a great saint. But your life has not been ended even by such prolonged and terrible beating. The mulukpati will put us to death if we fail to kill you !" At this Haridas pitying those Yavanas who were beating him exhibited the sight of quitting his mortal frame.

But those evil-minded Yavanas, to prevent any good resulting to him if his body were interred in the earth which happened to be the method of ādi-posal of a dead body recommended by the Yavana scriptures, thought of casting the body of Haridas into the Ganges ! All this time the great Thakur Haridas, immersed in meditation, was occupied with recollection of Krishna. The Yavanas who had been ordered by the Kazi to throw his body into the Ganges were unable with all their efforts to lift it and informed the Kazi of their own discomfiture. It was only then that those ruffians at last desisted from their wicked endeavours.

The muluk-pati Kazi, on the termination of the meditative trance of Thakur Haridas, begged his forgiveness with folded hands, saying, "I am now convinced that you are a great Pir and not merely a wordy sage or a juggling miraculist. Forgive me for my many faults. No one in heaven, earth or the subterrene, is able to know your real nature. You may go where you like, we will no more oppose you." Thakur Haridas returned to Fulia without being daunted even by such terrible persecution.

At that time Fulia was a most populous village and an important centre of the Brahman community. The Brahmans of Fulia received Haridas with great cordiality on his return. Having witnessed those deeds of his transcendental love they sympathised with his misfortunes and discussed among themselves regarding the cause of his sufferings. The holy Thakur said, "I have been a great offender. Having actually heard the Yavanas blaspheme against Vishnu I sinned by not opposing and preventing them. In consequence of that sin those sufferings were necessary for my own good. My offending ear, instead of having been deafened, listened to all those blasphemies with alacrity for which sin Bidhata has awarded the due punishment." These utterances of the Thakur full of the spirit of humility did not save the mulukpati and his followers and all their families from destruction. All of them perished shortly with all their families. The holy saint continued un-opposed to take night and day the Name of Hari in the view of all the people. His cell at Fulia on the bank of the Ganges, by the chanting of the Name of Hari, was transformed into Vaikuntha and ceased to be a place within the domain of maya.

A great hissing serpent had taken up its abode in the cell of the Thakur. This did not give rise to the least fear in the mind of Thakur Haridas. He took the Name of Hari all unconcerned, living in the same cell with the huge reptile. At last, however, he was persuaded by the representations of the Brahman residents of the village and the pressing entreaties of his friends to make up his mind to give up the cell. At this the serpent of its own accord departed from the place. The Brahmans were filled with great wonder by witnessing this extraordinary event.

One day at the house of a certain wealthy man a snake-charmer was exhibiting the scene of the suppression of the serpent kalia by Krishna, with dancing and singing. Thakur Haridas accidently arrived on the spot and taking his stand on one side watched the performance. The dancing and singing of the snake-charmer producing in Thakur Haridas the excitation of the lila of Krishna his breath was obstructed and he presently fainted away. Recovering from his fit Prabhu Haridas himself joined in the dancing and singing. The eight svattic changes were manifested in his body. The snake-charmer stopping his performance stood silently on one side with his palms joined together. The exhibition was, however, resumed after an interval. The spectators joyously sprinkled themselves with the dust trod by the feet of Haridas. A hypocritical Brahman in the crowd who was ambitious of religious fame thought within himself that he also would attract the regard of the spectators and the snake-charmer if he exhibited artificially similar svattic manifestations. Thinking thus that Brahman in imitation of Haridas began to exhibit in his own body all the svattic perturbations in an artificial way. The snake-charmer, who had stood still with joined hands at the time of the spiritual manifestations of Thakur Haridas, noticing this hypocritical exhibition of the Brahman, began at once to belabour him with all his might. The hypocrite, feeling the inconveniance of enduring such thrashing for any length of time, took to his heels. When the spectators asked the snake-charmer the reason for that sort of behaviour he said, "This Brahman by his hypocritical exhibitions was bringing contempt upon Thakur Haridas. That is why, inspired by the mantra of the king of serpents, I have punished him according to his deserts." It is, of course, a thing to be devoutly wished that all conceited people may always be punished in the aforesaid manner for their insincere Krishna-performances. The snake-charmer again joined in the dancing and singing of Thakur Haridas.

As an eternal companion of God-head Haridas always appears in the world whenever the Supreme Lord Himself becomes Incarnate and helps to enrich His lila by friendly support. For helping the lila of Chaitanya-chandra ; to quote an old author, "Haridas was born in an inferior society by the command of the Lord Himself, in order to teach the world that caste and community are meaningless. If the devotee of Vishnu is born in the very lowest community he is none the less to be worshipped, as all the scriptures testify. In order to prove the truth of these sayings of the Scriptures Haridas was born in a low community. The touch of Haridas is coveted by the gods ; even the Ganges longs for the immersion of Haridas. The bondage of the world is snapped at the sight of one who takes the shelter of Haridas. He who utters the name of Haridas only once, verily, verily, goes to the eternal abode of Krishna," The king of serpents in the form of the snake-charmer declared these glories of Haridas to the assembled people for the edification of all good men.

The Holy Name

IN this material world there is always difference between the thing itself and its name, form, attributes and action. For example when I say 'a table' the word 'table' is not the thing itself and is quite different from it ; but in the spiritual world it is a veritable truth that there is no such difference between an object and its name, form, attributes and action ; or, in other words, they are identical. In the material world this difference between the thing and its name, form, attributes etc. is due to the presence of maya or 'illusion'. But in the spiritual sphere or Vaikuntha there is no such 'illusion' or screen intervening between the object and its name, form, attributes and action. In Vaikuntha the Word is Brahman or God Himself. The word 'Vaikuntha' means 'that from which maya or 'illusion' is expelled. It is purely spiritual.

From this we can infer that the Name of God, unlike the names of things mundane, is identical with God Himself ; and God Himself is identical with His Form, Attributes and Actions. This being so it may be asked why is it that we do not feel or realise the presence of God in our hearts when we utter His holy Name ? Why do our hearts remain steeped in the darkness of ignorance, instead of being illuminated by the eternal Existence, Intelligence and Bliss—the Nature of Krishna Himself—when we take His holy Name ? Or why do we not realise that we are also self-existent, eternal beings, possess spiritual intelligence and can enjoy transcendental bliss, when we chant His holy Name ? The only answer is that it is because we are quite ignorant of the above fundamental difference between things mundane and spiritual.

We do not know the real nature of the holy Name of Krishna. It is thus defined in Padmapurana*—

"In as much as there is no difference between Krishna Himself and His Name, Krishna's Name like the philosopher's stone (चिन्तामणि) gives the wished—for object of His Servitors, is Krishna's own Self and is the embodiment of spiritual (चैतन्य) ecstatic bliss ; that is to say, it is not an object (आश्रय) of perverted, worldly pleasures because of its being outside the sphere of empiricism and being also in-capable of adulteration with maya. Krishna's Name is perfect that is incapable of being measured by maya (मीयते अनया). His Name is pure that is un-adulterated with illusion as it rejects maya. His Name is eternally free that is beyond the region of maya." In other words Krishna's Name, His holy Image and He Himself are identical, there being no difference between them ; and all Three are full of eternal, ecstatic, spiritual bliss. But in the case of the fallen jiva his real nature is quite different from his name given by his father, his physical body, his material qualities and his worldly activities.*

"Therefore, Krishna's Name, Form, Qualities and Actions (विलास) are never comprehensible by means of material senses. Whenever a jiva actually realises that in his spiritual nature he is the eternal servant of Krishna then only the transcendental Name, Form, Attributes and actions of Krishna spontaneously manifest themselves in his spiritual (अप्राकृत) organs of sense such as the tongue, eye, ear etc." Krishna's Qualities, Krishna's sports and pastimes (विलास), the characteristic traits of His servitors, being eternal, spiritual and full of transcendental bliss, are not comprehensible by the material forms, pleasures, odours, sounds and touch of

*"नाम चिन्तामणिः कृष्ण चैतन्यरसविग्रहः । पूर्णः शुद्धो नित्यमुक्तोऽभिन्नत्वान्नामनामिनोः ॥"

*"अतः श्रीकृष्णनामादि न भवेद्ग्राह्यमिन्द्रियैः । सेवोन्मुखे हि जिह्वादौ स्वयमेव स्फुरत्यदः ॥"
—(पद्मपुराण)

jiva engrossed in the triple qualities of sattva, rajas and tamas. In other words they are not liable to be enjoyed by the senses of the jiva that are addicted to the enjoyment of the fruits of their activities because they are self-effulgent, eternal, spiritual and full of beatitude. There is mutual difference (but no identity) between the name, form, quality and action of material objects situated within the sphere of the triple quaiities (सत्वः रजः तमः); but in transcendental Krishna there is no such difference all those being identical.

In this Iron Age (कलियुग) the holy Name of Krishna is the only object of worship because God is invisible but manifests Himself as His holy Name which is Krishna's Incarnation as Logos. Hence the Srimad Bhagabat enjoins the chanting of Krishna's Name as the only form of worship of the kali Age.*—

"That which in the krita Age (सत्ययुग) results fom the meditation of Vishnu, which in the Treta Age is the product of the performance of sacrifice (यज्ञ) and which in the Dvapara Age is the outcome of service (परिचर्या), in the kali Age is the fruit of the chanting of the holy Name of Krishna." Therefore, in the kali Age there is no other course left for jiva than the chanting of Hari's Name. This is clearly stated in the oft-quoted sloka of the Brihannaradia Purana—

"हरेर्नाम हरेर्नाम हरेर्नामैव केवलम् । कलौ नास्त्येव नास्त्येव नास्त्येव गतिरन्यथा ॥"

The above sloka is thus explained in Sri Chaitanya Charitamrita (Adi. XVII. 22—28)—'In the kali Age Krishna incarnates Himself as the holy Name. The whole world is liberated by the chanting of the holy Name. Hari's Name has been repeated three times for emphasis. The use of the particle 'एव' is to convince the worldly-minded. The further addition of the word 'केवल' makes the assurance perfectly sure. Knowledge, yoga, austerities, work etc. are prohibited.

He who believes otherwise is never to be saved. The word 'नास्ति' reinforced by 'एव' has been repeated thrice to signify that the non-believers in the holy Name will in NO case attain salvation—Never, Never, Never.'

But everyone of us is not fit to chant the holy Name. The qualities the possession of which is essential in order that one may be able to chant the holy Name are thus stated by Mahaprabhu Himself in the following sloka in His Sikshastak :—*

"He is fit to chant always the Name of Hari who considers himself humbler

*"कृते यद्ध्यायतो विष्णुं त्रेतायां यजतो मखैः । द्वापरे परिचर्यायां कलौ तद्धरिकीर्त्तनात् ॥"
—(भाः १२।३।५२)

*"तृणादपि सुनीचेन तरोरिव सहिष्णुना । अमानिना मानदेन कीर्त्तनीयः सदा हरिः ॥
—(चैः चः अन्त्यः २० परिच्छेद)

than a blade of grass, who is patient and forbearing like the tree and who does not covet respect from others but ever pays due respect to everyone." Freedom from worldly vanities in their fourfold aspect of (1) humility, (2) patience, (3) absence of pride and (4) readiness to honour others, is the necessary condition for chanting the Name of Hari. The chanting of the holy Name is not possible for those who are given to wordly vanities. The above mentioned fourfold attachment for material objects stands in the way of the chanting of the holy Name. Being liberated from those vanities the purified jiva is enabled to chant always the Name of Hari. By obeying this rule the novice on the path of devotion obtains the holy feet of Sri Krishna as the fruit of Hari-Sankirtan. The taking of the Name of Hari by those who are ignorant of this relationship is either dim perception of the Name (नामाभास) or an offence against the Name (नामापराध) by means of which the love of Krishna, which is the only object of chanting the holy Name by jiva is not gained.

He who chants the holy Name must be devoid of all passions and must not hanker after worldly name, fame or wealth. He must be above the triple qualities of maya (निर्गुण). Krishna dose not confer loving devotion (कृष्णभक्ति) upon His devotee unless and until He finds His devotee free from all mundane affinities. Because Krishna, His Name, His devotee and His devotion are all above the triple qualities of maya (निर्गुण) and are purely spiritual. He is, therefore, unattainable to those who have the least trace of mundane attachment. That is to say the holy Name of Krishna does not manifest itself in the heart of a devotee who has not realised his true self the nature of which we learn from the holy lips of Mahaprabhu Himself in the following sloka—*

"The true self of the jiva is neither a Brahman, nor a Kshatriya, nor a Vaishya, nor a gain a Sudra ; neither a Brahmachari, nor a Householder, nor a Banaprastha nor a Sannyasin ; but is the eternal servant of the servants' servants of the lotus feet of the Lord of gopis, the ocean of the nectar of eternal ecstatic bliss." The true devotee must not cherish a particle of desire other than the loving service of Krishna.†

"O ! Lord, I ask not for wealth, followers or the gift of poesy ; give me in birth after birth only cause-less, spontaneous, loving devotion to Thy holy feet."

The chanting of the holy Name of

*"नाहं विप्रो न च नरपतिर्नापि वैश्यो न शूद्रो
नाहं वर्णी न च गृहपतिर्नो वनस्थो यतिर्वा ।
किन्तु प्रोद्यन्निखिल परमानन्दपूर्णामृताब्धे-
र्गोपीभर्त्तुः पदकमलयोर्दासदासानुदासः ॥"

†"न धनं न जनं न सुन्दरीं कवितां वा जगदीश कामये। मम जन्मनि जन्मनीश्वरे भवताद्भक्तिरहैतुकीत्वयि ॥"
—(चैः चः अन्त्यः २०परिच्छेद शिक्षाष्टक ४र्थ श्लोक)

Krishna is the only means (अभिधेय) of attaining the final object (प्रयोजन) of spiritual existence. 'Prem' (Love) in Krishna is alone the final object of spiritual existence. He who does not know the relationship (सम्बन्ध) that exists between Krishna and himself is not at all qualified for taking the Name of Krishna. Without this knowledge of relationship (सम्बन्ध ज्ञान) devotion for Krishna does not arise and without devotion love for Krishna is impossible. It has already been said that mere taking of the holy Name without the knowledge of this relationship is either a dim perception of the Name or an offence against the holy Name. A true devotee must first of all understand and carefully avoid both the dim perception (नामाभास) and the offence against the holy Name (नामापराध) In order to understand this he must know the distinction between the pure Name (शुद्धनाम) and the dim perception (नामाभास) and the offence against the Name (नामापराध). We have already explained what the pure Name (शुद्धनाम) is and how to take it. The dim perception of the Name can be thus explained. Krishna and His Name are identical and are the spiritual Sun to dispel the darkness of ignorance (माया). The Sun of the holy Name (नामसूर्य) has appeard in this world out of pity for the fallen jivas. The ignorance of the fallen jivas is like the fog and their hankering after worldly enjoyment, frailties and sins (अनर्थ) are like clouds. These produce darkness by screening the Sun of the holy Name. They prevent the eyes of the fallen jivas from seeing the Sun. They cannot really darken the Sun itself which is very big and self-luminous. The Sun is said to be obscured when the shadow of the clouds obscure the vision of the jivas. The dim perception of the Name is due to the presence of these obstructions viz. ignorance, hankering after worldly enjoyment, frailties and sins which prevent the fallen jivas from obtaining a clear vision of the Sun of the holy Name. As soon as a fallen jiva is imbued with the clear knowledge of the relationship that subsists between Krishna and himself viz. that he is the eternal servant of Krishna and that his final object of life is love of Krishna, the dimness of perception wanes and the clearness of vision improves, his spiritual eye being opened. in proportion to his realisation of this relationship.

Taking Refuge in God (श्रीशरणागति)

[IV]

1. When in youth for earning money
I felt a bound-less ambition,
By the rites of religion my help-mate's hand
I did espouse ;

2. Setting up a home in her company
My time long I spent ;
Many a son and daughter were born,
My spirit was broken utterly.

3. The burden of family increased day by day ;
Under its weight I was forced to halt.
Old age arriving beleaguered me,
My mind was always disturbed ;

4. Worried by disease, racked by cares,
My heart scared by every want,
Seeing no way in utter darkness
I am now oppressed with fear.

5. The world's strong current does not abate,
The terror of death is nigh :
'After finishing worldly duties I shall worship Thee,'
That hope is vain !

6 "Now hearken, O Lord, I am utterly helpless," Bhaktivinode says,
"Without Thy mercy all is despair,
I now crave the shelter of Thy feet."

[V]

1. My life
Is ever given to sin,
In it there is not a particle of good ;

Torment to others
Much have I caused ;
I have pained all jivas.

2. For my own pleasure
I was never afraid of sinning,
Selfish and devoid of pity as I am.
Dejected by happiness of others,
Always untruthful,
The misery of others has been my delight.

3. Endless are the selfish desires
That fill my breast ;
To anger and insolence I am so prone,
Ever drunk with vanity,
Bewitched by worldliness,
I wear malice and pride as cherished ornaments.

4. Ruined by sleep and idleness,
Abstaining from all good works,
I am ever most zealous in evil deeds.
For the sake of worldly fame
An adept in the practice of duplicity,
A coveteous victim of greed am I.

5. Even such a sinner,
Shunned by all the good,
And a constant offender, I am.
Void of all good work,
Always evilly disposed
And poisoned with various misery.

6. Now in old age,
Bereft of all help,
Humbled and hoping naught,
Bhakativinode
At the feet of the Lord
Tells his grief.

[VI]

1. Hear, O Lord, the tale of my sorrows—
The poison of worldly enjoyment
I have sipped, pretending it was the nectar ;
But now the sun is setting.

2. In the diversions of play my childhood,
My boyhood in studies, I wasted ;
There arose no consciousness of good in me.
For enjoying my youth,
I devised a home and settled down in it ;
Children and friends did fast multiply.

3. Old age soon arrived,
All joys departed ;
With disease I was smitten down.
The senses lost their vigour,
The body grew feeble,
The heart was sad lacking enjoyment.

4. Devoid of a particle of true knowledge,
Missing the elixir of devotion,
What help is there for me ?
Thou art the Friend of the fallen ;
I am the worst of sinners ;
In mercy lift me to Thy feet,

5. Judging me
Thou wilt find no good ;
Have pity, judge me not !
The nectar of Thy lotus feet
Make me taste ;
Do Thou deliver Bhaktivinode.

[VII]

1. Lord, this is my prayer at Thy feet :
The twigs of Thy holy feet
My desert mind not seeking
Was enamoured at stony worldliness.

2. The strength to rise again
I am unable to attain;
Mourning I pass my days.
Lord of the humble
Thou art called;
Thy feet I beseech.

3. Baseness such as mine
Nowhere else is to be found;
Give me Thy grace.
In the company of Thy own,
In the pleasures of Thy talk,
I shall give up all evil.

4. In Thy abode,
Singing Thy Name,
To spend night and day is my hope.
For the shade of Thy feet,
Most deliciously cool,
Prays Thy servant, Bhaktivinode.

Dear Sir,

I write to say, how much I appreciate the issue of The "Harmonist." The time has come to harmonise the religions of the world; the antagonism which men made in the past must cease; it is surprising sometimes to note on how many things we can agree upon, and how few things there are about which we differ. I trust this will be avowed policy of your good paper; justice to all faiths favouritism to none.

I shall be glad to put your excellent paper on the exchange list. You may publish this letter if you think it helpful.

Might I suggest that the Sanskrit translations of words and passages be relegated to foot-notes; too many quotations check the running interest of the reader.

With every good for the future,

Yours very faithfully,

Sri Sri Chaitanya Bhagabat

128. By command of God first the source of Sri Ananta, Nityananda-Rama, appeared in Rahr.

129. On the auspicious thirteenth day of the bright fortnight of the month of Magh,
In the womb of Padmavati, in the village named Ekchaka.

130. Hadai Pandit was the best and purest of Brahmans.
Him the original Parent of all vouchsafed to have as progenitor.

131. The ocean of mercy, bestower of devotion, Lord Balaram,
Coming into this world, bore the name of Nityananda.

132. At his nativity the gods uttered unobserved
Great triumphal shouts, showered flowers;

133. And from that day over all the regions of Rahr,
The choicest blessings began fast to multiply.

134. The Lord, in the garb of super-ascetic
Wandered over the world, delivering the fallen.

135. And thus Ananta manifested Himself.
Listen now how Krishna made His appearance.

136. In Nabadvipa dwelt Jagannath the best of Misras.
Zealous, like Vasudeva Himself, in performing spiritual duties ;

137. He was the ideal Brahman, of a most generous disposition :
There is nothing to compare him with ;—

138. Even as Kasyap, Dasarath, Vasudeva, Nanda—
The embodiment of all purest spirits—was blessed Jagannath Misra.

139. His wife, named Sachi, most devotedly loyal to her husband,
The mother of all the world, was incarnate devotion of Vishnu.

140. After several daughters had left this world
Their only surviving child was a son, the great Bisvarup.

141. The figure of Bisvarup was as that of the god of love himself
Whose sight gladdened the hearts of the Brahman and his wife.

142. From very birth Bisvarup was unattached to the world,
And while still a child he know well all the scriptures.

143. The whole world was absolutely void of devotion to Vishnu,
The very first quarter showed all the symptoms of degeneracy of the maturity of the Age of evil.

144. When dharma disappears the Lord becomes Incarnate

152. "All glory to the Protector of the Scriptures, religion, devotees and Brahmans !
All glory to the great Destroyer, the Subduer of the ungodly !

153. "All glory to the Embodiment of all Truth !
All glory to the Absolute Lord of all the great gods !

154. "Even Thou—Who art the abode of infinite billions of worlds—
Manifestest Thyself in holy Sachi's womb.

155. "What Thou willest who is able to understand ?
Creation, maintenance and destruction of the world are Thy pastimes.

156. "Does He by Whose will all world is dissolved
Lack power to destroy Kamsa or Ravana by His fiat ?

157. "Yet in the families of Vasudeva and Dasarath
The Lord Himself appearing destroyed them.

158. "Thus Thou art, Thy purpose who can understand ?
Thyself alone knowest Thy own mind.

159. "By Thy command every single servant of Thine
An infinite number of worlds can deliver ;

160. Even yet Thy own self, to bless this world,
Becoming Incarnate teachest all religions.

161. "In the Satya age assuming the white colour
Thou teachest ascetic's duties practising them Thyself—

162. "Wearing the skin of the black antelope, the ascetic's staff, kamandula and braids,
As Brahmachary Thou establishest the religion.

163. In the Treta age wearing the beauty of red complexion.
As sacrificer Thou teachest the religion of Yajna—

164. "With the sruk and the sruba in hand, in the garb of Sacrificer, Practising Thyself, inducest all to adopt the Sacrifice.

165. "In the Dvapara age wearing the Divine colour of blue clouds
Thou teachest the religion of ritualistic worship of every household—

166. "In yellow robes, bearing Thy own insignia the sribatsa etc.
As a great sovereign thou worshippest Thyself.

167. "In the Kali age, of yellow colour, as a Brahman,
Thou teachest the religion of Samkirtan that is hidden in the Scriptures.

168. "How infinite are Thy manifestations !
Who is able to tell ?

169. "At the Deluge, as Fish Thou dost sport in the water ;
In the form of the Tortoise Thou art the support of all jivas ;

170 "As Hayagriva Thou restorest the Vedas ;
Destroyest the two primal demons, Madhu and Kaitava ;

171. "Liftest the world in the form of the holy Boar ;
In the form of Man-lion tearest Hiranya ;

172 "In the strange form of Dwarf Thou outwit'st Bali ;
As Parasu-Rama rootest out all kshatriyas from the earth ;

173 "Thou slayest Ravana in the form of Ramachandra ;
As Wielder of the plough Thou dost indulge in infinite sports ;

174 "As Buddha Thou makest manifest the religion of mercy ;
In the Form of Kalki Thou destroyest the mlechchas ;

175 "Thou bestowest the nectar as Dhanvantari
To Bramha and others as Hansa Thou teachest the Truth ;

176 "As Sri-Narada Thou singest on the bina ;
As Vyasa expoundest the Truth regarding Thyself ;—

177 "And resplendent with the glory and potency of all manifestations,
Thou sportest in many diverse ways as Krishna in Gokula.

178 "As Devotee, in this present Incarnation,
Displaying all Thy Sakti Thou wilt sing Samkirtan :

179 "The whole world will be filled with Samkirtan
And the loving devotion to God will spread to every household.

180 "How describe the manifestation of the joy of the world !
Even Thyself wilt dance with all Thy servants !

181 "Those who at all time contemplate Thy lotus feet
Have power to deliver from all evil :

182 "The tread of their feet rids the earth of her ills,
The glance of their eyes purifies the ten directions,

183 "By their dance with lifted hands, the perils of heaven are averted :
Such is Thy glory, such the dance and Thy servants.

184 "By his two feet the ills of the earth, by his eyes those of every direction, by his lifted hands those of heaven—
All evils are in diverse ways uprooted,
O King, by the dance of the devotee of Krishna.

185 "Thyself, O Lord, becoming visible in this world
In the company of Thy kindred of devotees wilt preach love by means of Samkirtan.

186 "Such glory of Thine who has power to describe ?
Even devotion to Vishnu which is hid in the Vedas Thou wilt give freely away !

187 "Thou concealest devotion bestowing freedom from misery in its stead !
Its attainment is the high hope cherished by such as we ;—

188 "This supreme gift Thou, the Sovereign of the world, wilt freely bestow,
There is no reason but Thy mercy alone prompts such favour.

189 "By the utterance of whose Name all sacrifice is fulfilled—
Even Thou, O Lord, art Incarnate at Nabadvip.

190 "Have mercy, O Lord, vouchsafe this favour,
So may we have the fortune of witnessing it.

191 "After long delay the wish of the Ganges is fulfilled :
Thou wilt sport in her stream is the desire eternally cherished by her.

192 "Of Whom the greatest yogis have a glimpse in their meditations,
Even the Lord Himself will become visible in the village of Nabadvipa.

193 "Make we also our obeisance to Nabadvipa
Where in the house of Sachi and Jagannath the Lord is Incarnate."

As He Himself made known under pretence of eclipse.

It was God's will that the moon was obscured.

199. Over all Nabadvipa the people saw the eclipse,
And on all sides arose the auspicious chant of the kirtan of Sri Hari.

All grief of the people of Nadia vanished
And joy grew apace every day.

And Nityananda Prabhu
Sings Brindabandas.

Song (धानशी)

212. Brighter than the sun
Is the beautiful holy Form
The eye cannot look upon,
The wide eyes
Are slightly arched
Nothing that I know is like them.

213. This day Gauranga has come Within reach of this world
The four quarters are filled with delight;
One universal chant of Hari
Fills all space to the seat of the Lord,
Verily Gauranga-chand has appeared.

214. Resplendent with sandal-paste
Is the broad Bosom
Across it waves the garland of wild flowers ;
Like the cool moon
Is the sphere of the Holy Face,
The great Arms extend to the Knee.

215. Gazing on Chaitanya
All the world praises,—
There is universal jubilation ;
Some dance,
Some sing,
Discord alone is grieved amid the joy.

216. Set on the head of the four Vedas
Chaitanya is the crown of glory
Ignorant sinners do not know ;

Showing all signs of the Sovereign paramount :

220. The holy feet are marked with the flag and the bolt,
Every limb captivating the minds of all the world.

221. All dangers have fled afar,
All the blessings stand manifest.

222. Sri Chaitanya is the life of Nityananda, Brindabandas sings His praise.

Song (नटमङ्गल)

223. Of the Incarnation of Chaitanya
The gods heard,
There was high jubilation, O.
Beholding His beautiful face,
That relieves from all trouble,
All were distracted with joy, O.

224. Ananta, Brahma, Siva,
And all the gods,
Asuming the human form, O,
Sang 'Hari, Hari',
Under the pretence of eclipse,
None could detect, O.

225. In the ten directions
Ran all people at Nadia
With loud cries of 'Hari, Hari', O.
Gods and men intermingling,
Joined in gaiety,
Filling Nabadvipa with gladness, O.

226. In the yard of Sachi's house,
All the gods
Fell prostrate in adoration, O ;
In the darkness of the eclipse,
No one noticed them,
Difficult to know are the pastimes of Chaitanya, O.

227. Some chanted hymns of praise,
Some held the umbrella,
And some waved the whisk, O ;
In high ecstacy,
Some threw flowers,
Some danced, sang, made music, O.

228. With all His devotees
Gour Hari came
Atheists knew nothing, O ;
The sweet glory of Sri Krishna-Chaitanya
And Lord Nityananda
Sings Brindabandas.

Auspicious triumphal measures
Discourse sweetly, O,
This day we meet Him
Who is beyond the ken of the Vedas
There is no time for delay, O.

And auspicious tumult
With the bustle of preparation, O.
By great good has chanced
That Chaitanya
Is manifest at Nabadvipa, O.

231. There is mutual embracings
And incessant kissings,
No one feels ashamed, O,
For joy at the birth
Of the Price of Nadia
Friend and foe are joined together, O.

232. In such pleasure
The gods hie to Nabadvipa,
Hear the Name of Hari on all sides, O,
Touched by Gaur's sweetness
All are distracted and subdued,
And sing, "All glory to Chaitanya," O.

233. They see in Sachi's house
Gauranga-Sundar,
Like millions of moons in conjunction, O;
Assuming the forms of men,
Under the pretence of eclipse,
The gods chant aloud the Name of Hari, O.

234. Served by all His consorts
Gaurchandra comes
The atheist knows nothing, O,
Sri Charitanya is the life
Of Nityananda-chand
Whose sweet glory sings
Brindabandas, O !
